November 28, 1956

Newspapers Honor Top Letter-Writers

The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle will be joint hosts tomorrow at a "Dear Sir" dinner in honor of their readers judged to have written the best letters to the editor during the recent presidential campaign . . . .

s. (B4/f23)
*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
November 29, 1956

Samuel Lubell, the pollster who forecast President Eisenhower's landslide re-election, will be the principal speaker tonight at a "Dear Sir" dinner honoring a select group of writers . . . .

t. (B4/f23)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
November 30, 1956

(1.) Political Analyst Hails Writers of Letters to Editor

By BILL RINGLE

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Some of Rochester's best-read political writers – authors of the 100 top letters to the editor – were told last night that they may be providing the leadership for tackling some of the country's biggest problems . . . .

(3) PHOTOS
Captions:

DINNER HUDDLE – Prof. Arthur J. May (left) of University of Rochester history department talks with Fred I. Parrish, chairman, Monroe County Republican Committee, at Times-Union-Democrat and Chronicle dinner for letter writers.

LETTER WRITERS – Among writers of letters to the editor honored last night were (from left) D. Lincoln Canfield, chairman, UR foreign language department; Ralph A. Rami, UR instructor; Glyndon G. Van Deusen, UR history chairman.

DINNER SPEECH – Samuel Lubell addresses letter writers. At head table are (from left) John C. Hadley, editor, Times-Union editorial page; Vincent S. Jones, executive editor, Gannett Newspapers; Don U. Bridge, general manager, The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle; Paul Miller, executive vice president, The Gannett Co.; Lubell; Mrs. Frank Gannett; L. R. Blanchard, editor, The Democrat and Chronicle; Clifford E. Carpenter, editor, Democrat and Chronicle editorial page. The dinner was held last night at Sheraton.

(2.) Pen Pushers 'Want to Know'

Full-time political analyst Samuel Lubell fielded a few hot questions from those part-time political commentators – writers of letters to the editor – at last night "Dear Sir" dinner. Here are some:

From Dr. Arthur Roberts, University of Rochester physics professor: "Was there any genuine public understanding of the issues Democratic presidential candidate Adlai E. Stevenson raised in regard to the hydrogen tests?"

Lubell: "Most people reacted very coldly to the proposal. It seemed to them a proposal to disarm when it was no time to disarm . . ."

George W. Cooke, attorney and former Democratic candidate for Congress: "At the present time, the moderates hold sway in our political life. They're between the two poles of conservative and liberal. Which way do you think the two parties will go?"

Lubell: "I don't believe you can elect anything but a moderate president in this country. If the Democrats run an extremist, a Republican will be elected every time they do. President Eisenhower mirrors what the public wants. People distrust the extremists in both parties and they want someone who is down the middle of the road."

Ralph A. Raimi, University of Rochester mathematics instructor: "If a man's running for president and wants to be elected, would you say it was to his advantage to clarify or muddle the issues?"

Lubell: "One fellow's clarity is another fellow's muddle. All politicians clarify with one hand and muddle with the other. I think election campaigns are like one great pinball machine. When you're campaigning and you hit the issues right, like the bumpers on the pinball machine, all the lights go on . . . if your campaign is off, it's like tilting the machine and all of your lights are out and when you hit the bumpers nothing happens."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Thomas J. O'Brien, Rochester Institute of Technology instructor: "What effect do letters to the editor have on voters?"

Lubell: I don't think that reading letters to the editor has any particular effect on the voters, anymore than reading about the campaigns do. As I said, I believe people react emotionally to political campaigns – they take what they agree with and reject what they don't."

Mrs. Donald Yorkey, housewife – "With a Republican president and a Democratic majority in Congress, don't you think that they will throw out party politics for the common good. Or do you think there will be obstacles raised in Congress to slow up the President's program with an eye on the next elections?"

Lubell: "There will be fighting party politicians all the time. But remember you win votes by doing the right thing for the country. What's most important to their (the politicians') point of view is who gets the credit for doing the right thing . . . The real danger is not politics, but might be in the attitude that everything is going along well at home economically, so why worry about things abroad? . . . Anyway, we have no choice but to deal through the political machinery that we have."

James M. Spinning, the bearded retired Rochester schools superintendent: "How long will we continue to have the (Senate) filibuster in this country? Just round it off in centuries."

Lubell: "I'm a little more optimistic. But you do need a political realignment. I think if you look at the period 1876 to 1896, you get a clue. Then all presidential candidates had beards. In 1896 there were the first beardless candidates. That represented a realignment of political thought – the first really new crop of voters with a new outlook in the ascendancy after the Civil War. I look for a comparable realignment, the rise of a whole new generation of voters not bound by old attitudes, about 1964. Then, you should see the filibuster go out."

Dr. David E. Hath, post-doctoral fellow of the UR's atomic energy project: "Do you think, as Dr. George Gallup suggests, that political campaigns should be modified and replaced by a few studio broadcasts?"

Lubell: "I think all those suggestions are kind of pointless. People campaign the way they want to. I think the American people want a show with their campaign . . . All I know is that if they had political campaigns on at certain fixed times, I would like to buy time on any competing programs. They'd really be popular."

(3) PHOTOS:

JAMES M. SPINNING
DR. JUSTIN WROE NIXON
SAMUEL LUBELL

u. (B4/f23)

*****

Editor & Publisher
December 8, 1956

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

'The Pungent Pen'

Letter Writers Dined By Gannett Editors

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Rochester newspaper executives greeted writers of letters to the editor Nov. 29 at a "Dear Sir" dinner given by the Rochester Times-Union and the Democrat and Chronicle, both Gannett Newspapers.

Nearly 100 persons who had written letters on political subjects during the presidential campaign were guests. Pollster Sam Lubell was speaker, calling for even greater expression of "intelligent public opinion."

Republicans and Democrats alike attended the dinner, believed to be one of the first of its kind in the nation. Guests were selected solely on the basis of the quality of their letters, not viewpoints.

Hailed by Governor

Greetings were read from Governor Harriman, from White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty and from Leonard Hall and Paul Butler chairmen of Republican and Democratic national committees . . . .

Special Responsibility

One reason for the staging of the dinner was cited by Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of Gannett Newspapers, and editor-publisher of the Times-Union, who told the diners:

"Since the Times-Union and the Democrat and Chronicle are the only daily newspapers of general circulation in the Rochester area, we believe we have a greater responsibility than might otherwise be the case to stimulate the freest possible public discussion of public matters and provide the forum in our newspapers."

Noting the high readership of letters, Mr. Miller reported that there were more and better letters this year than in any prior presidential campaign . . . .

Lapel Description

At the start of the program, each letter writer had received a "diploma" from the "College of Political Knowledge" as a "Practitioner of the Pungent Pen." The document was signed by the two Rochester editorial page editors . . . .

v. (B4/f15)

ALEXANDER M. BEEBEE

December 13, 1956

Dear Paul:

I hasten to thank you for the copy of the "Suez Canal Report" which came to my desk today.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

This is a very complex problem and one in which it is important the people understand all the angles in order to prevent unwise pressures developing.

You have helped greatly to clarify my thinking on this subject, for which I hasten to send you most sincere thanks.

It's another example of the great influence for good which the Gannett Papers provide to the community and to the country.

Sincerely,

Alex (signed)
Alexander M. Beebee
Chairman of the Board

Mr. Paul Miller
Executive Vice-President
Gannett Newspapers
55 Exchange Street
Rochester 14, New York

w. (B4/f3)

ROCHESTER, N. Y., MONDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1956

Democrat and Chronicle

With or without offense or foes I sketch your world exactly as it goes. – Byron

L. R. BLANCHARD, Editor
GEORGE R. SHOALS, Managing Editor
NORRIS W. VAGG, Assistant Managing Editor
DON U. BRIDGE, General Manager
AL F. MAHAR, Business Manager

Published by Gannett Co., Inc. 57Main St. E., Rochester 4, N.Y. Frank Gannett, president; Frank E. Tripp, Douglas C. Townson, E .R. Davenport, Paul Miller, vice presidents; Cyril Williams, secretary and treasurer.

First published January 1, 1833, as The Morning Advertiser; name changed to The Daily Democrat February 8, 1834; combined with The Chronicle December 1, 1870; with The Rochester Herald 1926.

TELEPHONE: LOcust 2-3600

'It's Hard to Leave the Newspaper Clan'

Now Before the Desk Is Closed

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It Is Time to Speak of Friends

This is a personal matter. So for once the pronoun "we" disappears. And nobody can do anything to me for violating an old newspaper practice. They can't fire me. I've quit!

This is a personal matter because I want to talk about some people in the Gannett organization. Too rarely do they appear in print. I wanted you to know a little more about people responsible for The Democrat and Chronicle.

Unfortunately there's not room enough to mention the scores of men with whom I have worked and quarreled, fished and golfed and sat through bull sessions. In that list are youngsters who will be the editors and managers of another day. There are men of great talent. Some ambitious, some strangely content just to be good newspapermen, not eager for other recognition. All of them, I know, recognize me as an interested friend.

But tomorrow there is a change in the masthead – that little directory at the head of the column. My name comes out, another goes in. The new name is that of Clifford E. Carpenter, who now assumes responsibility for this page.

* * *

IT HAS BEEN A JOY working with Frank Gannett. Neither he nor anyone else ever established working hours for me, or ever dictated a sentence for editorial use. Many of us have tried his patience by taking a course differing from his own, but he is slow to anger, quick to reward. He established his group on a firm foundation –alertness, service and integrity. His real stature will b better recognized sometime in the future. Only those close to him know him for what he is – a genius, but a genius with a heart full of sympathy and understanding for those who worked with him.

Mr. Gannett's close friend and working companion, Frank E. Tripp, has been more than a general manager and a chairman of the board to all employes [sic]. He is their friend. He is not "Mr. Tripp." He is just "Frank" to editors, printers, executives and office boys.

That fact is a measure of the man. People do not first-name those they cannot or do not like. Frank's business ability is known best by company executives. But his real love has been writing. Readers of this paper have become familiar with his weekly columns. They are written simply. But there is art in his apparent artlessness. And there is commonsense, a dislike of fakery and a quiet humor running through all his work.

* * *

With Mr. Gannett inactive in recent months, the actual operating head of the newspapers is Paul Miller, the executive vice president. Here is a man still young, one from whom ideas fly like sparks from a hot iron. He is restless, with the restlessness of a man who wants action – now. He gets things done. As a single example recall the great part he played in getting the memorial auditorium out of the blueprints. Here is a man with a civic conscience. Fortunately he has the energy to stand up under a backbreaking schedule.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

THEN THERE IS Lynn Bitner, the general manager, also still young. Some men are born with good sense and executive ability. Bitner is one of those. But atop his native ability, he has applied himself. There is no newspaper machine, for instance, which he cannot operate; there is no job in his special field which he cannot perform. Bitner did not dig all his education from books. He has learned much from experience.

Don Bridge, general manager of the two Rochester newspapers, is one of the hardest working executives imaginable. Rare is the night that he doesn't carry home a briefcase full of newspaper data. He reads them all too, No bluff about that. Meticulous as to detail, conscientious, painstaking in all he does, he is devoted the production of the best possible newspaper.

Al Mahar, who is business manager of this newspaper, is the best practical psychologist I've encountered. Crack salesman, a considerate manager of employes [sic], he's a fine addition to any list of friends.

As managing editor there is George R. Shoals. His is one of the most difficult jobs. He has to be a news expert, he has to know all about typographical display, he must know how to deal with men and women. With skill in all that, he is beset by a mass of detail – features and paying for them, news columns and their use, edition times and the necessity of meeting them. Such demands have broken many men. George thrives on them.

* * *

Another important executive is the Group's Executive Editor, Vincent S. Jones. Like the man on the borax wagon he handles the reins – more than 20 – over Gannett editors. But he has the light touch and he swings no rawhide whip. He advises, helps, cajoles and urges. He is concerned with continual betterment of all the papers and his job is none the easier because each of the editors is autonomous. Mr. Jones is a newspaper enthusiast, one who is not content unless he becomes expert in all activities of editing and producing.

Two financial wizards, Cyril Williams and Herbert D. Taylor, keep a check on any free-spending proclivities of light-hearted editorial workers. They do it in such a way as to keep the friendship of those curbed. Also somewhat remote from the newsrooms but important to them, is Irving H. Fitch, captain of the Group's advertising men.

I must mention L. B. Skeffington, our expert on agriculture, a man of great common sense. He is respected by farm people everywhere. To us he is a charming and useful friend.

Harvey Southgate can write editorials as smoothly and flowingly as some of the music to which he now devotes himself.

DeWitt manning, quiet, modest and always there at the right time to be helpful, carries the load of church news and book reviews.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

All these have been most helpful in winning friends for our newspaper. Best of all for me, they are friends.

* * *

THERE ARE OTHER highly capable men in this organization. We have selected only the few who share responsibility for this newspaper. There is no space here for editors and businessmen of other papers in the Group, good as they are and important as they are. We have room for just one more – the new editor of the editorial page.

Clifford E. Carpenter is six-foot-six of newspaper savvy. He is gregarious, public-spirited –and he can write. Under his direction you will find this page bright and readable. And it will be sound. There is no call here to wish him good luck. He makes his own good luck.

* * *

There is no sadness in closing a desk for the last time. Thoughts are turned toward a new freedom, to the possibilities for doing some of those things for which there never before was time.

There is only a reluctance to say goodbye to old friends. Newspapers develop a clan spirit. That spirit develops through cooperation, through common interests and even through rivalries. Admittedly it is somewhat difficult to step outside that circle.

The Democrat and Chronicle and its sister papers will continue to grow. Of that we are sure. Trained and responsible men will see to that.

They'd better! Part of my bread and butter depends upon them!

LRB

11. 1957

a. (B4/f23)

*

[Reprinted from The Gannetteer of January 1957]

FOR NEWSPAPER LETTER WRITERS:

A 'Dear Sir' Dinner

 How Rochester editors gave recognition to contributors

At a 'Dear Sir' Dinner: Newspapers Honor Letter Writers

ROCHESTER'S newspapers tried something new after November's elections.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

They drew up a list of the 100 best letters to the editor written during the fall political campaign. And they invited the writers to a free dinner at the city's Hotel Sheraton.

Sam Lubell, the pollster whose pre-election analyses of voting trends had been published in the morning Democrat and Chronicle, was principal speaker . . . .

Letter writers at the "Dear Sir" dinner represented a cross-section of Rochester population and opinion. A university head, two college presidents, many professors, lawyers, ministers, retired civic leaders, housewives, and students – all entered the banquet room to find their places marked by convention-badges as place-cards . . . .

As editor of the Rochester Times Union and executive vice president of THE GROUP, PAUL MILLER set the tone of the meeting with these welcoming remarks:

"The writers may not all realize it, but letters to the editor have a very high readership in both The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union.

"I believe one reason for this is that readers have learned that most letters printed are worth reading. It has long been our policy to encourage good letters in every legitimate way we know, and to print all we possibly can. Since The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle are the only daily newspapers in general circulation in the Rochester area, we believe we have a greater responsibility than might otherwise be the case to stimulate the freest possible public discussion of public matters and provide the forum in our papers.

"We express the newspapers' opinions on the editorial pages, and occasionally in editorials – clearly marked as such – on Page One. At the same time, we invite for publication expressions of contrary views in general and specifically. The Times-Union, for example, printed several pro-Stevenson editorials from other newspapers while itself editorially supporting President Eisenhower and Mr. Nixon. The Democrat and Chronicle, also supporting Ike, solicited letters on the other side.

"We apply this same policy to all matters of general public interest. We shall continue to do so.

"The only requirements are that letters be of reasonable length – sometimes we waive even that rule, as in the case of President deKiewiet's recent exposition on faculty pen pushers; and we may return letters that are possibly libelous or in too bad taste. In short, we believe in the care and cultivation of comment, on whatever side of any issue, for two main reasons:

"1. READERS are interested in the opinions of others so that letters to the editor have high content value in our newspapers. Letters make newspapers even more interesting.

"2. WE FEEL and accept a definite responsibility to get the widest possible expression of views into our pages, on any subject of vital interest.

"During the last campaign Rochester letter writers went at it with usual vigor, unusual determination and in unusual numbers. I believe they made a definite contribution to public understanding. I know that they helped keep campaign interest at a high pitch. (They kept my interest at such a high pitch that I wrote a letter myself!) They thus played a real part in getting out the big vote.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Times-Union and Democrat and Chronicle appreciate all of this. That is why we honor tonight the writers of what the editors regard as the 100 outstanding campaign letters. This is our way of showing that appreciation, and of registering anew our interest in readers' views.

"Have a good time.

"Now it is my privilege to turn this meeting over to Mr. L. R. BLANCHARD – known to most of you as Fay. He is editor of The Democrat and Chronicle and also editorial chairman of The Gannett Newspapers; also a Director of Gannett Co., Inc. He is one of the country's truly great editors.

"You know, of course, that he is going to abandon all of this – and all of us – around Jan. 1, 1957. He is going to retire and move to California. While we still have him around we want to see and hear all we can from him. So – it's your meeting, Fay, from here on" . . . .

Also heard were VINCENT S. JONES, Gannett Newspapers executive editor, and DON U. BRIDGE, general manager of The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle . . . .

Bridge noted that the Gannett policy of autonomy in local newspapers a few years ago created a situation where some of the newspapers which FRANK GANNETT owned supported a candidate he opposed.

"What did he do? He wrote a letter to the editor diametrically opposed to the editorial statements of the newspapers he owned . . . ."

Commented Executive Editor Jones in a weekly message to Group executives:

"The stunt is recommended to all newspapers with a substantial number of letter writers. All sorts of interesting variations have suggested themselves for future gatherings, at which the direct participation of the guests in the program would be a prime objective."

GANNETT
NEWSPAPERS

SO MANY newspapers have requested details on the "Dear Sir" Dinner for campaign letter writers at Rochester that we have reprinted the attached from the company publication of The Gannett Newspapers and are mailing it to members of the American Society of Newspaper Editors. If any additional information is desired, address . . .

News and Editorial Office
The Gannett Newspapers
Times-Union Building
Rochester 14, New York

b. (B4/f25)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle

1099

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

January 4, 1957

Editor Named
To Prize Board

Vincent S. Jones, executive editor of The Gannett Newspapers is one of 22 jurors named by the Advisory Board on Pulitzer Prizes in Journalism for 1957. His category will be photography. The jurors will submit their recommendations for prizes to the advisory board and awards will be announced May 6, according to the Associated Press.

Among members of the Advisory Board is Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers.

c. (B4/f25)

Rochester Times-Union
January 16, 1957

N.C. Press Unit
To Hear Miller

DURHAM, N.C. (UP) – Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, will address members of the North Carolina Press Assn. here Jan. 25 at Duke University's annual dinner for the association.

The dinner is a feature of the association's midwinter institute Jan. 24-26 at Duke University and at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

d. (B4/f25)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
January 17, 1956

Miller to Address
Southern Editors

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, will address the North Carolina Press Assn. at Duke University at Durham, N.C., Jan. 25.

He will address a dinner meeting which is a feature of the association's midwinter institute Jan. 24-26 at Duke University and at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

e. (B4/f25)
*****
Thirty-Second Annual

Newspaper

1100

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Institute

CHAPEL HILL and DURHAM

JANUARY 24, 25 and 26

1957 member

North Carolina
Press Association

With The

NORTH CAROLINA PRESS ASSOCIATION
UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA AND DUKE UNIVERSITY, COOPERATING

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 25th

7:00 Dinner . . . .

Vocal Selections . . . .

Welcome . . . .

Response . . . .

Introduction of Speaker . . . .

Address . . . . . It Cant [sic] Help But Happen Here
Paul Miller, Executive Vice President
Gannett Newspapers, Rochester, N. Y.

f. (B4/f25)
*****

[Durham Morning Herald ?]
Saturday, January 26, 1957

(1.) Miller Urges
Ever Better
Newspapers

Gannett Executive
Gives Press Group Publication Tips

1101

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Members of the North Carolina Press Assn. were told here last night that they face a tough but pleasant task in publishing newspapers these days . . . .

(2.) Robinson Speaks At Duke

Press Assn. Told Segregation No. 1 Problem Facing State

The segregation issue is the foremost problem facing North Carolinians, Thomas L. Robinson of Charlotte, president of the N.C. Press Assn. declared at Duke University yesterday.

He called on the newspapers of the state to play a vigorous role in the solution of the racial question and other "problem areas" in North Carolina's future.

Robinson, publisher of The Charlotte News, addressed the 32nd annual N.C. Press Institute at a dinner at Duke.

He warned that North Carolina has only begun to appreciate the size and significance of the segregation problem.

"There is a tendency among many Tarheels," he said, "to consider the matter closed now that North Carolina has its Pearsall Plan and its pupil assignment law. Nothing could be further from the truth.

"The most challenging days are ahead of us. The Pearsall Plan and the pupil assignment law are nothing more than tools – and extremely limited tools at that. We have hardly begun to use them."

Robinson urged the Tarheel press to seek solutions also to these problems: "educational deficiencies, low per capita income, a struggling agriculture, state tax machinery containing a jumble of inequities, the lack of sufficient new industry, legislative reapportionment and the discouraging trend toward more secrecy in state and local government."

(3.) PHOTO:
Head Table Dignitaries

Caption:
Members of the North Carolina Press Assn. were guests of Duke University last night at the 24th annual Newspaper Institute Dinner. Left to right at the head table are Paul Miller, Rochester, N. Y., who delivered the principal address; Mrs. Tom Robinson of Charlotte; and Josh Horne of Rocky Mount, former president of the N. C. Press Assn.

g. (B4/f25)
*****

The Durham Sun
Durham, N.C.
January 26, 1957

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

N. C. Editors, Publishers Hear Warning At Duke –

Segregation Said Top Problem

North Carolina newspaper editors and publishers were told at Duke University last night that the racial segregation issue is the "foremost" problem facing the state.

Thomas L. Robinson, publisher of the Charlotte News and president of the N. C. Press Assn. said there is a "tendency among Tarheels to consider the (segregation) matter closed now that North Carolina has its Pearsall Plan and its pupil assignment law.

Robinson spoke at the annual Duke University dinner meeting of the Midwinter Press Institute. The institute ended today after a morning session in Chapel Hill.

In his address, Robinson called on the state's newspapers to "answer the continuing challenge of our times – how to help our state realize its destiny."

He said the state's Pearsall Plan and Pupil Assignment law are "limited tools" in the segregation issue, and said a solution to the problem still must be worked out "by responsible citizens who will act with calm, constructive good will and a respect for human dignity."

Robinson urged that newspapers place "reason above rant and never give aid and comfort to the voices of hysteria and confusion."

Another speaker, Paul Miller of Rochester, N.Y., executive vice president of The Gannett newspapers, told the group that Tarheel newspapers are among the best in the country, but urged the newsmen to strive for an even better product.

He told the N.C.P.A. members that "All you have to do is build and sell ever better newspapers despite ever higher production costs, in the face of ever tougher competition, and for a rightly ever more demanding readership."

He cited the ever increasing cost of publishing newspapers and noted that there is no "Univac" or "patent medicine-type relief anywhere in sight" for the newspaper ills.

However, he did point out that newspapering offers many compensations and noted that "the opportunities are greater today than ever for young people."

Miller challenged the newspaper men and women present to make their newspapers more useful; to keep them "local, but not isolated" and to make them "stand for something."

He cautioned publishers to keep themselves close to readers and advertisers by finding out just what these people think about their newspaper; and also urged the publishers and editors to exercise more care in hiring and developing personnel, "never forgetting that it is as important to weed out misfits promptly and considerately as to recognize and encourage the qualified" . . . .

h. (B7/f3)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
March 23, 1957

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Congress Talks Budget Cuts -- Keep on Writing

By PAUL MILLER

Newspapers will have had a great deal to do with it, if the cut-the-budget talk in Congress results in any real slashes.

Editorial writers across the nation jumped on the Eisenhower budget, and on the howling inconsistency of sending to Congress a budget that even the President admitted ought to be cut, as soon as the wires spread the story on local news desks.

Readers responded with a mail barrage that has exceeded anything seen by many veteran congressmen . . . .

Newspaper Costs and Prices

The New York World-Telegram and The Journal-American went to 10 cents a copy this week.

These newspapers become the first at a dime in the East, excepting specialized publications. There are many on the West Coast, few in between. But scores and perhaps hundreds of newspapers have gone to 7 cents daily and to 20, 25 and even 35 cents a copy on Sundays.

The New York Telegram explained that the "overall cost of producing the newspaper has more than doubled" since 1944, when the price last was increased. Its statement added:

"Major contributing factors to this great rise in operating expense have been the steady increases in labor costs and the price of newsprint. Costs for both today are more than twice what they were 13 years ago."

THE SAME IS TRUE EVERYWHERE – including Rochester.

Are the Times-Union and Democrat and Chronicle going up?

The answer, as to the daily newspapers, is that we don't know but we hope not.

As to the big and growing Sunday Democrat, we could be forced into it soon.

*** * ***

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

TRADITIONALLY, we have pressed for big volume and lowest feasible rates in both circulation and advertising. That's profitable, we think, for both our advertisers and ourselves. Among our other reasons are these:

1. We want the newspaper to remain a mass medium. We'd go back to a penny if we could – and we pray for the day (nowhere now in sight) when some operation miracle might make that possible.

2. We're the only Rochester daily newspapers of general circulation. We fight, as we do, against even the appearance of taking advantage of that situation.

So – while we may be forced along with everybody else to go up, you can bet on this:

We won't do it if we can figure any way around it and we'll be among the last to abandon the nickel if we ever do.

i. (B4/f25)

*****

The Gannetteer
March 1957

For Meeting Ever Tougher Competition Five Fundamentals for Newspapers

By PAUL MILLER

Condensed from Address at a Duke University Dinner for North Carolina Press Association at Durham, N.C., Jan. 25.

I'VE NEVER LIVED in North Carolina, but my work has taken me from coast to coast and back again. And I know this:

Whether life sets us down on an oil town newspaper in Oklahoma, moves us around the country with The AP, with the Frank Gannett organization in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Illinois – or wherever – so long as it's newspapering, it's a great life . . . .

The Gannett Group embraces almost every size paper anybody ever worked on – 23 newspapers, including a weekly and a semi-weekly. Some of the finest men in the business are getting out those widely differing newspapers. I suspect that all would agree – as you will – that the basic job is the same no matter how large the newspaper or how small: . . . .

The cost of everything that goes into a newspaper is on the rise, and no patent medicine-type relief in sight . . . . Any revolution that will radically cut publishing costs has been a long time coming – and it may be a lot longer, try as we will to hurry it along. This may not be popular, but I fear it's true. In the meantime, and in the foreseeable future, the fundamentals remain pretty much the same. I will list and discuss five that seem particularly important to me.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1. WE MUST PUBLISH useful NEWSPAPERS.
2. WE MUST KEEP OURSELVES, AS MANAGEMENT, CLOSE TO READERS and advertisers – and to employes [sic] and associates as well, for mutual strength and mutual profit.
3. WE MUST NEVER FORGET for a minute that with all our urgent need for better, more efficient, less costly machines and methods – people still come first.
4. WE MUST MAKE OUR NEWSPAPERS STAND FOR SOMETHING.
5. WE MUST KEEP OUR NEWSPAPERS LOCAL, but not isolated.

SURELY, no work comes nearer having everything to offer than ours – smiles as well as tears, brickbats as well as roses, setbacks as well as matchless opportunities for community leadership, service and achievement.

Yet, every now and then, I run into somebody who, if already in newspaper work, doesn't appreciate just what he's got – or who, if a youngster, wonders whether "the future" would hold sufficient promise for him on a newspaper.

I don't understand the newspaperman who doesn't fully appreciate being one. I figure he's either out of pocket in the first place or has never labored at or closely observed any other pursuit; hence just doesn't have reason to know how well off he is.

I usually find that the young fellow who doubts whether there's a "future" in newspapering hasn't found out what he could easily find out by a little study of newspapers – or should be told, but all too often isn't, by one of us so-called newspapermen.

The opportunities are greater today than ever for young people, even with the numerical contraction of dailies which has gone on a long time and will continue. Any young fellow who wants to get along and who has the stuff, can get along on a newspaper if he'll hustle. By get along, I mean make good progress. Newspaper bosses are suckers for a young fellow who is qualified, who is interested in going places and who – most of all – shows it by hustling. How they love the fellow who gives his assignment a little more than he has to. How they pity the one who just puts in his time. Pity is right. He's missing half the fun of our great business and he'll be a long time attracting the favorable eye of any one looking for somebody to promote.

j. (B4/f25)

*****

The Quill
for
March, 1957

Rochester Papers Find

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Formula for Hard Hitting Letters to the Editor

Freeswinging bipartisan policy wins approval during recent national campaign from both parties and helps get the voters to the polls.

By JOSEPH N. FREUDENBERGER

LETTERS to the editor – are they important to a daily newspaper? Is their importance increased when a field is served by only one paper? How can a newspaper attract voices of authority to its letter column?

Most dailies confront a letter problem such as that faced by the Rochester (N.Y.) Times-Union when Paul Miller became its editor in 1947. Cranks, crackpots and axe-grinders had enjoyed too free a hand. Many professional men were reluctant to submit letters. Some Democrats scoffed: "What can you expect from the one-party Republican press?" More restrained members of the Democratic organization didn't write letters.

To this problem, Editor Miller offered only this general solution:

"Readers are interested in the opinions of others so letters to the editor make newspapers more interesting . . . .

"We express the newspapers' opinions on the editorial pages. At the same time, we invite for publication expressions of contrary views.

"The Times-Union, for example, printed several pro-Stevenson editorials from other newspapers while itself editorially supporting President Eisenhower and Mr. Nixon."

LETTER writers applauded. Representing a cross-section of Rochester population and opinion, they came from fields of education, religion, law, industry and the home. In age they ranged from a young college student and an equally young housewife to a retired minister, a retired school superintendent and a professional writer.

Miller's idea of a post-election good will dinner (with pollster Sam Lubell as speaker) captured the imaginations of newspaper executives, politicians and students of government.

New York's Governor Averell Harriman, in a telegram read at the dinner, said:

"This is a unique event and I am sure that it will have a worth-while effect in stimulating even more widespread expression by your readers of their views on public issues.

"As a frequent reader of the 'Letters to the Editor' columns of our newspapers, I appreciate what a valuable open forum they provide for such discussions of important issues by the public. I commend your newspapers for an original idea and I join you in congratulating your guests of honor on their active participation as citizens in the discussion of public affairs."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Wrote Paul Butler, chairman of the Democratic National Committee:

"My warmest congratulations to the Gannett Newspapers and to the 'best letter' writers for the distinctive contribution which they have made to broader discussion of the issues before us these critical days. You have set an excellent example in effectively serving the major purpose of American elections – which is to make our people active participants in our political processes, rather than mere sideline observers or spectators."

WROTE Leonard W. Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee:

"This is an outstanding example of public service by the Gannett Newspapers. Your campaign has helped citizens develop and express their political views, enabling them to go to the polls and intelligently vote for the candidates of their choice."

But the "Dear Sir" dinner was more than a get-out-the-vote promotion (though Editor Miller believes in those, too). It was a get-together and get-acquainted meeting for opinion makers from many strata of Rochester society . . . .

k. (B4/f26)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
April 12, 1957

(1.)

Paul Miller Elected Gannett Co. President

Founder Gets Emeritus Post

Paul Miller yesterday was elected president of the Gannett Co., Inc., which operates a group of 23 newspapers, five radio stations and three television stations in four states.

Frank Gannett was elected president-emeritus by the directors of the company which he founded and which he actively directed as president until two years ago when he suffered a mishap and other complications which have confined him to his Rochester home.

Miller also was elected president of the Gannett Foundation and of WHEC, Inc., Rochester radio-television subsidiary.

The Foundation was set up by Gannett in 1935 to guarantee the continuation of his newspapers. It holds 67 per cent of the operating company's outstanding common stock. The bulk of the Foundation's net income is distributed for public, charitable, educational and general philanthropic uses and purposes in the areas where Gannett newspapers circulate generally.

Tripp Still Chairman

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Frank E. Tripp of Elmira, longtime associate of Gannett, and for many years general manager of the company, continues as chairman of the board. In addition, Tripp becomes the president of all of the other subsidiary companies in the organization . . . .

(2.) Started Reporting at 18

Miller Takes Over Job After Wide Experience

Paul Miller, son of a Southwestern minister and eldest of a family of six, has been in newspaper work since he was 18. He began in Oklahoma as reporter and editor on various newspapers . . . .

PHOTO:
PAUL MILLER

l. (B4/f26)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
April 12, 1957

Gannett Co. Elects Paul Miller President

Founder Is President Emeritus

Paul Miller is the new president of the Gannett Co., Inc. . . . .

PHOTO:
PAUL MILLER

m. (B4/f26)
*****

Elmira Star-Gazette
April 12, 1957

(1.) Miller Named Gannett Co. President; Tripp Continues as Board Chairman

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller yesterday became president of the Gannett Co., Inc., succeeding Frank Gannett, the company's founder, who became president emeritus.

Frank E. Tripp of Elmira, associated with Mr. Gannett since the Elmira Star and Elmira Gazette were merged to become the first unit in what was to become one of America's largest newspaper enterprises, continues as chairman of the board. He also becomes president of all subsidiary companies.

Mr. Gannett, who purchased the Elmira Gazette in 1906, continued actively as president of the company until two years ago when he became ill. The company whose presidency he turned over yesterday to Mr. Miller operates 23 newspapers, five radio stations and three television stations in four states . . . .

(3) PHOTOS:

PAUL MILLER
FRANK E. GANNETT
FRANK E. TRIPP

(2.) Worldwide Traveler, Observer

Group Chief Veteran Newsman

Paul Miller, newly-elected president of the Gannett Group of newspapers, radio and television stations, has been in newspaper work since he was 18 years old . . . .

n. (B7/f3)

Rochester Times-Union
April 13, 1957

Good Newspaper --A Good Neighbor

Frank Gannett, founder of the Gannett Group, stepped aside to become President Emeritus on April 11. This article by Paul Miller, the new president of The Gannett Company, offers a review of operating policies and practices of The Times-Union and other newspapers of the Group.

By PAUL MILLER

A good newspaper is not built overnight. It develops over many years, just as a person's character develops. In time its readers come to know it for what it is. If it is truly successful, the newspaper is a good neighbor, a good citizen, a trusted confidant . . . like a good man or a good woman. It will be doomed to failure, ultimately, if it is not trustworthy, fair and clean. This is especially true of cities of homes.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

That general thinking has been behind the growth and development of newspapers in the Gannett Group, founded on a small beginning by Frank Gannett.

Affiliated with the Gannett Group now are 23 newspapers, three television stations and five radio stations. These properties mainly are in New York State. There is one newspaper in New Jersey, one in Connecticut and a newspaper, radio and TV station in Danville, Illinois.

* * *

AS ONE NEWSPAPER AFTER ANOTHER was added in the early years, starting with Ithaca and Elmira, Mr. Gannett and his close associates – Frank Tripp and E. R. Davenport – concluded that it would be morally wrong as well as imprudent businesswise to try to remold all of them to a general standard, dictated from afar.

Instead, local management was encouraged to maintain and develop the personality of each newspaper – and also of the individuals in local management, themselves. They called it local autonomy.

The principle of local autonomy is nursed along more carefully and stressed more emphatically in The Gannett Group than in any other organization I know. That's why it's called a group, not a chain. A chain is characterized by a dictated policy. There is usually a uniformity of practice, appearance and style. The opposite is true of The Gannett Group.

* * *

PEOPLE WHO KNOW of Frank Gannett's strong convictions sometimes ask how he could stand for editorial autonomy in his newspapers – with some vigorously expounding a point of view counter to that of the head of the house.

That reminds me of an incident in the New York State gubernatorial campaign of 1950.

Mr. Gannett, a Republican, decided he personally could not support either Republican Dewey or Democrat Lynch. He said so publicly.

One day the Associated Press carried an article reporting which candidate each of the New York State Gannett newspapers was supporting editorially in the campaign. It turned out that 16 were supporting Dewey.

The Times-Union printed the article. So did other newspapers in the group. Some pointed out editorially that it proved that we do adhere to the autonomy principle enunciated by Mr. Gannett himself.

I showed The Times-Union to Mr. Gannett.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He looked at it long and thoughtfully. Then he said:

"You know, Paul, sometimes I don't know about this autonomy!"

That was all he ever said about it, to my knowledge.

YES, IT IS ASSUMED that Gannett newspapers will be clean and community-minded and patriotic and fair. From there on, the local management is on its own as to specific editorial problems and issues.

Briefly, and as general policy, we believe in the lowest feasible advertising and circulation rates. We'd rather get more advertising at a low rate than carry less advertising at a high rate – even if net income were equal. Why? It's better business for us and for our communities. Low rates mean that more advertisers, including little fellows, can use the newspapers regularly, profitably and with adequate space. The overall picture, present and future, is better for newspapers which adhere to this principle, and for the communities they serve.

The same for circulation. Gannett newspapers have ever been among the last in the nation to up circulation rates.

The Gannett management believes, in short, that the newspaper – to keep its place and to give maximum service with reasonable profit – must remain an effective mass medium.

We are interested most of all in home delivered circulation within productive training areas. Why? Because that's where it does the most good for us and for advertisers.

Our newspapers are produced for family reading in the home by young and old. No advertising is accepted that it is believed might be harmful. Liquor advertising is excluded. A close editorial eye is kept trained on the comics. Standards of decency are insisted on in advertising and news copy.

*** * ***

THE MAJORITY OF THE COMMON STOCK of Gannett Co., Inc., now is owned by the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation, Inc.

The Foundation was established by Mr. Gannett in 1935. It has received the stock through periodic gifts by him since.

His goal was (1) provide maximum possible security for employes [sic], (2) keep the newspapers independent of any outside influence and (3) provide means for the organization to contribute to worthy institutions in the communities where our newspapers are published.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

This Foundation now – as Frank Gannett planned – is majority owner of the newspapers, television stations and radio stations of the Gannett Group.

o. (B4/f26)

Brighton-Pittsford Post
April 18, 1957

the Editor's window

Mr. Miller

People who have worked with Paul Miller will applaud his deserved elevation to the presidency of The Gannett Co. He's a thorough-going professional with an astonishing broad background in the newspaper business – and a light, sometimes irreverent sense of humor which makes his stories of nation's [sic] great political leaders a continuing delight.

People in this area realize that Miller has a national reputation, but few people know its extent. There are few figures in public life here or in Europe whom he has not met – and with many he is on terms of close personal friendship.

I experienced at first hand some of the magic of the Miller name a few years ago when doing articles in Europe for The Times-Union. Before I left he had quite unobtrusively given me a handful of calling cards with brief messages written on the back for various people in Europe, including many journalists.

These little calling cards miraculously produced office space, typewriters, all manner of interviews, invitations for weekends, quantities of food, and even a U.S. Army pass to go through the then rigid Iron Curtain.

Possibly the most unusual result came in Paris, where one of the Miller cards produced an invitation to have lunch with the American Press Club.

My host was a former associate of Mr. Miller, an individual who had spent long years in Paris, and apparently had known everyone from Hemingway to Carpentier, the boxer.

He muttered something like, "Come along for some eggs at the Press Club."

I came along, and there were eggs – Eggs Florentine with a delicious fluffy sauce I still can taste – sandwiched in among five other courses – all washed down with five different kinds of wine starting with an appetizer and ending with a cordial.

The small luncheon, which had begun at 12:30 ended at 2:50 p.m. – and two appointments were missed. But the conversation had been fascinating – and I was able to reduce the food expenditures for days afterward.

I found out later that many of the members, working for American afternoon newspapers, labor from the wee hours of the morning – and that the light lunch was really a dinner for them.

But my host seemed partially retired – and certainly not subject to any early hours. I decided he had truly conquered the world of journalism.

And I should advise anyone travelling to get a few of Mr. Miller's cards with the mysteriously-effective notes on them.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

p. (B4/f25)

Beacon (N.Y.) News
April 19, 1957

Gannett Scholarships Awarded

The Frank Gannett Newspaperboys Scholarships for 1957 have been awarded to two Newburgh students. Stanley Hall Clinton Jr. and Francis Michael Volkringer. The scholarships are awarded each year in each of the communities where Gannett Company newspapers are located. Unfortunately, there were no qualified applicants for the scholarships in Beacon and vicinity this year.

The last Beacon youth to win the scholarship was Victor Pecore, who received the award in 1955 and is now attending RPI.

The Beacon News is proud to be a part of a forward looking organization such as the Gannett Company which views these scholarships as part of its effort toward community involvement. The Gannett Company views the training of young men as necessary to help maintain our American way of life.

The value of business experience received by being a newspaper carrier boy has long been recognized. The Gannett Scholarships are an added incentive to those youths with the ambition to maintain a newspaper delivery route and the ambition to obtain good grades.

Announcement of the scholarship awards follows close on another announcement which guarantees the continued forward-looking program of the Gannett Newspapers. That was the election of Paul Miller as president of Gannett Newspapers. Mr. Miller made a marked impression upon his audience when he spoke at a Chamber of Commerce dinner in Beacon last year.

q. (B4/f26)
*****

Editor & Publisher
April 20, 1957

Paul Miller
President of Gannett Co.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of Gannett Co. Inc., since 1951, was elected president of the company on April 11. He succeeds Frank Gannett, who has become president emeritus . . . .

r. (B4/f26)

*****

New York Herald Tribune
Tuesday, April 23, 1957

Editors' and Publishers' Opinions on Main Issues

The Questions

Editors and publishers here for the annual convention of the American Newspaper Publishers Association were asked yesterday to comment on these questions:

1. What do you consider the most important concern of your readers today?
2. How do the people of your area stand on the budget controversy?
3. Are your people more or less troubled today than a year ago over the threat of Soviet expansion?
4. Is desegregation working in your city?

