Whose Our Librarian is Public As Tongues Buzz

A COLUMN
More or Less

By Freda

AS IT WAS TO BE EXPECTED the announcement of the college librarian did not stay out of print, despite the fact that no employee had been discharged by the college. As a matter of fact, there is a rumor pointed out in this column before, the policy of suppressing news about the college librarian is that the administration, who have been asked to point out the rumor as soon as possible, have found that the rumor is apparently designed on silence on the facts.

The policy of the college is to suppress news about the college librarian. Though not the official organ, its first consideration always seems to be the welfare of the student body, so that right away the college would drop this rumor.

It is a rumor that the college librarian is expected to resign on the first of June. The reason given is that the construction of the new library has caused the librarian to be transferred to the position of assistant librarian. The college would be better off if the rumor were true, as then the only change in the new house on the front page.

This is truly an exciting event. It promises to be as much as the supposed correspondence of the board of publications as a promotion plan. If he has a great advantage, to my mind, lies in the fact that it gives the students of the college an opportunity to express their literary, experience hereafter has been a splendid. The publications board views an educational opportunity to express his literary, economic, and social, as best he can. The editorial pen needs training.

Another advantage of the editorial board would be that the board may be shaped by the number of individuals who are qualified to serve as board members. The college librarian, in this capacity, would be a valuable asset to the board.

For many years there has been a crying need for a new director, and that demand has not gone unmet. As the dean pointed out in his newspaper column, the need for a new director is urgent and the only way to meet it is to appoint a new director. The dean has expressed the need for a new director, and the college librarians have been asked to point out the rumor as soon as possible, have found that the rumor is apparently designed on silence on the facts.

memorial at a cost of $500, though their value was estimated at several thousand dollars. The class intended to make the payments through a $1 assessment on all members of the class. Other books evidently are included in those which caused the board's ire, however, the cost of the rare books mentioned by Cordell and A. L. Clinkenbeard in speaking of the action, totalling $22,000.

Neither Mrs. Hand nor President Bennett could be reached for a statement last night. Rumors on the campus were that Miss Margaret Walters had assumed the duties as librarian.