Due to the lack of time between meetings at the convention, not all the questions were answered by all editors and publishers contacted. The problem posed by the fourth question was not significant in every city.

s. (B4/f25)

(2) PHOTOS:

1957-2 A
1957-2 B

"At Banshees' Luncheon, New York City, April 23, 1957"

t. (B4/f25)

*****

We are SURE

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

You Will Wish To Hear

PAUL MILLER
NEWLY ELECTED PRESIDENT
THE GANNETT NEWSPAPERS

at the

THIRTY-NINTH ANNUAL DINNER

of the

NIAGARA FALLS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Tuesday, April 30, 1957

Hotel Niagara Ballroom

Ladies and Guests are Welcome!

RETURN YOUR RESERVATION CARD NOW!

u. (B4/f25)
*****

Niagara Falls Gazette
May 1, 1957

Gannett President Sees Lasting Tensions in World Lauds Cultural Interchange in Address to Chamber

International tension is here to stay.

That's the estimate of a newspaperman who has covered the Washington beat, sat in on the birth of the United Nations and only recently returned from Suez.

Paul Miller, president of the Gannett Co., Inc. and a reporter for 32 years, told an overflow audience in the Hotel Niagara ballroom last night that "we'll have to live with the turmoil in the Arab world and with an aggressive and threatening Soviet, for all our lives and then some."

Mr. Miller spoke at the 39th annual dinner of the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce.

Must Put Out Fires

He forecast an interminable period in which the United States will have to deal with "single aggressions, single threats, single denunciations and single breaches of solemn agreements." It will be the U.S. government's lot "to struggle to put out now a fire here and now one there," he declared.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Ranging informally over the problems of the world, Mr. Miller found U.S. policy effective in keeping a troubled peace.

Lauds Dulles

He described Secretary of State John Foster Dulles as an able diplomat who has been ruining his health in his devotion to the job.

"In my opinion," Mr. Miller said, Mr. Dulles is inferior to none" of the long line of men who have held this backbreaking job.

He went back through the Roosevelt and Truman administrations to compare Mr. Dulles with his predecessors. Secretary Cordell Hull, he said, lost control of the department before he left it. Edward Stettinius rarely saw copies of the messages exchanged by President Roosevelt with foreign heads of state, he continued. James F. Byrnes didn't have enough time in the job to get acclimated, and Gen. George Marshall took the job only as a favor to President Truman.

Dean Acheson, he added, was "brilliant but not effective."

In contrast to these earlier secretaries, Mr. Dulles is operating almost on his own in the field of foreign policy, Mr. Miller declared.

While President Eisenhower gives Mr. Dulles a free hand to the extent that the secretary is often left alone to defend appointments and policies, Presidents Roosevelt and Truman attempted to be their own secretaries of state, Mr. Miller observed.

Visited Suez

The speaker recounted his experiences in Egypt last September where he went to make an on-the-spot survey of the Suez Canal situation. There was no hint of the British, French, Israeli invasion to follow, he said.

He found that the Egyptians felt they could operate the canal without difficulty, while the canal users were forecasting that the 103-mile waterway would soon be a "mess of littered hulks" because of the ineptitude of Egyptian pilots and personnel.

"I'm still wondering what the answer is to a question the canal users were asking then," he said. The question? Where is the Egyptian Canal Authority going to get the pilots to take the big tankers through from Port Said to Suez?

World Travel Urged

Mr. Miller said that in a shrinking world, it is more important than ever for reporters, and anyone else who wants to understand what is going on, to get out and see for themselves.

"Nothing of significance can happen anywhere in the world that doesn't affect us," he declared. As an example, he cited higher gas prices and higher defense budgets in the U. S. as a result of the Suez tieup [sic].

Interchange of students and other such contacts between nations were praised by the Gannett executive.

"The Fulbright fellowships have done good beyond measure," he said. "We ought to applaud any effort in this direction, including the latest one, by the Ford Foundation, for an exchange of students with Poland."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Even a Chamber of Commerce can benefit by getting out and finding out what people think of it, Mr. Miller said. He described a survey conducted by the Rochester chamber to inform itself as to public and group attitudes toward the chamber. Afterward, he said, a number of programs were undertaken to gain better public understanding and appreciation of the chamber's work.

Mr. Miller was introduced by Chamber President Clarence R. Runals . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

GANNETT CO. HEAD WELCOMED HERE – Chamber of Commerce officials last night welcomed Paul Miller, second from right, president of the Gannett Co., Inc. who was in Niagara Falls to address the chamber's 39th annual dinner. Gathered around the chief executive of the company which owns the Niagara Falls Gazette are, from left, Charles A. Clancy, retiring chamber director; Clarence R. Runals, chamber president; Mayor Calvin L. Keller; Joseph Green, also a director, and William A. Boles, dinner chairman. – Gazette Photo.

v. (B4/f26)

Editor & Publisher
June 1, 1957

Oscar Berger's
VIP – Gallery

PAUL MILLER
President, Gannett Newspapers

DRAWN FROM LIFE ESPECIALLY FOR E & P.

w. (B4/f26)

OSCAR
BERGER

BERKELEY HOUSE, 120 CENTRAL PARK SOUTH, NEW YORK 19, N.Y. * TELEPHONE: COlumbus 5-0326

New York
June 18, 1957

Mr. Paul Miller
President
Gannett Newspapers

Dear Mr. Miller:

I am sending you this enclosed extra clipping, for your files, in the hope that my drawing amused you. It was nice to meet you.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Oscar Berger (signature)

Oscar Berger

ENCL.
Press-clipping.

x. (B4/f26)
*****

The Gannetteer
June 1957

(1.) Paul Miller: New President of Gannett Co.
And of the Gannett Foundation

PAUL MILLER on April 11 was elected president of the Gannett Co., Inc. He succeeded FRANK GANNETT, its founder, who has become president emeritus.

Miller also was elected president of the Gannett Foundation and of WHEC Inc., Rochester radio-television subsidiary of the Gannett Co.

Frank Gannett actively directed the Gannett Co. until two years ago when he was injured in a fall and later suffered other complications which have kept him confined to his Rochester home.

Frank E. Tripp of Elmira, Gannett's long time [sic] associate, who for many years was general manager of the company, continues as chairman of its board. He has also been elected president of all the other subsidiary companies in the organization, consisting chiefly of the operating companies of the various newspapers.

Succeeding Miller as vice president of the Gannett Foundation is Mrs. Frank Gannett. Her husband established the foundation in 1935 to guarantee the continuation of his newspaper organization. The foundation holds 67 per cent of the operating company's outstanding common stock.

The bulk of the net income of the foundation is distributed for public, charitable, educational and general philanthropic uses and purposes in those areas where Gannett newspapers circulate generally.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

ONE OF the most widely known leaders in the newspaper industry, Tripp since 1922 has been publisher of the newspapers in his home town, Elmira. He was general manager of the Gannett Group from 1925 to 1951.

For his work in heading up all newspaper promotions for all seven bond drives in World War II he received the U.S. Treasury's Distinguished Service Citation.

Tripp was chairman of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. from 1940 to 1944. His weekly column for years appeared in more than 130 newspapers.

(2.)

Directors of the Gannett Co., Inc. are:
MILLER, who until his election as president, was executive vice president.
MR. and MRS. GANNETT.
FRANK TRIPP.
DOUGLAS C. TOWNSON, vice president of the company. He also is a vice president of the Foundation.
LYNN N. BITNER, general manager of the company.
CYRIL WILLIAMS, secretary and treasurer of the company.
EDWARD R. DAVENPORT, vice president of the company and former general manager of the Rochester newspapers.
THOMAS J. HARGRAVE, chairman of the board, Eastman Kodak Co.
DON U. BRIDGE, general manager of the Rochester newspapers.
VINCENT S. JONES, executive editor of the Gannett Newspapers.

(3.)

THE GANNETTEER

In the Gannett Group Are:

The Rochester Times-Union
The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
The Hartford (Conn.) Times
The Elmira Star-Gazette
The Elmira Advertiser
The Elmira Sunday Telegram
The Utica Observer-Dispatch
The Utica Daily Press
The Ithaca Journal
The Newburgh News

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Beacon News
The Albany Knickerbocker News
The Ogdensburg Journal
The Ogdensburg Advance-News
The Plainfield (N.J.) Courier-News
The Olean Times-Herald
The Malone Evening Telegram
The Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News
The Saratoga Springs Saratogian
The Binghamton Press
The Niagara Falls Gazette
The Massena Observer (semi-weekly)
The Potsdam Courier and Freeman (weekly)

The four radio stations in the Gannett Radio Group are:

WHEC, Rochester, 1460
WENY, Elmira, 1230
WHDL, Olean, 1450
WDAN, Danville, Ill., 1490
WINR, Binghamton, 680

The television stations are:

WHEC-TV, Channel 10, Rochester, N.Y.
WDAN-TV, Channel 24, Danville, Ill.

(4.) The Group's New President:

A Versatile Newsman . . . Executive . . . Civic Leader . . . Global Traveler

IN ASSUMING the presidency of Gannett Co. Inc., PAUL MILLER pledged a continuation of the unique policy of local autonomy under which FRANK GANNETT always has delegated authority and responsibility to the management of each newspaper in the Group.

Under this system, editorial policies are determined locally by the men who live in and know their communities. This is unlike a chain operation, in which methods and practices are dictated from a central office.

Miller joined the Group as executive assistant to Gannett on Aug. 1, 1947. He was elected a director and a vice president of the company in 1949. At the request of Gannett, he took over many of the duties which the founder had performed for many years.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In 1951 he was elected executive vice president. Since May 1955, he has been operating head of the company. He is also publisher and editor of the Rochester Times-Union and publisher of The Democrat and Chronicle.

His basic philosophy of newspapering was sketched in a bylined article on The Times-Union editorial page two days after his elevation to the presidency:

"A good newspaper is not built overnight. It develops over many years, just as a person's character develops. In time its readers come to know it for what it is. If it is truly successful, the newspaper is a good neighbor, a good citizen, a trusted confidant . . . like a good man or a good woman. It will be doomed to failure, ultimately, if it is not trustworthy, fair and clean. This is especially true of cities of homes.

"That general thinking has been behind the growth and development of newspapers in the Gannett Group, founded on a small beginning by Frank Gannett . . . .

"It is assumed that Gannett newspapers will be clean and community-minded and patriotic and fair. From there on, the local management is on its own as to specific editorial problems and issues."

REGARDING pricing of our products, Miller wrote:

"Briefly, and as general policy, we believe in the lowest feasible advertising and circulation rates. We'd rather get more advertising at a low rate than carry less advertising at a high rate – even if net income were equal. Why? It's better business for us and for our communities. Low rates mean that more advertisers, including little fellows, can use the newspapers regularly, profitably and with adequate space. The overall picture, present and future, is better for newspapers which adhere to this principle, and for the communities they serve.

"The same for circulation. Gannett newspapers have ever been among the last in the nation to up circulation rates.

"The Gannett management believes, in short, that the newspaper – to keep its place and to give maximum service with reasonable profit – must remain an effective mass medium.

"We are interested most of all in home delivered circulation within productive training areas. Why? Because that's where it does the most good for us and for advertisers.

"Our newspapers are produced for family reading in the home by young and old. No advertising is accepted that it is believed might be harmful. Liquor advertising is excluded. A close editorial eye is kept trained on the comics. Standards of decency are insisted on in advertising and news copy."

MILLER CAME TO the Gannett Co. from the Associated Press, which he served for 15 years and of which he was an assistant general manager at the time of his resignation. He was then also chief of the AP Washington Bureau.

For seven years, Miller has been a director of the Associated Press and was the first former employe [sic] to be named to its board.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He also is a member of the Advisory Board assisting the trustees of Columbia University in the award of the Pulitzer Prizes. He is a member of the advisory board of the American Press Institute, a past president of the New York State Publishers Association and a member of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

AT 50, Miller is a leader in civic affairs in Rochester. He has headed Rochester Red Cross campaigns. He was vice chairman of the 1956 Combined Community Chest and Red Cross drive. He was chairman of the Mayor's War Memorial Committee and of the Albert D. Kaiser Award Committee. He is a trustee of the Chamber of Commerce, of George Eastman House and of the Rochester Institute of Technology.

He has made many speeches, interpreting Group policies to audiences within and outside the Group. At a meeting of the North Carolina Press Association last January, he declared:

"We must never forget for a minute that with all our urgent need for better, more efficient, less costly machines and methods – people still come first.

"We need, and I believe we are getting increasingly, more care in hiring and developing, never forgetting that it is important to weed out misfits promptly and considerately as to recognize and encourage the qualified . . . . You can't sum it up in any better line than one with which an associate of mine recently concluded a personnel policy statement for distribution among executives: 'Do the right thing.'"

(5.)

President Miller on Group Expansion: 'We Can Be Interested . . .'

(Continued from preceding page)

AS FOR opportunities for advancement within The Group, he told a gathering of Gannett circulation men: "There'll always be new opportunities. You should think whether you are doing the kind of job that will make someone think about you if there's another opportunity elsewhere in our organization . . . .

"As to where and when opportunities will come, time and events will tell. Things can happen fast, as you have seen. There are bound to be openings from time to time. Also, our company is not necessarily through expanding. We are not going to expand just for the sake of expanding. But we can be interested in good newspapers in good communities that fit our type of operation."

THE NEW president, who already had visited each of the 23 Gannett newspapers, has stepped up his rate of travel since April 11. In one 10-day period he visited Plainfield, N.J., and conferred with executives of the Courier-News; addressed an annual dinner of the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce; spoke to teen-age correspondents of The Democrat and Chronicle in Rochester, and dined at Ithaca with department heads of the Ithaca Journal before touring the Gannett Medical Center on the Cornell campus.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Miller, son of a Southwestern minister and eldest in a family of six, began his newspaper career in Oklahoma at 18 as reporter and editor.

After he joined the Associated Press in 1932, he rose swiftly in the worldwide news service. After service in Columbus, Ohio, he joined the AP New York headquarters foreign desk, then did work on its general news desk.

Miller then successively was night news editor for AP in Kansas City, its key traffic point, and headed its bureau in Salt Lake City, Harrisburg and Philadelphia.

Reassigned to New York in 1941, he became executive assistant in charge of promotion and membership and in 1942 took over the AP's large Washington Bureau. Shortly afterward, he was made one of the organization's assistant general managers.

In Washington for five years he directed national political coverage for Associated Press. This included national political conventions. He was also head of the AP staff covering the United Nations Organization conference in San Francisco in 1945.

MILLER in 1949 represented the American Society of Newspaper Editors at the International Congress of Publishers and Editors in Amsterdam, The Netherlands.

In 1950, he was one of a group of American newspapermen visiting Brazil, Uruguay and Argentina.

In 1951, he and Mrs. Miller were representatives at the centenary celebration of Reuters, British news agency in London.

At that time, Miller interviewed Dwight D. Eisenhower in Paris on reports that the general might be a candidate for the presidential nomination in 1952.

Miller visited Guatemala in 1954 after the anti-Communist revolution and wrote a series of first-hand reports on the situation. He attended both Democratic and Republican national conventions in 1952 and 1956.

In September last year, Miller made a flying trip to London and Egypt to study the Suez crisis. He produced from this a series of articles for newspapers of the Gannett group and others.

Miller attended both Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College. He holds a bachelor of science degree from the latter.

(6.)

A Statement
by Frank Tripp

IF PAUL MILLER will accept the designation, I am proud to call him "my boy."

It was a long and thoughtful search by both Frank Gannett and me to find a man equipped to some day [sic] become the president of The Gannett Newspapers.

We were both of an age to make the choice necessary when Paul came; and there seemed to be an organization-wide realization at once of his destiny.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I say he is my boy because I found him. Frank Gannett had barely met him.

The search was for a man of country-wide acquaintance and newspaper knowledge. We found one who qualifies even worldwide. I believe that Paul Miller is today's best known man in world journalism, and personally knows more of his contemporaries both in and out of the newspaper field.

In his activity, I would have said the same of Frank Gannett. It had to be a rare type to succeed Frank.

But most important it had to be a man who would accept the traditions of Gannett newspapers, marry them and perpetuate them. Most of all, the human relations that make for the security of Gannett people.

PAUL has met this test in his every action and attitude. All that Gannett Newspapers have meant to all of us is safe and secure under his leadership. He has no pals to bring along, no strange policies to nurture, no weird newspaper notions.

Long before he became president he was one of us, dedicated to the same things and the same future that we all have striven for.

In my book, what more can we ask of a successor to the man who built it all – a man we love?

Frank E. Tripp (signature)

(7.)

THIS REPRINT

Consists of a portion of the June 1957 issue of

THE GANNETTEER

employe magazine of The Gannett Newspapers distributed monthly to the homes of 3,500 staff members of the 23 newspapers, 5 radio stations and 3 television

Stations in the Gannett Group.

* * *

CENTRAL NEWS OFFICE

THE GANNETT NEWSPAPERS

517 TIMES-UNION BUILDING

ROCHESTER 14, N. Y.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

y. (B4/f27)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
July 5, 1957

Democrat, Times-Union Plan 1.6 Million Expansion

A 1.6 million dollar expansion and improvement program is to be undertaken at once by The Democrat and Chronicle and The Rochester Times-Union.

It is made necessary by the continuing rapid growth of the two newspapers in the thriving Rochester area.

These plans were announced yesterday by Paul Miller, president of Gannett Co., Inc., which owns and operates the two newspapers:

1 – The Times-Union Building at Broad and Exchange (Times Square), which also houses headquarters of Gannett Co., Inc., will be greatly enlarged.

2 – As rapidly as construction permits, personnel of The Democrat and Chronicle will be moved from the building at Main Street to new and specially planned quarters in the building at Times Square. There are nearly 1,000 employes [sic] on the two papers.

3 – The enlarged building, as central publishing headquarters, will be renamed The Gannett Newspapers Building.

4 – Printing, delivery and communications facilities will be expanded and improved for faster and better service, and presses will be equipped for the use of color in both news and advertising . . . .

Fall Deadline

Miller said:

"The new presses will be in operation and the mail room and loading dock improvements completed this fall.

"The directors of Gannett Co. hope that the major building construction can be well advanced in 1958. That will be the 30th anniversary of what is now The Times-Union Building.

"By that time also, construction in the new Civic Center nearby should be well along. It is our aim to make our building harmonize as far as possible.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The enlarged and beautified publishing center will, we hope, be a contribution to the continuing improvement and development of downtown Rochester" . . . .

(2) PHOTOS
Captions:

A FUTURE BUILDING . . . This is what the Gannett Newspaper Building at Broad Street and exchange Street will look like when an expansion program costing 1.6 million dollars is completed. New additions will provide space to house both daily newspapers.

. . . ON PRESENT SITE! The Times-Union Building, as it is today, will be enlarged and equipped with four new press units, bigger loading docks and expanded communications facilities to meet industry's rapid growth.

z. (B4/f27)

*****

Times-Union
July 5, 1957

Times-Union, Democrat & Chronicle Begin $1.6 Million Expansion Program

Enlarged Press and Building, Color Printing Announced

The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle have undertaken a $1.6 million expansion and improvement program . . . .

DRAWING:

NEW ADDITION – Floors above broken line in architect's sketch will be added to Times-Union building.

aa. (B4/f27)

Editor & Publisher
July 13, 1957

Gannett Puts
2 Papers in One Building

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.

The Times-Union building is being enlarged at a cost of $1,600,000 to house all departments of the Times-Union and of its sister publication, the morning Democrat and Chronicle.

Both are members of the Frank E. Gannett Group. For almost 30 years they have shared common mechanical production facilities but have maintained business and editorial departments in separate buildings.

The enlarged building will be renamed The Gannett Newspapers Building, it was announced July 4 by Paul Miller, president of Gannett Co., Inc., which owns and operates the two newspapers.

Four new Hoe press units are being installed. A dozen units were installed seven years ago. Color cylinders will be provided. Mailroom and loading docks are being expanded. Circulation offices of the Democrat and Chronicle already have been moved to new quarters.

The enlarged loading dock will be of sawtooth design, permitting eight trucks or cars to back diagonally to the dock and load simultaneously. In the mailroom, conveyors are being extended and a third automatic tying machine is being installed.

When completed, the building will be five stories high along the full city block of its length, near the new Civic Center.

No merging of staffs is indicated. In reporting the expansion plans, the morning newspaper said: "The Democrat and Chronicle and the Times-Union will continue to publish separately staffed and edited newspapers."

DRAWING:

ENLARGED building, to house evening and morning newspapers in Rochester, N.Y., is planned by Gannett Newspapers. Broken line shows projected enlargement – three stories atop pressroom at right; one story center.

bb. (B7/f5)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 27, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Why Go Someplace Else? New York Has Everything

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Newspaper Facts of Life

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A Syracuse University researcher studied political reporting of the news magazines: Time, Newsweek and U.S. News for the period of the 1956 political campaign.

Now he has published his conclusions asserting:

"Definite bias" was apparent in the news columns of Time and Newsweek;

U.S. News offered "fairly definite coverage without apparent bias."

*** * ***

THE SURVEY WAS ONE MORE in a widespread look at news media by college researchers and others. Studies sprouted all around after Adlai Stevenson, in his 1952 campaign, complained of a "One-Party Press."

The surveys and the discussions they generated may possibly have influenced some editors of newspapers as well as of magazines to try even harder in the 1956 campaign for neutral handling of news.

However, most editors and most newspapers were dedicated to unbiased reporting long, long before Mr. Stevenson publicly took note that relatively few preferred him to General Eisenhower.

*** * ***

IT IS NOT ALWAYS EASY to get access to laymen, but newspapers should never cease trying to obtain general public understanding of these newspaper facts of life:

We regard reporting of news as one thing;

And commenting editorially as something else again.

Each has its place in most newspapers. Relatively few intentionally permit editorial expressions mixed in with news reports. Many do encourage today's fine crop of reporters to g beyond and behind the bare facts and give explanation and background.

Even so, what is objective reporting or fair explanation and background to one reader, may look like biased editorializing to another. Correspondence in Rochester only this week has demonstrated that all over again.

It's a problem of performance as well as of public relations. We are committed to the continuing effort to make one match the other.

cc. (B4/f26)

*****

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

WHO'S WHO IN THE COMPOSING ROOM
July 1957

Paul Miller Is Elected President of The Gannett Co. in Rochester, N. Y.

Paul Miller, of Pittsford, N. Y., executive vice president of Gannett Co., Inc., has been elected president, succeeding Frank Gannett, who has become president emeritus. Mr. Miller also became president of the Gannett Foundation and WHEC, Inc., radio-television subsidiary . . . .

dd. (B4/f27)

Hillside 5-2122
195 Sandringham Road
Rochester 10, New York

(Handwritten):

Dear Ones
It was a good day – ten years ago on August first when you came to us.
It's a better day today – ten years later.
Gone fast – hasn't it?

With devotion –
Kyrie & Frank.

ee. (B4/f27)

Times-Union
August 7, 1957

From Our Readers:

'A Splendid Job,' Governor Says

I read with great interest Paul Miller's editorial column, "Why Go Someplace Else? New York Has Everything" (Times-Union, July 27).

I think it was a splendid job and delivered very succinctly the message that I and the State Commerce Department have been trying to get across for some years.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It certainly is encouraging to have a fine newspaper like the Rochester Times-Union in there pitching along with us.

AVERELL HARRIMAN
Governor, State of New York, Albany

ff. (B4/f27)

The Gazette-News Company
PUBLISHING AND PRINTING
LE ROY, N.Y.

August 15, 1957

Mr. Paul Miller, Editor
Rochester Times-Union
Rochester, N. Y.

Dear Paul Miller:

Enclosed copy today's Gazette-News, containing reprint of your editorial [see immediately below]. I have also marked a column I do weekly, which is a poor excuse for keeping me on the payroll.

Whether or not you grew up in a small town, I do not know. Without any fact or foundation I incline to the thought you did. If that be the case, I have an idea a look at our paper will take you back over the years to the little village newspaper you knew – rather crude and simple.

Not infrequently some of the young fry associated with me in the business suggest that we wake up, revamp the format, use many pictures, etc. etc. This far I have resisted, suggesting we continue "as is" until I fall out of the picture. I tell them we cannot compete with the daily papers, so why try. "Let's be honestly just what we are, a little home town newspaper." It is my thought the ultimate success of the weekly newspaper rests on this basis. True it is, I could be wrong in my premise. Forgive me for this intrusion of "old dog" thinking.

Sincerely,
Ed Perkins (signed)
Edward M. Perkins

EMP:sb
Enc. 1

gg. (B4/f27)
*****

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The LeRoy Gazette-News
LeRoy, N.Y., Thursday, August 15, 1957

Paul Miller Writes His Impressions of Graham Meeting

(Editor's Note: Paul Miller is editor and publisher of the Rochester Times-Union. He is a newspaperman of wide experience and akin to the best of baseball umpires, he calls 'em as he sees 'em." Under the caption, "Billy Graham in the Garden – and This was New York?" this Rochester newspaperman expressed himself in the lead editorial in Saturday's Times-Union as follows:)

It was difficult to believe that this was New York City, quite impossible that it could be the Madison Square Garden I know . . . .

hh. (B4/f27)

August 16, 1957

Mr. Edward M. Perkins
The Gazette-News Co.
LeRoy, New York

Dear Mr. Perkins:

I can't tell you how pleased I have been with our correspondence and I have just been going through the Gazette-News with admiration and appreciation.

I certainly did grow up in a small town – a lot of small towns. My father was a pioneer minister in Missouri and Oklahoma. It used to seem to me we moved every two years or so. I'll enclose a little reprint from our Gannett house organ which gives you some more information.

I think you have a splendid newspaper in every way, one of which you must and should be very proud. I congratulate you on it and am happy I have had this opportunity to go over a copy closely.

With very best wishes to you,

Cordially,

ii. (B4/f27)

EDWARD M. PERKINS

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

August 19, 1957

Dear Paul Miller:

I am honored indeed in being quoted by you editorially in the Times-Union. Mrs. Perkins read it (Women do read editorials more than some newspaper folks think) and happily called my attention to it when I arrived home about 5 p.m. I think it upped my waning prestige around our menage appreciably.

Thank you so much.

It is gracious in you to send me the copy of your house organ containing the thumbnail sketch. Mrs. Perkins' father was a Baptist minister, and she knows all about this frequent moving of small town preachers.

And the family picture: You are a multi-millionaire plus in an environment dollars cannot buy. Congratulations and my compliments to Mrs. Miller. I have long maintained that no man ever amounts to much or attains his best without a good woman pal alongside him, taking the hurdles as they come.

Your best years are ahead of you. May they be rich in contentment, happiness and satisfying accomplishment.

Sincerely,
Ed Perkins (signed)

Mr. Paul Miller
Rochester, N. Y.

jj. (B4/f29)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
September 8, 1957

Photo Parley
Opens Tonight

Paul Miller, president of The Gannett Newspapers, and Donald McMaster, president of George Eastman House, will welcome more than 200 news executives this evening at the 1957 Rochester Photo Conference . . . .

kk. (B4/f29)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
September 9, 1957

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Annual Meeting
Focuses on Phases
Of Photo Coverage

The second annual Rochester Photo Conference focused last night on infinity and readied for fast action today on five phases of picture coverage.

More than 200 United States and Canadian newspaper and magazine executives were welcomed last night by George Eastman House President Donald McMaster and Oscar N. Solbert, director.

The conference, jointly sponsored by the National Press Photographers Assn. and Eastman House, will consist of panel discussions today through Thursday in the Dryden Theater.

Conference Committee Chairman J. Winton Lemen of Eastman Kodak Co. introduced Paul Miller, president of the Gannett Co, who also welcomed delegates.

A buffet dinner preceded talks by James Card, Eastman House film curator, and Beaumont Hall curator.

The plight of a photographer who goes after baseball pictures only to find the park empty, was hilariously pantomimed by Buster Keaton in a silent feature length film, "The Cameraman."

Arthur L. Whitman, NPPA president, will moderate today's sessions on "How Free Is the Press?", "Which Camera?", "Developments in Reproduction," "Pictures on Sunday" and "The magic of Color."

ll. (B4/f29)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
September 14, 1957

Gannett Clinic at Cornell Dedicated

Publisher Marks
81st Birthday
Tomorrow

Cornell University today dedicated its new $500,000 Gannett Medical Clinic, a gift of the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation Inc.

Gannett, who has been ill since April, 1955, and was unable to attend the ceremonies, will observe his 81st birthday tomorrow.

The publisher's wife presented the foundation's gift . . . .

Trustees and directors of The Gannett Newspapers were present. Paul Miller, publisher of the two Rochester papers in the Gannett Group, is president of the foundation and of the Gannett Newspapers . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PHOTO
Caption:

NEW CLINIC – Being dedicated today is Cornell University's $500,000 Gannett Medical Clinic on the campus at Ithaca. It is a gift of the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation Inc. Gannett graduated from Cornell in '98.

mm. (B4/f29)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
September 15, 1957

Gannett Medical Clinic Presented to Cornell

Special to The Democrat and Chronicle
From the Ithaca Journal

ITHACA, Sept. 14 – Cornell's new $500,000 student medical clinic was dedicated this afternoon. The two-story stone-and-glass building was a gift of the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation, Inc. of Rochester . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

AT DEDICATION – Among those attending ceremonies at new Gannett Medical Clinic at Cornell University yesterday were, from left, John L. Collyer, Agron [sic], Ohio, Cornell board chairman; Frank Tripp, Elmira, Gannett Co. chairman of board; Mrs. Paul Miller, Rochester; Paul Miller, President of Gannett Co.; President Deane W. Malott of Cornell; Dr. Norman S. Moore, clinic director; Erwin R. Davenport, Rochester, Gannett Co. vice president; Mrs. Frank Gannett. (AP) nn. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
September 28, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Conference with a Goal: Better Newspapers for You

By PAUL MILLER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

No business or professional group brings its own activities under more critical, searching examination than newspapermen in convention apply to newspapers.

Some conventions seem largely given over to self-praise.

This is much less true of a newspaper gathering – although we of course enjoy our share.

For the most part, it's "How come we didn't do so and so?" and why don't we do it this way next time?" almost from the moment a chairman gavels for order.

So it will be when executives and department heads of newspapers in The Gannett Group – including The Times-Union and Democrat and Chronicle – assemble here for their own annual two-day clinic next Monday and Tuesday. Operating heads of affiliated radio and TV stations also will be on hand for meetings of their own.

Rochester is headquarters of the Group which newspapermen and students of newspapers elsewhere refer to as notable in a number of respects, two in particular:

1. The lack of uniformity as to size, ranging from a fine weekly at Potsdam, N.Y. to the dailies of Rochester and Hartford, Conn.

2. The policy of autonomy. There is no central editorial dictation or control.

* * *

FOUNDER FRANK GANNETT, ill at his Rochester home, will be absent again this year, but his two closest long-time associates will be actively on hand.

Frank Tripp, chairman of the board, is known in Rochester and throughout our Group for many things, not least being his weekly column.

E. R. Davenport, more or less retired now, but very much a factor, spends several months each year at his Florida home, but is known widely as the former general manager of the Rochester newspapers.

* * *

AS IN MANY OTHER FIELDS, the problem of ever-rising costs will dominate many of the discussions.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Inflation is a dangerous threat to our national life. Each dollar in terms of what you can buy with it has dwindled from 100 cents (its 1939 purchasing power) to 49.7 cents.

Newspapers have been fighting to hold the line for years, not only in campaigns for economy in government and elsewhere, but also in their own pricing policies. Even so, many have had to go reluctantly to 6, 7 or 10 cents daily, and more will be forced to do so in the future.

But name any other product that you could buy for a nickel 10 years ago that still sells for a nickel today – yet has steadily improved in quality, content, service and appeal.

*** * ***

THE ADVANCES of recent years have been many:

Color printing – adopted expensively by many newspapers and with more coming along all the time; better local and worldwide picture coverage and reproduction; sharper, more interesting, more effective news writing and advertising; broader coverage in all fields, including sports and women's news.

All these are tangible, appreciated advances, significant to every community newspapers serve.

*** * ***

ALL AND MORE will be discussed and reviewed at the meetings here at the Sheraton next week.

People, however, not processes, will have No. 1 billing:

A new training program, more than a year in preparation, among the best in the newspaper world, will be outlined.

Under this program, to be undertaken throughout the Gannett Group, young men and women will be given organized training that is sure to mean (1) even greater opportunities for them in the years that lie ahead, and (20 still better newspapers for readers and advertisers.

oo. (B4/f29)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
September 30, 1957

PHOTO
Caption:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

CONSULTATION – Officials of The Gannett Co. gather at a dinner in Sheraton Hotel in preparation for a two-day clinic of Gannett newspaper editors and executives which opens today. Left to right: Paul Miller, president; Mrs. Frank Gannett; Frank E. Tripp, chairman of board; Douglas C. Townson and E. R. Davenport, vice presidents. Conference will deal with news writing, economics, advertising and group policy.

pp. (B4/f27)

The Gannetteer
September 1957

(1.) Hartford Times Executives Mark a New Milestone

A FLYING TRIP to Hartford last month by FRANK TRIPP, PAUL MILLER, LYNN BITNER and AL BEST resulted in a surprise recognition of Paul Miller's 10th anniversary with the Gannett Company when Hartford Times Publisher DAVE DANIELS presented the Gannett Co. president with an electric clock inscribed "Paul Miller Time."

The presentation was at a business meeting and dinner at the Hotel Statler attended by members of The Times executive staff and the visitors from Gannett headquarters.

In his presentation Daniel pointed out that the figure 10 seemed to have a particular significance in connection with the Hartford Times and the Gannett Group. He recalled that the Gannett Company had observed its 30th anniversary by holding its first Hartford conference in 1936, its 40th in 1946 and its 50th at the Hartford Gannett meeting at the Statler last September.

Daniel said that while he did not believe these 10-year intervals were deliberately planned, he felt it was most appropriate and gratifying, even if unintentional, that Miller had chosen the date for his visit to Hartford, just one day away from his 10 anniversary. He said: "The clock is just a small token of recognition of the occasion, but it's a Connecticut product and we hope it will serve you accurately."

In his response, Miller indicated that he was pleased to return to Hartford. He said that he did not realize that anyone in Hartford would remember that he first came to the Gannett Company on August 1, 1947. The gift, he said, would serve as a pleasant reminder of that milestone.

Miller paid tribute to Tripp, describing him as one of the finest and best informed newspapermen in the country. He also cited outstanding work by Times

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Sports Editor ART McGINLEY, whose achievements inspired a written tribute from Tripp (re-printed on Page 2).

The Rochester group, flying into Bradley Field, said they were impressed by the airport and the Murphy Terminal Building – both results of the vision of retired Times Publisher FRANK MURPHY.

(2.)

A Publisher Goes to Hear Evangelist Graham

Last month President Paul Miller of Gannett Co., Inc. attended a New York rally conducted by the Rev. Billy Graham, evangelist. He reported the experience in the following signed editorial published in the Rochester Times-Union, of which he is editor and publisher:

By PAUL MILLER

IT WAS DIFFICULT to believe that this was New York City, quite impossible that it could be the Madison Square Garden I know.

As the choir in the balcony behind the pulpit sang an invitation hymn, "Just As I Am," there was movement here and there along the front rows of the seats that covered all of the vast floor of the Garden up to within about 30 feet of the pulpit.

A Negro woman stepped out alone across the open expanse of floor and stood, as Billy Graham indicated, before his pulpit. She was joined by a small boy, then a girl with a pony-tail hair-do. A young couple followed. Now there was a stirring in the great shadowed reaches of the farthest balconies, and throughout the tiers of boxes just off the floor. All aisles became alive with movement toward the front:–

Adults of all ages and all manner of appearance. A handful of teenage boys who fully fitted the description of gang kids to whom Billy Graham had made a special appeal. Schoolgirls in clusters of three and four.

On they came. They packed the open floor area before and beside the platform. They stretched out in lines back up the aisles.

The choir, at Evangelist Graham's signal, broke into another old revival hymn, "Almost Persuaded." The voices and the piano and organ on the platform, rolled out to fill the Garden where boxing, hockey, horse shows, circuses and basketball are the common fare.

Hundreds had now responded to Billy Graham's appeal for "decisions for Christ."

I SAT MARVELING from a box facing above and to one side of the front row of seats. I could see the expressions of dozens of those who came down the aisles. It was a moving experience.

This was New York?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The tall powerful young evangelist, handsomely attired in a blue-gray Rochester-tailored suit, with gray shirt and lively tie, could have dominated any theater stage in the city had acting rather than the ministry been his career.

But his manner and his preaching and his appeal at "invitation" took many of the thousands hearing him back in memory to "revival meetings" in small towns in the South and West and even here in the East. The hymns were the same:

"I Need Thee Every Hour."
"What a Friend We Have in Jesus."
"Draw Me Nearer."
Lord, I'm Coming Home."

I heard those 40 years and more ago in Claremore, Okla.!

The same songs, the same general appeal, generating the same response among the thousands drawn from the most blasé city on earth.

An older man sitting next to me whispered, "It's this way every night. I just can't believe it."

APPARENTLY, Billy Graham has difficulty believing it himself. He has lost weight during the meetings, but he says he never felt better in his life. "The Lord is seeing me through." He looks trim and fit. His color is good.

He speaks with vigor but (I was pleased to note) with less emotion and fewer gestures than one might suspect after hearing him on radio or TV. He follows his prepared sermon rather closely, gripping the pulpit stand with one hand as he points a finger or holds up his Bible with the other hand.

He wears his hair cut full. His eyes are deep-set.

He smiles often, works in frequent humorous anecdotes – there were chuckles and outright laughter from the audience.

I had been in New York on business for a day and decided on the spur of the moment to stay over and hear Billy Graham, one of the great personalities of all time and a controversial one.

As his call for "decisions" was answered by the tide of all kinds and colors, I looked at their earnest faces. I couldn't help making a resolution or two myself.

Then I thought of those who have criticized and scoffed.

The older man next to me whispered again:

"I've lived here and been active in churches all my life. Nothing has ever stirred New York like this."

I don't see how any one [sic] could attend and not get some spiritual stimulation out of the experience.

qq. (B4/f29)

PHOTO:

1957-5A

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Miller, Mrs. Gannett, Mr. Tripp, Mr. Townson, Mr. Davenport -- Hotel Sheraton, Rochester, N.Y., Sunday, Oct. 6, 1957 – Conference Executives Gannett papers.

rr. (B4/f29)

(1.)

TICKET
OF ADMISSION

ADULT

THIS Ticket entitles the Holder to vifit the Exhibition Buildings of

COLONIAL WILLIAMSBURG

as often as defired until expiration Date indicated below. This Ticket is not transferable.

All income derived from the Exhibition Buildings is ufed to maintain & develop Colonial Williamfburg and to carry forward its educational Program.

Admiffion $3.00
Pleafe Sign below:

Expiration Date:
October 17, 1957

[map of Colonial Williamsburg on back]

(2.)

IMPORTANT NOTICE

This Room No. 149 is definitely reserved for the visit of Queen Elizabeth on October 15 and 16.

We thank you and appreciate your Cooperation.

THE MANAGEMENT

over –

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Gretchen T Byrd

To
The Prince Paul, Duke of Rochester from. Harry F. Byrd Jr.

(3a.) 1607-1957

In honor of
Her Majesty
Queen Elizabeth II
and
His Royal Highness
The Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh

The Governor of Virginia
and
Mrs. Thomas Bahnson Stanley
The Virginia Three Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary Commission
and
The Jamestown-Williamsburg-Yorktown
National Celebration Commission request the pleasure of the company of
Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller
at a Reception
Wednesday, the sixteenth of October at half after four o'clock
Garden of the Governor's Palace
Williamsburg, Virginia

Please reply
The Secretary, Travis House

Dress Informal

Guests are requested to arrive not later than five o'clock

(3b.) Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller

To Guests at the Garden Party Honoring Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh

Arrival at the Governor's Palace: All guests are urged to arrive at 4:30, and under no circumstances later than 5 o'clock, in order that they may pass through the receiving line and be served prior to the arrival of the Queen and Prince Philip at 5:30 o'clock.

Parking at the Palace: A parking sticker is enclosed which will admit you to a restricted parking area in the Matthew Whaley school playground adjacent to the Palace.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Admittance to the Palace: It will be necessary to present this card at the Palace gates in order to be admitted. None except invited guests will be admitted. Children are not invited. Please do not bring cameras.

In Case of Rain: Parking will be at the Information Center and Shuttle Bus transportation will be furnished from the parking area to the Palace. A canopy will be erected over a portion of the Garden to prevent inconvenience to guests.

Presentation of Guests: Because of the pressure of time, it will be possible to present only a very few of the guests to the Queen and to Prince Philip. Your co-operation is requested.

Departure of the Royal Party: Guests are requested t defer their departure until the Royal party has left the Palace, at about 6:30.

THE VIRGINIA 350TH ANNIVERSARY COMMISSION
THE JAMESTOWN-WILLIAMSBURG-YORKTOWN
CELEBRATION COMMISSION

(3c.) PHOTO:
1957-5B

At Jamestown Festival with the Harry Byrds, Jr.

ss. (B4/f29)
*****

The Gannetteer
October 1957

Student Medical Clinic
Dedicated at Cornell

CORNELL UNIVERSITY'S new $500,000 student medical clinic was dedicated Sept. 14. The two-story stone-and-glass building was a gift of the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation, Inc. . . .

tt. (B4/f27)

U.S. News & World Report
November 22, 1957

Censorship – A Declaration By Catholic Bishops

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Following are excerpts from a statement released Nov. 17, 1957, by the Catholic Bishops of the United states after their annual meeting in Washington, D.C.:

Censorship is today a provocative and sometimes misleading word. It generates controversy by provoking those who would deny in fact any restrictions, legal or moral, upon freedom of expression. It misleads, since few approach the problems of censorship without emotion.

Obviously, the state does have some power of censorship. In times of war or great national danger, few will deny it a preventive power. In normal circumstances, however, the state exercises only a punitive function, placing restraint on those who misuse liberty to deny equal or greater rights to others. The state's power of censorship is not unlimited.

Morally, the Church can and does exercise what is called censorship. This right is hers from her office as teacher of morals and guardian of divine truth. Her decisions bind her people but her sanctions upon them are only spiritual and moral. She does, nevertheless, express her judgments to all men of good will, soliciting their reasoned understanding and their freely given acceptance and support.

Most commonly in civil affairs the particular freedom that is involved in discussions of the subject is freedom of the press, not only in newspapers and other publications but also such dramatic expression as is represented in the theater, motion pictures, radio and television.

Because in modern times the press has been a major instrument in the development of knowledge and the chief means of its diffusion, freedom of the press is closely bound up with man's right to knowledge. Man's patient, plodding ascent to the heights of truth evidences the spiritual powers given him by God and at the same time their wounding by sin. His search for truth is an enriching and ennobling experience, uniquely proper to man.

The right to know the truth is evidently broad and sweeping. Is the right to express this knowledge, whether through speech or press, equally broad? That man has a right to communicate his ideas through the spoken or written word is beyond challenge. And yet it can be recognized at the outset that expression adds a new element to knowledge. Directed as it is to others, it is an act that has social implications. Society itself must take cognizance of it. Although man must claim and hold to freedom of expression, he must also recognize his duty to exercise it with a sense of responsibility.

This is a freedom that is intimately bound up with other freedoms that man prizes. Freedom of the press is patently a key safeguard of civil liberty. Democracy does not exist without it. The day free expression of opinion is extinguished and all are constrained to fall into a single pattern of political thought and action, democracy has died.

* * *

Because freedom of the press is a basic right to be respected an safeguarded, it must be understood and defended not as license but as true rational freedom. The kind of uncritical claims for and defense of liberty which so often have been made in our day actually places that liberty in jeopardy. For this reason we feel that light must be thrown not only on its meaning but also on its limits.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

To speak of limits is to indicate that freedom of expression is not an absolute freedom. Not infrequently it is so presented. It is alleged that this freedom can suffer no curtailment or limitation without being destroyed. The traditional and sounder understanding of freedom, and specifically freedom of the press, is more temperate. It recognizes that liberty has a moral dimension. Man is true to himself as a free being when he acts in accord with the laws of right reason. As a member of society his liberty is exercised within bounds fixed by the multiple demands f social living.

In the concrete, this means that the common good is to be served. It will entail, among other things, a respect for the rights of others, a regard for public order and a positive deference to those human, moral and social values which are our common Christian heritage. It is within this context that freedom of expression is rightly understood.

This recognition of limitations has been given statement in recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States: "We hold that obscenity is not within the area of constitutionally protected speech or press." (Roth v. United States, 77 S. Ct. 1304, Alberts v. California, 77 S. Ct. 1304, June 24, 1957.) The decisions touching on this subject are encouraging to those who have been deeply concerned over trends that threatened to destroy the traditional authority exercised by the state over expressions and displays of obscenity.

Contrary to this trend, the Court has held that there is such a thing as obscenity susceptible of legal determination and demanding legal restraint; that laws forbidding the circulation of obscene literature are not as such in violation of the Constitution; that the Federal Government may ban such publications from the mail; that a State may act against obscene literature and punish those who sell or advertise it.

The decisions reasserted the traditional conviction that freedom of expression is exercised within the defined limits of law. Obscenity cannot be permitted as a proper exercise of a basic human freedom. Civil enactments as well as the moral law both indicate that the exercise of this freedom cannot be unrestrained.

Ideally, we would wish that no man-made legal restraints were ever necessary. Thus, restraint on any human freedom would be imposed rather by one's own reason than by external authority. In any case, restraint's best justification is that it is imposed for the sake of a greater freedom. Since, however, individuals do act in an irresponsible way and do threaten social and moral harm, society must face its responsibility and exercise its authority. The exigencies of social living demand it.

* * *

Although civil authority has the right and duty to exercise such control over the various media of communication as is necessary to safeguard public morals, yet civil law, especially in those areas which are constitutionally protected, will define as narrowly as possible the limitations placed on freedom. The one purpose which will guide legislators in establishing necessary restraints to freedom is the securing of the general welfare through the prevention of grave and harmful abuse. Our judicial system has been dedicated from the beginning to the principle of minimal restraint. Those who may become impatient with the reluctance of the state through its laws to curb and curtail human freedom should bear in mind

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Continued from page 77

A DECLARATION
ON CENSORSHIP

That this is a principle which serves to safeguard all our vital freedoms – to curb less rather than more; to hold for liberty rather than restraint.

In practice the exercise of any such curbs by the state calls for the highest discretion and prudence. This is particularly true in the area of the press. For here an unbridled power to curb and repress can make a tyrant of government, and can wrest from the people one by one their most cherished liberties.

Prudence will always demand, as is true under our governmental system, that the courts be in a position to protect the people against arbitrary repressive action. While they uphold the authority of government to suppress that which not only has no social value, but is actually harmful, as is the case with the obscene, the courts will be the traditional bulwark of the people's liberties.

Within the bounds essential to the preservation of a free press, human action and human expression may fall short of what is legally punishable and may still defy the moral standards of a notable number in the community. Between the legally punishable and the morally good there exists a wide gap. If we are content to accept as morally inoffensive all that is legally unpunishable, we have lowered greatly our moral standards. It must be recognized that civil legislation by itself does not constitute an adequate standard of morality.

An understanding of this truth, together with the knowledge that offensive materials on the stage and screen and in publications have a harmful effect, moved the Bishops of the United States to set up agencies to work in the field – for motion pictures, the National League of Decency; for printed publications, the National Office for Decent Literature.

The function of these agencies is related in character. Each evaluates and offers the evaluation to those interested. Each seeks to enlist in a proper and lawful manner the co-operation of those who can curb the evil. Each invites the help of all people in the support of its objectives. Each endeavors through positive action to form habits of artistic taste which will move people to seek out and patronize the good. In their work they reflect the moral teaching of the Church. Neither agency exercises censorship in any true sense of the word. [END]

uu. (B4/f29)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
November 18, 1957

Gannett Co. Buys

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

TV in California

STOCKTON, Calif. – The Gannett Co. – which has newspaper, radio and television interests in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Illinois – today projected its first expansion into the Far West.

Paul Miller of Rochester, N.Y., president of Gannett Co., Inc., announced the signing of an agreement for purchase of TV Station KOVR in the rich Central Valley of California. KOVR operates on Very High Frequency (VHF) over Channel 13 and is affiliated with American broadcasting Company. It is licensed to Stockton and serves the three principal cities of the valley – Stockton, Sacramento and Modesto . . . .

vv. (B4/f29)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
November 19, 1957

Gannett Co. Acquires
California TV Station

STOCKTON, Calif., Nov. 18 – Purchase of television station KOVR in the Sacramento Valley of California by Gannett Co., Inc., was announced yesterday by Paul Miller, president. It is a three million dollar transaction, subject to approval by the Federal Communications Commission, which has authority over the licensing of all broadcast stations . . . .

ww. (B4/f29)

The Gannetteer
December 1957

PURCHASE of television station KOVR in the Sacramento Valley of California by Gannett Co., Inc., was announced Nov. 18 by PAUL MILLER, president. The transaction is subject to approval by the Federal Communications Commission, which has authority over the licensing of all broadcasting stations.

KOVR-TV, operating on Channel 13, is a VHF station licensed to Stockton and serving the three principal cities of the Sacramento Valley – Stockton, Sacramento and Modesto. Its maximum power transmitter (316,000 watts) is situated atop Butte Mountain, near Jackson in Amador County, heart of the famous Gold Rush country of 1849.

KOVR serves nearly 450,000 TV homes in this rapidly growing agricultural and industrial area which has a population of 1,500,000. It is affiliated with the American Broadcasting Co. network.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Gannett Co. proposes to acquire the capital stock of Television Diablo, Inc., owner and operator of KOVR-TV, for $1,100,000, with Diablo remaining committed to repay its outstanding indebtedness, approximately $2 million.

Principal stockholder of Television Diablo Inc., is H. Leslie Hoffman of Los Angeles, president of Hoffman Electronics Corp. The concern manufactures radio, television and high fidelity equipment and is active in the government missile and military electronics programs.

"We plan to retain substantially the same staff now operating the station and to announce a program for improved and expanded service to this great and growing area," Miller said.

"We are particularly pleased that Terry H. Lee, the present general manager of KOVR, has agreed to remain with the company until July 1, 1958. Mr. Lee has been a tremendous factor in the development program of the present KOVR, and his help and guidance will be of major assistance to the Gannett Company."

C. GLOVER DELANEY of Rochester, managing director of Gannett Company's Broadcast Division, will devote considerable time to plans for development of KOVR.

Representing the Gannett Company in investigation and negotiations, extended over several weeks, were CYRIL WILLIAMS, treasurer; LYNN N. BITNER, general manager; DELANEY and Justin Doyle of the Rochester law firm of Nixon, Hargrave, Devans & Dey.

The Gannett Company operates other television and radio properties. On Nov. 4, a million-watt UHF station went on the air in Binghamton. Other stations in the Gannett organization are: WHEC, and WHEC-TV, Rochester, N.Y.; WENY, Elmira, N.Y.; WDAN and WDAN-TV (UHF), Danville, Ill., and WINR, Binghamton, N.Y.

THE GANNETT CO. Inc., founded by FRANK GANNETT, who is now president emeritus, operates 22 newspapers in New York State, Connecticut, New Jersey and Illinois.

Gannett News Service maintains bureaus in Washington and Albany. J. P. McKinney & Son, national advertising representatives, a subsidiary of the Gannett Company, has offices in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Syracuse. Legal formalities were completed at mid-month and it was expected that an application for formal approval by the FCC would be presented in a few days. Normally, FCC action on such a transfer requires two to three months.

Hoffman, commenting on the agreement said:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"We have put a great deal of time, money and effort into the development of KOVR as an instrument of real service to the valley area. I am delighted that the purchaser is the Gannett Company, because I know it will carry on and expand policies to the continued best advantage of the people of this area."

xx. (B4/f29)

Editor & Publisher
November 23, 1957

Gannett Co.
Buys Station
In California

ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Paul Miller, president of Gannett Co., Inc., this week announced the signing of an agreement for purchase of a Stockton, Calif., television station by the Gannett Co.

The station, KOVR, is a 316,000-watt station licensed to operate on VHF channel 13. It serves Sacramento and Modesto as well as Stockton. It is affiliated with the American Broadcasting Co.

The Gannett Co. proposes to acquire the capital stock of Television Diablo, Inc., owner and operator of KOVR for $1,100,000, with Diablo remaining committed to repay its outstanding indebtedness, approximately $2,000,000.

Principal stockholder of Television Diablo, Inc., is H. Leslie Hoffman of Los Angeles, president of Hoffman Electronics Corp. The concern manufactures radio, television and high fidelity equipment.

Mr. Miller said: "Terry H. Lee, general manager of KOVR, has agreed to remain with the company until July 1, 1958."

In the Gannett Group are 22 newspapers, four radio stations and three television stations, all east of the Mississippi.

Representing the Gannett Co. with Mr. Miller in investigation and negotiations, extended over several weeks, were Cyril Williams, treasurer; Lynn N. Bitner, general manager; and C. Glover Delaney, managing director of Gannett radio and television properties.

Formal request for approval of the transaction will be made at once to the Federal Communications Commission.

yy. (B4/f29)
*****

The Gannetteer
November 1957

(1.) Gannett Medical Clinic

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Dedicated at Cornell

CORNELL UNIVERSITY on Sept. 14 dedicated a student medical clinic, the gift of a newspaper foundation created by one of its alumni, FRANK E. GANNETT . . . .

(2.)

Industrialist Lauds Gannett At Dedication of New Medical Center

By JOHN COLLYER

Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Cornell University, and Chairman of the Board of the B. F. Goodrich Co.

Remarks at dedication of Gannett Medical Clinic, Ithaca, N. Y., Sept. 14, 1957

IF I were to pay adequate tribute to Mr. Gannett I would be speaking right on through tomorrow, his birthday.

A mere sampling of his good works for his family, his friends, neighbors, employes [sic], his university, his beloved city of Rochester, his state, his nation, and the world would take many volumes of the printed word . . . .

(2.) PHOTOS
Captions:

FRANK GANNETT McADAM, grandson of the founder of Gannett newspapers, stands with his grandmother and President Deane W. Malott of Cornell University after unveiling plaque and portrait of Frank Gannett at dedication of Cornell student medical clinic.

OUTSIDE CLINIC following dedication at Ithaca, N.Y., are Cornell President Deane W. Malott; Cornell Board Chairman John L. Collyer, Mrs. Frank Gannett, in whose husband's honor the clinic is named; Frank Tripp, chairman of the Gannett Co. board; Dr. Norman S. Moore, clinic director; Paul Miller, Gannett Co. president; and E. R. Davenport, Gannett Co. director and original partner in establishment of Gannett Group.

zz. (B4/f29)

*****

The Gannetteer
November 1957

EFFECTIVE JAN. 1, 1958

* Henry Stock Named Group AD Director

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* Zimmerman Chosen Plainfield General Manager

TWO appointments effective Jan. 1 were announced Sept. 30 by PAUL MILLER, president of the Gannett Company, at the annual conference of executives of all the newspapers and radio and television stations in the Group, which was held at Rochester.

HENRY W. STOCK, advertising director of the Albany Knickerbocker News, will become advertising director of all the Gannett Newspapers, with his headquarters in Rochester. He will succeed IRVING H. FITCH, who retires after serving in that post since 1951.

A. WALLACE ZIMMERMAN will become general manager of the Plainfield (N.J.) Courier-News, one of the fastest-growing afternoon newspapers in the country. CHAUNCEY A. STOUT will retire as publisher on the eve of his 80th birthday, having been an executive of The Courier-News for more than half a century . . . .

aaa. (B4/f29)

The Gannetteer
November 1957

Reporter-Adman Training Courses Planned for New Staffers

TRAINING PROGRAMS for beginners in reporting and advertising were outlined last month at a meeting of Group executives in Rochester. Parts of the training program already have been put into effect in some plants.

President PAUL MILLER announced the program, developed by JOHN E. HESELDEN, Group personnel director, with the aid of newspaper department heads in Rochester, Utica and Albany. Programs will be conducted individually by Group newspapers.

Trainees will include recent college graduates and other outstanding young men and women who are entering newspaper work for the first time. They will work from manuals prepared by Group executives and will follow courses of supplementary reading. New staffers with a year or two of newspaper experience will be expected to take only part of the full course, tentatively scheduled to require 21 weeks. Here's how the full 21-week period might be spent:

– One day of orientation and explanation of basic newspaper goals and principles.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

– Three weeks of study and work in a circulation department, with a circulation executive directing the training in marketing, area coverage, quantitative values, delivery systems and growth factors.

– Two weeks in observing mechanical department operations, including copy handling and press production.

– Twelve weeks in the department for which the trainee is being prepared. Newsmen would spend this in working on various desks and major beats, studying editing techniques and writing routine stories. Advertising trainees would spend one week in classified, nine weeks in retail – accompanying regular salesmen on their calls – and two weeks in general advertising.

– Three weeks (for admen) in the newsroom; three weeks in the advertising departments (for newsmen).

– Eight days in the business office, studying bookkeeping and accounting practices, newsprint accounting, statistical s cost surveys, billing and budgeting.

PRESIDENT MILLER said young men and women will be given organized training "that is sure to mean (1) even greater opportunities for them in the years ahead, and (2) still better newspapers for readers and advertisers." He said there is no desire "to standardize news gathering and ad selling procedures. The sole aim is to supply operating executives with a tailor-made plan which can be followed in developing promising younger people."

Assisting Heselden in setting up the program have been J. J. BURKE, Rochester Times-Union; CYRUS H. FAVOR, Utica Daily Press; HENRY W. STOCK, Knickerbocker News, Albany; ANTHONY T. POWDERLY, Democrat and Chronicle, Rochester; HERMAN E. MOECKER, Knickerbocker News, Albany; JOHN E. GARTLAND, traveling auditor, Gannett Co., Inc.; and HOWARD HOSMER, Rochester Times-Union.

bbb. (B4/f29)

National Press Photographer
November, 1957

Moeller Charges Govt. Interferes with Press

The charge that the federal government is actively interfering with the processes of freedom of information was made in Rochester by journalism professor Leslie G. Moeller, director of the State University of Iowa's School of

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Journalism, who said that administrators learned that "the handout, and a tight rein on subordinates, is a method of controlling the flow of information."

"For the first time in its history," Moeller told the Rochester Photo Conference, the federal government has begun to espouse formally the theme that "the public does not have a right to know."

Moeller cited executive sessions totaling one third of all congressional committee hearings and the absence of information from the Atomic Energy Commission on atomic fall-out as examples of what he termed "the right of suppression" being practiced in areas of our government.

The Iowa educator said freedom of information or "the right of access," is perhaps under greater challenge in this country now than it ever has been and that the real beneficiaries of freedom of information are its weakest defenders.

"Mr. and Mrs. Every-Day Citizen," he said, "give the strong impression of not bothering much with this sort of thing. In general, Mr. Average Citizen seems to feel that, so long as things go moderately well, freedom in the abstract is somebody else's business," he added.

Moeller urged that educators and professionals in the media of mass communications bend every effort to bring to the public a sense of personal identification with freedom. He said a national climate favorable to freedom is built on information about freedom: "The citizen cannot act in darkness," he declared.

The Iowa journalism school head called for research into the question of how to interest the average citizen in the news items which should be of interest to him. "The mass media ought also to know much more about what the public most vigorously dislikes in the media . . . a type of news coverage, or a kind of picture, or a type of advertising."

"The mass media," he said, "need more research about the impact of their content." They are "the greatest educational force" we have for the one hundred twenty million citizens beyond school age. "The media do well in the cause of freedom," he said in conclusion, "but they need to be much better."

PHOTO
Caption:

HAPPY CREW at conference get together after dinner. L. to r.: Mrs. Oscar N. Solbert, Gannett Newspapers President Paul Miller, Mrs. Don McMaster, Gen. O. N. Solbert, Mrs. Frank Gannett, Don McMaster, Vice President-General Manager of Eastman Kodak.

ccc. (B4/f29)

*

Editor & Publisher E&P Every Saturday Since 1884
THE SPOT NEWS PAPER OF THE NEWSPAPER AND ADVERTISING FIELDS

December 7, 1957

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Frank Gannett Dies at 81;
His Empire in Foundation

Earnings of Properties Will Be Shared with Communities

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Frank Gannett, founder of the Gannett Group of 22 newspapers, died Dec. 3 at 5 a.m. at his home here on Sandringham Road. He was 81 years old . . . . [6 pp.]

(9) PHOTOS

ddd. (B4/f29)

Tarrytown (N.Y.) Daily News
December 12, 1957

Mr. Odell Recalls Friendship With The Late Frank Gannett

WE HAVE JUST RETURNED from Miami Beach where we attended a memorial service for Frank Gannett, owner and publisher of 22 newspapers, who died Tuesday at his home in Rochester after a long illness. We had known Frank Gannett for more than 40 years and he was one of our oldest and best friends. At the time we met him he was president of the New York State Press Association, the oldest press association in the country. Mrs. Odell and I attended the convention at Ithaca and it was one of the turning points in our lives. Four years later, I was elected president of that association and later president of the National Editorial Association.

We can remember the convention well. Moving pictures were just being developed and one of the events of the convention was to have each one of us walk out of a revolving door while a movie operator took our pictures. Later they were shown at the convention and were a sensation. How mild and amateurish were those pictures in comparison to the Cinerama of today.

* * *

FRANK GANNETT started life under humble circumstances. One of his jobs was to clean out a store in which there was a bar. Frank had to sweep out the bar and clean up the debris of the night before. Later he was charged by the proprietor with stealing a case of whiskey. He was threatened with a jail sentence until it was discovered that the proprietor's own wife had stolen the whiskey and drank it.

From then on Frank Gannett devoted his life to promote temperance and one of his rules was that not one of his papers could print a liquor advertisement. That rule prevails today and it cost him hundreds of thousands of dollars.

———

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I learned about the "bar incident" at the memorial service. It was related by the pastor who paid high tribute to Mr. Gannett as a man of great faith and loyalty and a true and devoted friend. He added that he called few men by their first name, but he did call Mr. Gannett, Frank. Services were held in Rochester at the same time services were held here.

* * *

Yes, Frank Gannett was a great man. We had many happy associations with him and he was always the kindly, thoughtful and warm friend.

The newspaper world has lost a great publisher and New York State will miss him, for he was foremost in efforts to advance and improve methods of printing newspapers. He was the organizer of the New York State Publishers and he served as its president for seven years. His wife was and still is, I think, a member of the Board of regents of New York State.

eee. (B4/f29)

Clyde Court

STEAM HEATED
OPEN YEAR 'ROUND

APARTMENT HOTEL
Second St. at First Ave., Southeast
MIAMI 32, FLORIDA

December 16, 1957

Dear Paul:

I enclose clipping from the Daily News of a story I sent home about Frank. I thought you might want to pass it on to Mrs. Gannett. I don't want to bother her at this time.

Frank was a great man and one of my best friends. We will miss him in our newspaper circles.

Have been down here a month and glad to get away from the storms they have had in the north. I regret that I am away at this time for the printers are out on three papers. See clip. Bill Fanning is handling the situation well and he has the guts. Noel is working at makeup in Yonkers. The men have no grounds for walking out. They get good pay, hospital care and death benefits.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Best wishes for the holiday season, but I know Frank's death will add a somber note.

Most sincerely,

Wallace (signed)

LOCATED IN THE EXCLUSIVE APARTMENT HOUSE SECTION OF DOWNTOWN MIAMI

fff. (B4/f26)

Time
December 16, 1957

THE PRESS
The Chain That Isn't

To upstate New York's *R*ochester Democrat and Chronicle in 1886 came an indignant letter from one of its newsboys. Protesting that he had been billed $.06 too much for his papers, ten-year-old Frank Ernest Gannett demanded that the error be "rectified," added in his boyish scrawl: "I have always meet my bills."

From this aggressive faith in the rewards of enterprise, hardheaded Newsboy Gannett (accent on the net) never wavered. It led him, frustratingly, into politics, notably as the highly unsuccessful "businessman's candidate" for the Republican presidential nomination in 1940, into angel and pamphleteer for the National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government and sundry other ultraconservative pressure groups. Through industry and acumen, round-faced, open-headed Frank Gannett also built one of the nation's biggest and most profitable newspaper empires. When he died last week [December 3] in Rochester at 81, long-ailing Frank Gannett not only owned the 125-year-old Democrat and Chronicle (circ. 125, 405), but 21 other papers as well – more than any other U.S. publisher has ever acquired without the help of inheritance.

Tolerant Teetotaler. Frank Gannett was a chain publisher who hated chain papers. Instead of cultivating a deadening conformity, papers in the Gannett "group," as the publisher preferred to call it, were encouraged to vary their typography, choose their own features, mold editorial policies to suit their own communities. Boasted Publisher Gannett: "Nothing ever goes out of my office with a 'must' on it." Example: though Gannett and his flagship paper, Rochester's evening Times-Union (circ. 128, 147), zealously promoted the St. Lawrence Seaway, his Albany Knickerbocker News (circ. 53, 870) doggedly fought the project as an economic threat to Albany.

Publisher Gannett, whose name appeared as editor only on the Times-Union masthead, always sent his political pronouncements to his other editors with the notation: "For your information and use, if desired" – and editors were free to ignore them.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In 1948, when other Gannett papers (nearly all in solid Republican territory) supported Tom Dewey for President, Gannett's Independent Democratic Hartford (Conn.) Times (circ. 120, 182) backed Truman; in 1952, when Gannett backed Taft, the Times and most other papers in the group boomed Eisenhower. His Independent Republican Binghamton (N.Y.) Press (circ. 64,562), one of the best small-city newspapers in the U.S., has lately made a habit of supporting Democrats for mayor. During a state election campaign in which several of his papers had gone counter to Gannett's publicly expressed views, F.E.G., as he was called, sighed to Vice President (now President) Paul Miller: 'You know, Paul, sometimes I don't know about this autonomy." Tolerant Teetotaler Gannett's only inviolate command: his papers must never accept liquor ads.

Responsibility. The Gannett papers, nonetheless, share distinct family traits that go beyond sound management or geographical proximity. (Except for Illinois' Danville Commercial-News, New Jersey's Plainfield Courier-News and the Hartford Times, all are published in New York cities and small towns.) Conservative in news judgment as in politics, they have little use for exposes, play down stories of sex and crime. "A newspaper, to suit me," said Gannett, "must be one that I would be willing to have my mother, my own sister or daughter read." Many readers, particularly in the 15 cities where Gannett has a monopoly, complain that the modern mothers would not object to livelier coverage or sharper writing.

On the other hand, most of the papers are enthusiastic home-town boosters, campaign busily for local improvements, sponsor dozens of community enterprises. In keeping with this sense of community responsibility – and to perpetuate his newspapers – Publisher Gannett in 1935 gave two-thirds of his Gannett Company common stock to a philanthropic foundation administered by his executives.

The Great Hyphenator. For his career of building profitable provincial dailies, farm-born Frank Gannett was prepared by a maxim-minded mother ("Little strokes fell big oaks") and the example of a father who was a failure as a farmer and hotelkeeper. After working his way through Cornell, Newsman Gannett had risen to managing editor of the Ithaca News before he bought a half share of the ailing Elmira Gazette in 1906 (for $20,000), later merged it with the rival Evening Star. Gannett started looking for other money-losing dailies to buy and merge – and soon won fame as the busiest newspaper hyphenator in upstate New York. From Rochester, where he merged the Union & Advertiser with the Times, he went on to combine Utica's Herald-Dispatch and Observer, Elmira's Telegram and Advertiser, Ithaca's News and Journal. He fought Hearst in Rochester (where W.R.H. spent $8,000,000 in a hopeless stab at putting F.E.G. out of business), and was himself driven to the ropes in Brooklyn, where he bought the old Eagle in 1929 and shucked it at a loss of $2,000,000 three years later. He never founded a paper, but he bought with an auditor's sure eye; in all, Publisher Gannett acquired 30 papers (plus a string of TV and radio stations) in 51 years, merged ten, unloaded only three.

In politics, Gannett backed Franklin Roosevelt in his early years, but by 1940 was billing himself as The Man Who Stopped the New Dealers. While he was denounced by F.D.R. as an "isolationist" – and by the late Andrei Vishinsky as a "warmonger" – Gannett in his political philosophy was always animated by the same abhorrence of waste that made him a successful publisher. Though he suffered from diabetes for 33 years, Frank Gannett did not slow perceptibly until 1948, when he had a stroke. Bouncing back, he ran his empire until 1955, when he fractured his spine in a fall. Management and the presidency of the Gannett group has since gone into the hands of able, Gannett-groomed Paul Miller, 51, onetime Washington bureau chief for the Associated Press, who believes as firmly as F.E.G. in giving his editors free rein.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

For man who has done so much in a field where the tools of self-promotion are so irresistibly at hand, Gannett was a surprisingly little-known man, even in the communities he served. "Although he owned the Times for 30 years," said a Hartford *Times*man, "if he walked through the business section it is doubtful whether two people would have recognized him." But one measure of Frank Gannett's success was the fact that his papers last week ran their own staff-written editorials on their publisher's death.

PHOTO:

PUBLISHER GANNETT (LEFT) & FRIENDS*
Papers that mother can read.
* Editorial Director Vincent S. Jones, President Miller.

ggg. (B4/f29)

OHIO STATE JOURNAL
COLUMBUS 16, OHIO

December 17, 1957

Paul Miller, President
The Gannett Company
Rochester, New York

Dear Paul:

What an inspiring saga that is, spread all through December 7, Editor and Publisher, about the Frank Gannett newspaper organization, with you in the middle of it!

The best thing about it is your own unquestioned worthiness and fitness in every way to carry on the founder's tradition.

Give my regards to Louise, to whom I predicted that you one day would be head of the Associated Press. I missed it only in a sense, and I dare say you have no regrets.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Sincerely,
Jake (signed)
J. A. Meckstroth
Editor

JAM:sf

hhh. (B4/f29)

THE CORNING LEADER
CORNING LEADER, Inc.
CORNING, N.Y.

W.A. UNDERHILL
PRESIDENT

E.S. UNDERHILL, JR.
TREASURER

TELEPHONE:
CORNING 6-4651

December 18, 1957

Mr. Paul Miller, President
Gannett Company, Inc.,
The Times-Union,
Rochester, New York

Dear Paul:

I do not recall sending you a copy of the editorial published in The Leader at the time of Frank's death, and therefore am sending you a copy herewith.

I had known Frank from the fall of 1910, when he was spending the evening at my father's home in Bath. I learned then why so many persons respected him. Of course in the last twenty years we have met only occasionally, but during all of the years he continued to be the honorable and capable person which the early impressions gave of him. I remember that when Frank was negotiating for the purchase of one of the Ithaca papers, he asked Father to approach Col. Duncan Campbell Lee in his behalf, and I also recall that before making the Utica purchase, he invited Father to go in with him on the project.

An unbreakable appointment in New York prevented my attending the funeral in Rochester. Stewart Underhill and his wife did go to Rochester, however.

Sincerely,
Alan (signed)
W. A. Underhill

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

WAU:D

Enclosure

iii. (B4/f29)

– 17 –

THAT 17 IN THE LANGUAGE OF THE OLD-TIME MORSE OPERATORS MEANT THAT ANY MESSAGE SO SLUGGED WAS INTENDED FOR EVERYODY WHO MIGHT READ IT.

THIS MESSAGE IS SO INTENDED.

IT IS TO SAY MERRY CHRISTMAS AND HAPPY NEW YEAR.

I IMPOSE ON THE GENEROSITY OF GNS BECAUSE I AM NOT GOING TO SEND OUT CONVENTIONAL CARDS THIS YEAR OR HENCEFORTH.

THE REASON IS THAT I JUST PLAIN CAN'T SEND CONVENTIONAL CARDS TO ALL I'D LIKE TO GREET.

I CAN AND DO EXPRESS WARM GOOD WISHES FOR NOW AND THROUGH THE COMING YEAR TO ALL IN OUR GROUP AND THEIR FAMILIES, AND I BEG YOUR INDULGENCE IN THE FACT THAT I TAKE THIS MEANS OF DOING IT.

PAUL MILLER

ROCHESTER

DEC. 23, 1957

Paul Miller (signature)

jjj. (B4/f29)

*****

The Caduceus
[n.d.]

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rex: Give my congratulations to this handsome Brother.

CS (signed)
C. R. Smith

Paul Miller of Gamma-Psi Chapter (Oklahoma State) was recently elected president of the Gannett Co., Inc., which operates 23 newspapers with more than 1,000,000, circulation, 5 radio stations, and 3 television stations in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Illinois . . . .

kkk. (B4/f29)
*****

Editorially Speaking
Vol. 15, 1957

PAUL MILLER
President
THE GANNETT NEWSPAPERS

WHEN Paul Miller became president of the Gannett Company last Spring after serving as executive vice-president, he retained the editorship of the Rochester Times-Union, long regarded as the "flag" newspaper of the Group. His consuming interest in news and editorial matters, dating back to his earliest days as a reporter on small newspapers in Oklahoma, and continuing through a brilliant career with The Associated Press as bureau chief, assistant general manager, and head of its Washington Bureau, shows no signs of slackening. Recently he began writing a weekly signed editorial column for the Saturday edition of The Times-Union. First former employe [sic] of AP to be elected to its Board of Directors, he now is first vice-president of The Associated press. Portions of this article were given as a speech to the North Carolina Press Association at the Duke University dinner in January of 1957.

F O R E W O R D

THIS volume of Editorially Speaking, No. 15 in an annual series, follows our tradition of presenting examples of the thinking and practices of the men who edit and manage the 22 newspapers in the Gannett Group. This exchange of ideas, originally confined largely to those attending the regular News and Editorial Conferences of the Gannett Newspapers, thus has been widened to invite editors everywhere to sit in on our shop talks and friendly family-style discussions.

It's a Great Life by Paul Miller

MY WORK has taken me from coast to coast and back again. And I know this:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Whether life sets us down on an oil town newspaper in Oklahoma, moves us around the country with The Associated Press, with the Frank Gannett organization in New York, New jersey, Connecticut and Illinois – or wherever – so long as it's newspapering, it's a great life . . . .

lll. (2)PHOTOS

1957-5C
Janet Gaynor (1)

Dear Louise

Here, neglected on the side, is Mrs. _____
_____, complete with diamonds including the one you found _____
Also Paul's momentary resistance to Janet Gaynor's charms. Then see picture no. 2 for the final result
_____

1957-5D
Janet Gaynor (2)

Paul Miller's Dealings with Other Gannett Newspapers

1. 1932

a.

(B3/f19)
The Associated Press
Oklahoma City, Okla.
303 Oklahoman Building
"PM:
Here are some pointers I think will help you to size up AP:

(5 page letter from Leon Durst to PM written in 1932 at the beginning of his career at AP)

All of this may seem complicated, but it will soak in soon as each point is applied . . . .

LHD"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

2. 1947

a. (B3/f52)

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
330 STAR BUILDING
WASHINGTON 4, D. C.

May 27, 1947

Dear Frank:

I want to thank you again for a pleasant and highly profitable experience of meeting yesterday with the wonderful group you have developed around you.

It was great to get to know you better, and Mrs. Miller and I appreciate the hospitality of yourself and Mrs. Gannett more than I can say.

Sincerely,
Paul (signed)

Mr. Frank E. Gannett
President
The Gannett Newspapers
Rochester

PAUL MILLER
ASSISTANT GENERAL MANAGER

b. (B3/f52)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
July 8, 1947

AP Aide Quits Post
To Join Gannett Staff

Paul Miller, newly appointed executive assistant to Frank Gannett, president of Gannett Newspapers, will begin his new duties Aug. 1.

Miller resigned as assistant general manager of the Associated Press and chief of the Associated Press Washington Bureau to accept the position in the Gannett Group, which includes 21 newspapers and seven radio stations in New York, Connecticut, New Jersey and Illinois. He recently was a visitor in Rochester and attended the spring meeting of editors of Gannett Newspapers.

Gannett Comments

Commenting on the addition of Miller to his staff, Gannett said:

"For a long time I have been watching him very carefully and I was so favorable impressed by him that I urged him to come with us.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Ever since the death of Leroy E. Snyder I have been searching for a man who could ably fill his place and add strength to our organization. This move does not in any way affect anyone in our organization. Mr. Miller will have special work of great importance and will relieve me of many of my burdens.

"Although Mr. Miller has gone far in the newspaper business he is only 40 years old. He has made friends throughout the country and few newspapermen are better known than he is. He has four children and with Mrs. Miller will come to Rochester to reside.

"I know that in a short time he will make a place for himself in this community and he will be of great service to our papers and me." . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

PAUL MILLER
New Gannett Newspapers
executive.

c. (B3/f52)

Oklahoma
Agricultural and Mechanical College
Department of Publications
Stillwater

July 16, 1947

Mr. Paul Miller
Gannett Newspapers
Rochester, New York

Dear Paul:

Congratulations on your new position and responsibility, for I know it is a forward step for you or you would not be making it. We are all proud and happy over your continued success and progress.

You are leaving a position with an organization having tremendous power for good or for undesirable effects on the public welfare. I feel that the organization is using its power for good. You are now going into a different type of organization which again has tremendous possibilities depending on how the power is used. You will have an opportunity to use your influence to make the chain newspaper a part of the powerful influence for public welfare which our newspapers must be.

Again, congratulations, and we will be glad to cooperate in any way if we can ever do anything to help.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Very truly yours,
Trout (signed)
Clement E. Trout
Head

CET: mh

3. 1948

a. (B3/f53)

Rochester Times-Union
September 28, 1948

Editors Hear
Attack on Censorship

Syracuse – (AP) – The Chancellor of Syracuse University contends that at times the people of the United States "are as poorly informed about foreign affairs as are the citizens of the USSR."

William P. Tolley told the New York State Society of editors last night that he did not blame editors, reporters or publishers for what he termed lack of truth in newspapers. "All are doing the best they can," he added.

Cites 'Censorship at Source'

Tolley told the banquet session of the society's two-day meeting that: "So long as we have existing censorship at a source of all types of important news, the newspaper will not be able to give the public the truth.

"Government bureaucrats and the public relations operatives of business have established a quarantine of truth through which the press is able to break only on occasion."

He contended the chief reason "we fall so short of the truth" is that American freedom of the press includes only "a freedom of expression," but lacks "an equal freedom in access to the truth," especially in foreign policy and news from abroad.

Earlier, Dr. John MacDonald, executive secretary of the State Law Revision Commission, said his group would report to the Legislature during the first 10 days on the 1949 session on proposed legislation giving newspapermen the right to withhold confidential sources of information.

Feinberg Backing Reported

Harold W. Sanford, editor of the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle and chairman of the society's legislative committee, reported that State Senate Majority Leader Benjamin F. Feinberg had assured him a newspaper confidence bill would be introduced at the next session and that every effort would be made to pass the bill.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The proposed legislation resulted from the jailing last February of two newspapermen for refusing to tell where they had obtained lottery tickets reproduced in the Newburgh News, a Gannett newspaper.

The men, Douglas V. Clarke, news editor, and Charles L. Leonard, reporter, reviewed the incident during the afternoon session.

Gerald H. Salisbury, managing editor of the Albany Knickerbocker News, a Gannett newspaper, reported that the New York State freedom train probably would start its tour of the state between Nov. 15 and Dec. 1. Salisbury represents the newspaper editors on the committee in charge of the project.

'Reader Editing' Opposed

Paul Miller of the Gannett Newspapers yesterday said a survey among editors brought general agreement that "there is no substitute for direct, varied and frequent contact with people by the editor or publisher himself."

The editors also agreed, Miller reported, that they must edit any surveys on reader preference. He quoted one editor as saying: "If pure reader preferences were to 'edit' our newspapers, they could conceivably cheapen and pollute the product."

Miller added that newspapers need more cooperation from the public.

"Our greatest problem," he said, "is not the writing of facts but is getting the facts from people who do not want to make them public."

Referring to a previous speaker's suggestion that stories particularly interesting to the public be emphasized, Miller said that "newspapers today are trying to dress up pages on which such stories are printed in order to attract readers to material editors think they should read."

b. (B3/f53)

*****

The Commercial-News
Danville, Illinois
Thursday, October 28, 1948

Gannett Assistant
Sees C-N, WDAN
During 2-Day Visit

PHOTO:
Caption:

Paul Miller, right, executive head of The Gannett Radio Group, chats informally with Robert J. Burrow, manager of WDAN, Group Station. This picture was taken in front of The Commercial-News as Miller, assistant to Frank Gannett, president and publisher of the Gannett Group of Newspapers, was making his first get-acquainted visit to Danville.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By BOB WRIGHT

Paul Miller, assistant to Frank Gannett, president and publisher of The Gannett Group of Newspapers, was in Danville Thursday on a two-day visit, his first since he became associated with the organization in July 1947.

A topflight newspaperman, Miller is serving as executive head of The Gannett Radio Group, a unit of which is Station WDAN.

He described the new WDAN building as "efficiently planned and attractive" and had words of praise for The Commercial-News.

"In the profession," he said, "The Commercial-News is regarded as unusually enterprising, not only from a journalistic standpoint but as outstanding in the public service it performs."

Miller made the trip from his Rochester, N. Y. headquarters to Chicago by plane. Robert J. Burow, WDAN manager, met him there Wednesday and the two motored to Danville. The Gannett executive will go to Pawhuska, Okla., Sunday to speak at a mortgage-burning ceremony in the church where his father, the Rev. James Miller, deceased, was pastor more than 20 years ago.

In an automobile tour of the city Thursday with E. C. Hewes, editor and publisher of The Commercial-News, Miller found the industrial development most impressive, since it balances the solid prosperity of the surrounding agricultural area . . . .

4. 1949

a. (B3/f56)

*****

Nieman Reports
VOL. 3, NO. 1
JANUARY, 1949, p.19
Published by the Society of Nieman Fellows

The ABC of News Coverage

By Paul Miller

From a talk to German Newspaper Editors at an American Press Institute Seminar,
September 23, 1948

Good reporting is the heart of good newspapering in the United States as it must be anywhere. It is obviously my opinion, then, that the care and training of good reporters takes second place to nothing in successful newspaper making.

However, it often takes more than good reporters to get good reporting. Back of any big byline there is apt to be a smart editor.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

So it isn't possible to put reporters in one class and editors in another. In the properly run newsroom you will find a team. Out of it all, out of teamwork among reporters and editors, comes the kind of news coverage that makes great newspapers.

Yet it is true that competent news reporting and writing is becoming more and more dependent upon specialization in the big newsrooms and news bureaus – a science expert, a union labor expert, a foreign affairs expert, a farm news expert, and so on. Any reporter, in these days of high pressure propaganda, government and otherwise, ought to try to know as much about a subject as the people who deal with it all the time.

On the Gannett Newspapers we have a farm expert who actually operates a model farm owned by the newspapers near Rochester . . . .

b. (B3/f56)

*****

The Newsmagazine WE
February 10, 1949

Between You and Me
By John G. Corey

Please, Paul, Give Us This Day Our Daily Papers

The Rochester Times Union has a new editor – able and talented Paul Miller, formerly of the Associated Press. The Democrat and Chronicle will struggle along with Harold Sanford who, it seems to me, has been editor of the Old Lady since 1928, the year after I was canned as sports editor because old Pappa Ross, previous editor, didn't like the way I drank my Scotch.

Miller takes over a big job. He succeeds the Big Boss himself – Frank E. Gannett, who is now in Florida regaining his health following a slight shock several months ago. Reports from the inner circles of our daily press would indicate that Gannett is doing exactly that – regaining his health – and that soon he will be around again to assume his rightful place as the first citizen of Rochester.

Miller, however, will remain as editor of the TU no matter how much health the big chief regains. And, unlike Gannett, who left the editing of his favorite paper to others, Miller will be an editor in fact as well as in name; his will be the voice of the master to decide matters of editorial policy and to make whatever changes he deems necessary to make the TU a better paper for the community it serves.

A New Deal

That being true, and everybody in the newspaper profession except a few who speak of favorite sons and lucky birds assures me that it is, Rochester may be on the threshold of a new deal in its journalistic field. There may be an end of half-truth editorials, sometimes editorials without a bit of truth at all. There may be an end to crusades marked by hypocrisy. There may be real crusades in the offing, crusades meant to benefit people. The truth about gambling may now be told, and future editorials dealing with alcoholic beverages and the about $7,000,000,000 spent annually on booze may add which in the past has always been ignored – that more than half of that $7,000,000,000 goes to state and federal governments in the form of taxes . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

e. (B3/f56)

*****

The Rochester Times-Union
Friday, April 15, 1949

Editor Sees Need for Understanding

A plea for understanding of "the other fellow" was made by Paul Miller, editor of The Times-Union, in a speech at a luncheon of the Public Utilities Advertising Association in the Sheraton at noon today. His subject was "What Business Can Do to Help the Free Enterprise System."

Representatives from 15 electric and gas companies in New York, Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland attended the luncheon, highlight of a day-long conference.

Miller said:

"The system we know in America, and on which this nation was built, apparently will survive only if many who assail and doubt it become convinced pretty soon that it is, after all, the best in sight anywhere.

"The subject you assigned was 'How Business Can Help Save the Free Enterprise System,' and the word 'help' should be put in capital letters. Business can only help. Voting strength is the determining factor in telling which way our economy shall move.

"What can business in general do to strengthen general belief in our system? Business should tell its own story, in every legitimate way, it can. Business also must try to understand the other fellow's story.

"Nothing in any business operation should be out ahead of human relations. Three out of four persons who work for a living in the United States today, including myself, are employes [sic]. I am an employe [sic] first of the company which operates our newspapers, and also of the public which reads them.

"It seems to me that all of us must strive, and prayerfully, for understanding up and down the line. Somewhere there is a middle ground. Finding that middle ground is a major challenge of our time." . . . .

f. (B3/f56)

*****

The Rochester Times-Union
Friday, April 22, 1949

Editors Weigh Cause of Errors in 1948 Election Forecast

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Washington – (AP) – The American Society of Newspaper Editors today sought to learn from its members "why the press was wrong" in 1948 election forecasts.

Philip H. Parrish of the Morning Oregonian, Portland, and Paul Miller, editor of The Rochester Times-Union, presented answers to the forum meeting of 350 editors at the annual convention.

"The papers almost universally vouched for the polls as scientific," said Parrish, "and so identified with themselves with the polls. We have permitted a feature to pose in the robes of a doctor of science."

Said Miller: "There's nothing wrong as between newspapers and the people that good reporting won't fix."

Other discussion leaders on the election question were N. R. Howard, Cleveland News; Thomas Hanes, Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch, and Richard J. Finnegan, Chicago Sun-Times.

And Harry S. Truman, the man who guessed right, prepared to receive the editors in an off-the-record news conference in the White House Rose Garden. The President's office is too small for the expected crowd.

In the statement he prepared for the meeting, Miller also said:

"Many a newspaper must have had at least one reporter who knew which way the wind was blowing last Fall. Few newspapers made the most of such reporters."

Miller suggested that it is time to drop "ninety other sideshows if necessary" to concentrate on good reporting. That he said is "the one absolutely basic essential to winning public acceptance and holding it."

Many an editorial is narrow and ill-founded because it is based on a poor reporting job," he proceeded. "Newspapers must sell the idea that they aim to be a compendium of responsible views locally –not merely, as so many readers so firmly believe, a vehicle solely for the newspapers' own views." . . . .

g. (B3/f56)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Saturday, April 23, 1949

Editors Deplore Blunders
In Soul-Searching on Polls

Washington – (UP) – The American Society of Newspaper Editors was told yesterday the U.S. press has taken its most severe criticism in history for wrong guesses on last Fall's Presidential election and has itself to blame.

The post-election criticism and the reason for it were analyzed in a panel discussion on "The Press and the People" at the second session of the ASNE's annual convention . . . .

The soul-searching discussion was aimed at finding out if the daily press is doing a good job of keeping the public informed. Other features on the day's program included off-the-record talks by President Truman, Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson and Defense Secretary Louis Johnson . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PHOTO:
LEAD EDITORS' DISCUSSION

Caption:
Five editors who led a discussion on "The Press and the People" at yesterday's sessions of the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington were, from left, Philip H. Parrish, Portland Oregonian; N. R. Howard, Cleveland News; Richard Finnegan, Chicago Sun-Times; Paul Miller, The Gannett Newspapers, and Tom Hanes, Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch.

h. (B3/f56)
*****
Newsweek
May 2, 1949

ASNE Looks Back

Why, politically, are the press and the people so far apart so often? In a soul-searching post-mortem, the nation's editors last week mulled over the state of American journalism generally and its part in last November's elections particularly. Their consensus: The reporters, not the editors, first should have scented the trend toward Truman.

Some of the 350 at the American Society of Newspaper Editors' annual Washington convention disagreed. A panel on the "The Press and the People" had discussed the problem and its members . . . were free to express their individual views.

Miller rose to deplore newspaper managements' "high and mighty approach" to their readers. Editors must get out and mingle, he said. Finnegan insisted that the press no longer knew what people thought: since the depression it had "failed to appreciate the common knowledge of common events which people want never to happen again." . . . .

PHOTOS:

Caption:
Ben McKelway: Editors' president

Caption:
"Press and People" panel: Parrish, Nat Howard, Finnegan, Miller, and Hanes

5. 1950

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

a. (B3/f62)

Rochester Times-Union
Tuesday, September 26, 1950

Publisher Explains
Complex Task of
Presenting News Daily

The complex and many-sided task of bringing the news to Rochesterians every day was detailed by Paul Miller at a meeting of the Rotary Club today at the Powers.

The editor and publisher of The Times-Union told the Rotarians how world news comes to the Rochester daily newspapers, how it is edited and how the job of commenting editorially on the news is handled.

To make sure that sufficient material is available to provide the Rochester newspaper reader with all the news, Miller said, The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle:

1 – Subscribe to the three great American wire news services, The Associated Press, United Press and International News Service, any one of which "supplies more than enough news every day to fill any newspaper in the country."

2 – Maintain, in connection with the other 19 members of The Gannett Newspapers, a special news bureau in Washington – at a cost of from $50,000 to $75,000 a year, and a special bureau in Albany.

3 – Purchase special material of tremendous variety as part of a "never ending effort to produce newspapers as fresh and enterprising and useful as we can make them." Examples of these purchases which have appeared or are appearing in the newspapers are Gaylord Houser's best selling [sic] book, "How to Look Younger and Live Longer," David Lawrence's Washington Column, the Chicago Daily News service, pages of comic strips and special financial articles.

From all this material, the editor went on, the local news editors each day assemble a product designed to bring Rochesterians a full report of the news.

REAMS THROWN AWAY

"The editors of The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union throw away reams of copy from the news wires every day," he said. "Some of it is discarded because it duplicates, other copy because it concerns persons or localities of no possible apparent interest here. But each newspaper prints well over 100 full columns of news and feature matter every day, and we'd be pretty poor indeed if we weren't able to give you a comprehensive and interesting selection in all that space."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Miller went on to describe how from the stories which come in each day editors select those which seem to provide the best reports. "For example, you may have noted that in the war in Korea the main story one day may be credited to the Associated Press. On the next day, it may be credited to the United Press, and possibly the following day back to Associated Press or over to International News Service."

SEPARATE PAPERS

He pointed out that rules of the Associated Press forbid the distortion of the news by any of the newspapers subscribing to its service.

Miller explained that both The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle are edited to be separate, complete newspapers.

"The standing policy of the company which controls both is that each shall be complete," he said. "Now neither would be complete if there were a policy of disregarding a story in one just because it had already appeared in the other.

"That would be the easy thing to do, I suppose, and it is a policy that is followed in some cities where both newspapers are owned by the same company, as in Rochester. Obviously, it is a great deal more expensive to operate two complete newspapers than to operate two jointly edited newspapers.

"I have seen the other system in other cities at first hand. I know that Rochester has far superior newspapers as a result of this policy."

Miller asserted there is very little duplication of news reports in the two newspapers. As proof he showed the Rotarians a copy of yesterday's Times-Union in which he had checked in red pencil stories duplicating those which had appeared in The Democrat and Chronicle.

He pointed out that there were only a few stories so checked, and said that in each case duplication was necessary for full coverage of the news.

Miller's talk will be broadcast by WHEC at 10 tonight

The Rochester newspapers, he went on, have remained individual not only in the handling of news, but also in editorial policy ever since Frank Gannett acquired the morning newspaper in 1928.

Concerning editorial policy or "comment" on the news, Miller emphasized that newspapers have a duty to try to force the man in the street to reach his own decisions on the news of the day.

"Newspapers may not be able to force the average man or any other to think, but you've got to give us credit for trying," he said. The responsibility to comment on the news vigorously and honestly must be carried out, he observed, even though most people "do not enjoy reading what they do not want to believe."

OPEN TO ALL OPINIONS

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

An example of this tendency, he said, is the fact that many people don't like to be told that the government in Washington, like any family, "can't spend more than it earns without going broke."

H stressed, however, that the columns of a newspaper must remain open to all segments of public opinion. He noted that both newspapers make strong efforts to encourage expressions of individual opinion.

"A newspaper isn't worth the ink used to print it," he said, "if it doesn't stand for something. Yet, it doesn't merit a nickel of anybody's money if it doesn't go out of its way, if necessary, to provide a forum, to give a hearing, to all who want to get a word in on whatever side."

b. (B3/f62)

*****

The Democrat and Chronicle
September 27, 1950

Newsman Explains Goals, Responsibilities of Press

It is the goal of The Gannett newspapers to give its readers complete coverage on world and community news.

There is no overall editorial policy of The Gannett newspapers, as such.

A newspaper should stand for something.

Workers on Gannett newspapers feel a responsibility to their readers and want their active interest.

Paul Miller, vicepresident and director of the Gannett Company, Inc., made those four major points yesterday in an address to the Rotary Club in Powers Hotel on "The News and the Newspapers."

"We welcome an opportunity such as this," he said, "to tell you how we work at our jobs, what we work with, and most of all, perhaps, what we are working TOWARD, as a brand new Rochester Times-Union is produced every afternoon, and a brand new Democrat and Chronicle every morning." . . . .

6. 1951

a. (B3a/f71)

Gannetteer
March, 1951

(2) PHOTOS
Captions:

AT BUFFALO meeting of New York State Publishers Association Acme cameraman caught (above) Paul Miller, H. W. Cruickshank and A. J. McDonald

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

BEFORE Kenneth K. Burke, business manager of The Saratogian, left to assume new duties as general manager of the Danville Commercial News, Saratogian employes [sic] entertained at a dinner in his honor. At the head table (from left) are Frank T. McCue, new business manager, The Saratogian; Don. U. Bridge, advertising director, Gannett Newspapers; Paul Miller, vicepresident, Gannett Newspapers and publisher, Rochester Times-Union; T. J. Quilty, Saratogian circulation manager; Burke; Toastmaster J. M. Cavanaugh, Saratogian managing editor; Herbert W. Cruickshank, general business manager, Gannett newspapers; Mrs. Kenneth K. Burke; John Burke, retired production manager, Gannett Newspapers (Ken's father); L. R. Blanchard, general executive editor of The Gannett Newspapers; and A. J. McDonald, Albany Knickerbocker News general manager.

b. (B3a/f71)

*****

New York Herald Tribune
April 26, 1951

PHOTO:
Newspaper Executives at Publishers' Convention

Caption:
At a luncheon and business meeting of the New York State Publishers Association at the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday, left to right: L. N. Bitner, general manager of "The Elmira Star-Gazette"; Paul Miller, editor and publisher of "The Rochester Times-Union"; M. L. Spencer, retiring dean of the Syracuse School of Journalism, and E.A. O'Hara, president of the state publishers association and publisher of "The Syracuse Herald-Journal"

c. (B1/f17)

YOUR NEWSPAPERS And How to Use Them
A Report on the Newspaper Forum Conducted Jointly by the Times-Union and the Democrat and Chronicle
Rochester, N.Y.
Oct. 16-18, 1951

A 'Group,' Not A 'Chain'
By Paul Miller
Vicepresident, The Gannett Newspapers

7. 1952

a. (B3a/f72)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
November 22, 1952
1175

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Gannett Papers' Policies Outlined By Group Official in Harvard Talk

Basic tenets of The Gannett Group of newspapers and radio stations – as laid down by the founder and president, Frank Gannett – were outlined last night in a Nieman Fellowship address at Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., by Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the group . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

PRE-DINNER CONFAB – Chatting prior to Nieman Foundation dinner last night at Cambridge, Mass., are, from left, Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of Gannett Group of Newspapers, guest speaker at dinner; Louis M. Lyons, curator of Nieman Foundation at Harvard; Arthur Sutherland, former Rochester attorney and now professor of law at Harvard Law School, and Calvin Mayne, Nieman Fellow and Times-Union reporter.

b. (B3a/f72)

The Gannetteer
December 1952

WHY IS OUR GROUP UNIQUE?

Paul Miller, in Speech at Harvard, Puts Finger on Distinguishing Aims

BASIC TENETS of The Gannett Group of newspapers and radio stations – as laid down by its founder and president, FRANK E. GANNETT – were outlined in a Nieman Fellowship address at Harvard University last month by PAUL MILLER, executive vicepresident of the Group.

"There is nothing wholly comparable to it in journalism today, so far as I know," Miller told the Fellows, including CALVIN MAYNE, Rochester Times-Union reporter. Miller said:

"The Gannett Newspapers are distinguished by the fact that each is a local institution in policy and style, yet strengthened and supported in their primary devotion to the welfare of the localities they serve, by the resources and combined know-how of the parent company."

Miller quoted at length from statements of Frank Gannett to illustrate. Miller said he believed it was "the first time the Group's policies and principles have been delineated in this fashion."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

INDEPENDENCE – "I wish our newspapers to be fearless and independent. To be independent and of the greater service to their communities, they must be on a sound financial basis. This means they must be operated at a profit, but profits should be made secondary to basic ideals. Our newspapers must be free from the influence of any other interest that may have the selfish motive."

ADVERTISING – "No advertising should be accepted which could infringe upon our freedom of editorial expression . . . I urgently request that no Gannett newspaper or radio station shall ever accept any advertising on alcoholic beverages . . . Any advertising should be excluded which in the judgment of those responsible could be injurious to the public."

LOCAL AUTONOMY – "A long-standing policy to leave to the local management the fullest measure of autonomy. I like to have the editors express themselves freely. I do not wish to dictate editorial policy for our group. Each newspaper is an institution built up after years of effort. Each has a flavor and atmosphere of its own."

COMMUNITY SERVICE – "It is of great importance that our newspapers always shall be devoted to the best material as well as spiritual interests of the community [sic] in which they are published. They should at all times vigorously support all movements to foster and promote the welfare of the community."

TOLERANCE – "While maintaining strong and vigorous editorial policies, I hope the editors will always be tolerant. One who disagrees with the newspaper may be right, and the newspaper may be wrong. It is particularly important that readers have the opportunity to express themselves through our newspapers with only such restrictions, as space limitations, good taste, and libel laws may impose."

EMPLOYE BENEFITS – "A hope that I had held for many years finally has materialized and we have initiated and now maintain a program of benefits for our employes [sic]. They include a retirement plan, profit sharing, sick-leave, group life insurance, vacations and severance pay."

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS – "Unless we preserve absolute freedom of expression. democracy will perish. We must never have in America, except possibly in time of war, such restrictions and censorship as developed in Germany, Italy and Russia under their dictators. These were material factors in bringing about the downfall of those countries. If we wish to maintain our form of government we must have freedom of the press."

8. 1953

a. (B3a/f72)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Gannetteer
October 1953

Miller Chosen as President By New York Publishers

PAUL MILLER, editor and publisher of the Rochester Times-Union and executive vicepresident of the Gannett Group, last month was elected president of the New York State Publishers Association at a three-day convention at Lake Placid. He succeeded Louis G. Buisch, general manager of the Hornell Tribune.

More than a dozen top executives of Group newspapers attended the convention, devoted to problems of newsprint, operational costs, news suppression and world order.

At one session, the state publishers honored FRANK GANNETT, founder and president of the Group, for his work as president of the association in 1920. Jerome D. Barnum, former publisher of the Syracuse Post-Standard, lauded FEG's leadership of the organization and expressed gratitude of the association for his work. Gannett was given an engraved silver pitcher.

9. 1954

a. (B1/f11)

Editorially Speaking
Volume 17, 1954
"Welcome to Autonomy"
By Paul Miller

b. (B3a/f73)

Plainfield, N.J., Courier-News
Saturday, April 3, 1954

Paul Miller To Speak Here

Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Newspaper Group, will be the principal speaker at the testimonial dinner honoring Eugene F. Hampson on his recent promotion to the position of city editor of The Plainfield Courier-News.

The dinner, under the sponsorship of Mr. Hampson's friends, is scheduled for 7 p.m. today in the main lodge room at the Elks building . . . .

PHOTO:

Paul Miller

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

c. (B3a/f73)
*****

Plainfield, N.J., Courier-News
Monday, April 5, 1954

City Editor Honored, Lauded on Promotion

Friends, public officials and colleagues from the newspaper field and Elkdom paid tribute to Eugene F. Hampson Saturday night in the Elks Club . . . .

The principal speaker, Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Group of Newspapers, of which The Courier-News is a member, lauded Mr. Hampson for his fine work in the newspaper field for many years. He praised him particularly for his ability to take over the editorial direction of The Courier-News in January when tragedy struck three of the paper's top executives . . . .

Mr. Miller, also an Elk, flew in from Rochester, N. Y., to deliver the principal address. He pointed out the long service Mr. Hampson had given to the local Elks club, declaring, "I knew he was quite a fellow when I learned he was 11 years secretary of his Elks lodge, and that his affair was a sellout. I knew he must be something special" . . . .

d. (B3a/f73)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
December 11, 1954

Niagara Falls Fetes Gannett Organization

NIAGARA FALLS, Dec. 10 – High hopes for the continued steady growth of the City of Niagara Falls was expressed tonight by top officials of The Gannett Newspapers at a civic dinner officially welcoming the Gannett organization to this community.

Frank Gannett, president, and Paul Miller, executive vice president, of The Gannett Newspapers, were principal speakers at a dinner meeting sponsored by the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce in recognition of the Gannett acquisition of the Niagara Falls Gazette.

The Gannett Company purchased The Gazette on Nov. 10. The late Alanson C. Deuel, who died Oct. 19, was publisher of the Gazette for 50 years and a personal friend of Mr. Gannett . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Gannett, permitting himself a backward glance at a distinguished newspaper career, said he considers his fight against President Franklin D. Roosevelt's proposed court-packing bill, which Gannett declared threatened to destroy the Constitution, a highlight of his experience.

Raps Big Government

Preservation of the Constitution, with the freedom of liberties it guarantees us, he said, is a "must" for U.S. citizens.

"All over the world," Gannett said, communism is a threat. Communism is only socialism magnified. Communism is big government, where the government manages everybody and everything. We want none of it here in America, but we will have it if our Constitution isn't defended at all times, and preserved. Remember that socialism is always the first step toward communism.

Gannett said that although a number of people wanted to buy The Gazette, the late Mr. Deuel, its publisher, wanted the Gannett Group to have it.

"He had known me personally for half a century," Gannett told his audience. "He knew our ideas about journalism. He was sure that in our hands The Gazette would remain what it had been under his management – a strong, clean, good newspaper devoted to the interests of the community" . . . .

Other Gannett officials present were Herbert W. Cruickshank, general manager and treasurer of The Gannett Newspapers; Lynn N. Bitner, general business manager; L. R. Blanchard, general executive editor and editor of The Democrat and Chronicle; Vincent S. Jones, director of the News and Editorial Office; Frank E. Tripp, chairman of the board of directors and vice president of The Gannett Newspapers; Herbert D. Taylor, general auditor; Cyril Williams, secretary assistant treasurer and comptroller of The Gannett Newspapers; Irving H. Fitch, advertising director of The Gannett Newspapers; Don U. Bridge, general manager of the Rochester Gannett newspapers, and Alan F. Best, superintendent of buildings for The Gannett Newspapers.

e. (B3a/f73)

*****

Niagara Falls Gazette
December 11, 1954

(1.) Faith in Gazette's Future Cited by Gannett at Dinner; Group's Policies Outlined

"Niagara Falls is going places, and the Gannett newspapers are going right along with it."

That was the enthusiastic forecast of Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Co., Inc., at a civic reception for Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Gannett and associates in the newspaper group at Hotel Niagara last night. The Gannett Co. purchased the Gazette from the estate of the late Alanson C. Deuel Nov. 10 . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(2) PHOTOS
(1) Caption:

GANNETT GROUP WELCOMED HERE – Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Gannett and associates in the Gannett Co., Inc. were welcomed to Niagara Falls by religious, civic, business, industrial and labor leaders at a Chamber of Commerce dinner at Hotel Niagara last night. Mr. Gannett heads the company which took over the operation of this newspaper on Nov. 10. Upper photo, left to right, seated are: Herbert W. Cruickshank, general manager of the Gannett Newspapers; Councilman Calvin L. Keller, who presented the key to the city to Mr. Gannett; Mr. Gannett, president of Gannett Co., Inc. and president of the Niagara Falls Gazette Publishing Corp.; Mrs. Gannett. Back row: the Rev. Chester C. Beebe, president of the Niagara Falls Religious Fellowship; Harold Reagan, president of the Chamber of Commerce; Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Co.; the Rt. Rev. Msgr. P. J. Tronolone, Catholic dean of Niagara County, and Frank Tripp, chairman of the board of the Gannett Co. In lower photo, Mr. and Mrs. Gannett and Mr. Reagan are pictured at an informal reception [that] preceded the dinner.

(2.)

No Radical Changes or Upheavals Planned for gazette, Miller Says

Following is the text of an address by Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett newspapers, at the Chamber of Commerce dinner last night in honor of Frank E. Gannett: . . . .

[Identical to text in The Gannetteer of January 1955, below]

(3.)

2 Gazette Carrier Boys Will Receive $3,000 Gannett Foundation Scholarships

Two Niagara Falls Gazette carrier boys will go to college in 1955 with $3,000 scholarships from the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation, Inc.

Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Co., Inc., announced that two scholarships had been assigned to the Gazette, a member of the Gannett Group, at last night's Chamber of Commerce dinner honoring Mr. and Mrs. Gannett and associates in the company.

Scholarships are allotted to newspapers in the organization on the basis of their circulation. Eighty-eight carrier boys are now attending colleges and universities throughout the United States as a result of the establishment by the foundation in May 1952 of Frank Gannett Newspaperboy Scholarships, Inc.

The scholarships carry a $3,000 award payable $375 each semester. The money is provided $2,000 by the foundation and $1,000 by the participating newspaper . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

a. (B1/f17)

ESSPA
(Empire State School Press Association)
Volume 17, November 1955, No. 2

"It's a Great Life"
By Paul Miller

(Ed. Note: Text of a speech before the Empire State Intercollegiate Publications Association, along with Canadian and Northern New York newspaper publishers and editors, meeting at Clarkson College of Technology, Potsdam, New York, May 1, 1954.)

b. (B4/f1)

The Gannetteer
January 1955

NIAGARA FALLS DINNER

Newspapers as Effective Mass Media: The Text of Paul Miller's Speech

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice-President, Gannett Newspapers

YOU DON'T BUILD a good newspaper overnight. It develops over many years, just as a person's character develops. In time its readers come to know it for what it is. If it is truly successful, the newspaper is a good neighbor, a good citizen, a trusted confidant.

The Niagara Falls Gazette has succeeded because it is that kind of newspaper.

It is that kind of newspaper because of ALANSON CHASE DEULE and the men he had around him, many of whom are here tonight.

We are happy to have this opportunity, before a civic gathering, to pay tribute to the memory of a man and to the newspaper which is his monument.

In The Gazette, the people of the Falls area have a newspaper which would do credit to very much larger cities. The newspaper world has recognized this for a long time. The Gazette is an interesting, appealing, stimulating product. Its physical plant is one of the most modern and complete anywhere.

You are all proud of it, I know. And we of the Gannett Company are proud of our new association with it.

MR. GANNETT told you some stories about himself. Here's one he didn't tell you:

The other day he was discussing the Niagara Falls Gazette with associates. He related that when he was just out of Cornell, he became secretary to the

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Chairman of the first U. S. Commission to the Philippines. On his way out he met some young Englishmen in Hong Kong who were on a world tour and going next to the United States. He told them he was from New York State.

"Well then," one said with interest, "you must know all about the great Niagara Falls. We are going there as soon as we can."

Much to his embarrassment, Mr. Gannett had to admit that he'd never been there.

"I thought then," he said in telling the story, "here I have been reared 100 miles or so away and I never have seen Niagara Falls! I determined to go as soon as I returned to the United States. I did. But I never dreamed I would ever own the Niagara Falls Gazette!"

HOWEVER, he must have had other newspapers in mind, even then. Shortly he bought in at the Ithaca Journal. And he formed a lifetime partnership with ERWIN R. DAVENPORT and FRANK TRIPP at Elmira.

From about 1918 onward ownership began expanding. They had to expand. As they tell it now, there were so many families living off the Elmira property that they couldn't earn enough there in Elmira to feed them all.

Erwin Davenport is living in Florida now. Frank Tripp is chairman of the board of Gannett Co., Inc. He's also a nationally known columnist. Anyway, he's a Niagara Falls-known columnist because his column appears in The Gazette every week. And a second book of his writings has just come off the press.

The book, by the way, is $2.

There now are 23 newspapers, 3 television stations and 4 radio stations in The Gannett Group. Numerically it is the largest organization of its kind in the United States. These properties are mainly in New York State. Then there is a newspaper in New Jersey, one in Connecticut, and a newspaper, radio and TV station in Danville, Ill.

AS ONE newspaper after another was added in the early years, Frank Gannett and his associates concluded that it would be morally wrong as well as poor business to remold them to some general standard. Instead, local management was encouraged to retain and develop the personality of each newspaper – and also of the individuals in local management, themselves. They called it local autonomy.

The principal of local autonomy is nursed along more carefully and stressed more emphatically in The Gannett Group than in any other newspaper organization I know. That's why it's called a Group, not a chain. A chain is characterized by a dictated policy. There is usually a uniformity of practice, appearance and style. The opposite is true in The Gannett Group.

It happens that I don't recall seeing anything in the editorial columns of the Niagara Falls Gazette with which I could disagree very much. I doubt if others at Rochester have. But, no matter; THOMAS J. BERRIGAN is the editor of this newspaper and ROBERT T. HARROLD the general manager. They both live in Niagara Falls; not Rochester.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Niagara Falls is so near, though, and such an inviting spot, that I expect it to become No. 2 on the list of Gannett cities most visited by Rochester executives.

Saratoga Springs has long been No. 1. You wonder why? As many as six executives have been known to head out across the state at about the same season to study the Saratoga situation.

Judging from that, Niagara Falls will require heavy and frequent inspection between about May 11 and July 30 . . . . They tell me those are the Hamburg track dates.

PEOPLE who know of Frank Gannett's strong convictions sometimes ask how he can stand for editorial autonomy in his newspapers – that is, some vigorously expounding a point of view counter to his.

If you wonder, too, let me tell you of an incident in the New York state gubernatorial campaign of 1950.

Mr. Gannett, a Republican, made up his mind that he personally could not support either Republican Dewey or Democrat Lynch. He said so publicly.

One day The Associated Press carried a story reporting who each of the New York State Gannett newspapers was supporting.

It said that 16 were backing Dewey.

The Rochester newspapers printed the story. So did others in the Group. Some pointed out editorially that it proved that we do adhere to the autonomy principle enunciated by Mr. Gannett himself.

I showed the story to Mr. Gannett. He looked at it long and thoughtfully. Then he said:

"You know, Paul, sometimes I don't know about this autonomy business!"

That was all he ever said about it, to my knowledge.

YES, IT IS assumed that Gannett newspapers will be clean and community-minded and patriotic and fair. From there on, the local management is on its own as to specific editorial problems and issues.

In advertising and circulation and in business practice Gannett newspapers aim to be good neighbors also.

Briefly, and as a general policy, we believe in the lowest feasible advertising and circulation rates. We'd rather get more advertising at a low rate than carry less advertising at a high rate, even if net income were equal. Why? It's better business for us and for our communities. Among other things, low rates mean more advertisers, including little fellows, can use the newspapers regularly, profitably and with adequate space. The overall picture, present and future, is better for newspapers which adhere to this principle, and for the communities they serve.

The same for circulation. Many Sunday newspapers throughout the nation are now 25 cents a copy. Many more are 20 cents. The Gannett Sunday newspapers only recently went from 10 to 15 cents – and while many daily newspapers are selling now at 7 and even 10 cents a copy, every Gannett newspaper is a nickel with one exception.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

This is no commitment!

The Gannett management believes, in short, that the newspaper – to keep its place and to give maximum service with reasonable profit – must remain an effective mass medium. We propose to do everything possible to keep it that.

We are interested most of all in home-delivered circulation within productive training areas. Why? Because that's where it usually does the most good for us and for advertisers.

These newspapers are produced for family reading in the home. No advertising is accepted that it is believed might be harmful. Liquor advertising is excluded – it will be excluded here as current commitments expire. A close watch is kept on the comics. Standards of decency are insisted on in advertising and news.

ALL OF WHICH adds up to this: You aren't going to see any radical changes or upheavals in the Niagara Falls Gazette. Anyway, big changes don't always make big improvements.

In Oklahoma, where I was reared, a farm magazine printed a photo of a deserted farmhouse in a desolate, windswept field. It was the picture of decay. The magazine offered a prize for the best 100-word essay on the disastrous effects of land erosion.

The story goes that a bright Indian lad won a prize with this contribution:

"Picture show why white man crazy. Cut down trees. Make too big tepee. Plow hill, water wash. Wind blow soil. Grass gone. Door gone. Window gone. Squaw gone. Whole place gone to heck. No pig. No corn. No pony.

"Indian no plow land. Keep grass. Buffalo eat grass. Indian eat buffalo. Hide make plenty big tepee. Make moccasin. All time eat. Indian no hunt job. No work. No hitchhike. No ask relief. No build dam. No give dam.

"White man heap crazy."

We'd be "heap crazy," believe me, if we contemplated any major changes in the Niagara Falls Gazette.

NOW I HAVE an announcement of special interest to Niagara Falls.

First, a little background.

The majority of the common stock of Gannett Co., Inc., is owned by the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation, Inc. The Foundation was established by Mr. Gannett in 1935. It has received the stock through periodic gifts by him since.

His goal in setting up the Foundation was (1) provide maximum security for employes [sic], (2) keep the newspapers independent of any outside influence and (3) provide means for the organization to contribute to worthy institutions in the communities where our newspaper are published.

In May of 1952 the Foundation took a great step. It created Frank Gannett Newspaperboy Scholarships, Inc. Through this organization scholarships are awarded each year to a number of carrier boys to attend the college of their choice.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The scholarships carry a $3,000 award payable $375 each semester. The money is provided $2,000 by the Gannett Foundation and $1,000 by the participating newspaper.

There are already 88 boys in colleges throughout the United States, thanks to this plan.

It is a pleasure to announce The Gazette now is a participating newspaper. It has been assigned two scholarships. Thus, in 1955 two Gazette newspaperboys will go to college, each to be provided with $3,000 over a four-year term to help toward the cost of his education.

Our hopes for The Gazette and for Niagara Falls are high. This city has everything. It is growing and developing and improving right along. If the power situation can be worked out – and preferably if private enterprise is given a chance to do this job – then Niagara Falls will go ahead even faster. Yes, the sky is the limit.

Niagara Falls is going places and the Gannett Newspapers are going right along with it!

Before his untimely death, Alanson Deuel told friends:

"The one thing I was determined, once I had made up my mind to relinquish control of The Gazette was that it must continue to be the same strong force for community good that I have always tried to make it.

"That's why I decided to sell to Frank Gannett. The Gannett Newspapers are outstanding in public service."

None of us – at Rochester, in the management and staff here – none of us will ever knowingly let Mr. Deuel down.

The Niagara Falls Gazette and the city of Niagara Falls will continue to go forward together. Let no one here ever doubt that they will.

c. (B4/f1)

The Gannetteer
April 1955

Between Nagging and Praise: A Balance

By PAUL MILLER

Executive Vice President, Gannett Newspapers

Editor and Publisher, Rochester Times-Union

. . . AN editorial page, to be effective, must strike a reasonable balance between constant nagging and criticism and constant praise and acquiescence.

It is my hope that The Times-Union editorial page does strike such a balance and that it will continue to do so in the future.

When we have something to criticize, as we often have had in the past, we want to go after it firmly though fairly. But when there are developments that call for a pat on the back, we want to be as prompt to recognize them.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

One more thing:

As you know, efforts have been made to make the editorial page the product of many minds and hands rather than of a very few. That policy will be continued and expanded. To staff members who have gone out of their way – as many have – to contribute ideas and copy to the editorial page, sincere thanks. They have helped build a lively page out of one that otherwise would be much less appealing. To those of you who have not joined in, this is an invitation to do so at any time . . . .

– From a bulletin board notice in The Times-Union newsroom.

d. (B4/f1)

(1.) The Gannetteer
May 1955

Hartford Times
Sports Editor
Acclaimed

The governor of the state, civic leaders, sports stars and sports fans – almost 400 in all – turned out Apr. 21 to honor ARTHUR B. McGINLEY, sports editor of the Hartford Times. The occasion: Presentation of an award to McGinley by the Connecticut Boxing Guild.

The presentation was at a dinner at Hartford's Hotel Bond, where the following salute to McGinley was read. It's from PAUL MILLER of Rochester, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers.

MILLER'S tribute said:

Recently, particularly in commenting on the late great Grantland Rice, more than one writer and commentator has been known to lament that the Golden Era of great sports personalities is in the past.

They invariably cite Mr. Rice, as well as other writers of his day, along with figures in active sports such as Jack Dempsey.

Whoever these critics may cite, they are all wrong.

Art McGinley is one of the great sports personalities of all time.

Those who come after him will be writing that. We'd just as well acknowledge it now, because – as Art McGinley himself has often said – a flower for the living is greatly to be treasured as against a whole bank of 'em for the dead and gone.

Art McGinley is a great sports writer and commentator, one of the very great. As such, he long ago took his place among the immortals of the fraternity of sports.

No major sports event, or observance, or movement in Connecticut is complete without Art McGinley. That has been so for many years.

Even so, Art McGinley could be honored for something more than eminence in his field.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He could be, and I believe is, honored for that quality which no other quality is more highly esteemed in the world of sport. I mean just plain guts.

Surely most of those who will join to honor him know the story. Yet it will ever bear repeating.

Art McGinley was awakened one morning years ago by sharp pains in his hands. His fingers had become twisted and bent. Arthritis had hit him overnight.

To most who earn a living pounding a typewriter arthritis in the hands would be doom.

Not to Art. After the first shock and ineffective treatments, he never even cut down his output – an enormous volume of sports and local columns and of straight news stories as well. The Times tried to get him to ease up, take a holiday, do whatever he wished.

He soon decided he'd have none of it; none of anything but his work.

Ever since, and today, he has carried on with a peculiar stiff-fingered punching style that – awkward as it may appear – gets Art McGinley's brilliant job done day after day and week after week, as always.

Yes, Art McGinley is more than a great personality; more than an acknowledged expert in many, many fields.

Art McGinley is an inspiration to all who know his story – the story Art McGinley himself would never write.

(2.) MEMORANDUM DATE Friday [April 22]

TO Dear Paul

It would have done your heart good to listen to Dave reading your appreciation of Art.

It gripped everybody.

Max (signed)

MAX I. FARBER
Managing Editor [Hartford Times?]

(3.) ESTABLISHED 1817

The Hartford Times

A GANNETT NEWSPAPER

HARTFORD 1, CONNECTICUT

SUNDAY

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

DEAR MR. MILLER: - - Few things ever warmed me as did the letter you sent to Dave Daniel and which Dave read last Thursday night to the 400-odd at the annual dinner of the Connecticut Boxing Guild at which I was the guest-of-honor.

It was indeed gracious of you to take the time from a busy schedule to do this.

Mrs. McGinley and my daughter thought it a fine tribute beautifully expressed.

Sincerely,

Art McGinley (signature)

e. (B4/f1)

Democrat and Chronicle
June 27, 1955

Classified Advertising Men
Open 3-Day Parley Today

The men behind the want-ads – the classified advertising managers from the United States, Canada and England – will launch a three-day discussion today at the Sheraton Hotel.

Their aim: To improve the small newspaper sales notice and to sell more of them.

Anthony T. Powderly, classified advertising manager of The Democrat and Chronicle, and convention chairman, will call the convention to order at 9:30 a. m.

Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Group of Newspapers, and Don U. Bridge, general manager of the Democrat and Chronicle and the Times-Union, will speak at the sessions today.

Keynote address will be delivered by Harry Gwaltney, assistant advertising manager of the Milwaukee Journal. Four additional talks are slated during the day on selling want ads and maintaining sound consumer relations.

f. (B4/f1)

Times-Union
June 27, 1955

Admen Give Top Award to Gannett

The annual award for one of the "publishers who has done most to further classified advertising" today went to Frank Gannett, president of The Gannett Newspapers.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Members of the Assn. of National Classified Advertising Managers Inc., meeting in the Sheraton for their 35th annual conference, presented its highest award to Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, to give to Gannett, who is recovering in a hospital from injuries suffered in a fall.

Gannett was selected from about 15 publishers whose names were submitted by classified managers from all parts of the country. The selection was by the ANCAM boards of advisors and directors.

The chairman of the board of advisors, Robert Luekel, classified manager of the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times, presented the citation, named the James McGovern Memorial Award and consisting of a trophy and a parchment scroll.

(The late James McGovern, president of ANCAM when it met here last in 1939, had worked for The Gannett Newspapers as classified manager of the old Albany Evening News, The Knickerbocker Press of Albany, and the Brooklyn Eagle.)

* * *

IN HIS LUNCHEON address, Miller praised Anthony T. Powderly, classified advertising manager of the Democrat and Chronicle, convention chairman and a past president of ANCAM. Powderly and his staff, the speaker said, intend that "everything in the D&C want ad section shall be presented as faithfully and factually as the big news story of the day in the news columns."

The D&C want add staff, Miller said, regards "the want ad section as the readers' own section. Not only is it read by most subscribers, it is actually written by tens of thousands of readers."

Raymond Dykes, of the Westchester Newspapers, ANCAM president, conducted the luncheon program.

* * *

DON U. BRIDGE, general manager of The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle told the group that the classified ad section was an invaluable training ground for newspaper advertising men.

"A successful salesman of newspaper advertising must know – and not just believe – that newspaper advertising, properly written and offering meritorious merchandise or service at a fair price at the right time, is extraordinarily productive to honest advertisers," Bridge said.

"There isn't a better place to absorb this truth than in a classified advertising department . . . ."

g. (B4/f1)

*

Democrat and Chronicle
June 28, 1955

Hole-in-One Tourney Closes as Big Success

Mrs. John Tiefel's 2Annexes Title;
Red Moran Takes Playoff with 10

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mrs. John Tiefel yesterday won the women's title of The Democrat and Chronicle – Times-Union 10th annual Hole-In-One championship tournament at Genesee Valley Park Meadows.

With 2,375 entrants participating, the tourney was the most successful yet held.

Mrs. Tiefel scored 2 points while Mrs. William Warren tallied one point in a playoff for the title. Richard (Bud) Habes' 22-point total of Saturday stood up to the men's title . . . .

Don U. Bridge, general manager of Rochester Gannett Newspapers, presented the championship trophy awards to Mrs. Tiefel and Habes . . . .

A total of approximately 100 competed in the "Gannett Employees Day" yesterday with Bill Cory of the Democrat and Chronicle composing room walking off with top laurels. Bill fired an 11 on 2-3-2-2-2, which earned him a $25 merchandise prize.

Ray Lang, a parttime [sic] worker in the D&C circulation department, was runnerup [sic] with 9 points. Following Cory and Lang was Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, who tallied 8 points . . . .

h. (B4/f2)

The Gannetteer
September 1955

Miller to Speak
At New Building's
Dedication Sept. 12

PAUL MILLER, executive vice president of Gannett Co., Inc., will be the principal speaker Sept. 12 at the dedication of the new plant of the Newburgh News. An "open house," arranged by the management of The News, will be included in the Dedication Week program.

Executives of the Group central offices and top brass of many newspapers in the Group are expected to attend the formal ceremonies.

The "open house" will provide most residents of the Newburgh area with their first opportunity to inspect the newest Gannett plant. Advance notice of the occasion was supplied in a News editorial Aug. 9. It said:

"We of The News staff are proud of our new home in Dickson St., yet it is not an ornate structure but one specially adapted for newspaper production, with everything conveniently arranged for smooth operation, convenience, and efficiency. The old building in Grand St. had to be made the best of for newspaper purposes. With increasing needs and expanding production, it had faults that it was impossible to eradicate.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The Gannett Company has built what may be rightly said to be a model plant, and as employes [sic] become accustomed to it, they are inspired to ever-increasing efforts to bring out a newspaper better and larger than before.

"The News is pleased with the great amount of interest shown by the public in the new plant, and it will be a happy time when everything is shipshape for reception of visitors on the occasion of 'open house.' We are looking forward to this quite as much as our friends."

i. (B4/f2)

*****

The Newburgh News
The Newburgh News, Newburgh N. Y., Monday, September 12, 1955

The New Home of the Newburgh News

Pride in the Past, Faith in the Future

(1.) AN EDITORIAL

This is a happy day for The Newburgh News, its publishers, and its personnel. It is a day of fulfillment and of promise, of pride in the past and of faith in the future.

This comprehensive special edition marks the "official" opening of a modern new plant at 85 Dickson St., which we have occupied for the past six weeks.

Today, we have the first of a series of "open house" sessions at which our new home will be open to the community's inspection.

And tonight, we humbly and gratefully accept the good wishes which are being tendered to us by the Chamber of Commerce at a dinner graced by the presence of the highest civic official of the state, our friend and neighbor, Gov. Averell Harriman . . . .

(2.) The Gannett Code

Over the years Frank Gannett has outlined the basic tenets of the Group newspapers under seven main headings: Independence, Advertising, Local Autonomy, Community Service, Tolerance, Employe [sic] Benefits and freedom of the Press.

There is nothing wholly comparable to it in journalism today:

INDEPENDENCE – I wish our newspapers to be fearless and independent. To be independent and of the greater service to their communities, they must be on a sound financial basis. This means they must be operated at a profit, but profits should be made secondary to basic ideals. Our newspapers must be free from the influence of any interest that may have the selfish motive.

*** * ***

ADVERTISING – No advertising should be accepted which could infringe upon our freedom of editorial expression . . . I urgently request that no Gannett newspaper or radio or television station shall ever accept any advertising on alcoholic beverages.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

. . . Any advertising should be excluded which in the judgment of those responsible could be injurious to the public.

*** * ***

LOCAL AUTONOMY – A long-standing policy to leave to the local management the fullest measure of autonomy. I like to have the editors express themselves freely. I do not wish to dictate editorial policy for our group. Each newspaper is an institution built up after years of effort. Each has a flavor and atmosphere of its own.

*** * ***

COMMUNITY SERVICE – It is of great importance that our newspapers always shall be devoted to the best material as well as spiritual interests of the community in which they are published. They should at all times vigorously support all movements to foster and promote the welfare of the community.

*** * ***

TOLERANCE – While maintaining strong and vigorous editorial policies, I hope the editors will always be tolerant. One who disagrees with the newspaper may be right, and the newspaper may be wrong. It is particularly important that readers have the opportunity to express themselves through our newspapers with only such restrictions as space limitations, good taste, and libel laws may impose.

*** * ***

EMPLOYE BENEFITS – A hope that I had held for many years finally has materialized and we have initialed and now maintain a program of benefits for our employes [sic]. They include a retirement plan, profit-sharing, sick leave, group life insurance, vacations and severance pay.

*** * ***

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS – Unless we preserve absolute freedom of expression, democracy will perish. We must never have in America, except possibly in time of war, such restrictions and censorship as developed in Germany, Italy and Russia under their dictators. If we wish to maintain our form of government we must have freedom of the press.

(3.) AN HONORABLE PROFESSION

News Approves ASNE Code of Journalism

The primary function of newspapers is to communicate to the human race what its members do, feel and think. Journalism, therefore, demands of its practitioners the wildest [widest ?] range of intelligence, or knowledge, and of experience, as well as natural and trained powers of observation and reasoning. To its opportunities as a chronicle are indissolubly linked its obligations as teacher and interpreter.

To the end of finding some means of codifying sound practice and just aspirations of American journalism, a Code of Ethics has been adopted and subscribed to by all members of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

The News' membership in this society is held by Charles A. S. Freeman, managing editor. Mr. Freeman has been a member of this society for many years, holding membership while managing editor of the Olean Herald, the Rochester

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Times-Union and the Rochester Democrat & Chronicle, and reinstating his membership about four years ago.

The canons subscribed to are set forth as:

I. Responsibility

The right of a newspaper to attract and hold readers is restricted by nothing but considerations of public welfare. The use a newspaper makes of the share of public attention it gains serves to determine its sense of responsibility, which it shares with every member of its staff. A journalist who uses his power for any selfish or otherwise unworthy purpose is faithless to a high trust.

II. Freedom of the Press

Freedom of the press is to be guarded as a vital right of mankind. It is the unquestionable right to discuss whatever is not explicitly forbidden by law, including the wisdom of any restrictive statute.

* * *

III. Independence

Freedom from all obligations except that of fidelity to the public interest is vital.

1. Promotion of any private interest contrary to the general welfare, for whatever reason, is not compatible with honest journalism, so-called news communications from private sources should not be published without public notice of their source or else substantiation of their claims to value as news, both in form and substance.

2. Partisanship, in editorial comment which knowingly departs from the truth, does violence to the best spirit of American journalism; in the news columns it is subversive of a fundamental principle of the profession.

* * *

IV. Sincerity, Truthfulness, Accuracy

Good faith with the reader is the foundation of all journalism worthy of the name.

1. By every consideration of good faith a newspaper is constrained to be truthful. It is not to be excused for lack of thoroughness or accuracy within its control, or failure to obtain command of these essential qualities.

2. Headlines should be fully warranted by the contents of the articles which they surmount.

* * *

V. Impartiality

Sound practice makes clear distinction between news reports and expressions of opinion. News reports should be free from opinion or bias of any kind.

1. This rule does not apply to so-called special articles unmistakably devoted to advocacy or characterized by a signature authorizing the writer's own conclusions and interpretations.

* * *

VI. Fair Play

A newspaper should not publish unofficial charges affecting reputation or moral character without opportunity given to the accused to be heard; right practice demands the giving of such opportunity in all cases of serious accusation outside judicial proceedings.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1. A newspaper should not invade private rights or feeling without sure warrant of public rights as distinguished from public curiosity.

2. It is the privilege, as it is the duty, of a newspaper to make prompt and complete correction of its own serious mistakes of fact or opinion, whatever their origin.

DECENCY

A newspaper cannot escape conviction of insincerity if while professing high moral purpose its [sic] supplies incentives to base conduct, such as are to be found in details of crime and vice, publication of which is not demonstrably for the public good.

(4) PHOTOS
Captions:

FRANK E. GANNETT
President and founder of the Gannett Group of Newspapers

HARRY COHEN
General manager and publisher of The Newburgh News

MRS. FRANK E. GANNETT
Chairman of the board of Frank Gannett Newspaperboy Scholarships Inc.

PAUL MILLER
Executive vicepresident of the Gannett Company Inc.

(4.) NEW HOME EDITION

i. Board Chairman Tripp Got Start at Elmira

PHOTO:
FRANK E. TRIPP

Born in Breesport, Frank Elihu Tripp has spent most of his life in or near Elmira, where his early career as a newspaperman on the Star-Gazette brought him into association with Frank Gannett.

Mr. Tripp rose rapidly, his work as a reporter blended with experience as an advertising man, and he became top executive of the Star-Gazette in 1924. When the Gannett Group of Newspapers acquired the Star-Gazette, Mr. Tripp sold his interests for stock in the larger corporation.

As Mr. Gannett met a need for capable assistance, he turned to Mr. Tripp and the latter became general manager of the Gannett Group, then comprising only newspapers in Rochester, Elmira, Ithaca and Utica.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Since then he has played an active part in the development of the Gannett Group, rising eventually to the position of chairman of the board of the Gannett Company . . . .

ii. City Still Recalls Ed Dunphy

For more than 40 years Edward P. Dunphy helped serve the news to Newburgh readers.

When he died on Aug. 11, 1932, he ended 18 years as city editor of The News.

Ed Dunphy is still a name to be reckoned with in Newburgh. He knew so many people, he helped so many causes, he helped so much to make his newspaper popular among its readers.

His father, James G. Dunphy, helped bring out the initial issue of The News on Sept. 5, 1885 . . . .

iii. Blanchard to Attend Chamber-News Dinner

Among officials of the Gannett Newspapers to attend the Chamber of Commerce dinner this evening in honor of The News' industrial expansion will be L. R. Blanchard, general executive editor of the group and editor of the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle . . . .

iv. Mrs. Gannet Active in Education

Mrs. Caroline Werner Gannett, the wife of Frank E. Gannett, has been a member of the Board of Regents of the State of New York since February, 1947, when she was elected to serve the unexpired term of the late Roland B. Woodward.

In 1950 she was reelected to a full term on the Board.

Mrs. Gannett is the daughter of the late William Werner, associate justice of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York.

She attended public and private schools in Rochester and was graduated from Rosemary Hall at Greenwich, Conn., after studying arts and music in Munich, Germany.

In 1947 she received the honorary degree of L. H. D. from Keuka College. She became a member of the Honorary Board of Patrons of Hartwich [sic] College in 1944.

In 1947 she received an honorary degree of doctor of letters from Alfred University and in 1953 she received similar degrees from the University of Rochester and Syracuse University.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mrs. Gannett became an honorary member of Delta Kappa Gamma in 1951 and in August of that year she was given the Seventh Fairbanks Citation jointly with Mr. Gannett. She was married to the newspaper publisher in 1920 and they have two children.

She has been actively interested in child welfare work for many years.

During World War II she was a member of the State War Council and she also served on the Committee for Child Care for Working Mothers.

For 25 years she has been identified with the Rochester Convalescent home for crippled children and she is prominent in the Rochester Red Cross Chapter.

v. Irving Fitch
Ad Chief
For Group

The advertising director for the Gannett Newspapers is Irving H. Fitch, who joined the retail advertising staff of the Rochester Times-Union on Sept. 20, 1920.

Mr. Fitch served many of Rochester's leading advertisers for many years and in 1937 he was appointed manager of general advertising, the Rochester Times-Union and the Democrat and Chronicle . . . .

vi. Saved $1,000 in College

Frank Gannett Began Career As Reporter on Syracuse Herald

Frank E. Gannett, founder of the Gannett Group of 23 newspapers and four radio stations, was born in a farm house on the highest hill in Ontario County, central New York, on Sept. 15, 1976.

The family moved to other locations and other occupations, and Frank Gannett grew up to be self-reliant. He had hoped to enter West Point but his mother dissuaded him and he won a four-year scholarship at Cornell University. Here his business habits persisted. He entered with $80 and had saved $1,000 upon graduation.

Mr. Gannett began his newspaper career as a reporter on the Syracuse Herald. That experience was interrupted when Jacob Gould Schurman, president of Cornell University, induced Mr. Gannett to accompany him as secretary on a commission study of the Philippines.

City Editor at Ithaca

Returning by way of Europe in 1900, Mr. Gannett became city editor of the Ithaca News at $15 a week. He worked briefly in New York and Pittsburgh.

His next move was to acquire in 1906 a half interest in the Elmira Gazette. To start his first venture he had $3,000 in cash, $7,000 from "character" loans and $10,000 in notes made out to the previous owner, Sen. David B. Hill.

From that time on, progress was rapid in building a group of newspapers. One by one he picked up papers here and there. For three years, 1929-31 the former

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Brooklyn Eagle was a Gannett newspaper. Purchase of the Newburgh News came in 1925 and the Beacon News two years later.

The policy of local news and editorial management, adopted early has been maintained even at considerable cost. Mr. Gannett always has held that a newspaper can best serve its city if the publisher, editor and employes are local residents who understand their community and its people.

His Only Stipulation

His only stipulation was that the management give its city "a clean, fair, independent, constructive newspaper, a home newspaper fit to enter the home and be read by every member of the family."

The character and traditions of the individual papers have been maintained. There was no tearing down and rebuilding to a fixed plan.

In 1935 Mr. Gannett arranged for the perpetuation of his newspapers by establishing the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation, Inc., now the controlling owner of the common stock of the Gannett Co., Inc.

The Foundation will be administered by a self-perpetuating board of directors. It is this Foundation that provides scholarships for newspaper boys each year.

As the newspapers were acquired they were initiated into the decentralized practices of the Group. Control was of the lightest. Politically each newspaper decided its own affairs. It was no accident that the Hartford Times could support Franklin D. Roosevelt in his first two campaigns, doing so without consultation in Rochester.

The only ironclad rule was that no Gannett newspaper should accept liquor advertising. Mr. Gannett has hated the liquor traffic and fought it in every way he could.

In his early life Mr. Gannett was a Democrat. About 1918 he became a Republican but for many years classes himself as an independent. He opposed Franklin D. Roosevelt's election, but supported the President's policies for the first six months of the administration.

Then there appeared the first of the spending theories, and the publisher, with a lifetime of abhorring waste, could no longer follow.

While he fought President Roosevelt's domestic policies with all vigor, he endorsed most of the administration's foreign policy. This support became stronger as war came closer. When the Japanese struck at Pearl Harbor he promptly wired the President, offering his services in any capacity. Editorially he called for all-out support of the war effort.

He had visited Europe for six weeks in 1934, meeting most of the important figures of those pre-war days. Twice later he flew to Europe and once around the world. In the fall of 1943 he toured England, where he met leaders and saw top secret installations.

He experienced bombing in London. Out of this came a series of newspaper articles later converted into a booklet, "Britain Sees It Through."

1946 Warning on Communism

In the spring of 1946, nearing the age of 70, he again flew to Europe with a party of newspapermen. From this came a booklet, "The Fuse Sputters in Europe," in which he warned of the threat of Russia and communism.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

His third report of effects of World War II was written in 1947 after a 13-day, 23,000 mile flight around the world. Published in a booklet titled "Winging 'Round the World," it told of the publisher's impressions of men, economic conditions and global problems of peace and prosperity.

In 1939 Mr. Gannett became an avowed candidate for the Presidency. His name went before the convention in Philadelphia but the delegates swept Wendell Willkie to the nomination. He was not a candidate for office thereafter but kept in close touch with party affairs.

Mr. Gannett in 1920 married Miss Caroline Werner, daughter of the late William E. Werner, a judge of the New York State Court of Appeals. Their daughter, Sarah Maria – now Mrs. Charles Vincent McAdam Jr. of Greenwich, Conn. – was born in 1923, and their adopted son, Dixon, in 1929.

Together, Mr. and Mrs. Gannett in 1951 were awarded the Wilson Fairbanks citation for "their outstanding service to higher education" and "their unwavering friendship for youth."

This year they won the 14th Civic Medal awarded by the Rochester Museum of Arts and Sciences for their efforts to enrich the community and make it "a better place in which to live and bring up children."

Mr. Gannett's permanent home in Rochester is on Sandringham Rd. The winter months he has spent at his home on the ocean in Miami Beach, Fla., where he has been an active member of the Committee of 100 and a past president of the Indian Creek Golf Club. Mr. Gannett is a member of the Unitarian Church.

vii.

Calvin Myers Tops All In Service with News

Calvin D. Myers, editor, has been with The News since 1901 and is senior in point of service.

He was associate editor under Frederick W. Wilson when he joined the paper, then became managing editor and finally editor.

He has been a prominent leader in Newburgh's civic activities during his long tenure with The News.

Mr. Myers came to Newburgh after some 15 years in newspaper work in Ohio. A native of Wooster, Ohio, he was publisher and editor of the Wooster Evening Journal at the age of 20 in 1898-99.

Publisher in Zanesville

From 1900-01, he was publisher and editor of the Zanesville (Ohio) Sunday News.

He has been a trustee of the Newburgh Savings bank since 1941, and was named secretary in 1954.

A former president of the Newburgh Chamber of Commerce, he also is a former president of the Historical Society of Newburgh Bay and the Highlands and the Newburgh Automobile Club.

At present he is vicepresident of the board of trustees of Washington's Headquarters, and the National Temple Hill Association

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Myers also is chairman of the board of the Goudy Wildlife Club; former member of the Salvation Army advisory board, former director of the Civic Music Association, and member of the board of managers of St. Luke's Hospital.

In 1946 he was chairman of the Newburgh committee in national clothing collection. He has also been chairman of the mayor's committee on taxes and revenue, prior to temporary adoption of the sales tax by the city; was treasurer of the Federation of Patriotic Societies and chairman of mayor's committee on welfare problems.

He was chosen for the Americanism award in 1951 by Judson P. Galloway Post, American Legion, for his "persistent editorial campaign and personal effort over a long period of years for better Americanism and devotion to the principles enunciated in the Constitution of the United States."

He married the former Lillian Jessalyn, French-Canadian artist and writer, in 1901. She died in 1941.

viii.

Lynn Second Bitner To Head Newspapers

The general manager of the Gannett Group of Newspapers has been Lynn N. Bitner since last May.

At that time Mr. Bitner, previously general business manager, was named by the Board of Directors to succeed Herbert W. Cruikshank [sic]. The latter was resigning in anticipation of his retirement at the end of the year.

Mr. Bitner is a director of Gannett Company Inc. and a trustee of the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation.

His older brother, Harry, also was general manager of a major newspaper organization, having served in that capacity from 1934 to 1938 for the Hearst Newspapers.

Lynn Bitner began his newspaper career as a reporter on the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, moving not long thereafter to the Williamsport (Pa.) Sun as an advertising solicitor.

After a year with the New York American as an advertising salesman (he remained in the advertising field after Williamsport), Mr. Bitner began his association with the Gannett Newspapers, serving as advertising salesman on the Ogdensburg Journal.

From 1932 to 1941 he was in Rochester, serving as salesman and general advertising manager of the Democrat and Chronicle and Times-Union, and retail advertising manager of The Times-Union.

From 1941 to 1951 he was at Elmira, first as assistant publisher and then as general manager of the Elmira Star-Gazette, the Elmira Advertiser and the Elmira Sunday Telegram.

From 1951, when he returned to Rochester, he had been general business manager for the Gannett Group.

He is a member of the American Newspaper Publishers Association bureau of advertising, and many Rochester clubs.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He and Mrs. Bitner live in a Rochester suburb. They have three children; Laurence, a Harvard graduate; Carol, a sophomore at Wellesley, and Susan, 4, at home.

ix.

News Office Director Was Editor at Utica

A native of Utica with a long association with Utica newspapers is Vincent S. Jones, director of the News and Editorial Office of the Gannett Newspapers.

It might even be said that his association with them began when he was born on Dec. 4, 1906, because his father, the late William V. Jones, was a managing editor and later president of the Utica Daily Press.

After graduation from Utica Free Academy in 1924 and from Hamilton College in 1928, he attended the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences at Harvard University.

He has served Utica newspapers continuously since 1930 – as reporter, night city editor, city editor and managing editor of The Press; as managing editor of the Observer-Dispatch from 1938-1942, and as executive editor of the Observer-Dispatch and Press since 1942.

Mr. Jones is a former president of the New York State Associated Press Association, a former president of the Associated Press Managing Editors and a member of the latter group's board of directors.

He is a member of the American Society of Newspaper Editors; the New York State Society of Editors; Sigma Delta Chi, Kappa Alpha Mu and Pi Delta Epsilon; the Advisory Council of the Kent State Photo Short Course and the Advisory Council of the University of Missouri – Brittanica [sic] "The Great Pictures" contest.

Mr. Jones is a frequent lecturer at the American Press Institute, Columbia University, on readership, readability and photo journalism.

In Utica he is a member of the City Planning Board; vicepresident of St. Luke's Memorial Hospital Center; vicechairman [sic] of the Committee for intergroup [?] Understanding.

He is also a member of the Community Chest and Planning Council; Grace Church (Episcopal); and the Fort Schuyler, Sadaquada [Golf], Yahnundasis [Golf], Torch and Rotary Clubs.

He married Nancy van Dyke Parsons and they have two daughters, Suzanne and Margot.

x.

Gannett Co. Executive Long Active with AP

Paul Miller, son of a small town minister and eldest of a family of six, has been in newspaper work since he was 18. He began in Oklahoma as reporter and editor on various newspapers there. In 1932 he joined The Associated Press at Columbus, Ohio. Thereafter for 15 years he had assignments from coast to coast.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

For five years Miller directed nationwide political coverage of The Associated Press, including the national conventions. He also directed the AP staff which covered the United Nations Organization Conference at San Francisco in 1945.

Later that same year, he was one of the three newspaper representatives who made the Air Transport Command's first regularly scheduled round-the-world flight, completing 23,000 miles in six and a quarter days.

Miller joined The Gannett Newspapers as assistant to President Frank E. Gannett in 1947, coming from Washington where he was chief of the Washington Bureau of The Associated Press, and also assistant general manager of The Associated Press.

Now Executive Vicepresident

He now is executive vicepresident of Gannett Company Inc., which controls the 23 newspapers, four radio stations and two television stations of the Gannett Group.

In 1949 Miller represented the American Society of Newspaper Editors and the American Newspaper Publishers Association at the International Congress of Publishers and Editors at Amsterdam.

In 1951, he and Mrs. Miller were among the Americans who were guests at the centennial celebration of Reuters, British news agency, in London.

In 1955, with other U.S. newspapermen, he visited Guatemala and observed conditions and prospects under the then new anti-Communist Castillo government, he wrote a series of newspaper reports on his observations.

Miller is a director of The Associated Press – the first former AP employe [sic] ever elected to the AP board; is on the advisory board of the American Press Institute of Columbia University, New York; and is a past president of the New York State Publishers Association.

In Rochester, where he is publisher of the two Gannett newspapers, Miller (like most Gannett men) is active in civic affairs. He was chairman of a committee to work out recommendations for a new seven-million dollar community memorial –it is now nearing completion.

He has been chairman of Red Cross drives and vicechairman of the combined Red Cross-Community Chest drive.

Live Near Rochester

He and Mrs. Miller live on a country place near Rochester with their 17-year-old daughter and two sons, 9 and 10 years old. A third son, 20, is in Okinawa with the United States Marines.

In recent years, Miller has frequently discussed operating philosophy and practice of the Gannett Newspapers before civic and professional groups. In such talks he emphasizes the autonomy principle under which Gannett newspapers are operated – a principle evolved under the leadership of Frank Gannett and Frank Tripp, the latter now chairman of the board and also a columnist of national note.

"These men recognized," Miller often says, "that you don't build a good newspaper overnight. It develops over many years, just as a person's character develops. In time its readers come to know it for what it is.

"If it is truly successful, the newspaper is a good neighbor, a good citizen, a trusted confidant. It is the everlasting aim of all that each Gannett newspaper shall be that kind of newspaper."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

xi.

Advertising Manager With Paper 26 Years

Ralph B. Flemming, Newburgh News advertising manager, tales to newspaper work naturally.

There are 136 years of association with the Newburgh News in Mr. Flemming's family.

Ralph counts 26 years of his own. A brother, Thomas C. Flemming, retired last year as supervising foreman of the composing room after 35 years with the paper. A brother-in-law, William Fulton, retired at the same time with 40 years of service in the printing department.

A late brother, John J., also served 35 years in The News composing room. His son, John J. Flemming, an architect in Gordon S. marvel's office, drew the sketch of the new News building.

Staff of Nine

Ralph directs an advertising staff of nine persons, including two on the Beacon News . . . .

xii.

Wilson Ran Business at Age of 20

It is doubtful if any man, including founder William H. Keefe, had a greater part in the development of The News than Frederick W. Wilson.

Mr. Wilson, who died suddenly of a heart seizure while playing golf at the Powelton Club on May 26, 1933, went to work as a teenager on The News shortly after its first publication. That was in September, 1885.

By the time he was 20, he was conducting the business affairs of the small but fast-growing daily.

Mr. Wilson was one of the incorporators of The News in 1896 and its secretary and treasurer.

In 1901 when founder Keefe died, Fred Wilson became president and publisher.

The year before he had served as a delegate to the Republican State Convention which nominated a fellow-Newburgher, Benjamin B. Odell, for governor. And in 1902 he helped renominate the city's first governor (George Clinton was several decades ahead of Newburgh as a city.)

But in 1908 Fred Wilson broke with the til-then all-powerful Governor Odell, refusing to support Odell's Edward M. Murtfeld for mayor of the city.

A Democrat, Benjamin B. McClung, was elected with the backing of Mr. Wilson and the developing Republican organization of the late Sen. John Rose.

Mayor McClung was reelected once, too, before John B. Corwin restored the Republican Party to City Hall, again with approval of Fred Wilson.

Later Dr. Henry Wilson, Fred's brother, was to be the second city manager.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In 1908 Fred Wilson had been appointed by Gov. Charles Evans Hughes as a member of the Hudson-Fulton Tercentenary Commission and he threw his energy and zeal into that river-long celebration as completely as he threw it into so many community activities.

The controversy with Governor Odell (he holds that title today in memory, although he served only two terms) continued with Odell's Newburgh Journal battling it out with Wilson's News through promotions and circulation stunts.

In 1917 the feud ended with The News buying out The Journal, a move that virtually ended Newburgh's status as a multi-newspaper city.

Mr. Wilson was one of the first editors in the state to support woman suffrage and he saw the nation give the ladies the right to vote.

Yet, as his obituary writer noted, Fred Wilson never married.

In 1925 he sold his interest to Frank E. Gannett and retired from newspaper business.

There were other activities. With Bertram A. Stroock he bought the Central Academy of Music at Broadway and Grand. And he acquired an apartment house and industrial property in New Jersey.

Fred Wilson was a charter member of Newburgh Lodge of Elks and he was a Mason. He belonged to the Powelton and City Clubs in Newburgh and the Press, Republican and Masonic Clubs in New York City.

xiii. Harry Cohen, General Manager,
Fourth Top Executive In 70 Years

Harry Cohen, the general manager publisher and publisher of The News, is the fourth man to fill that position in the newspaper's three score years and ten . . . .

xiv. Nocton Buys Everything
From Clips to Presses

As business manager of The Newburgh News, Hugh V. Nocton, 692 South St., puts in a busy day.

Mr. Nocton's duties range from bookkeeping to buying equipment, from collecting accounts to maintaining the plant. He keeps track of credits and does most of the company's buying, from paper clips and ink to newsprint and presses . . . .

j. (B4/f2)
*****

Newburgh News
Newburgh, N.Y., Tuesday, September 13, 1955

375 at Dinner
Pay Tribute

1204

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

To The News

(Full Page of Pictures page 11)

The Newburgh News was honored by the Greater Newburgh Chamber of Commerce and a large throng of citizens last night and, in the spirit of the occasion, the Gannett Newspapers came in for some kind words from Gov. Averell Harriman.

The governor, a resident of Orange County and a long-time reader of The News, included a few suggestions that the press be as alert to "deviations from correct action" on the part of Republicans today as it had been through 20 years of Democratic rule.

Speaking before 300 guests in the Green Room of the Hotel Newburgh and to another 75 who watched him on television in the upstairs Cocktail Lounge, the governor described the Gannett newspapers as "remarkable" because of their independence and fairness . . . .

(2) PHOTOs
Captions:

PRESS INSPECTION – The News' four-unit Goss press rolled off its special New Home Edition yesterday under the watchful eyes of this quartet: left to right, Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett newspapers; Mrs. Frank Gannett; Mrs. Harry Cohen, and Harry Cohen, general manager of The News. (Photo by Rhoades)

CONGRATULATIONS – Governor Averell Harriman offers his congratulations to Harry Cohen, general manager of the Newburgh News, on the occasion of The News recognition dinner held last night at the Hotel Newburgh. In his talk Governor Harriman praised the Gannett Newspaper policy of editorial autonomy, pointing out that he "always found Gannett newspapers fair." (Photo by Rhoades)

k. (B4/f2)

*****

Newburgh News
Newburgh, N.Y., Tuesday, September 13, 1955

Gannett Executive Describes Editorial Autonomy

Miller's Reference to Presidency Brings Only Smile from Harriman

By C. BOEHM ROSA

Mention of Gov. Averell Harriman in terms of the Presidency at last night's Chamber of Commerce dinner brought only a sphinx smile to the Governor's face.

The words came from Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Newspapers, who shared speaking honors with Mr. Harriman at an event given in recognition of the Newburgh News' current expansion.

Mr. Miller began with a word of appreciation for the Governor's presence at the Hotel Newburgh dinner.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"What worries me," the vicepresident said, "is that he does so many nice things."

Mr. Miller referred to the Governor as running the state, and said "many believe he may be running for something else." This, he added, might be better determined in another year.

"There may possibly be some here who did not vote for him for Governor, and perhaps even some who would not vote for him for, say, President – but he rates a 100 per cent vote of appreciation from all for joining us tonight," the speaker declared.

Mr. Miller recalled first meeting Mr. Harriman in 1944 at a Washington luncheon. He, like the Governor in his preceding talk, recalled the time in 1945 when he "hitch-hiked" a ride in Mr. Harriman's converted bomber plane to Washington from the United Nations organization conference at San Francisco.

There were two other guests aboard – Mr. Clark-Kerr, who was then British ambassador to Moscow, and Charles (Chip) Bohlen, Russian advisor in the State Department who now is U.S. Ambassador to Russia.

Attended Swearing-In

Mr. Miller also recalled attending the ceremony when Mr. Harriman was sworn in as Secretary of Commerce to succeed Henry Wallace.

"As a Republican," the speaker observed, "I may be forgiven if I sometimes wonder if I am going to accumulate too many more experiences of attending swearing-in ceremonies for Harriman."

The Gannett executive also paid tribute to "another great public servant from this area." James V. Forrestal, former Defense Secretary, whom he said he had counted as an admired friend.

"I saw him frequently during the war years in Washington. He often said, 'You know, I used to be a newspaperman, myself. I was a reporter on the Beacon News.'

"In my opinion, James Forrestal was really one of our great Americans. I know something about the circumstances that led to his final catastrophic end – God bless him."

Mr. Miller turned to the Gannett Newspapers and said he believed the group had become best known for its policy of local autonomy and its program of enlightened employe [sic] and public relations.

Each newspaper in the group, he explained, enjoyed complete editorial freedom without fear of central dictation from Rochester. As for employe relations, the organization pioneered in newspaper profit sharing and other employe benefit plans including a retirement program that he said he believed was unexcelled in the industry. Gannett Newspaper participation in community affairs, he added is, "second to nothing."

An example of the free editorial principal [sic] was recalled in the gubernatorial contest between Thomas E. Dewey and Walter J. Lynch in 1940. The speaker said Frank E. Gannett "didn't care for Dewey and he couldn't see Lynch."

An Associated Press survey, however, indicated that 16 of the 18 Gannett newspapers favored Dewey. When the AP story appeared in the Rochester newspaper, Mr. Miller said he told Mr. Gannett this was a good example of autonomy in practice.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

To this Mr. Gannett wryly replied: “Paul, sometimes I don’t know about this autonomy” . . . .

Mr. Miller also spoke of the Gannett policy against liquor advertisements.

“There are as many jokes about this in our own organization as outside – although it has not always been a joke to some of our business managers that the company has passed up millions of dollars of advertising to stick to the ban!

“We were celebrating a company anniversary at a dinner in Rochester,” Mr. Miller recalled. “Frank Tripp was speaking. He reached for a glass of water. There was none. Nor any water pitcher on the table. Mr. Tripp chuckled.

“‘Well,’ he remarked to his audience, ‘I never expected to see the day when we would run short of water at a Gannett party!”

The executive gave an explanation of the term “group” as used by the organization’s newspapers instead of “chain.” A chain newspaper, he said, usually applied to a centrally operated organization that spoke with a single voice . . . .

l. (B4/f2)

Times-Union
September 13, 1955

Notables
At Opening of News Building

NEWBURGH (AP) – More than 300 state, civic and newspaper officials, led by Gov. [Averell] Harriman, turned out for a celebration here last night in recognition of the new $500,000 home of the Newburgh News.

In a speech at a Chamber of Commerce dinner which followed a tour of the new plant, Harriman said he came to dinner as a “neighbor and friend” of Frank Gannett, president of The Gannett Newspapers, of which the Newburgh News is a member.

Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett group, and Mrs. Gannett also spoke.

Harriman said the Gannett newspapers have “strong convictions and feelings” in politics but that he has “always found them fair.”

Miller paid tribute to the late James Forrestal, the nation’s first secretary of defense, who at one time worked for the Beacon News which also is published in the Newburgh News plant.

Miller said the Gannett Group was known for its policy of “local autonomy” and for establishing the first profit-sharing and retirement program in the newspaper field.

Mrs. Gannett said she was “tremendously impressed by Newburgh, its scope, beauty and pounding progress.”

m. (B4/f2)

Niagara Falls Gazette

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

September 19, 1955

Prayer for Health of Ailing Publisher Opens Parley of Gannett Executives Here

More than 100 executives of the Gannett Group of Newspapers, Radio and Television Stations today heard Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Co., Inc., open a two-day group editorial and business conference at Hotel Niagara with a prayer for the health of Frank E. Gannett and the continuance of the idealistic spirit in newspapering.

Mr. Miller singled out the Niagara Falls Gazette, newest member of the group, as a lively newspaper in a "great town." He said that the Gannett Co. is "very happy to be here" as he welcomed publishers, editorial and business executives of the 23 newspapers, four radio stations and two television stations that comprise the group.

Founder of the Company

Mr. Miller's opening prayer follows:

"Our Father in Heaven: Please bless FEG (Frank E. Gannett) and Dav (E. R. Davenport) and others unable to be here today, and be with us as we talk newspapering – a pursuit, let us never forget, where idealism is essential to continuing success. Amen."

Mr. Gannett is founder and president of the Gannett Co., Inc. Mr. Davenport is a retired official of the company now living in Florida.

This morning the delegates to the annual group meeting listened to a report on group operations by Lynn N. Bitner, general manager. Mr. Bitner cited 1955 as a peak year in newspaper circulation and advertising and noted that a rising standard of living and growing population in the United States bodes well for the future.

He was followed to the rostrum in the hotel ballroom by G. Glover Delaney of Rochester, who heads the group's radio and TV operations. Mr. Delaney's topic was "Working with TV and Radio."

Albany Man Speaks

Henry W. Stock, advertising manager of the Albany Knickerbocker News discussed the work of the Brand Names Foundation.

Cyrus H. Favor, circulation manager of the Utica Daily Press and the Sunday Utica Observer Dispatch, discussed "Why Do People Buy Our Newspapers?"

Mr. Bitner spoke at a joint luncheon meeting in the hotel's Terrace Room.

Following the opening session this morning, the visitors split into three groups for separate meetings. These were group meetings for news and editorial personnel, radio and television officials, and advertising and business representatives . . . .

Blanchard, Jones Preside

L. R. Blanchard, editorial chairman of the group, and Vincent S. Jones, executive editor, presided at the editorial conference. Irving H. Fitch, advertising director, was chairman of the advertising and business meeting, and Mr. Delaney presided at the radio and TV meeting . . . .

In his remarks Mr. Miller paid tribute to Herbert Cruickshank, who will retire this year as treasurer of the Gannett Co. Also at the speaker's table with Mr. Miller and Mr. Bitner was Frank Tripp, chairman of the board of the Gannett Co., Inc.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Miller called on Don U. Bridge, general manager of the Rochester Times-Union and the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, who said he had talked with the hospital today and was happy to report that Mr. Gannett, who was stricken ill in April, was showing improvement.

Dinner Meeting Planned

A dinner meeting of the conference delegates will be held in the hotel ballroom this evening . . . .

Besides the 20 New York State newspapers that are members of the group, three out-of-state newspapers are represented at the conference. They are the Hartford (Conn.) Times, the Plainfield (N.J.) Courier News and the Danville (Ill.) Commercial News.

Among the delegates arriving here yesterday were officials of Radio Station WHEC, Rochester; WENY, Elmira; WHDL, Olean, and WDAN, Danville, and Television Stations WHEC-TV, Rochester, and WDAN-TV, Danville . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

GANNETT GROUP CONVENES HERE – More than 100 executives of the 23 newspapers, four radio stations and two television stations that comprise the Gannett Group met at Hotel Niagara today for a business and editorial conference. Left to right, Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Co., Inc.; Kenneth K. Burke, vice president and general manager of the Niagara Falls Gazette, newest member of the group; Lynn R. Bitner, group general manager, and frank Tripp, chairman of the board of the Gannett Co. Inc.—Gazette Photo. Additional picture on page 15.

n. (B4/f2)

PHOTO:
Gannett Group Conference – Niagara Falls, N. Y.—Sept. 18-19-20, 1955

o. (B4/f2)

*****

The Gannetteer
OCTOBER * 1955

(1.) ‘Fairness and Independence’
Cited by Gov. Harriman
At Newburgh Dinner

(2.) In the text of his prepared speech at the opening of the Newburgh News plant last month, Paul Miller sketched policies which have made Gannett Newspapers great. Among these he listed . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Autonomy . . . Staff Benefits . . . Local Leadership

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice-President, Gannett Newspapers

(3.) A Big Day for the Newburgh News

(7) PHOTOS

(4.) (B4/f2)

The Gannetteer
OCTOBER * 1955

Blanchard Named To New Post; Jones Is Executive Editor

TWO members of the headquarters staff of the Gannett Group of Newspapers took over new duties last month.

L. R. BLANCHARD became editorial chairman, a new office. For 14 years he had been head of the News and Editorial Office, most recently with the title of general executive editor.

VINCENT S. JONES became executive editor for the Group. For five years he has been director of the News and Editorial Office.

Blanchard will concentrate on editorial pages in the organization, continuing also as editor of The Democrat and Chronicle. The 23 newspapers in the Group work together for improvement in content and style. The editorial chairman is charged with coordinating those efforts. He will have a rotating committee of Gannett editors working with him. Named as first members of the committee were WARD S. DUFFY, editor, Hartford Times; WILLIAM J. WOODS, editor, Utica Observer-Dispatch; and FREDERICK G. EATON, managing editor, Ogdensburg Journal.

As executive editor, Jones will continue to maintain liaison with the various newspapers, aiding them in all aspects of news and staff management. He is the current president of the Associated Press Managing Editor Association –filling an office held in 1951 by Blanchard.

Announcement of the changes was made by PAUL MILLER, executive vice president of the Gannett Group. He said:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"There are far-reaching possibilities in the special work which Blanchard is to undertake. There is not a better man anywhere to head up our study and improvement program than 'Fay' Blanchard. He is a great technician; he also runs a splendid editorial page. It is quite possible that after a year or so he will have assembled material of value and utility far beyond the Gannett Group."

Of Jones, Miller said: "Vin Jones has earned a nationwide reputation in his field and is in demand as a speaker before newspaper groups throughout the country on such topics as typography, news content, and illustration."

p. (B4/f2)

*****

The Newburgh News
October 18, 1955

Miller Likens Mastic
To Enterprise at Best

One hundred and fifty Newburgh industrial and business leaders turned out last night to pay tribute to the mastic Tile Corporation at an Industrial Development Recognition Banquet. The affair also marked the 10th anniversary of the firm's founding here . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

RECOGNITION – Speakers at Chamber of Commerce Recognition Dinner for Mastic Tile last evening were Chamber President James E. Seaman, Executive Vicepresident Paul Miller of The Gannett newspapers, President Seymour Milstein of Mastic Tile, and Edward T. Dickinson, State Commerce Commissioner. (Photo by Curran)

q. (B4/f2)

THE NEWBURGH-BEACON NEWS
"The Newspaper That Goes Home"

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT NEWBURGH, N. Y.

Mr. Paul Miller,
Executive Vicepresident,
The Gannett Newspapers,
Times Union Building
Rochester, New York

Dear Paul:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Hope you and Kenper had a pleasant visit and a safe trip home. You made a fine impression with your remarks at the dinner. Reaction excellent. Hope to see you again soon.

Tearsheets of Ed Curran's story and pictures enclosed.

Sincerely,
Doug (signed)
Douglas V. Clarke
Managing Editor

DVC/ec

A Gannett Newspaper

r. (B4/f2)
*****

Malone Evening Telegram
Malone, N. Y.
Monday, October 24, 1955

Newspaper Executive to Address Club

Paul Miller of Rochester, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Newspapers and a national figure in the newspaper field, will be the speaker at tomorrow's luncheon-meeting of the Malone Kiwanis Club at the Franklin Hotel.

Mr. Miller will fly here from Rochester tomorrow morning and will be introduced at the luncheon by Leon L. Turner, general manager of the Evening Telegram and a past president of the Kiwanis Club, who has charge of the program.

Guests invited to the event include officers and directors of the Rotary and Lions Clubs.

Mr. Miller has been a frequent visitor to the North Country where five Gannett newspapers are located: the Malone Telegram, Massena Observer, Ogdensburg Journal, Ogdensburg Advance-News and Potsdam Courier-Freeman.

*** * ***

Son of a small town minister and eldest of a family of six, Mr. Miller has been in newspaper work since he was 18 . . . .

s. (B4/f2)
*****

T-U Photographers Win 3 Awards in AP Contest

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Two Times-Union staff photographers, James F. Osborne and Curtis L. Barnes Jr., have won awards in the New York State 1955 Associated Press Newsphoto Contest . . . .

* * *

AWARD WINNERS from Gannett papers included Dante O. Tranquille, Utica Observer-Dispatch, third in spot news for smaller papers, and James P. Anderson, Utica Observer-Dispatch, second in sports for smaller papers.

The awards were announced yesterday as a preliminary to today's annual meeting of the State AP Assn. meeting at Syracuse. Principal speaker at a conference luncheon today was Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Co., who talked on "What a Publisher Expects from The Associated Press."

Miller urged the wire service to tell "the story of efforts that are being made by so many communities to push their growth through local improvements and to seek new business and industry."

"One of the best examples of this in New York State," Miller said, "is my own home city of Rochester, which is in the early stages of a great civic development program, including improved streets and traffic conditions, better local governmental facilities and closer cooperation between overlapping city and county governments, along with effort by the Chamber of Commerce to bring in still more industry . . . ."

* * *

MILLER ALSO SAID newspapers "should do even more behind-the-scenes political reporting" because New York State is "a real key state for both parties in the 1956 election."

He urged more interpretation of politics "not only because Gov. Harriman is a possible Democratic presidential nominee, but also because of the Republican situation."

AP's general manager, Frank Starzel, is scheduled to speak at a dinner tonight.

(3) PHOTOS

11. 1956

a. (B4/f3)

Democrat and Chronicle
March 28, 1956

Brown, Miller Testify In Channel 10 Hearing

WASHINGTON, March 27 (GNS) – Gordon P. Brown, owner of WSAY in Rochester testified today that he lost "out of pocket" approximately $200,000 on the operation of his radio station since 1947.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"For the last two or three years," Brown said, "I haven't even taken any salary out of WSAY for myself . . . This year, the WSAY operation was not profitable."

Brown testified as the first witness again today at a hearing before FCC Examiner Elizabeth C. Smith on a "protest case" which Brown has brought against the Federal Communications Commission over the Channel 10 television service in Rochester.

The second witness was Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Co., Inc., who appeared in response to a subpoena issued by Brown's lawyers. The Gannett Co. owns WHEC and WHEC-TV.

The FCC on March 11, 1953, awarded the Channel 10 license to WHEC and WVET, owned by the Veterans Broadcasting Co., to operate on a "share-time" basis. Brown is seeking to prove that the FCC grant was "contrary to the public interest."

Brown also contends that WVET and WHEC have improperly denied him the right to rebroadcast certain radio programs on his own station, which originally were broadcast over WVET and WHEC-AM radio stations.

He sought to introduce 1952 correspondence between himself and the two radio stations in which he says his requests were denied.

Brown was identified as the president, general manager, and sole stockholder of the Federal Broadcasting Corp., which owns WSAY. At one point, he was asked by his lawyer to "tell the history and experiences" of his radio station.

Started in 1935

Brown said in substance:

He first "hit the air" in Rochester with a 100-watt, daytime only, radio station in 1935. By 1938, he obtained FCC approval to increase his power to 250 watts. By 1943 he was up to 1,000 watts, and WSAY is now operating on 5,000 watts.

He had a network connection with the Mutual Broadcasting System in the early 1940s until Station WVET came into being. He lost that network connection to WVET in 1947, and "we have not been able to get affiliation since that time."

"We never tried CBS because it was affiliated with WHEC," Brown said. "I had talked to CBS, pointing out the superiority of our facilities and coverage, but was not able to get anywhere."

In the last year that he had a network connection, Brown said, he made "close to $100,000 from network programs. Since that time, he said, "revenue has decreased tremendously."

Brown agreed to make his financial statements for the years 1947 through 1952 available from FCC files for incorporation in the public record of the hearing.

Miller said he has been with the Gannett organization for 8 ½ years. Before that, he was with the Associated Press for 15 years, and was chief of the AP Washington Bureau for 5 ½ years.

He testified about business interests of the Gannett Co. Miller said that a majority of the voting stock is controlled by the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation Inc., which is run by a board of directors.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Strong Public Service

Miller said that Frank Gannett, president of the company, "has been ill since last April;" that Frank E. Tripp is chairman of the board of directors of the foundation; and that "I am operating head of the company."

Concerning the Gannett newspaper and radio-television operations, Miller said:

"Our whole philosophy is to keep it local. We're strong on public service, and everything has to do with the local communities that we serve, the same as with our radio and TV stations. Public service is number one."

Miller said The Gannett Group had been in formation for approximately 50 years. In Rochester, he said, the company publishes The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union.

These are the only two daily newspapers, he said, but other publications in the community include The Catholic Courier Journal, The Jewish Ledger, The Daily Record, a German language newspaper, the magazine WE, and until recently The Sun.

Miller said the Sun was a weekly newspaper "published by a young man named Curt Gurling, a fine young man, but he closed it down." Miller also pointed out that there are six radio stations in Rochester, and two television stations. "We have one-fourth of the TV service in the community," he said.

William A. Roberts, Brown's lawyer, asked a number of questions about the advertising and editorial content of The Gannett Newspaper[s], their news and feature services, and "who determines political policy on your newspapers?"

Question Overruled

This question was overruled by FCC examiner Smith as not being pertinent to the case. "Just because this is a political year," she said, "Let's not turn this case into a political forum."

"Are any types of advertising prohibited?" asked Roberts.

"Yes, sir," Miller replied. "We do not accept any liquor advertising." He went on to say that "beer, wine, and any other alcoholic beverages" are also excluded.

"But their sale is legal and customary in Rochester?"

"Yes," Miller replied.

Miller said the two Rochester newspapers use the news and feature services of AP, UP, INS, Chicago Daily News, NEA, and King Features. "The number of services is a matter of local determination," he observed.

Roberts asked how "policy" was determined on The Gannett Newspapers.

"That is worked out in general discussion," said Miller. Editorial policy is left up to the editors of the two Rochester papers, just as it is throughout the group. The local editor is the boy."

The executive editor of The Gannett Group, Miller said, "is a man of good general newspaper experience, who advises with the other editors on newspaper problems, but not on policy."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The advertising director of the group, he said, “has somewhat the same responsibility. He serves in an advisory capacity.” Miller said the group has no “fixed rules,” but that its executives meet in a group conference “either once or twice a year.”

Miller also testified that there are separate national advertising agencies handling accounts for the newspapers, and for the radio-television stations. “We fix rates for radio and TV wholly apart from the newspapers,” he said.

‘Fair Rate’ Policy

“Are your rates based on fixed policies?” Roberts asked.

“The rates should be fair,” Miller said. “That’s the top policy.” He offered to furnish advertising rate cards, and make an advertising man available for further testimony if desired.

Roberts asked about Gannett Co. operations in the Radio-TV field in Albany and Elmira. He stated for the record:

“I can show it has been the practice of Gannett to apply for TV and radio licenses, even to build a station and then abandon it, for the purpose of concentrating media in its own hand.”

Roberts also called attention to an agreement between Stations WVET and WHEC not to sell to any outsiders, should either party wish to abandon its half of the “share-time” TV operation in Rochester, but to make a first refusal offer to the other partner.

Hearings are scheduled to continue tomorrow, when Brown’s lawyers have other witnesses waiting to appear, who have not yet been identified.

Brown was the first witness to be heard as hearings in his “protest case” were opened by the FCC Monday. After pointing out that Rochester’s two daily newspapers are owned by the Gannett interests, he argued there is a monopoly of the media of communication here. Brown added that the situation has existed in Rochester since The Gannett Group took over the former Journal-American from the Hearst interests on June 30, 1937.

Copies of the last issue of the Journal-American published on that date and others from editions of The Democrat and Chronicle and Times-Union issued on July 2, 1937, were introduced in support of Brown’s claim.

Charges Collusion

Roberts, Brown’s counsel, said, “We will undertake to show that in collusion with Hearst, The Gannett Newspapers and Hearst newspapers acquired a monopoly in Rochester and Albany by mutually suppressing one [another’s ?] newspapers.”

In the course of giving testimony, Brown voiced objection to the way in which program listings for WSAY were carried by the newspapers. He cited an instance in which, according to his claim, the listings specified that a Bing Crosby program was recorded rather than “live.”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Brown's second witness was John G. Corey, editor and publisher of the local news magazine, We. Corey, who was asked to "describe the manner of operation of The Gannett Newspapers as of 1935," was identified as a "newspaperman who has lived for 35 years in Rochester."

Corey said:

"I wrote a profile on Gannett in 1945. I took exception to remarks of the editor of The Democrat and Chronicle that each Gannett newspaper stood on its own feet. The profile was complimentary to Gannett – very complimentary. But the truth is, all the editors took their orders from the editorial chief, who at that time was Fay Blanchard." (Corey's reference was to L. R. Blanchard who since 1950 has been editor of The Democrat and Chronicle and who was general executive editor of The Gannett Newspapers.)

'Common Gossip'

When asked to account for his professed knowledge of Gannett editorial policy workings – in view of the fact that he had never worked under Gannett management and had acknowledged he did not associate with Gannett Co. officials – Corey replied: "Common gossip in Rochester."

He added it was gossip among Gannett newspaper reporters he had met "on various stories and in various bars."

In reply to a question regarding the "active political interest" of the newspapers, Corey said, "They give coverage to both parties."

Corey asserted that the Rochester newspapers in certain instances had "not disclosed news." He cited, as unreported by the dailies, two deaths at Rochester State Hospital for Mentally Defective Children at Newark, and the methods used by a furnace company to sell furnaces to Brighton area residents following the 1951 gas explosions disaster in that town. Corey claimed that each of the stories had been "exposed" by his publication.

b. (B4/f3)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
May 8, 1956

7 Gannett Workers
Join 25-Year Club

Seven new members were admitted last night to the Rochester Gannett Newspapers 25-year-Club and 31 other employes [sic] received pins for extended service . . . .

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers; Don U. Bridge, general manager of the two Rochester newspapers, and Mrs. Frank Gannett spoke briefly . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

c. (B4/f3)
*****

Times-Union
May 8, 1956

Pressman
Honored for 50 Years' Work

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Griesser were guests of honor last night at the annual dinner of the Rochester Gannett Newspapers 25-Year Club in the Powers. Griesser, Times-Union pressman, has completed 50 years of service. He received a gold watch . . . .

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett newspapers; Frank E. Tripp, chairman of the Gannett Co. board; Don U. Bridge, general manager of the two Rochester newspapers, and Mrs. Frank Gannett spoke.

Mrs. Gannett brought greetings from her husband, president of The Gannett Newspapers, who has been confined at home as a result of a spinal injury suffered Apr. 15 last year. She said that like everyone else she has been eagerly awaiting good weather, which will permit Mr. Gannett to get outdoors to enjoy the sunshine . . . .

d. (B4/f15)

Hartford Times
October 1, 1956

PHOTO
Caption:

ARRIVING for Gannett Newspapers conference here by company plane, top executives are greeted at airport by Publisher David R. Daniel of The Times, member of the group. From left, Executive Vicepresident Paul Miller, Board Chairman Frank E. Tripp, Executive Editor Vincent S. Jones, General Manager Lynn N. Bitner, Mr. Daniel, Editorial Chairman L. R. Blanchard, Comptroller Cyril Williams and Personnel Director Kohn E. Heselden. Two-day session is at Statler.

e. (B4/f15)
*****

Hartford Times
October 2, 1956

News Executive Raps Force at Suez

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Suez Canal crisis is an example of the futility of using the diplomacy of 1850 in the world of 1956, newspaper executives from four states were told last night at Hotel Statler.

Paul Miller of Rochester, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, told executives of that organization gathered in Hartford for a two-day conference, that his first-hand observations of the situation in Egypt convinced him that the present traffic going through the Suez Canal "is a refutation of any idea the Egyptians couldn't run the canal" . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

GOVERNOR RIBICOFF visits with Gannett Company executives at Statler during dinner session of group editorial and advertising personnel. From left, Board Chairman Frank E. Tripp, Governor, Executive Vicepresident Paul Miller and Publisher David R. Daniel of The Times, member of the Gannett Group and host for two-day conference. – [Times].

f. (B4/f15)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
October 2, 1956

Diplomacy of 1850 Called Futile at Suez

Paul Miller Tells Editors Of Cairo Observations

Special to The Times-Union

HARTFORD – The Suez Canal crisis is an example of the futility of using the diplomacy of 1850 in the world of 1956, [Gannett Co., Inc.] newspaper executives from four states were told last night . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

U.S. NAVY SAILS THROUGH SUEZ – Making passage through the Suez Canal as part of a convoy is the Navy destroyer Compton (left). Newly-recruited pilots from the United States reportedly led the convoy. In the foreground is seen the Egyptian flag. (UP Facsimile)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

g. (B4/f15)
*****

The Hartford Courant
October 2, 1956

Gannett Man Talks Here
On Suez Canal Crisis

The biggest news on the Suez crisis is that Egypt is successfully operating the canal.

That was the report 150 newspapermen got Monday night from Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett group of papers.

Suez Important to U.S.

Miller, who flew home last weekend from a fact-finding trip to Egypt, spoke at the Hotel Statler. Top executives from 23 papers in the Gannett group are meeting here as guests of the Hartford Times . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

TALK ON SUEZ CRISIS: Paul Miller, center, executive vice-president of the Gannett group of newspapers, addressed local newspaper executives on the Suez Canal crisis at the Statler Hotel Monday. Miller talked with England's Prime Minister Anthony Eden recently on his visit to Europe. Eden and Miller are friends of long standing. John R. Reitemeyer, left, publisher and president of The Courant, and David R. Daniel, right, secretary and publisher of the Hartford Times, are shown with Miller (Courant Photo by Acquaviva).

h. (B4/f15)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
October 3, 1956

Suez Solution Lies In Talks, Editors Told

HARTFORD, Conn., Oct. 2 – The negotiation table , not military threats , is the most practical means to settle international disputes today and developments in the Suez Canal crisis are a case in point, Paul Miller, Rochester newspaper executive, last night told his colleagues from four states . . . .

i. (B4/f15)

Times-Union
October 4, 1956

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

EYE ON THE NEWS – Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, will report on his recent trip to the scene of the Suez Canal dispute on Eye on the News on Channel 10 at 7:15 p.m. today. Mayor Peter Barry also will be a guest on the program with a special message on voter registration.

j. (B4/f15)
*

Democrat and Chronicle
October 5, 1956

Suez Cited as Showing End to Power Politics

The day of power politics as the solution to international tensions has disappeared, Paul Miller said last night.

The executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers in a television report described his recent trip to the Suez Canal area, scene of the present international dispute over Egyptian seizure of the waterway . . . .

k. (B4/f15)
*

Editor & Publisher
for
October 6, 1956

Miller Views Local Impact Of Suez Story

By Allen M. Widem

HARTFORD, Conn.

Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Newspapers, gave group executives from four states a first-hand report on the Suez Canal crisis at a banquet here Oct. 1 . . . .

l. (B4/f15)
*

Ogdensburg Journal

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

October 7, 1956

(1.)

Egypt Can Run Suez Canal Miller Finds On Trip To Waterway

Hartford, Conn. – (GNS) – The Suez Canal crisis is an example of the futility of using the diplomacy of 1850 in the world of 1956, newspaper executives from four states were told Monday night at Hotel Statler.

Paul Miller of Rochester, executive vicepresident of the Gannett newspapers, told executives of that organization, gathered in Hartford for a two-day conference, that his first-hand observations of the situation in Egypt convinced him that the present traffic going through the Suez Canal "is a refutation of any idea the Egyptians couldn't run the canal" . . . .

(2.) Paul Miller, in his talk to the Gannett editors at Hartford, Conn., reported in today's paper, must have opened the eyes of a lot of people when he said that a personal visit to the Suez Canal showed that the Egyptians were capable of running the ditch. Heretofore the propaganda has followed an opposite line. Miller is a keen observer and is in the habit of reporting things as he sees them, not using another's eyes. The press and politics, domestic and world, need more of his kind.

PHOTO:
Paul Miller

m. (B4/f15)

Niagara Falls Gazette
October 8, 1956

Suez Crisis Explained

What do you know about the Suez Canal crisis? Enough to support a logical opinion as to what should be done to solve the problem?

Do you think Nasser is right or wrong? Do you think the United States has acted wisely or unwisely in the crisis to date? What about the actions of France and Britain? Or the United Nations? What is Russia's part in the diplomatic maneuvering in the Near East?

These questions have more than mere curiosity behind them. Public opinion on the Suez crisis is important in producing a settlement, possibly in avoiding war.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Group of Newspapers, made a personal trip from Rochester to London and Cairo to find out first hand the answers to these and other questions. He will report what he learned for the benefit of Niagara Falls Gazette readers in a series of five daily articles, beginning today. We think they are worth careful reading.

12. 1957

a. (B4/f23)

*****

[Reprinted from The Gannetteer of January 1957]

FOR NEWSPAPER LETTER WRITERS:

A 'Dear Sir' Dinner

 How Rochester editors gave recognition to contributors

At a 'Dear Sir' Dinner: Newspapers Honor Letter Writers

ROCHESTER'S newspapers tried something new after November's elections.

They drew up a list of the 100 best letters to the editor written during the fall political campaign. And they invited the writers to a free dinner at the city's Hotel Sheraton.

Sam Lubell, the pollster whose pre-election analyses of voting trends had been published in the morning Democrat and Chronicle, was principal speaker . . . .

Letter writers at the "Dear Sir" dinner represented a cross-section of Rochester population and opinion. A university head, two college presidents, many professors, lawyers, ministers, retired civic leaders, housewives, and students – all entered the banquet room to find their places marked by convention-badges as place-cards . . . .

As editor of the Rochester Times Union and executive vice president of THE GROUP, PAUL MILLER set the tone of the meeting with these welcoming remarks:

"The writers may not all realize it, but letters to the editor have a very high readership in both The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union.

"I believe one reason for this is that readers have learned that most letters printed are worth reading. It has long been our policy to encourage good letters in every legitimate way we know, and to print all we possibly can. Since The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle are the only daily newspapers in general circulation in the Rochester area, we believe we have a greater responsibility than might otherwise be the case to stimulate the freest possible public discussion of public matters and provide the forum in our papers.

"We express the newspapers' opinions on the editorial pages, and occasionally in editorials – clearly marked as such – on Page One. At the same time, we invite for publication expressions of contrary views in general and specifically. The Times-Union, for example, printed several pro-Stevenson editorials from other newspapers while itself editorially supporting President Eisenhower and Mr. Nixon. The Democrat and Chronicle, also supporting Ike, solicited letters on the other side.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"We apply this same policy to all matters of general public interest. We shall continue to do so.

"The only requirements are that letters be of reasonable length – sometimes we waive even that rule, as in the case of President deKiewiet's recent exposition on faculty pen pushers; and we may return letters that are possibly libelous or in too bad taste. In short, we believe in the care and cultivation of comment, on whatever side of any issue, for two main reasons:

"1. READERS are interested in the opinions of others so that letters to the editor have high content value in our newspapers. Letters make newspapers even more interesting.

"2. WE FEEL and accept a definite responsibility to get the widest possible expression of views into our pages, on any subject of vital interest.

"During the last campaign Rochester letter writers went at it with usual vigor, unusual determination and in unusual numbers. I believe they made a definite contribution to public understanding. I know that they helped keep campaign interest at a high pitch. (They kept my interest at such a high pitch that I wrote a letter myself!) They thus played a real part in getting out the big vote.

The Times-Union and Democrat and Chronicle appreciate all of this. That is why we honor tonight the writers of what the editors regard as the 100 outstanding campaign letters. This is our way of showing that appreciation, and of registering anew our interest in readers' views.

"Have a good time.

"Now it is my privilege to turn this meeting over to Mr. L. R. BLANCHARD – known to most of you as Fay. He is editor of The Democrat and Chronicle and also editorial chairman of The Gannett Newspapers; also a Director of Gannett Co., Inc. He is one of the country's truly great editors.

"You know, of course, that he is going to abandon all of this – and all of us – around Jan. 1, 1957. He is going to retire and move to California. While we still have him around we want to see and hear all we can from him. So – it's your meeting, Fay, from here on" . . . .

Also heard were VINCENT S. JONES, Gannett Newspapers executive editor, and DON U. BRIDGE, general manager of The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle . . . .

Bridge noted that the Gannett policy of autonomy in local newspapers a few years ago created a situation where some of the newspapers which FRANK GANNETT owned supported a candidate he opposed.

"What did he do? He wrote a letter to the editor diametrically opposed to the editorial statements of the newspapers he owned . . . ."

Commented Executive Editor Jones in a weekly message to Group executives:

"The stunt is recommended to all newspapers with a substantial number of letter writers. All sorts of interesting variations have suggested themselves for future gatherings, at which the direct participation of the guests in the program would be a prime objective."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

GANNETT
NEWSPAPERS

SO MANY newspapers have requested details on the "Dear Sir" Dinner for campaign letter writers at Rochester that we have reprinted the attached from the company publication of The Gannett Newspapers and are mailing it to members of the American Society of Newspaper Editors. If any additional information is desired, address . . .

News and Editorial Office
The Gannett Newspapers
Times-Union Building
Rochester 14, New York

b. (B4/f25)
*****

The Gannetteer
March 1957

For Meeting Ever Tougher Competition Five Fundamentals for Newspapers

By PAUL MILLER

Condensed from Address at a Duke University Dinner for North Carolina Press Association at Durham, N.C., Jan. 25.

I'VE NEVER LIVED in North Carolina, but my work has taken me from coast to coast and back again. And I know this:

Whether life sets us down on an oil town newspaper in Oklahoma, moves us around the country with The AP, with the Frank Gannett organization in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Illinois – or wherever – so long as it's newspapering, it's a great life . . . .

The Gannett Group embraces almost every size paper anybody ever worked on – 23 newspapers, including a weekly and a semi-weekly. Some of the finest men in the business are getting out those widely differing newspapers. I suspect that all would agree – as you will – that the basic job is the same no matter how large the newspaper or how small: . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The cost of everything that goes into a newspaper is on the rise, and no patent medicine-type relief in sight . . . . Any revolution that will radically cut publishing costs has been a long time coming – and it may be a lot longer, try as we will to hurry it along. This may not be popular, but I fear it's true. In the meantime, and in the foreseeable future, the fundamentals remain pretty much the same. I will list and discuss five that seem particularly important to me.

1. WE MUST PUBLISH useful NEWSPAPERS.
2. WE MUST KEEP OURSELVES, AS MANAGEMENT, CLOSE TO READERS and advertisers – and to employes [sic] and associates as well, for mutual strength and mutual profit.
3. WE MUST NEVER FORGET for a minute that with all our urgent need for better, more efficient, less costly machines and methods – people still come first.
4. WE MUST MAKE OUR NEWSPAPERS STAND FOR SOMETHING.
5. WE MUST KEEP OUR NEWSPAPERS LOCAL, but not isolated.

SURELY, no work comes nearer having everything to offer than ours – smiles as well as tears, brickbats as well as roses, setbacks as well as matchless opportunities for community leadership, service and achievement.

Yet, every now and then, I run into somebody who, if already in newspaper work, doesn't appreciate just what he's got – or who, if a youngster, wonders whether "the future" would hold sufficient promise for him on a newspaper.

I don't understand the newspaperman who doesn't fully appreciate being one. I figure he's either out of pocket in the first place or has never labored at or closely observed any other pursuit; hence just doesn't have reason to know how well off he is.

I usually find that the young fellow who doubts whether there's a "future" in newspapering hasn't found out what he could easily find out by a little study of newspapers – or should be told, but all too often isn't, by one of us so-called newspapermen.

The opportunities are greater today than ever for young people, even with the numerical contraction of dailies which has gone on a long time and will continue. Any young fellow who wants to get along and who has the stuff, can get along on a newspaper if he'll hustle. By get along, I mean make good progress. Newspaper bosses are suckers for a young fellow who is qualified, who is interested in going places and who – most of all – shows it by hustling. How they love the fellow who gives his assignment a little more than he has to. How they pity the one who just puts in his time. Pity is right. He's missing half the fun of our great business and he'll be a long time attracting the favorable eye of any one looking for somebody to promote.

c. (B4/f25)

*****

The Quill
for
March, 1957
1226

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rochester Papers Find Formula for Hard Hitting Letters to the Editor

Freeswinging bipartisan policy wins approval during recent national campaign from both parties and helps get the voters to the polls.

By JOSEPH N. FREUDENBERGER

LETTERS to the editor – are they important to a daily newspaper? Is their importance increased when a field is served by only one paper? How can a newspaper attract voices of authority to its letter column?

Most dailies confront a letter problem such as that faced by the Rochester (N.Y.) Times-Union when Paul Miller became its editor in 1947. Cranks, crackpots and axe-grinders had enjoyed too free a hand. Many professional men were reluctant to submit letters. Some Democrats scoffed: "What can you expect from the one-party Republican press?" More restrained members of the Democratic organization didn't write letters.

To this problem, Editor Miller offered only this general solution:

"Readers are interested in the opinions of others so letters to the editor make newspapers more interesting . . . .

"We express the newspapers' opinions on the editorial pages. At the same time, we invite for publication expressions of contrary views.

"The Times-Union, for example, printed several pro-Stevenson editorials from other newspapers while itself editorially supporting President Eisenhower and Mr. Nixon."

LETTER writers applauded. Representing a cross-section of Rochester population and opinion, they came from fields of education, religion, law, industry and the home. In age they ranged from a young college student and an equally young housewife to a retired minister, a retired school superintendent and a professional writer.

Miller's idea of a post-election good will dinner (with pollster Sam Lubell as speaker) captured the imaginations of newspaper executives, politicians and students of government.

New York's Governor Averell Harriman, in a telegram read at the dinner, said:

"This is a unique event and I am sure that it will have a worth-while effect in stimulating even more widespread expression by your readers of their views on public issues.

"As a frequent reader of the 'Letters to the Editor' columns of our newspapers, I appreciate what a valuable open forum they provide for such discussions of important issues by the public. I commend your newspapers for an original idea and I join you in congratulating your guests of honor on their active participation as citizens in the discussion of public affairs."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Wrote Paul Butler, chairman of the Democratic National Committee:

"My warmest congratulations to the Gannett Newspapers and to the 'best letter' writers for the distinctive contribution which they have made to broader discussion of the issues before us these critical days. You have set an excellent example in effectively serving the major purpose of American elections – which is to make our people active participants in our political processes, rather than mere sideline observers or spectators."

WROTE Leonard W. Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee:

"This is an outstanding example of public service by the Gannett Newspapers. Your campaign has helped citizens develop and express their political views, enabling them to go to the polls and intelligently vote for the candidates of their choice."

But the "Dear Sir" dinner was more than a get-out-the-vote promotion (though Editor Miller believes in those, too). It was a get-together and get-acquainted meeting for opinion makers from many strata of Rochester society . . . .

d. (B4/f26)

*****

Elmira Star-Gazette
April 12, 1957

Miller Named Gannett Co. President; Tripp Continues as Board Chairman

Paul Miller yesterday became president of the Gannett Co., Inc., succeeding Frank Gannett, the company's founder, who became president emeritus.

Frank E. Tripp of Elmira, associated with Mr. Gannett since the Elmira Star and Elmira Gazette were merged to become the first unit in what was to become one of America's largest newspaper enterprises, continues as chairman of the board. He also becomes president of all subsidiary companies.

Mr. Gannett, who purchased the Elmira Gazette in 1906, continued actively as president of the company until two years ago when he became ill. The company whose presidency he turned over yesterday to Mr. Miller operates 23 newspapers, five radio stations and three television stations in four states . . . .

In assuming the presidency, Mr. Miller pledged a continuation of the policy of local autonomy under which Mr. Gannett always has delegated authority – and responsibility – to the management of each newspaper. Under this system, editorial policies are determined locally by men who live in and know their communities, unlike a chain operation in which methods and practices are dictated from a central office . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

e. (B7/f3)

Rochester Times-Union
April 13, 1957

Good Newspaper --A Good Neighbor

Frank Gannett, founder of the Gannett Group, stepped aside to become President Emeritus on April 11. This article by Paul Miller, the new president of The Gannett Company, offers a review of operating policies and practices of The Times-Union and other newspapers of the Group.

By PAUL MILLER

A good newspaper is not built overnight. It develops over many years, just as a person's character develops. In time its readers come to know it for what it is. If it is truly successful, the newspaper is a good neighbor, a good citizen, a trusted confidant . . . like a good man or a good woman. It will be doomed to failure, ultimately, if it is not trustworthy, fair and clean. This is especially true of cities of homes.

That general thinking has been behind the growth and development of newspapers in the Gannett Group, founded on a small beginning by Frank Gannett.

Affiliated with the Gannett Group now are 23 newspapers, three television stations and five radio stations. These properties mainly are in New York State. There is one newspaper in New jersey, one in Connecticut and a newspaper, radio and TV station in Danville, Illinois.

* * *

AS ONE NEWSPAPER AFTER ANOTHER was added in the early years, starting with Ithaca and Elmira, Mr. Gannett and his close associates – Frank Tripp and E. R. Davenport – concluded that it would be morally wrong as well as imprudent businesswise to try to remold all of them to a general standard, dictated from afar.

Instead, local management was encouraged to maintain and develop the personality of each newspaper – and also of the individuals in local management, themselves. They called it local autonomy.

The principle of local autonomy is nursed along more carefully and stressed more emphatically in The Gannett Group than in any other organization I know. That's why it's called a group, not a chain. A chain is characterized by a dictated policy. There is usually a uniformity of practice, appearance and style. The opposite is true of The Gannett Group.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

PEOPLE WHO KNOW of Frank Gannett's strong convictions sometimes ask how he could stand for editorial autonomy in his newspapers – with some vigorously expounding a point of view counter to that of the head of the house.

That reminds me of an incident in the New York State gubernatorial campaign of 1950.

Mr. Gannett, a Republican, decided he personally could not support either Republican Dewey or Democrat Lynch. He said so publicly.

One day the Associated Press carried an article reporting which candidate each of the New York State Gannett newspapers was supporting editorially in the campaign. It turned out that 16 were supporting Dewey.

The Times-Union printed the article. So did other newspapers in the group. Some pointed out editorially that it proved that we do adhere to the autonomy principle enunciated by Mr. Gannett himself.

I showed The Times-Union to Mr. Gannett.

He looked at it long and thoughtfully. Then he said:

"You know, Paul, sometimes I don't know about this autonomy!"

That was all he ever said about it, to my knowledge.

YES, IT IS ASSUMED that Gannett newspapers will be clean and community-minded and patriotic and fair. From there on, the local management is on its own as to specific editorial problems and issues.

Briefly, and as general policy, we believe in the lowest feasible advertising and circulation rates. We'd rather get more advertising at a low rate than carry less advertising at a high rate – even if net income were equal. Why? It's better business for us and for our communities. Low rates mean that more advertisers, including little fellows, can use the newspapers regularly, profitably and with adequate space. The overall picture, present and future, is better for newspapers which adhere to this principle, and for the communities they serve.

The same for circulation. Gannett newspapers have ever been among the last in the nation to up circulation rates.

The Gannett management believes, in short, that the newspaper – to keep its place and to give maximum service with reasonable profit – must remain an effective mass medium.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

We are interested most of all in home delivered circulation within productive training areas. Why? Because that's where it does the most good for us and for advertisers.

Our newspapers are produced for family reading in the home by young and old. No advertising is accepted that it is believed might be harmful. Liquor advertising is excluded. A close editorial eye is kept trained on the comics. Standards of decency are insisted on in advertising and news copy.

* * *

THE MAJORITY OF THE COMMON STOCK of Gannett Co., Inc., now is owned by the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation, Inc.

The Foundation was established by Mr. Gannett in 1935. It has received the stock through periodic gifts by him since.

His goal was (1) provide maximum possible security for employes [sic], (2) keep the newspapers independent of any outside influence and (3) provide means for the organization to contribute to worthy institutions in the communities where our newspapers are published.

This Foundation now – as Frank Gannett planned – is majority owner of the newspapers, television stations and radio stations of the Gannett Group.

(3) PHOTOS:

PAUL MILLER
FRANK E. GANNETT
FRANK E. TRIPP

e. (B4/f26)

THE KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
Member of The Gannett Group

ALBANY, NY., APRIL 13, 1957

Gannett Plans Well His Papers' Future

Frank Gannett has the knack of selecting good men and letting them do their job.

He is doing that once again – and for perhaps the last time as he becomes president emeritus of The Gannett Newspapers.

It must, in a sense, be an easy decision for him. Mr. Gannett has himself been ill and Paul Miller, the man who now becomes president, in name, has been carrying on those duties, in fact, these many months.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Miller, a skillful writer, editor and executive, has already won the confidence of the entire Gannett organization. His appointment and Mr. Gannett's earlier decision to establish a foundation under which the Gannett newspapers will continue as a group are indeed reassuring.

Mr. Gannett had the genius to build up the country's most numerous group of newspapers and yet at the same time preserve in each community where they are published their "home-town" flavor and traditions.

The temptation must have been strong for him to use his power over the printed and spoken word in a wide area to pound home his ideas. He is indeed a man of strong beliefs. His real greatness has been his refusal to let his newspapers become mere organs of his own personal convictions. He has insisted everywhere that his editors make their own policies and decisions in terms of what they consider the paper's tradition and the interest of the local community.

The reward for this wisdom must come to him now as, his own hands faltering from illness, he sees an alert, imaginative organization, which is of his creation and is yet not dependent on his ability to take an active role in its management.

f. (B4/f26)

*****

Niagara Falls Gazette
April 15, 1957

He'll Speak Here:

New Gannett Co. Head Is A Famous Newsman

Paul Miller, president of the Gannett Co., Inc., will be the speaker at the annual dinner meeting of the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce at Hotel Niagara on April 30. The following profile, prepared by the Gannett News Service in Washington, D. C., should be of special interest here . . . .

g. (B4/f25)

Beacon (N.Y.) News
April 19, 1957

Gannett Scholarships Awarded

The Frank Gannett Newspaperboys Scholarships for 1957 have been awarded to two Newburgh students. Stanley Hall Clinton Jr. and Francis Michael Volkringer. The scholarships are awarded each year in each of the communities where Gannett Company newspapers are located. Unfortunately, there were no qualified applicants for the scholarships in Beacon and vicinity this year.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The last Beacon youth to win the scholarship was Victor Pecore, who received the award in 1955 and is now attending RPI.

The Beacon News is proud to be a part of a forward looking organization such as the Gannett Company which views these scholarships as part of its effort toward community involvement. The Gannett Company views the training of young men as necessary to help maintain our American way of life.

The value of business experience received by being a newspaper carrier boy has long been recognized. The Gannett Scholarships are an added incentive to those youths with the ambition to maintain a newspaper delivery route and the ambition to obtain good grades.

Announcement of the scholarship awards follows close on another announcement which guarantees the continued forward-looking program of the Gannett Newspapers. That was the election of Paul Miller as president of Gannett Newspapers. Mr. Miller made a marked impression upon his audience when he spoke at a Chamber of Commerce dinner in Beacon last year.

h. (B4/f25)

*****

Niagara Falls Gazette
May 1, 1957

Gannett President Sees Lasting Tensions in World Lauds Cultural Interchange in Address to Chamber

International tension is here to stay.

That's the estimate of a newspaperman who has covered the Washington beat, sat in on the birth of the United Nations and only recently returned from Suez.

Paul Miller, president of the Gannett Co., Inc. and a reporter for 32 years, told an overflow audience in the Hotel Niagara ballroom last night that "we'll have to live with the turmoil in the Arab world and with an aggressive and threatening Soviet, for all our lives and then some."

Mr. Miller spoke at the 39th annual dinner of the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce.

Must Put Out Fires

He forecast an interminable period in which the United States will have to deal with "single aggressions, single threats, single denunciations and single breaches of solemn agreements." It will be the U.S. government's lot "to struggle to put out now a fire here and now one there," he declared.

Ranging informally over the problems of the world, Mr. Miller found U.S. policy effective in keeping a troubled peace.

Lauds Dulles

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He described Secretary of State John Foster Dulles as an able diplomat who has been ruining his health in his devotion to the job.

"In my opinion," Mr. Miller said, Mr. Dulles is inferior to none" of the long line of men who have held this backbreaking job.

He went back through the Roosevelt and Truman administrations to compare Mr. Dulles with his predecessors. Secretary Cordell Hull, he said, lost control of the department before he left it. Edward Stettinius rarely saw copies of the messages exchanged by President Roosevelt with foreign heads of state, he continued. James F. Byrnes didn't have enough time in the job to get acclimated, and Gen. George Marshall took the job only as a favor to President Truman.

Dean Acheson, he added, was "brilliant but not effective."

In contrast to these earlier secretaries, Mr. Dulles is operating almost on his own in the field of foreign policy, Mr. Miller declared.

While President Eisenhower gives Mr. Dulles a free hand to the extent that the secretary is often left alone to defend appointments and policies, Presidents Roosevelt and Truman attempted to be their own secretaries of state, Mr. Miller observed.

Visited Suez

The speaker recounted his experiences in Egypt last September where he went to make an on-the-spot survey of the Suez Canal situation. There was no hint of the British, French, Israeli invasion to follow, he said.

He found that the Egyptians felt they could operate the canal without difficulty, while the canal users were forecasting that the 103-mile waterway would soon be a "mess of littered hulks" because of the ineptitude of Egyptian pilots and personnel.

"I'm still wondering what the answer is to a question the canal users were asking then," he said. The question? Where is the Egyptian Canal Authority going to get the pilots to take the big tankers through from Port Said to Suez?

World Travel Urged

Mr. Miller said that in a shrinking world, it is more important than ever for reporters, and anyone else who wants to understand what is going on, to get out and see for themselves.

"Nothing of significance can happen anywhere in the world that doesn't affect us," he declared. As an example, he cited higher gas prices and higher defense budgets in the U. S. as a result of the Suez tieup [sic].

Interchange of students and other such contacts between nations were praised by the Gannett executive.

"The Fulbright fellowships have done good beyond measure," he said. "We ought to applaud any effort in this direction, including the latest one, by the Ford Foundation, for an exchange of students with Poland."

Even a Chamber of Commerce can benefit by getting out and finding out what people think of it, Mr. Miller said. He described a survey conducted by the Rochester chamber to inform itself as to public and group attitudes toward the chamber. Afterward, he said, a number of programs were undertaken to gain better public understanding and appreciation of the chamber's work.

Mr. Miller was introduced by Chamber President Clarence R. Runals . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PHOTO
Caption:

GANNETT CO. HEAD WELCOMED HERE – Chamber of Commerce officials last night welcomed Paul Miller, second from right, president of the Gannett Co., Inc. who was in Niagara Falls to address the chamber's 39th annual dinner. Gathered around the chief executive of the company which owns the Niagara Falls Gazette are, from left, Charles A. Clancy, retiring chamber director; Clarence R. Runals, chamber president; Mayor Calvin L. Keller; Joseph Green, also a director, and William A. Boles, dinner chairman. – Gazette Photo.

i. (B4/f26)

*****

The Gannetteer
June 1957

(1.) Paul Miller: New President of Gannett Co.
And of the Gannett Foundation

PAUL MILLER on April 11 was elected president of the Gannett Co., Inc. He succeeded FRANK GANNETT, its founder, who has become president emeritus.

Miller also was elected president of the Gannett Foundation and of WHEC Inc., Rochester radio-television subsidiary of the Gannett Co.

Frank Gannett actively directed the Gannett Co. until two years ago when he was injured in a fall and later suffered other complications which have kept him confined to his Rochester home.

Frank E. Tripp of Elmira, Gannett's long time [sic] associate, who for many years was general manager of the company, continues as chairman of its board. He has also been elected president of all the other subsidiary companies in the organization, consisting chiefly of the operating companies of the various newspapers.

Succeeding Miller as vice president of the Gannett Foundation is Mrs. Frank Gannett. Her husband established the foundation in 1935 to guarantee the continuation of his newspaper organization. The foundation holds 67 per cent of the operating company's outstanding common stock.

The bulk of the net income of the foundation is distributed for public, charitable, educational and general philanthropic uses and purposes in those areas where Gannett newspapers circulate generally.

ONE OF the most widely known leaders in the newspaper industry, Tripp since 1922 has been publisher of the newspapers in his home town, Elmira. He was general manager of the Gannett Group from 1925 to 1951.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

For his work in heading up all newspaper promotions for all seven bond drives in World War II he received the U.S. Treasury's Distinguished Service Citation.

Tripp was chairman of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. from 1940 to 1944. His weekly column for years appeared in more than 130 newspapers.

(2.) The Group's New President:

A Versatile Newsman . . . Executive . . . Civic Leader . . . Global Traveler

IN ASSUMING the presidency of Gannett Co. Inc., PAUL MILLER pledged a continuation of the unique policy of local autonomy under which FRANK GANNETT always has delegated authority and responsibility to the management of each newspaper in the Group.

Under this system, editorial policies are determined locally by the men who live in and know their communities. This is unlike a chain operation, in which methods and practices are dictated from a central office.

Miller joined the Group as executive assistant to Gannett on Aug. 1, 1947. He was elected a director and a vice president of the company in 1949. At the request of Gannett, he took over many of the duties which the founder had performed for many years.

In 1951 he was elected executive vice president. Since May 1955, he has been operating head of the company. He is also publisher and editor of the Rochester Times-Union and publisher of The Democrat and Chronicle.

His basic philosophy of newspapering was sketched in a bylined article on The Times-Union editorial page two days after his elevation to the presidency:

"A good newspaper is not built overnight. It develops over many years, just as a person's character develops. In time its readers come to know it for what it is. If it is truly successful, the newspaper is a good neighbor, a good citizen, a trusted confidant . . . like a good man or a good woman. It will be doomed to failure, ultimately, if it is not trustworthy, fair and clean. This is especially true of cities of homes.

"That general thinking has been behind the growth and development of newspapers in the Gannett Group, founded on a small beginning by Frank Gannett . . . .

"It is assumed that Gannett newspapers will be clean and community-minded and patriotic and fair. From there on, the local management is on its own as to specific editorial problems and issues."

REGARDING pricing of our products, Miller wrote:

"Briefly, and as general policy, we believe in the lowest feasible advertising and circulation rates. We'd rather get more advertising at a low rate than carry less advertising at a high rate – even if net income were equal. Why? It's better business for us and for our communities. Low rates mean that more advertisers, including little fellows, can use the newspapers regularly, profitably and with adequate space. The overall picture, present and future, is better for newspapers which adhere to this principle, and for the communities they serve.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The same for circulation. Gannett newspapers have ever been among the last in the nation to up circulation rates.

"The Gannett management believes, in short, that the newspaper – to keep its place and to give maximum service with reasonable profit – must remain an effective mass medium.

"We are interested most of all in home delivered circulation within productive training areas. Why? Because that's where it does the most good for us and for advertisers.

"Our newspapers are produced for family reading in the home by young and old. No advertising is accepted that it is believed might be harmful. Liquor advertising is excluded. A close editorial eye is kept trained on the comics. Standards of decency are insisted on in advertising and news copy."

(3.)

President Miller on Group Expansion: 'We Can Be Interested . . .'

(Continued from preceding page)

AS FOR opportunities for advancement within The Group, he told a gathering of Gannett circulation men: "There'll always be new opportunities. You should think whether you are doing the kind of job that will make someone think about you if there's another opportunity elsewhere in our organization . . . .

"As to where and when opportunities will come, time and events will tell. Things can happen fast, as you have seen. There are bound to be openings from time to time. Also, our company is not necessarily through expanding. We are not going to expand just for the sake of expanding. But we can be interested in good newspapers in good communities that fit our type of operation."

THE NEW president, who already had visited each of the 23 Gannett newspapers, has stepped up his rate of travel since April 11. In one 10-day period he visited Plainfield, N.J., and conferred with executives of the Courier-News; addressed an annual dinner of the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce; spoke to teen-age correspondents of The Democrat and Chronicle in Rochester, and dined at Ithaca with department heads of the Ithaca Journal before touring the Gannett Medical Center on the Cornell campus.

(4.)

A Statement by Frank Tripp

IF PAUL MILLER will accept the designation, I am proud to call him "my boy."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It was a long and thoughtful search by both Frank Gannett and me to find a man equipped to some day [sic] become the president of The Gannett Newspapers.

We were both of an age to make the choice necessary when Paul came; and there seemed to be an organization-wide realization at once of his destiny.

I say he is my boy because I found him. Frank Gannett had barely met him.

The search was for a man of country-wide acquaintance and newspaper knowledge. We found one who qualifies even worldwide. I believe that Paul Miller is today's best known man in world journalism, and personally knows more of his contemporaries both in and out of the newspaper field.

In his activity, I would have said the same of Frank Gannett. It had to be a rare type to succeed Frank.

But most important it had to be a man who would accept the traditions of Gannett newspapers, marry them and perpetuate them. Most of all, the human relations that make for the security of Gannett people.

PAUL has met this test in his every action and attitude. All that Gannett Newspapers have meant to all of us is safe and secure under his leadership. He has no pals to bring along, no strange policies to nurture, no weird newspaper notions.

Long before he became president he was one of us, dedicated to the same things and the same future that we all have striven for.

In my book, what more can we ask of a successor to the man who built it all – a man we love?

(5.) THE GANNETTEER

In the Gannett Group Are:

The Rochester Times-Union
The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
The Hartford (Conn.) Times
The Elmira Star-Gazette
The Elmira Advertiser
The Elmira Sunday Telegram
The Utica Observer-Dispatch
The Utica Daily Press
The Ithaca Journal
The Newburgh News
The Beacon News
The Albany Knickerbocker News
The Ogdensburg Journal
The Ogdensburg Advance-News
The Plainfield (N.J.) Courier-News
The Olean Times-Herald
The Malone Evening Telegram

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News
The Saratoga Springs Saratogian
The Binghamton Press
The Niagara Falls Gazette
The Massena Observer (semi-weekly)
The Potsdam Courier and Freeman (weekly)

The five radio stations in the Gannett Radio Group are:

WHEC, Rochester, 1460
WENY, Elmira, 1230
WHDL, Olean, 1450
WDAN, Danville, Ill., 1490
WINR, Binghamton, 680

The television stations are:

WHEC-TV, Channel 10, Rochester, N.Y.
WDAN-TV, Channel 24, Danville, Ill.

j. (B7/f5)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, August 3, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Booming Connecticut --A Hustling Governor

By PAUL MILLER

HARTFORD, Conn. – This great and growing capital of the Nutmeg State is one of the boom areas of the nation. Expanding industry, particularly United Aircraft, is chiefly responsible.

Connecticut's efforts to keep ahead in state and local planning is outstanding, its problems typical of those besetting growing communities everywhere.

It is always a pleasure to be in Hartford. I had another look this week on a visit to the Hartford Times, a member of The Gannett Group and one of the finest newspapers anywhere:

A rehabilitation commission is moving in on the nearest thing to a slum with plans for apartments, a park, and low-cost housing;

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

New bridges are going up to span the Connecticut River in five more places;

Thruway-type street and highway construction is cutting commuting time from new housing developments;

Insurance companies – Hartford is the Insurance City – and local businesses, including the Hartford Times, are deep in expansion plans.

* * *

CONNECTICUT IS COMPACT. The problems of distance and diversity here are less acute than in New York State. Still, any visitor must be impressed by the unity and cooperation apparent in the attack on problems of the age of jets and atomics . . . .

* * *

IN THE MIDDLE HERE, literally and figuratively, is the personable, hustling governor, Abraham Ribicoff, known pretty generally as Abe. A Democrat, he's a former lawyer, former congressman – and the only elected statehouse office-holder not a Republican.

A brief call on Abe Ribicoff is enough to drive home all over again how many now turn to government for the answer to problems . . . .

It's a hard life, but Abe Ribicoff (like most professional politicians) thrives on it.

He has a collection of wood and plastic donkeys on the mantle over the fireplace faced by his desk.

Right in the middle of the donkeys is one lone Republican elephant.

"I put it there on purpose," he tells visitors, "keeps me reminded that I'm governor not of a political party, but of all the people."

Smart fellow and a stimulating one . . . .

k. (B7/f6)

*

Rochester Times-Union
September 28, 1957

AS I SEE IT

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A Conference with a Goal:
Better Newspapers for You

By PAUL MILLER

No business or professional group brings its own activities under more critical, searching examination than newspapermen in convention apply to newspapers.

Some conventions seem largely given over to self-praise.

This is much less true of a newspaper gathering – although we of course enjoy our share.

For the most part, it's "How come we didn't do so and so?" and why don't we do it this way next time?" almost from the moment a chairman gavels for order.

So it will be when executives and department heads of newspapers in The Gannett Group – including The Times-Union and Democrat and Chronicle – assemble here for their own annual two-day clinic next Monday and Tuesday. Operating heads of affiliated radio and TV stations also will be on hand for meetings of their own.

Rochester is headquarters of the Group which newspapermen and students of newspapers elsewhere refer to as notable in a number of respects, two in particular:

1. The lack of uniformity as to size, ranging from a fine weekly at Potsdam, N.Y. to the dailies of Rochester and Hartford, Conn.

2. The policy of autonomy. There is no central editorial dictation or control.

* * *

FOUNDER FRANK GANNETT, ill at his Rochester home, will be absent again this year, but his two closest long-time associates will be actively on hand.

Frank Tripp, chairman of the board, is known in Rochester and throughout our Group for many things, not least being his weekly column.

E. R. Davenport, more or less retired now, but very much a factor, spends several months each year at his Florida home, but is known widely as the former general manager of the Rochester newspapers.

* * *

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

AS IN MANY OTHER FIELDS, the problem of ever-rising costs will dominate many of the discussions.

Inflation is a dangerous threat to our national life. Each dollar in terms of what you can buy with it has dwindled from 100 cents (its 1939 purchasing power) to 49.7 cents.

Newspapers have been fighting to hold the line for years, not only in campaigns for economy in government and elsewhere, but also in their own pricing policies. Even so, many have had to go reluctantly to 6, 7 or 10 cents daily, and more will be forced to do so in the future.

But name any other product that you could buy for a nickel 10 years ago that still sells for a nickel today – yet has steadily improved in quality, content, service and appeal.

* * *

THE ADVANCES of recent years have been many:

Color printing – adopted expensively by many newspapers and with more coming along all the time; better local and worldwide picture coverage and reproduction; sharper, more interesting, more effective news writing and advertising; broader coverage in all fields, including sports and women's news.

All these are tangible, appreciated advances, significant to every community newspapers serve.

* * *

ALL AND MORE will be discussed and reviewed at the meetings here at the Sheraton next week.

People, however, not processes, will have No. 1 billing:

A new training program, more than a year in preparation, among the best in the newspaper world, will be outlined.

Under this program, to be undertaken throughout the Gannett Group, young men and women will be given organized training that is sure to mean (1) even greater opportunities for them in the years that lie ahead, and (20 still better newspapers for readers and advertisers.

l. (B4/f27)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Hartford Times Executives
Mark a New Milestone

A FLYING TRIP to Hartford last month by FRANK TRIPP, PAUL MILLER, LYNN BITNER and AL BEST resulted in a surprise recognition of Paul Miller's 10th anniversary with the Gannett Company when Hartford Times Publisher DAVE DANIELS presented the Gannett Co. president with an electric clock inscribed "Paul Miller Time."

The presentation was at a business meeting and dinner at the Hotel Statler attended by members of The Times executive staff and the visitors from Gannett headquarters.

In his presentation Daniel pointed out that the figure 10 seemed to have a particular significance in connection with the Hartford Times and the Gannett Group. He recalled that the Gannett Company had observed its 30th anniversary by holding its first Hartford conference in 1936, its 40th in 1946 and its 50th at the Hartford Gannett meeting at the Statler last September.

Daniel said that while he did not believe these 10-year intervals were deliberately planned, he felt it was most appropriate and gratifying, even if unintentional, that Miller had chosen the date for his visit to Hartford, just one day away from his 10 anniversary. He said: "The clock is just a small token of recognition of the occasion, but it's a Connecticut product and we hope it will serve you accurately."

In his response, Miller indicated that he was pleased to return to Hartford. He said that he did not realize that anyone in Hartford would remember that he first came to the Gannett Company on August 1, 1947. The gift, he said, would serve as a pleasant reminder of that milestone.

Miller paid tribute to Tripp, describing him as one of the finest and best informed newspapermen in the country. He also cited outstanding work by Times Sports Editor ART McGINLEY, whose achievements inspired a written tribute from Tripp (re-printed on Page 2).

The Rochester group, flying into Bradley Field, said they were impressed by the airport and the Murphy Terminal Building – both results of the vision of retired Times Publisher FRANK MURPHY.

m. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, October 5, 1957
1243

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

AS I SEE IT

Convention or Commission: The Best Constitution Idea

By PAUL MILLER

Indications are that voters will reject on Nov. 5 the proposal for a state constitutional convention.

There's very little public interest and certainly very little public understanding. This was made clear in a random survey conducted in their localities by New York State newspapers of the Gannett Group this week.

Such interest as has been manifest to date has come largely from the politicians: Democrats are heartily in favor; most Republicans are heartily opposed.

* * *

I AM AGAINST THE PROPOSAL because I don't think anything worthwhile would come of a convention or that anything could be accomplished in the convention that can't be accomplished without one.

But let me tell you about something, now being informally discussed by some, that it seems to me everybody could get behind –

This is a permanent Constitutional Commission.

Such a commission would be on the job all the time, as needed. It would analyze and research all proposals for constitutional change; then make recommendations to the Legislature for initiation of amendments.

It seems to me that this would represent vast improvement over the present method of putting it up to the voters every twenty years . . . .

Such a commission would have a full-time staff of government experts. It could operate sufficiently in the background to stay reasonably clear of political or other pressure groups. Its recommendations would be factual, leaving debate to the legislative floors or the public forum at the general election when a proposed amendment was submitted.

Amendments proposed by the commission would follow the established legislative procedure for amending the Constitution: Each would have to be approved by two successive Legislatures and be ratified by the voters before taking effect . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

n. (B4/f27)

U.S. News & World Report
November 22, 1957

Censorship – A Declaration By Catholic Bishops

Following are excerpts from a statement released Nov. 17, 1957, by the Catholic Bishops of the United states after their annual meeting in Washington, D.C.:

Censorship is today a provocative and sometimes misleading word. It generates controversy by provoking those who would deny in fact any restrictions, legal or moral, upon freedom of expression. It misleads, since few approach the problems of censorship without emotion.

Obviously, the state does have some power of censorship. In times of war or great national danger, few will deny it a preventive power. In normal circumstances, however, the state exercises only a punitive function, placing restraint on those who misuse liberty to deny equal or greater rights to others. The state's power of censorship is not unlimited.

Morally, the Church can and does exercise what is called censorship. This right is hers from her office as teacher of morals and guardian of divine truth. Her decisions bind her people but her sanctions upon them are only spiritual and moral. She does, nevertheless, express her judgments to all men of good will, soliciting their reasoned understanding and their freely given acceptance and support.

Most commonly in civil affairs the particular freedom that is involved in discussions of the subject is freedom of the press, not only in newspapers and other publications but also such dramatic expression as is represented in the theater, motion pictures, radio and television.

Because in modern times the press has been a major instrument in the development of knowledge and the chief means of its diffusion, freedom of the press is closely bound up with man's right to knowledge. Man's patient, plodding ascent to the heights of truth evidences the spiritual powers given him by God and at the same time their wounding by sin. His search for truth is an enriching and ennobling experience, uniquely proper to man.

The right to know the truth is evidently broad and sweeping. Is the right to express this knowledge, whether through speech or press, equally broad? That man has a right to communicate his ideas through the spoken or written word is beyond challenge. And yet it can be recognized at the outset that expression adds a new element to knowledge. Directed as it is to others, it is an act that has social implications. Society itself must take cognizance of it. Although man must claim and hold to freedom of expression, he must also recognize his duty to exercise it with a sense of responsibility.

This is a freedom that is intimately bound up with other freedoms that man prizes. Freedom of the press is patently a key safeguard of civil liberty.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Democracy does not exist without it. The day free expression of opinion is extinguished and all are constrained to fall into a single pattern of political thought and action, democracy has died.

* * *

Because freedom of the press is a basic right to be respected an safeguarded, it must be understood and defended not as license but as true rational freedom. The kind of uncritical claims for and defense of liberty which so often have been made in our day actually places that liberty in jeopardy. For this reason we feel that light must be thrown not only on its meaning but also on its limits.

To speak of limits is to indicate that freedom of expression is not an absolute freedom. Not infrequently it is so presented. It is alleged that this freedom can suffer no curtailment or limitation without being destroyed. The traditional and sounder understanding of freedom, and specifically freedom of the press, is more temperate. It recognizes that liberty has a moral dimension. Man is true to himself as a free being when he acts in accord with the laws of right reason. As a member of society his liberty is exercised within bounds fixed by the multiple demands f social living.

In the concrete, this means that the common good is to be served. It will entail, among other things, a respect for the rights of others, a regard for public order and a positive deference to those human, moral and social values which are our common Christian heritage. It is within this context that freedom of expression is rightly understood.

This recognition of limitations has been given statement in recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States: “We hold that obscenity is not within the area of constitutionally protected speech or press.” (Roth v. United States, 77 S. Ct. 1304, Alberts v. California, 77 S. Ct. 1304, June 24, 1957.) The decisions touching on this subject are encouraging to those who have been deeply concerned over trends that threatened to destroy the traditional authority exercised by the state over expressions and displays of obscenity.

Contrary to this trend, the Court has held that there is such a thing as obscenity susceptible of legal determination and demanding legal restraint; that laws forbidding the circulation of obscene literature are not as such in violation of the Constitution; that the Federal Government may ban such publications from the mail; that a State may act against obscene literature and punish those who sell or advertise it.

The decisions reasserted the traditional conviction that freedom of expression is exercised within the defined limits of law. Obscenity cannot be permitted as a proper exercise of a basic human freedom. Civil enactments as well as the moral law both indicate that the exercise of this freedom cannot be unrestrained.

Ideally, we would wish that no man-made legal restraints were ever necessary. Thus, restraint on any human freedom would be imposed rather by one’s own reason than by external authority. In any case, restraint’s best justification is that it is imposed for the sake of a greater freedom. Since, however, individuals do act in an irresponsible way and do threaten social and moral harm, society must face its responsibility and exercise its authority. The exigencies of social living demand it.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

Although civil authority has the right and duty to exercise such control over the various media of communication as is necessary to safeguard public morals, yet civil law, especially in those areas which are constitutionally protected, will define as narrowly as possible the limitations placed on freedom. The one purpose which will guide legislators in establishing necessary restraints to freedom is the securing of the general welfare through the prevention of grave and harmful abuse. Our judicial system has been dedicated from the beginning to the principle of minimal restraint. Those who may become impatient with the reluctance of the state through its laws to curb and curtail human freedom should bear in mind

Continued from page 77

A DECLARATION
ON CENSORSHIP

That this is a principle which serves to safeguard all our vital freedoms – to curb less rather than more; to hold for liberty rather than restraint.

In practice the exercise of any such curbs by the state calls for the highest discretion and prudence. This is particularly true in the area of the press. For here an unbridled power to curb and repress can make a tyrant of government, and can wrest from the people one by one their most cherished liberties.

Prudence will always demand, as is true under our governmental system, that the courts be in a position to protect the people against arbitrary repressive action. While they uphold the authority of government to suppress that which not only has no social value, but is actually harmful, as is the case with the obscene, the courts will be the traditional bulwark of the people's liberties.

Within the bounds essential to the preservation of a free press, human action and human expression may fall short of what is legally punishable and may still defy the moral standards of a notable number in the community. Between the legally punishable and the morally good there exists a wide gap. If we are content to accept as morally inoffensive all that is legally unpunishable, we have lowered greatly our moral standards. It must be recognized that civil legislation by itself does not constitute an adequate standard of morality.

An understanding of this truth, together with the knowledge that offensive materials on the stage and screen and in publications have a harmful effect, moved the Bishops of the United States to set up agencies to work in the field – for motion pictures, the National League of Decency; for printed publications, the National Office for Decent Literature.

The function of these agencies is related in character. Each evaluates and offers the evaluation to those interested. Each seeks to enlist in a proper and lawful manner the co-operation of those who can curb the evil. Each invites the help of all people in the support of its objectives. Each endeavors through positive action to form habits of artistic taste which will move people to seek out and patronize the good. In their work they reflect the moral teaching of the Church. Neither agency exercises censorship in any true sense of the word. [END]

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

o. (B4/f29)

The Gannetteer
November 1957

Reporter-Adman Training Courses Planned for New Staffers

TRAINING PROGRAMS for beginners in reporting and advertising were outlined last month at a meeting of Group executives in Rochester. Parts of the training program already have been put into effect in some plants.

President PAUL MILLER announced the program, developed by JOHN E. HESELDEN, Group personnel director, with the aid of newspaper department heads in Rochester, Utica and Albany. Programs will be conducted individually by Group newspapers.

Trainees will include recent college graduates and other outstanding young men and women who are entering newspaper work for the first time. They will work from manuals prepared by Group executives and will follow courses of supplementary reading. New staffers with a year or two of newspaper experience will be expected to take only part of the full course, tentatively scheduled to require 21 weeks. Here's how the full 21-week period might be spent:

– One day of orientation and explanation of basic newspaper goals and principles.

– Three weeks of study and work in a circulation department, with a circulation executive directing the training in marketing, area coverage, quantitative values, delivery systems and growth factors.

– Two weeks in observing mechanical department operations, including copy handling and press production.

– Twelve weeks in the department for which the trainee is being prepared. Newsmen would spend this in working on various desks and major beats, studying editing techniques and writing routine stories. Advertising trainees would spend one week in classified, nine weeks in retail – accompanying regular salesmen on their calls – and two weeks in general advertising.

– Three weeks (for admen) in the newsroom; three weeks in the advertising departments (for newsmen).

– Eight days in the business office, studying bookkeeping and accounting practices, newsprint accounting, statistical s cost surveys, billing and budgeting.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PRESIDENT MILLER said young men and women will be given organized training "that is sure to mean (1) even greater opportunities for them in the years ahead, and (2) still better newspapers for readers and advertisers." He said there is no desire "to standardize news gathering and ad selling procedures. The sole aim is to supply operating executives with a tailor-made plan which can be followed in developing promising younger people."

Assisting Heselden in setting up the program have been J. J. BURKE, Rochester Times-Union; CYRUS H. FAVOR, Utica Daily Press; HENRY W. STOCK, Knickerbocker News, Albany; ANTHONY T. POWDERLY, Democrat and Chronicle, Rochester; HERMAN E. MOECKER, Knickerbocker News, Albany; JOHN E. GARTLAND, traveling auditor, Gannett Co., Inc.; and HOWARD HOSMER, Rochester Times-Union.

p. (B4/f29)

*****

The Gannetteer
November 1957

EFFECTIVE JAN. 1, 1958

* Henry Stock Named Group AD Director
* Zimmerman Chosen Plainfield General Manager

TWO appointments effective Jan. 1 were announced Sept. 30 by PAUL MILLER, president of the Gannett Company, at the annual conference of executives of all the newspapers and radio and television stations in the Group, which was held at Rochester.

HENRY W. STOCK, advertising director of the Albany Knickerbocker News, will become advertising director of all the Gannett Newspapers, with his headquarters in Rochester. He will succeed IRVING H. FITCH, who retires after serving in that post since 1951.

A. WALLACE ZIMMERMAN will become general manager of the Plainfield (N.J.) Courier-News, one of the fastest-growing afternoon newspapers in the country. CHAUNCEY A. STOUT will retire as publisher on the eve of his 80th birthday, having been an executive of The Courier-News for more than half a century . . . .

q. (B4/f29)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PURCHASE of television station KOVR in the Sacramento Valley of California by Gannett Co., Inc., was announced Nov. 18 by PAUL MILLER, president. The transaction is subject to approval by the Federal Communications Commission, which has authority over the licensing of all broadcasting stations.

KOVR-TV, operating on Channel 13, is a VHF station licensed to Stockton and serving the three principal cities of the Sacramento Valley – Stockton, Sacramento and Modesto. Its maximum power transmitter (316,000 watts) is situated atop Butte Mountain, near Jackson in Amador County, heart of the famous Gold Rush country of 1849.

KOVR serves nearly 450,000 TV homes in this rapidly growing agricultural and industrial area which has a population of 1,500,000. It is affiliated with the American Broadcasting Co. network.

The Gannett Co. proposes to acquire the capital stock of Television Diablo, Inc., owner and operator of KOVR-TV, for $1,100,000, with Diablo remaining committed to repay its outstanding indebtedness, approximately $2 million.

Principal stockholder of Television Diablo Inc., is H. Leslie Hoffman of Los Angeles, president of Hoffman Electronics Corp. The concern manufactures radio, television and high fidelity equipment and is active in the government missile and military electronics programs.

"We plan to retain substantially the same staff now operating the station and to announce a program for improved and expanded service to this great and growing area," Miller said.

"We are particularly pleased that Terry H. Lee, the present general manager of KOVR, has agreed to remain with the company until July 1, 1958. Mr. Lee has been a tremendous factor in the development program of the present KOVR, and his help and guidance will be of major assistance to the Gannett Company."

C. GLOVER DELANEY of Rochester, managing director of Gannett Company's Broadcast Division, will devote considerable time to plans for development of KOVR.

Representing the Gannett Company in investigation and negotiations, extended over several weeks, were CYRIL WILLIAMS, treasurer; LYNN N. BITNER, general manager; DELANEY and Justin Doyle of the Rochester law firm of Nixon, Hargrave, Devans & Dey.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Gannett Company operates other television and radio properties. On Nov. 4, a million-watt UHF station went on the air in Binghamton. Other stations in the Gannett organization are: WHEC, and WHEC-TV, Rochester, N.Y.; WENY, Elmira, N.Y.; WDAN and WDAN-TV (UHF), Danville, Ill., and WINR, Binghamton, N.Y.

THE GANNETT CO. Inc., founded by FRANK GANNETT, who is now president emeritus, operates 22 newspapers in New York State, Connecticut, New Jersey and Illinois.

Gannett News Service maintains bureaus in Washington and Albany. J. P. McKinney & Son, national advertising representatives, a subsidiary of the Gannett Company, has offices in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Syracuse. Legal formalities were completed at mid-month and it was expected that an application for formal approval by the FCC would be presented in a few days. Normally, FCC action on such a transfer requires two to three months.

Hoffman, commenting on the agreement said:

"We have put a great deal of time, money and effort into the development of KOVR as an instrument of real service to the valley area. I am delighted that the purchaser is the Gannett Company, because I know it will carry on and expand policies to the continued best advantage of the people of this area."

r. (B4/f26)

Time
December 16, 1957

THE PRESS
The Chain That Isn't

To upstate New York's Rochester Democrat and Chronicle in 1886 came an indignant letter from one of its newsboys. Protesting that he had been billed $.06 too much for his papers, ten-year-old Frank Ernest Gannett demanded that the error be "rectified," added in his boyish scrawl: "I have always meet my bills."

From this aggressive faith in the rewards of enterprise, hardheaded Newsboy Gannett (accent on the net) never wavered. It led him, frustratingly, into politics, notably as the highly unsuccessful "businessman's candidate" for the Republican presidential nomination in 1940, into angel and pamphleteer for the National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government and sundry other ultraconservative pressure groups. Through industry and acumen, round-faced, open-headed Frank Gannett also built one of the nation's biggest and most profitable newspaper empires. When he died last week [December 3] in Rochester at 81, long-ailing Frank Gannett not only owned the 125-year-old Democrat and

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Chronicle (circ. 125, 405), but 21 other papers as well – more than any other U.S. publisher has ever acquired without the help of inheritance.

Tolerant Teetotaler. Frank Gannett was a chain publisher who hated chain papers. Instead of cultivating a deadening conformity, papers in the Gannett "group," as the publisher preferred to call it, were encouraged to vary their typography, choose their own features, mold editorial policies to suit their own communities. Boasted Publisher Gannett: "Nothing ever goes out of my office with a 'must' on it." Example: though Gannett and his flagship paper, Rochester's evening Times-Union (circ. 128, 147), zealously promoted the St. Lawrence Seaway, his Albany Knickerbocker News (circ. 53, 870) doggedly fought the project as an economic threat to Albany.

Publisher Gannett, whose name appeared as editor only on the Times-Union masthead, always sent his political pronouncements to his other editors with the notation: "For your information and use, if desired" – and editors were free to ignore them.

In 1948, when other Gannett papers (nearly all in solid Republican territory) supported Tom Dewey for President, Gannett's Independent Democratic Hartford (Conn.) Times (circ. 120, 182) backed Truman; in 1952, when Gannett backed Taft, the Times and most other papers in the group boomed Eisenhower. His Independent Republican Binghamton (N.Y.) Press (circ. 64,562), one of the best small-city newspapers in the U.S., has lately made a habit of supporting Democrats for mayor. During a state election campaign in which several of his papers had gone counter to Gannett's publicly expressed views, F.E.G., as he was called, sighed to Vice President (now President) Paul Miller: 'You know, Paul, sometimes I don't know about this autonomy." Tolerant Teetotaler Gannett's only inviolate command: his papers must never accept liquor ads.

Responsibility. The Gannett papers, nonetheless, share distinct family traits that go beyond sound management or geographical proximity. (Except for Illinois' Danville Commercial-News, New Jersey's Plainfield Courier-News and the Hartford Times, all are published in New York cities and small towns.) Conservative in news judgment as in politics, they have little use for exposes, play down stories of sex and crime. "A newspaper, to suit me," said Gannett, "must be one that I would be willing to have my mother, my own sister or daughter read." Many readers, particularly in the 15 cities where Gannett has a monopoly, complain that the modern mothers would not object to livelier coverage or sharper writing.

On the other hand, most of the papers are enthusiastic home-town boosters, campaign busily for local improvements, sponsor dozens of community enterprises. In keeping with this sense of community responsibility – and to perpetuate his newspapers – Publisher Gannett in 1935 gave two-thirds of his Gannett Company common stock to a philanthropic foundation administered by his executives.

The Great Hyphenator. For his career of building profitable provincial dailies, farm-born Frank Gannett was prepared by a maxim-minded mother ("Little strokes fell big oaks") and the example of a father who was a failure as a farmer and hotelkeeper. After working his way through Cornell, Newsman Gannett had risen to managing editor of the Ithaca News before he bought a half share of the ailing Elmira Gazette in 1906 (for $20,000), later merged it with the rival Evening Star. Gannett started looking for other money-losing dailies to buy and merge – and soon won fame as the busiest newspaper hyphenator in upstate New York. From Rochester, where he merged the Union & Advertiser with the Times, he went on to combine Utica's Herald-Dispatch and Observer, Elmira's Telegram and Advertiser, Ithaca's News and Journal. He fought Hearst in Rochester (where W.R.H. spent $8,000,000 in a hopeless stab at putting F.E.G. out of business), and was himself driven to the ropes in Brooklyn, where he bought the old Eagle in 1929 and shucked it at a loss of $2,000,000 three years later. He never founded a paper, but he bought with an auditor's sure eye; in all, Publisher Gannett acquired 30 papers (plus a string of TV and radio stations) in 51 years, merged ten, unloaded only three.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In politics, Gannett backed Franklin Roosevelt in his early years, but by 1940 was billing himself as The Man Who Stopped the New Dealers. While he was denounced by F.D.R. as an "isolationist" – and by the late Andrei Vishinsky as a "warmonger" – Gannett in his political philosophy was always animated by the same abhorrence of waste that made him a successful publisher. Though he suffered from diabetes for 33 years, Frank Gannett did not slow perceptibly until 1948, when he had a stroke. Bouncing back, he ran his empire until 1955, when he fractured his spine in a fall. Management and the presidency of the Gannett group has since gone into the hands of able, Gannett-groomed Paul Miller, 51, onetime Washington bureau chief for the Associated Press, who believes as firmly as F.E.G. in giving his editors free rein.

For man who has done so much in a field where the tools of self-promotion are so irresistibly at hand, Gannett was a surprisingly little-known man, even in the communities he served. "Although he owned the Times for 30 years," said a Hartford Timesman, "if he walked through the business section it is doubtful whether two people would have recognized him." But one measure of Frank Gannett's success was the fact that his papers last week ran their own staff-written editorials on their publisher's death.

PHOTO:

PUBLISHER GANNETT (LEFT) & FRIENDS*
Papers that mother can read.
* Editorial Director Vincent S. Jones, President Miller.

s. (B4/f29)

– 17 –

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

THAT 17 IN THE LANGUAGE OF THE OLD-TIME MORSE OPERATORS MEANT THAT ANY MESSAGE SO SLUGGED WAS INTENDED FOR EVERYODY WHO MIGHT READ IT.

THIS MESSAGE IS SO INTENDED.

IT IS TO SAY MERRY CHRISTMAS AND HAPPY NEW YEAR.

I IMPOSE ON THE GENEROSITY OF GNS BECAUSE I AM NOT GOING TO SEND OUT CONVENTIONAL CARDS THIS YEAR OR HENCEFORTH.

THE REASON IS THAT I JUST PLAIN CAN'T SEND CONVENTIONAL CARDS TO ALL I'D LIKE TO GREET.

I CAN AND DO EXPRESS WARM GOOD WISHES FOR NOW AND THROUGH THE COMING YEAR TO ALL IN OUR GROUP AND THEIR FAMILIES, AND I BEG YOUR INDULGENCE IN THE FACT THAT I TAKE THIS MEANS OF DOING IT.

PAUL MILLER

ROCHESTER

DEC. 23, 1957

Paul Miller (signature)

t. (B4/f29)

*****

Editorially Speaking
Vol. 15, 1957

PAUL MILLER
President
THE GANNETT NEWSPAPERS

WHEN Paul Miller became president of the Gannett Company last Spring after serving as executive vice-president, he retained the editorship of the Rochester Times-Union, long regarded as the "flag" newspaper of the Group. His consuming interest in news and editorial matters, dating back to his earliest days as a reporter on small newspapers in Oklahoma, and continuing through a brilliant career with The Associated Press as bureau chief, assistant general manager, and head of its Washington Bureau, shows no signs of slackening. Recently he began writing a weekly signed editorial column for the Saturday edition of The Times-Union. First former employe [sic] of AP to be elected to its Board of Directors, he now is first vice-president of The Associated press. Portions of this article were given as a speech to the North Carolina Press Association at the Duke University dinner in January of 1957.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

F O R E W O R D

THIS volume of Editorially Speaking, No. 15 in an annual series, follows our tradition of presenting examples of the thinking and practices of the men who edit and manage the 22 newspapers in the Gannett Group. This exchange of ideas, originally confined largely to those attending the regular News and Editorial Conferences of the Gannett Newspapers, thus has been widened to invite editors everywhere to sit in on our shop talks and friendly family-style discussions.

It's a Great Life by Paul Miller

MY WORK has taken me from coast to coast and back again. And I know this:

Whether life sets us down on an oil town newspaper in Oklahoma, moves us around the country with The Associated Press, with the Frank Gannett organization in New York, New jersey, Connecticut and Illinois – or wherever – so long as it's newspapering, it's a great life . . . .

13. 1958

14. 1959

(B1/f17)
*****

An address by PAUL T. MILLER
President of The Gannett Newspapers

"SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY"

JOURNALISM DAY
April 29, 1959
University of Oklahoma: Norman, Oklahoma

15. 1960

16. 1961

17. 1962

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

18. 1963

a. (B1/f17)

Cited for service to his profession and his community, the president of the Gannett Group last month accepted the William Allen White Award . . . Then, in the annual White Lecture, he gave his ideas on "How groups can lead to a better press"

By Paul Miller
President, Gannett Co., Inc.
(February 11, 1963)

19. 1964

20. 1965

21. 1966

22. 1967

a. (B1/f3)

Gannett Co., Inc. Annual Report 1967
newspapers/television/radio

"As I look back over 1967, I wonder if you would not be even more interested in a reporter's observations than in a company president's look at the purely financial aspects, outstanding as they were. I shall try to provide both in introducing this, your Company's first Annual Report."
Top
"Gannett Washington Bureau Chief Robert Lucas greets a prime news source, President Lyndon Johnson at the White House. In background (from left) are Al Neuharth, Gannett executive vice president; Calvin Mayne, Rochester Times-Union associate editor, and Paul Miller, Gannett president." (PHOTO)
Bottom Left
"Peter Behr, Rochester Times-Union reporter, interviews U.S. Marine while on assignment covering Vietnam war for Times-Union and other Gannett newspapers." (PHOTO)
Bottom Right
"Sanders LaMont, space writer for Gannett's TODAY, stands beside mockup of U.S. lunar module at Cape Kennedy moonport." (PHOTO MISSING)

23. 1968

a. (B1/f3)

Gannett Co., Inc. Annual Report 1968
newspapers/television/radio

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Building for the future remains a cornerstone of Company policy—building of new plants . . . building of new listenership and readership . . . building of ever-more-competent staffs . . . building and maintaining public confidence through conscientious public service."

b. (B1/f1)

ANNUAL MEETING of Shareholders
May 13, 1968
Rochester, N.Y.
"FIRST ANNUAL MEETING since Gannett Co., Inc. went public . . . ."

24. 1969

a. (B1/f1)

GANNETT CO., INC.
Annual Shareholders' Meeting
Rochester, N.Y.
May 12, 1969
"report on some developments in . . .
modernization and automation of plants and equipment"

b. (B1/f4)

GANNETT CO., INC. ANNUAL REPORT 1969

Report of the President

"Gannett Co., Inc. set new records in 1969 for the eighth consecutive year. Four new dailies were added to the group, bringing the number we currently publish to 33 dailies and 12 community weeklies in six states."

"During 1969, Gannett stock was listed for trading on the New York Stock Exchange (with the ticker symbol GCI), to provide greater recognition of Gannett Company as a major national enterprise. During the second half of the year, a three-for-two stock split was effected and cash dividends were increased by more than 10%, reflecting the continued growth of the company."

Gannett Guidelines

"In its 63 years the Gannett Company has been at the forefront in many advances of American journalism. The guidelines it still follows, and will continue to follow, are simple: In all our areas, to gather and disseminate news completely and accurately, to background and illuminate it for better understanding, and to comment on it with independence and candor."

"Each Gannett publication is autonomous in the sense that each is tailored to the needs of its particular community. Editorial policies and political endorsements vary from city to city. But ours is more than a close working association of independent newspapers. Gannett's headquarters staff supplies fiscal controls; marketing and technological research; marketing and promotion services; advice and assistance on public service projects; aid on recruiting and training; and a pool of specialized expertise available to individual publications as needed."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Looking Ahead

"During 1969 Mrs. Frank E. Gannett, widow of our founder and herself a longtime member of the Board, retired from the Board of Directors."

25. 1970

a. (B1/f1)

GANNETT CO., INC.
Shareholder's Annual Meeting
Rochester, N.Y.
May 26, 1970

"Paul Miller, presiding as president and chief executive officer of Gannett Co., Inc., was advanced to chairman and chief executive officer by the Board of Directors following the 1970 shareholders' meeting."

"On March 19, 1969 . . . Gannett became listed on the New York Stock Exchange."

b. (B1/f4)

Gannett Co., Inc. Annual Report 1970

Acquisitions and Dispositions: "In October 1970, the formation of Empire Newspaper Supply Corporation was announced. This wholly-owned subsidiary of the Company will act as the purchasing agent for all of the Company's operating units. Empire will concentrate its efforts on major purchase areas where savings in the form of lower prices, higher quality and better efficiency through centralized bulk purchases can be effected."

26. 1971

a. (B1/f1)

GANNETT CO., INC.
Shareholders' Annual Meeting
Rochester, N.Y.
May 12, 1971

"First, as to recent acquisitions. During the last 12 months, your company added four newspapers in three states."
"The staff is geared to provide operating help and counsel as needed to all of our affiliates."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Beyond that, we are now in the midst of a professional re-examination of our entire operating structure, aiming for more efficient management . . . ."

b. (B1/f11)

Editorially Speaking
(Volume 29, 1971)
Aspects of Growth: I & II

"Autonomy vs. Centralization: A Report to the Public"
"A Report to Publishers: A Move to Regionalize"

By
Paul Miller
Chairman and Chief Executive, Gannett Co., Inc.

27. 1972

a. (B1/f4)

Gannett Co., Inc. 1972 Annual Report

People
"The modern new machines in the newspaper industry are no better than the input provided by the people who manage them. Gannett's 13,500 employes in 1972 were given more opportunity than ever before to develop their talents and skills and enhance their careers."
"Now the employes [sic] affected by modernization of machinery are retrained at company expense . . . ."
"This is an extension of the long-standing Gannett policy which guarantees that no employe [sic] will go off payroll as a result of automation. That policy of staff reductions through attrition rather than lay-offs has made it possible to introduce the most modern equipment with the cooperation of our employes."

28. 1973

a. (B1/f1)

Gannett Co., Inc.
Annual Shareholders Meeting
Rochester, New York
May 8, 1973

"More than 25 years ago, Gannett acquired Paul Miller. With him came Paul Miller, II, (PHOTO) then age 2. A newspaperperson by association since the day he was born, Paul, II achieved distinction in his own right for 10 years as a reporter, editor, and advertising salesman in El Paso, Tex.; Covington, Kentucky; Rochester, N.Y.; and as a successful newspaper owner and publisher. Now Paul Miller, II, age 29, is publisher of our Ithaca Journal, our youngest publisher on one of our oldest newspapers, where together that youth and that age are building the most solid product and most sound profits in the history of the Ithaca Journal." (Allen H. Neuharth, President)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

29. 1974

30. 1975

a. (B1/f2)

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION
Washington, D.C. 20549
Form 10-K
ANNUAL REPORT
For the fiscal year ended December 28, 1975
ACQUISITIONS 1971-1975
DISPOSITIONS 1971-1975
NEWSPAPER PUBLISHING

31. 1976

a. (B1/f17)

GANNETT and the U.S. Newspaper Industry
A presentation to Financial and Business leaders in Europe
LONDON EDINBURGH
AMSTERDAM
ZURICH
GENEVA
PARIS

September 20-25, 1976

By
Paul Miller
Chairman of the Board
Gannett Co., Inc.

By
Allen H. Neuharth
President and Chief Executive Officer
Gannett Co., Inc.

Rochester Civic Affairs
[Better Rochester Group with Joe Wilson?]
(Box # 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 16, 18, 22, 23, 24, 28)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller moved to Rochester, NY, site of Gannett Co., Inc. headquarters, in 1947, shortly after joining the company as Frank E. Gannett's executive assistant. Almost immediately thereafter, Miller immersed himself in Rochester's civic affairs. Without question, the large quantity of documentary evidence contained in the Paul Miller Papers related to this aspect of Miller's life and career would make for a fascinating monograph. Here are just a few examples of Miller's civic involvement from 1949 to 1969:

1949
Chairman of Mayor's War Memorial Committee

1949 & 1950
Chairman, Fund Drive, Rochester Chapter of the American Red Cross

1954
Elected Director of Rochester Convention and Publicity Bureau

1956
Elected to Board of Directors of Lincoln Rochester Trust Co.

1958
Elected to "Rochesterians" Founders Committee

1960
Elected President of Rochester Convention and Publicity Bureau

1961
Award by Civic Committee of People-to-People
Program for establishing "sister cities" relationship Between Rochester and Rennes, France

1962
Master of Ceremonies at Rochester Chamber of Commerce 75th Anniversary Dinner

1962
Re-elected to Board of Directors of Automobile Club

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

of Rochester

1963
Addressed Monroe County Bar Association, Manger Hotel, Rochester, NY

1963
Addressed Rochester Rotary Club

1964
Elected President of Rochester, NY, newly-formed chapter of Sigma Delta Chi

1965
Named to Board of Trustees of University of Rochester

1967
Appointed Member of Retirement Committee
Automobile Club of Rochester

1968
Addressed Rochester Society of Security Analysts

1969
Addressed Dedication Dinner, Gannett Memorial Building, Rochester Institute of Technology

* * *

1. 1947

a. (B3/f52)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
July 8, 1947

AP Aide Quits Post
To Join Gannett Staff

Paul Miller, newly appointed executive assistant to Frank Gannett, president of Gannett Newspapers, will begin his new duties Aug. 1.

Miller resigned as assistant general manager of the Associated Press and chief of the Associated Press Washington Bureau to accept the position in the Gannett Group, which includes 21 newspapers and seven radio stations in New York,

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Connecticut, New Jersey and Illinois. He recently was a visitor in Rochester and attended the spring meeting of editors of Gannett Newspapers.

Gannett Comments

Commenting on the addition of Miller to his staff, Gannett said:

"For a long time I have been watching him very carefully and I was so favorable impressed by him that I urged him to come with us.

"Ever since the death of Leroy E. Snyder I have been searching for a man who could ably fill his place and add strength to our organization. This move does not in any way affect anyone in our organization. Mr. Miller will have special work of great importance and will relieve me of many of my burdens.

"Although Mr. Miller has gone far in the newspaper business he is only 40 years old. He has made friends throughout the country and few newspapermen are better known than he is. He has four children and with Mrs. Miller will come to Rochester to reside.

"I know that in a short time he will make a place for himself in this community and he will be of great service to our papers and me." . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

PAUL MILLER
New Gannett Newspapers
executive.

2. 1948

a. (B3/f53)

(Untitled/undated newspaper clipping):

Chatterbox Club Lists
Talk by Paul Miller

Sparking their Tuesday luncheon meeting with an interesting pre-election talk, members of the Chatterbox Club will hear Paul Miller of the Gannett Newspapers speak on "Personalities in the 1948 Presidential Campaign." Guest including husbands of members will attend Mr. Miller's talk which is scheduled for noon and will be followed by a buffet luncheon.

b. (B3/f53)

THE CHATTERBOX CLUB
25 NORTH GOODMAN STREET
ROCHESTER 7, NEW YORK

(Handwritten note):

1263

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Oct. 7, 1948

Dear Mr. Miller,

On behalf of the Chatterbox board and all of its members I want to thank you for being so generous as to come and speak to us on Tuesday.

In this election year each of us is vitally interested in the issues at stake and the opinions of the various candidates on these issues.

We know that it is no mean task for a lone man to speak before a group of women and we only hope that you felt as at ease with us as we did with you.

We hope that at some future date you will be willing to be with us again to enlarge on some of the points brought up in the question period.

Thank you again for a most enjoyable and enlightening time.

Sincerely yours,
Betsey R. Morse
Corresponding Secretary pro tem

c. (B3/f53)

Rochester Institute of Technology
FORMERLY ROCHESTER ATHEAEUM & MECHANICS INSTITUTE
65 PLYMOUTH AVENUE SOUTH, ROCHESTER 8, NEW YORK

October 18, 1948

Mr. Paul Miller
c/o The Gannett Newspapers
Times-Union Building
Exchange Street at Broad
Rochester, New York

Dear Mr. Miller:

On behalf of the Forum Group of R. I. T. I would like to thank you for your most interesting and stimulating talk last evening at Clark Union. It was a real treat for each and every one of us.

Your generosity in answering our many questions also is appreciated – the directness of your answers stimulating more discussion than we have had in some time. Without a doubt, last evening will establish the standard by which all other programs for the year will be judged.

From remarks made by some, I am sure that the Gannett papers no longer will be considered merely as a corporate organization, but now has become flesh and blood – a living thing. And your progress, too, we shall look forward to with anticipation.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It was indeed a pleasure to have you and your gracious wife as our guests. We are hoping that at some future date we may renew the acquaintance.

Sincerely

Austin E. Fribance (signature)
Austin E. Fribance
Chairman

AEF:p

P.S. We hope and trust that by this time the pain in your arm is just an unpleasant memory.

d. (B3/f53)
*****

TO MEMBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE PAWHUSKA CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Sunday – October 31, 1948

I am proud and happy to be here today, along with old friends of whom all of us think so much. Some have gone, like the man in whose stead I stand here, yet as my Mother remarked all of them must be here, too, in spirit. "I feel, as it says in the Bible," my Mother said, "that we are 'compassed about by a great cloud of witnesses."

For my part, I would not be here if I did not believe that my Father is somehow participating. I am sure of it. When I received Mr. Crownover's letter, back in September, I determined to exert every effort to be here – first of all because my Father would want it; next because of the pleasure and satisfaction I knew it would bring my Mother. Then I hoped it would be an occasion when all of our family might be together again with you and show our appreciation to you who were so good to us in years long gone.

Well, we did all make it here today – mother from Seneca, Missouri; Elizabeth and Jo from Clarksville, Tennessee; Horace and Louise from Claremore; Evelyn from Tulsa, and I from Rochester, New York.

There is no way of measuring our debt to this church and to this community. All of us benefited in ways beyond count.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Never in all their varied pastorates did my Father and Mother have the support, the help, the cooperation that was theirs in this church. Assistant Pastors? There was a list of them, and I recall with what confidence and satisfaction Father would leave this pulpit to Mr. Grinstead, Mr. Hamilton, or to others on occasions when calls from out-of-town churches took him away.

The Pawhuska schools were unsurpassed. One year all six of us were enrolled here. These schools were particularly outstanding in the music which meant so much to my sisters. I got my start in newspaper work here, as editor of the Wah-Sha-She – that means "The Indian" in Osage – and under the encouragement and help of Miss jean Roberts, who was my teacher, and Charlie Prentice at the Osage County news, where I used to hang around when the Wah-Sha-She was being printed . . . .

(Much of what follows is an almost hero-worshipping tribute to the Rev. Miller.)

3. 1949

a. (B3/f56)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Rochester, N.Y.
January 4, 1949

PAUL MILLER
HEADS DRIVE OF RED CROSS

Will Lead 5,000
In Early March
Campaign

Appointment of Paul Miller of the Gannett Newspapers as general chairman of the 1949 fund-raising campaign for the Rochester Chapter, American Red Cross, was announced yesterday by Edward Peck Curtis, president of the local chapter.

The campaign, scheduled to begin the first week in March, will enlist the efforts of nearly 5,000 volunteer workers who will canvass Monroe County for contributions . . . .

PHOTO:
CAMPAIGN STRATEGY

Caption:
Paul Miller, right, of The Gannett Newspapers and Harold C. Townson, vicepresident of the Rochester Chapter, American

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Red Cross, study plans for upcoming fund campaign. Miller yesterday was named general chairman of 1949 campaign.

b. (B3/f56)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
January 4, 1949

Paul Miller Named Chairman
Of Red Cross Fund Campaign

PHOTO:
Red Cross Drive Chief, Aide

Caption:
Paul Miller, general chairman of the 1949 Red Cross fund campaign, confers with Mrs. Gregory F. Mills, ward chairman.

c. (B3/f56)

*****

Bumblebee
Published Weekly By The
ROCHESTER AD CLUB
116 Powers Hotel * Rochester 4, New York
(Vol. 36 No. 18, January 13, 1949)

Paul Miller to head
Red Cross fund-raising

(B3/f56)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
February 6, 1949

Treasury Secretary to Open
Red Cross Drive Here Mar. 4

Paul Miller, chairman of the Rochester Chapter's Red Cross fund drive, while in Washington yesterday received personal assurance from Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder that he will be here Mar. 4 to open the campaign.

The cabinet member will take a day's leave from his job to be principal speaker at a dinner in the Chamber of Commerce launching a $361,000 effort in Rochester and Monroe County . . . .

PHOTO:
'IT'S A DATE'
Caption:
1267

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller, chairman of Rochester Red Cross drive for 1949, and Treasury Secretary John W. Snyder are shown as Snyder accepts bid to address kick-off dinner here
Mar. 4. They are shown in Snyder's office in Washington.

d. (B3/f56)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday Evening, March 5, 1949

5,000 Workers Open Red Cross Drive;
Doorbell Campaign to Cover County

An army of 5,000 men and women today was ringing doorbells throughout Monroe County seeking $361,000 for the Red Cross war against sickness and distress.

The army got its marching orders last night at a dinner at the Chamber of Commerce, attended by nearly 800 ward, chapter, group and other solicitation leaders. The affair officially launched the 1949 Red Cross campaign.

On the platform were a score of the country's civic leaders, most of them division directors in the drive.

Paul Miller, campaign chairman, was presented by Edward P. Curtis, chapter chairman, and he in turn introduced other participants in the program.

Snyder Tells of Service

Chief of these were U.S. Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder and Judith Anderson.

Miss Anderson is appearing in "Medea" at the Auditorium, made plea for full cooperation . . . .

PHOTO:
Caption:
Shown at dinner launching fund drive are (from left) Thomas J. Hargrave, a former campaign chairman; Edward P. Curtis, Secretary of treasury John W. Snyder and Judith Anderson.

e. (B3/f56)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Saturday, March 5, 1949

Snyder Pushes
Red Cross Drive

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

To Cheery Start

By JEAN WALRATH

With a double-star cast of well-wishers – Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder and Actress Judith Anderson – the Rochester Chapter of the American Red Cross and its branches last night launched their 1949 Fund Campaign.

About 700 division and team captains, representing a campaign force of 5,000 men and women, jammed the large hall of the Chamber of Commerce. It was the curtain-raising for a $361,000 effort, with Paul Miller, campaign chairman, as master-of-ceremonies. Mayor Samuel B. Dicker gave the official opening speech . . . .

PHOTO:
'BIG GUNS' IN RED CROSS SALVO

Caption:
Gathered at speakers' table at last night's opening of the Red Cross campaign were, from left, Thomas J. Hargrave, a former campaign chairman; Edward Peck Curtis, chairman of Rochester Chapter; John W. Snyder, Secretary of Treasury and principal speaker, and Paul Miller, campaign chairman.

PHOTO:
Caption:
Judith Anderson, stage star now at The Auditorium and a speaker last night, examines campaign trophies held by Sara Quinlan (left), a staff assistant, and Helen Menihan.

f. (B3/f56)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Tuesday Evening, Mar. 15, 1949

Red Cross Chapter Head Hails Citizenry
For Faith That Made Campaign a Success

Edward Peck Curtis, chairman of Rochester Red Cross Chapter, today hailed citizens of Rochester and Monroe County for "the faith they have shown in Red Cross community service by contributing to the successful 1949 drive."

Curtis said that the response to the drive, which ended 15.6 per cent above quota, was "magnificent . . . .

PHOTO:
Caption:
Final report brings victory smiles to Director Veronica Maher and Chairman Paul Miller.

g. (B3/f56)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

*

Democrat and Chronicle
March 15, 1949

PHOTO:
Caption:
Paul Miller, campaign chairman, and Miss Veronica Maher, executive director of Rochester Chapter, exchanged congratulations when teams reported 115.6 per cent of quota.

B&L $4500 Gift
Helps Red Cross
Gifts of $500 and over reported at last night's Red Cross drive report meeting were:
$4500 – Bausch & Lomb Optical Company . . . .

h. (B3/f56)

The Democrat and Chronicle
Tuesday, September 14, 1949, p. 16

PHOTO:
THEIR BUSINESS, BETTER BUSINESS

Caption:
Discussing details of membership campaign which opened last night for Better Business Bureau of Rochester, Inc., are from left: Marshall A. Mott, Cleveland bureau president; Paul Miller of The Gannett Newspapers, general chairman of Campaign, and Neal Murphy, business manager of The Democrat and Chronicle, a governor of the Association of Better Business Bureaus and vicepresident of local organizations.

i. (B3/f56)

*

Democrat and Chronicle
Tuesday, October 18, 1949

Memorial Unit
Organizes at City Hall Meet

Names Cristy Adviser,
Clancy Secretary at First Session

Mayor Dicker's Memorial Committee organized yesterday . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PHOTO:
THE WAR MEMORIAL COMMITTEE ORGANIZES

Caption:
At the first session of the Mayor's War Memorial Committee in City Hall are from the left, James L. Burke, Thomas L. Lee, John W. Remington, George M. Clancy, chosen secretary; Mayor Samuel B. Dicker; Paul Miller, chairman of committee, which scheduled its next meeting for Thursday.

j. (B3/f56)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
December 2, 1949

Miller Appointed Head
Of '50 Red Cross Drive

Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers has been appointed general chairman of the 1950 fund drive of the Rochester Chapter of American Red Cross, it was announced last night.

Selection of Miller again this year was made known by Edward Peck Curtis, chairman of the Rochester chapter, in the Red Cross canteen, 150 Spring St. at the first organization meeting held in preparation for the drive, which will be held next March, concurrently with the National Red Cross drive . . . .

PHOTO:
FOR HUMANITY'S SAKE

Caption:
Girding for the 1950 fund drive of Rochester Chapter, American Red Cross, is trio of drive Leaders, from left, Prescott Dean, chairman of ward solicitation division; Paul Miller, named general chairman; Edward Peck Curtis, head of the Rochester Chapter. Drive opens in March.

k. (B3/f56)

[Unknown]
[1949 ?]

Rochester
Newspapers are hosts to

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

300 high school news writers

The recent fifth annual Rochester Times-Union and Democrat and Chronicle Scholastic Editors Conference brought more than 300 editors, faculty advisers and school principals together at the Rochester Institute of Technology.

Represented were 47 high schools and 9 colleges from ten surrounding counties. After a morning session devoted to discussions of newspaper problems in general, visitors were guests of the Rochester Gannett Newspapers at a luncheon at the Hotel Rochester . . . .

PAUL MILLER, vicepresident of Gannett Newspapers and editor of The Times-Union, presented a roundup report at the conclusion of the morning session and also preside at the luncheon meeting.

PHOTO:
NORRIS (Red) VAGG, assistant m. e. of
The D&C looks on as Paul Miller (left above)
Presents awards to region's winning schoolboy
And schoolgirl newsmen at Scholastic confab.

4. 1950

a. (B3/f62)

PHOTO:
[source unknown]
January 21, 1950

Newspaper Man Speaks to Junior Chamber of Commerce

Paul Miller, left, Rochester, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, talks with Donald E. Werner, center, Syracuse, president of the State Junior Chamber of Commerce and Leonard E. Friedlander, president of the Albany Chapter, at the state organizations meeting at the Ten Eyck Hotel Saturday night.

Paul Miller Urges Hoover Plan Support

b. (B3/f62)

Democrat and Chronicle
January 22, 1950

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Young Voters Urged to Take Role in Politics

Activity at Grass Roots Stressed by Miller At Jaycee Dinner

Albany – (GNS) – Young men were urged last night to take an active, vital role in grass roots political activity "In their own interests."

Paul Miller, vicepresident of the Gannett Company, principal speaker at the annual distinguished service award banquet of the New York State Junior Chamber of Commerce, outlined two ways in which the young men could participate to end "political spending, government waste and inefficiency."

1—To work for sound government through a political party of the choice of the individual.

2 – To work through nonpartisan efforts to accomplish the recommendations of the Hoover Commission on government reorganization.

Miller strongly supported the Hoover Commission proposals as a step toward reversing present trends in government.

Rochesterian Wins Award

Distinguished service awards were presented by the State Jaycees, through President Donald E. Werner, to William J. Maxion, vicepresident of Case-Hoyt Corporation, Rochester, an executive at the age of 32; Allen J. Flattery, 35, Syracuse attorney, and Robert E. Walk, General Motors engineer and city alderman of Lockport.

Explaining that the Jaycees will support any number of worthy causes in the community, Miller recalled that nationally the organization is committed to support the Hoover Commission proposal.

"There is nothing more important," he said, "than for each of you to go home and learn about the local political organization setup. Start getting active in the wards and districts so you can make your influence felt where it counts.

Make Active Contribution

"You will soon learn how the community machine works in the party of your choice. You will be able to make an active, grass roots political contribution that every individual must resolve now to make.

"In Rochester we look on the Junior Chamber of Commerce as one of the hardest working and most effective public service agencies."

c. (B3/f62)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, February 4, 1950

Schwartzwalder Predicts Platoons Will Go; Stars Honored at TD Fete
1273

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By CHARLIE WAGNER

The controversial two-platoon system in football will eventually wear itself out and the boys will go back to playing in both the offense and defense departments of the game.

Floyd Schwartzwalder, grid coach at Syracuse University, made that prediction and applied a new twist in the argument against platoon football last night, when he was in town as a guest at the annual awards dinner of the Touchdown Club of Rochester at the Chamber of Commerce. More than 600 attended the highly successful affair.

Talking with newspaper men before the dinner Schwartzwalder declared:

"The two-platoon system is popular and effective now, but in time the pendulum will swing the other way."

Here's how Floyd arrived at that conclusion. "Many players do not like the system. I have heard complaints made by players who upon leaving a game have remarked that they hardly had time to get warmed up before giving way to the opposite platoon."

The Syracuse mentor believes that players working out in separate specialist groups robs the team of esprit de corp. He predicts that in time "team spirit" will suffer to the point that coaches will voluntarily discard the system . . . .

Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Company and chairman of the Mayor's War Memorial Committee, discussed the proposed War Memorial and emphasized its potential benefits to the sports life of the community.

Miller paid tribute to the work of committee members in planning the War Memorial. He specifically praised James Burke, George Clancy, Tom Lee, John Remington and Ed Cristy, legal adviser, for their individual contributions . . . .

PHOTOS:
(6)
Grid, Baseball Notables Put Kick in Touchdown Club Fete

d. (B3/f62)

PHOTO:

Curator's note:
This picture can probably be dated mid-February 1950. See Gertrude Samuels, "Touring With Marshall of the Red Cross," New York Times Magazine, Feb. 26, 1950, p. 7+, which shows another photograph of General Marshall at a Red Cross dinner in Rochester.

--whp 18 feb 85

LOCAL RED CROSSERS MEET THEIR CHIEF OF STAFF

Gen. George C. Marshall (second from left) addressed the Rochester Red Cross Chapter last night as new national president. Others at the speakers table, from left, are Paul Miller, chairman of the local chapter's 1950 fund drive; Edward Peck Curtis, local chapter chairman; And Mayor Samuel B. Dicker. An overflow crowd . . . .
1274

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

e. (B3/f62)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Tuesday, March 14, 1950

Red Cross Fund Campaign Goes Over Top With $409,968 Total 2.8 p.c. Past Goal; 5,000 Workers Turn in 70,768 Pledges

Victory Scored Despite Bad Weather

The Red Cross campaign in Rochester and Monroe County last night edged over the top with pledges totaling $409,968, which was 102.8 per cent of the $398,620 goal.

Announcement of the achievement, by Chairman Paul Miller, brought a frenzied cheer from the nearly 1,000 team captains, division leaders and branch chairmen who crowded the banquet hall of the Chamber of Commerce at the closing meeting. They had nervously watched the head table, as the reports were brought in, for some sign as to how the figures were running.

13 Days Bad Weather

The 5,000 campaign workers had been hampered throughout the 13-day drive by bad weather, and the number of individual pledges they had obtained, 70,768 attested to the effort they had out into the work . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:
Red Cross campaign workers, tired after their 13 days of almost continual seeking of funds in The annual drive, last night (left) burst into wild cheers as it was announced that the campaign was over the top. Chairman Paul Miller and "Gray Lady" Betty Youngman look with pleasure (above) at the figures which show the final result. Workers reported 70,768 pledges.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

f. (B3/f62)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
April 11, 1950

Legion Honors Editor
For Work on Memorial

The Citizenship Medal of the National American Legion was awarded to the chairman of the Mayor's War Memorial Committee last night.

The award was made to Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, at a dinner meeting of Yerkes-Couchman Post at the 40 & 8 Home in University Ave.

CIVIC SERVICE LAUDED

Bruce Perry, past county commander of the Legion, made the presentation, which had been approved by the National Legion on specific recommendations by the Yerkes-Couchman Post.

The citation read:

"For an awareness of civic needs; for leadership in civic enterprise, especially for his efforts in bringing the Community War Memorial to the point of actuality; for his concern, as twice chairman, with the success of the fund drives of the Rochester Chapter, American Red Cross, and finally, for his participation in many other local endeavors prompted by the public interest."

MEMORIAL NEEDED

In responding, Miller declared that the achievements of the Mayor's Committee, formed to bring Memorial action to a head, "have resulted from a unanimous belief of the members of that group that the Community War Memorial is needed and wanted by Rochester."

"Whatever this committee has done to assure building of the Memorial," he said, "has been done also with wholehearted agreement that the responsibility of city authorities shall be to see that the administration of the Memorial shall be entrusted to a non-political, non-partisan group that will guarantee equitable benefits for all." . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:
PAUL MILLER (right) accepts medal from Bruce Percy.
Looking on is Lewis A. Garvey.

g. (B3/f62)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Tuesday, April 11, 1950
1276

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Legion Honors Miller
With Citizenship Award

For an "awareness of civic needs and leadership in civic enterprise," Paul Miller, vicepresident of Gannett Company, Inc., last night was awarded the Citizenship Medal of the National American Legion . . . .

PHOTO:
FOR OUTSTANDING CIVIC WORK

Caption:
Paul Miller, left, vicepresident of Gannett Company, Inc., was Awarded the Citizenship Medal of the National American Legion last night by Bruce Percy, commander of Yerkes-Couchman Post, at dinner meeting at 40&8 Club. Miller has served as Chairman of Mayor's War Memorial Committee, twice headed Financial drives of red Cross. Award was sponsored by post.

h. (B3/f62)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
August 31, 1950

(1.) PHOTO:
Joe Fan Joins Dewey, Hanley, Keating, Stranahan in Praising Urzetta

Caption:
John Ward Oscar Guifoil James Weldon Gordon Callaghan Herman Altman Paul Miller
Frank Weinberg Sam Urzetta Frank Commisso Frank (Babe) Urzetta Rev. Silas P. Rooney Carmen Urzetta

PHOTO
Caption:

PICTURE OF URZETTA and Frank Stranahan
Will hang at Irondequoit Country Club commemorating Sam's triumph. It was prepared by Dr. John R. Williams of Oak Hill. Posing with photo are, from left, Herman Altman, Sam, Frank Weinberg and Carmen Urzetta.

Urzetta, the Speaker,
Steals Show Before
More Than 400 Admirers

By RALPH HYMAN

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Sammy Urzetta is fast making a habit of stealing the show, whether it be his game of golf or public speaking.

More than 400 Urzetta boosters filled Irondequoit Country Club to capacity last night to pay tribute to their champ. They heard the congratulatory message of Gov. Dewey, Lt. Gov. Joe Hanley, Congressman Kenneth B. Keating, James D. Standish, president of the United States Golf Association, and the golfer Sam conquered in 39 holes for the Amateur Championship, Frank Stranahan. But when it was all over, probably the simple words of the champ himself were those that touched the people most.

URZETTA MESSAGE

"First of all, I want to thank my mother and father, for without them there would be no champion today. I want to thank Father Silas (Rooney) for giving me an education and making me a better citizen. I want to thank my brothers and Frank Commisso for all their help. I want to thank the press and radio for their interest in me. There are so many I want to thank, that I can't bring them all to mind.

"But most of all, I want to thank God for making me a member of the USA."

That was it; a few words spoken straight from the heart from the guy his "teacher" Frank Commisso calls "the greatest champion I've ever seen."

Others heard from last night were the Rev. Benjamin Goldstein, secretary of Irondequoit Country Club, who delivered the invocation; Toastmaster Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union . . . .

MILLER LAUDS CLUB

Toastmaster Miller praised Irondequoit Country Club for its part in developing Rochester's newest national champion:

"When Sammy Urzetta was just another fine young golfer to most of us, there were those at Irondequoit Country Club who sensed his potential greatness and began to do what they could to help him realize it. They have been with him all the way. It was only natural then, that tonight's testimonial dinner to Sammy should be not only that but also, and I know every outside guest here feels as I do – a testimonial as well to the members of this great Irondequoit Country Club. All credit for this wonderful occasion goes to the members of the club in general and to Frank Weinberg and the committee in particular, including Leo Kaplan, Mac Cowan and Robert hart. The rest of us are just happy to be aboard to help honor Sammy and his family and his club . . . .

(2.)

Sam to Appear
On "Toast of Town"

SAM URZETTA will be a special guest on Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town" television program Sunday when he will demonstrate the shots he used in defeating Frank Stranahan for the U.S. Amateur golf championship. The program will be carried over WHAM-TV from 8-9 p.m.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Urzetta, an old friend of Sullivan, will make a special trip to New York City for the broadcast.

i. (B3/f62)

Rochester Times-Union
Tuesday, September 26, 1950

Publisher Explains
Complex Task of
Presenting News Daily

The complex and many-sided task of bringing the news to Rochesterians every day was detailed by Paul Miller at a meeting of the Rotary Club today at the Powers.

The editor and publisher of The Times-Union told the Rotarians how world news comes to the Rochester daily newspapers, how it is edited and how the job of commenting editorially on the news is handled.

To make sure that sufficient material is available to provide the Rochester newspaper reader with all the news, Miller said, The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle:

1 – Subscribe to the three great American wire news services, The Associated Press, United Press and International News Service, any one of which "supplies more than enough news every day to fill any newspaper in the country."

2 – Maintain, in connection with the other 19 members of The Gannett Newspapers, a special news bureau in Washington – at a cost of from $50,000 to $75,000 a year, and a special bureau in Albany.

3 – Purchase special material of tremendous variety as part of a "never ending effort to produce newspapers as fresh and enterprising and useful as we can make them." Examples of these purchases which have appeared or are appearing in the newspapers are Gaylord Houser's best selling [sic] book, "How to Look Younger and Live Longer," David Lawrence's Washington Column, the Chicago Daily News service, pages of comic strips and special financial articles.

From all this material, the editor went on, the local news editors each day assemble a product designed to bring Rochesterians a full report of the news.

REAMS THROWN AWAY

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The editors of The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union throw away reams of copy from the news wires every day," he said. "Some of it is discarded because it duplicates, other copy because it concerns persons or localities of no possible apparent interest here. But each newspaper prints well over 100 full columns of news and feature matter every day, and we'd be pretty poor indeed if we weren't able to give you a comprehensive and interesting selection in all that space."

Miller went on to describe how from the stories which come in each day editors select those which seem to provide the best reports. "For example, you may have noted that in the war in Korea the main story one day may be credited to the Associated Press. On the next day, it may be credited to the United Press, and possibly the following day back to Associated Press or over to International News Service."

SEPARATE PAPERS

He pointed out that rules of the Associated Press forbid the distortion of the news by any of the newspapers subscribing to its service.

Miller explained that both The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle are edited to be separate, complete newspapers.

"The standing policy of the company which controls both is that each shall be complete," he said. "Now neither would be complete if there were a policy of disregarding a story in one just because it had already appeared in the other.

"That would be the easy thing to do, I suppose, and it is a policy that is followed in some cities where both newspapers are owned by the same company, as in Rochester. Obviously, it is a great deal more expensive to operate two complete newspapers than to operate two jointly edited newspapers.

"I have seen the other system in other cities at first hand. I know that Rochester has far superior newspapers as a result of this policy."

Miller asserted there is very little duplication of news reports in the two newspapers. As proof he showed the Rotarians a copy of yesterday's Times-Union in which he had checked in red pencil stories duplicating those which had appeared in The Democrat and Chronicle.

He pointed out that there were only a few stories so checked, and said that in each case duplication was necessary for full coverage of the news.

Miller's talk will be broadcast by WHEC at 10 tonight

The Rochester newspapers, he went on, have remained individual not only in the handling of news, but also in editorial policy ever since Frank Gannett acquired the morning newspaper in 1928.

Concerning editorial policy or "comment" on the news, Miller emphasized that newspapers have a duty to try to force the man in the street to reach his own decisions on the news of the day.

"Newspapers may not be able to force the average man or any other to think, but you've got to give us credit for trying," he said. The responsibility to comment on the news vigorously and honestly must be carried out, he observed, even though most people "do not enjoy reading what they do not want to believe."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

OPEN TO ALL OPINIONS

An example of this tendency, he said, is the fact that many people don't like to be told that the government in Washington, like any family, "can't spend more than it earns without going broke."

H stressed, however, that the columns of a newspaper must remain open to all segments of public opinion. He noted that both newspapers make strong efforts to encourage expressions of individual opinion.

"A newspaper isn't worth the ink used to print it," he said, "if it doesn't stand for something. Yet, it doesn't merit a nickel of anybody's money if it doesn't go out of its way, if necessary, to provide a forum, to give a hearing, to all who want to get a word in on whatever side."

j. (B3/f62)

*****

The Democrat and Chronicle
September 27, 1950

Newsman Explains Goals, Responsibilities of Press

It is the goal of The Gannett newspapers to give its readers complete coverage on world and community news.

There is no overall editorial policy of The Gannett newspapers, as such.

A newspaper should stand for something.

Workers on Gannett newspapers feel a responsibility to their readers and want their active interest.

Paul Miller, vicepresident and director of the Gannett Company, Inc., made those four major points yesterday in an address to the Rotary Club in Powers Hotel on "The News and the Newspapers."

"We welcome an opportunity such as this," he said, "to tell you how we work at our jobs, what we work with, and most of all, perhaps, what we are working TOWARD, as a brand new Rochester Times-Union is produced every afternoon, and a brand new Democrat and Chronicle every morning." . . . .

k. (B3/f62)

Rochester Times-Union
October 6, 1950

Gannett Gets Elk Citation
As Guardian of Free Press

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Frank Gannett has been awarded a grand exalted ruler's citation by Rochester Lodge of Elks.

S. William Rosenberg, the lodge's exalted ruler, said the award made in connection with National Newspaper Week, would be presented Oct. 18 at a Paul Miller Class initiation ceremony.

Miller is editor and publisher of The Times-Union.

Gannett is a long-time member of the local lodge. A reception committee for the Oct. 18 rite includes Edward I. Cristy, Emanuel Kovelski and Frank Miller. Mayor Dicker, lodge treasurer, will speak. The resolution honoring Gannett reads:

"Grand Exalted Rulers Honor Citation awarded to Brother Frank E. Gannett, publisher of the Gannett Newspapers, during National Newspaper Week, for his contribution to the maintenance of a free press and his unselfish and unswerving loyalty in perpetuating the principles of Elkdom in his newspapers; Charity, Justice, Brotherly Love and Fidelity and for his intense determination to keep inviolate all of the dignities, liberties and privileges of individuals for which our forefathers fought and died to insure our American way of life."

l. (B3/f62)

The Newsmagazine WE
December 25, 1950

TALK OF THE TOWN

By Archie LaBounty

Ever since the Brady case there has been a new topic of conversation, very secret at first, but which has now become the talk, not of the town, but of politicians, East avenue, and newspaper circles. Subject of this conversation is Paul Miller, editor of the Times-Union, and a vice president of the Gannett newspapers. When Miller came to town he was hailed as a great newspaperman who was going to do "things" for the Times-Union. And he is a great newspaperman. He knows the game from top to bottom and there is no question but had he tended to his newspaper business there would not be such a wave of criticism sweeping over his broad shoulders and well-set head.

But something has happened to Miller. At least that is what they are saying. By "they" I mean newspaper men on Miller's own staff, mechanical, business and editorial, and on the staff of the Little Old Lady of Main Street, the D&C. Also some politicians are getting in on the pow wow and not a few are saying that Miller is on his way out.

Asked about this newspapermen admit that there is trouble within the inner sanctum of the Times Union. At least two have said that Miller is scheduled to depart for an executive job with the Associated Press. All of which is very confusing in view of the very fine things that were said of him when he first came to Rochester.

———

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Too Much Dutch

There is no question about it, Miller is in Dutch with some very prominent people of the city. He is in Dutch with some of his own staff who, of course, dare not say so under penalty of a kick in the slats. He is in Dutch with Republican politicians for his attempts to usurp the powers of Monroe County's Republican leader. And it is reported that he is in Dutch with Frank Gannett, who announced himself against Dewey in the recent political campaign only to find Miller sitting in the driver's seat with a curt, "Now boss, you don't know what you are talking about. Dewey is our man and the Times Union will support him. Now please go sit on a tack until this campaign is over."

There is another report that Miller is in Dutch with John G. Corey, editor and publisher of WE. That isn't true. The opposite is true. Corey is in Dutch with Miller. Or so it would seem from the following incident that occurred several weeks ago:

Corey was walking down Exchange street from Police Headquarters. In front of the Times Union Building he was hailed by Gannett, who was sitting in his car. Gannett and Corey passed the time of day and discussed the political situation, which was off the record. Just then Miller came out of the TU Building and strolled over to the car. Gannett was about to introduce his editor to Corey (he didn't know that the two had previously met) when Miller popped up and said:

"Oh yes, we've met. He's the fellow who calls me a s.o.b. every once in a while."

Now that wasn't nice. Corey never called Miller any such name, not even off the record. Why Corey wouldn't dream of calling Miller such a terrible name.

Miller Invites Criticisms

Corey has, however, criticized Miller. He has criticized the TU editor for a number of reasons, most important of which is his seemingly [sic] desire to dictate to political leaders just how they should conduct their affairs. I have never heard of any political leader going to Miller to tell him how to run the TU.

In the very last issue of WE Corey was very critical of Miller. And he had every right to be. Corey is a newspaperman who believes that a newspaperman's first duty is to get the news and print it. A real newspaperman never, never uses the power of the press as a sort of blackjack to force political leaders to do something they don't want to do.

When Corey learned that it was Miller who led the delegation of ministers to Fred Parrish's office to demand the return of Dave Brady to City Hall as commissioner of public safety he could hardly believe it. Miller has a fine reputation as a newspaperman and he has a wealth of experience. He knows the ethical newspaper practice from the unethical newspaper practice. Consequently, it was hard to believe that the new editor of the TU would deliberately take the lead in forcing the wish of a minority group on a political leader who was having enough troubles trying to keep his machine in good working order.

This newsmagazine already has reported how Miller and an unofficial committee of ministers forced Parrish to order Brady's return to City Hall only to have the roof fall on their heads when the Brady bomb exploded. There is no need of repeating it here. But it has been pointed out before and it should be pointed out again that Miller went too far in his duties as an editor. He is his own worst enemy. The criticisms now hitting him from all directions are of his own making. Rochesterians have a habit of giving anybody anything they ask for. Miller asked for criticisms and he is getting them.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A Personal Matter

More important than anything else we've said in this column thus far is the report, from the Times Union, no less, that Miller no longer is in the good graces of his boss – Frank Gannett. Rochesterians know that Gannett allows his editors complete freedom in running his newspapers. But when it comes to the TU, it is an entirely different matter. The TU is Gannett's first love. That was the paper that really got him started in a big way. And he always was the editor until illness caused him to take things a little easy.

Now Corey is a publisher and he is also an editor. If illness lays him low and he employs someone to take his place, most assuredly he is going to expect that new man to run things as he, Corey, wants them run. If Corey had other papers in other towns he wouldn't care what they did, consistent with common decency and good newspaper work, as long as they made money. But his own personal paper, built along the lines he set down after years of hard struggling, would have to be run the way it always had been run under his editorship.

Another thing that is hurting Miller is the new attitude of some of Rochester's more prominent citizens toward him in the last few months. They simply can't see Miller interfering in affairs that are of no concern to him personally. In the case of Miller and his ministers calling on Parrish, the TU editor made it a personal matter.

Close to Blackmail

A good newspaperman or a good editor, if he held the convictions that were Miller's, would have written an editorial calling on Parrish to reinstate Brady in City Hall. That would have made it a matter of public concern. And there could be no criticisms. But to call on Parrish in person with several ministers giving him moral support or any other kind of support was out of bounds. For what Miller and possibly the ministers too, said in effect was, "Put Brady back at his job or else." And in any man's language that is a threat. In fact if it is not blackmail it is mighty close to it.

Al Moss, veteran political writer for the TU, is said to have received an order from Miller – after that meeting with Parrish – to write a story that Brady would return to City Hall. Everybody remembers that story. We here on WE have not questioned Moss about that angle because we don't want to shove him out on a limb. After all Moss is a member of the TU staff. And he is truthful. We don't want him answering questions that would embarrass him with his big boss.

It's too early yet to judge what all this is going to lead to. Maybe Miller will take that AP job if it has been offered. If he does everybody will wish him luck. He isn't a bad guy. The real trouble seems to be that the editorship of the TU went to his noodle and he felt that it entitled him to throw orders around outside of his own sphere.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

If only he would throw his weight (on the editorial page of his newspaper) around in such a manner as to erase some of the human misery in Rochester what a guy he would be. Thousands of our underprivileged citizens, most of them aged persons, would cheer him to the echo and in future political campaigns when the TU advised the election of certain individuals they would flock to his banner. As it is now the only banner these unfortunate people have to turn to is WE. That explains why support of political candidates by WE is far more important to men and women running for office than the support of the TU and D&C combined. (For verification see results of last campaign).

5. 1951

6. 1952

a. (B3a/f72)

Rochester COMMERCE
April 1952

PHOTO:

March 1952 – Rochester Chamber of Commerce (Paul, Toastmaster)

b. (B3a/f72)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
June 4, 1952

J.G. Hickey Honored By Clothing Designers

Jeremiah G. Hickey, 86-year-old "Grand Old Man" of the country's clothing industry and first and only president of the Hickey-Freeman Company, was honored by more than 300 of his colleagues last night.

He was guest of honor at a dinner meeting of the International Association of Clothing Designers last night in Hotel Seneca. The group is holding its 58th semi-annual convention here. Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, was the main speaker . . . .

c. (B3a/f72)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

November 16, 1952

4 City Club Speakers Chide Rochesterians In Explaining About 'The Kind of City I Want'

By PAT BARRY

Rochesterians got a bawling out yesterday from four of their fellow citizens.

Rabbi Philip S. Bernstein of Temple B'rith Kodesh accused them of "moral failure" to provide equal opportunity for all residents.

Joseph C. Wilson, president of the Chamber of Commerce, criticized Rochesterians for their "passion for conformity."

Mrs. Harper Sibley, a leader of churchwomen, declared "there is too much self-righteousness in Rochester – too much smugness."

And Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, pleaded that the city's divergent interests "get together on some of these plans and get them done" . . . .

By far the frankest remarks in the discussion were delivered by Rabbi Bernstein. He chided officials and public spirited citizens for "abandoning because of bigotry" a 1949 plan for low-cost housing development in the northwest section of the city . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

SHARP WORDS FOR FELLOW CITIZENS – Four community leaders who at City Club yesterday took Rochesterians to task for their faults, from left, Joseph C. Wilson, Chamber of Commerce president; Mrs. Harper Sibley, noted churchwoman; Rabbi Philip S. Bernstein of Temple B'rith Kodesh; Paul Miller, executive vicepresident, Gannett Newspapers.

7. 1953

a. (B3a/f72)

Gannetteer
March 1953

PHOTO
Caption:

PAUL MILLER, at microphone, participated in February ceremonies which marked the beginning of construction on Rochester's Community War Memorial, huge auditorium and recreation centers in the heart of the city. Miller has been chairman of the mayor's War Memorial advisory committee, organized in 1949.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

b. (B3a/f72)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
November 16, 1953

Editor Urges Joint City-Towns Action If Rochester Is to Continue Advances

Solution of local government problems thorough joint action by the city and surrounding towns was recommended yesterday by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, speaking at the windup of the Rochester Futurama exhibit.

Listing projects he said demand the close attention of all Rochesterians, Miller stressed three things that "probably will be necessary if Rochester is to continue major advances."

"These are: 1 – A system of joint financing; 2 – Elimination of duplication; 3 – Solution of problems from the metropolitan area point of view, rather than piecemeal attacks on isolated units. Much co-operation and some consolidation seem to be the keys."

First vice president of the Citizens Council for a Better Rochester, one of the Futurama's sponsor organizations, Miller addressed about 300 persons in the small auditorium of Rochester Museum of Arts and Sciences . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

PINPOINTED – The hoped-for center of future Rochester – a civic center – is indicated on map by W. Stephen Thomas, director of Rochester Museum of Arts and Sciences where Rochester Futurama closed yesterday. With him are, from left, Molly Taylor, member of Women's Council of Chamber of Commerce, a sponsoring organization; Margaret Weston, president of Council. Exhibit opened Oct. 18.

c. (B3a/f72)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
November 18, 1953

THE FUTURAMA

It Can Become Our Future-Reality

By PAUL MILLER

(Digest of an address at closing of Rochester

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Futurama, Museum of Arts and Sciences,
Sunday, Nov. 15, 1953)

The question most often asked by visitors to the Rochester Futurama was: "OK, when does all this come to pass?"

Some implied that Rochester ought to be made over into a combination of Paris, Hollywood and New York, in one grand, sweeping renovation.

But it is doubtful that this is what many really would desire, even if it were feasible. Most of us like our Rochester, basically, pretty much as it is.

But there are many things that can be done, should be done and will be done.

To quote L. R. Blanchard, editor of The Democrat and Chronicle: "The Futurama can become our Future-reality!" . . . .

The Rochester Futurama, a display of ideas for the community's future, was viewed by nearly 25,000 at the Museum from Oct. 18 through Nov. 15. Cooperating in presenting i were the Women's Council of the Chamber of Commerce, the Citizen's Council for a Better Rochester, the Museum staff, and members of The City Planning Commission.

(3) PHOTOS:

THE FUTURAMA: Portion of Exhibit.

INNER LOOP: Completed Section.

WAR MEMORIAL: It Is Taking Form

8. 1954

a. (3a/f73)

(1.) THE BINGHAMTON PRESS
BINGHAMTON, NEW YORK

FRED W. STEIN
EDITOR

January 12, 1954

Dear Paul,

I thought you might like to see how your picture reproduced after it came over wirephoto.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Warmest regards,

Fred (signed)
Fred W. Stein

FWS:nf
Enclosure

(2.) PHOTO
Caption:

GANNETT AWARD TO GIEL – Minnesota's Paul Giel keeps reaping the awards. This one, the Gannett Newspaper Award, for winning an Associated Press poll as the nation's No. 1 back, was given him by Paul Miller (right), vice-president of the Gannett Newspapers at a press-radio polio benefit dinner in Rochester last night. At the same dinner, Ben Hogan was named "Professional Athlete of the Year" and winner of the Hickok gold belt.

b. (B3a/f73)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
March 25, 1954

Speakers Named for Dinner Of Lincoln Republican League

Federal, state and city governments will be represented Saturday night at the Lincoln Republican League diner in honor of Carl S. Hallauer at the Sheraton Hotel . . . .

As representative of the city administration, Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, toastmaster, will introduce . . . .

c. (B3a/f73)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Sunday, March 28, 1954

1,500 Turn Tables, Honor Carl Hallauer At Testimonial Fete

The role was reversed for Carl S. Hallauer last night. An outstanding civic leader whose affability and amiable wit have caused him to be drafted as toastmaster at scores of testimonial dinners for others, found himself guest of 1,500 persons who gathered in his honor at the Sheraton Hotel.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Persons prominent in the business and political life of the nation, state and city attended the dinner, which was sponsored by the Lincoln Republican League.

Chief speaker was Rep. Jacob K. Javits of New York City, member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Javits arraigned Republican congressional foes of certain phases of President Eisenhower's program for the nation, among them Sen. Joseph McCarthy. These men, he held, endanger chances of the Republicans winning congressional elections next fall. (Details, Page 1-A.)

Other speakers, introduced by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett newspapers and toastmaster for the affair, were . . . .

Miller read numerous telegrams from prominent friends of Hallauer who were unable to attend.

Included was a letter from Governor Dewey, who, letting the bygone of the 1952 convention be a bygone, as Miller pointed out, hailed Hallauer as a leader in every good cause and a man who never let creed, race or color stand in the way of his friendships.

Other letters were from former President Herbert Hoover, Vice President Richard M. Nixon [James A.] Farley (who cabled his regrets while enroute to France), Frank Gannett, Spyros Skouros, president of Twentieth Century-Fox; Ralph S. Damon, president of Trans-World Airlines; Leonard W. Hall, chairman of the Republican national Committee; Senator Styles Bridges and Joseph M. Martin Jr., Speaker of the House . . . .

d. (B3a/f73)

*****

[Cover]

(1.) Testimonial Dinner

TENDERED TO

CARL S. HALLAUER

INDUSTRIAL AND CIVIC LEADER

BY THE LINCOLN REPUBLICAN LEAGUE
OF ROCHESTER, N. Y.
HOTEL SHERATON
MARCH 27, 1954

[Inside]

EVEN AS A TEEN-AGER hawking newspapers on Front Street, Carl Swift Hallauer liked people. More than anything else, this inherent interest in others and their problems has made him one of Rochester's favorite citizens . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(2.) PHOTO:

1954-4A

Carl Hallauer
Harry Crowley
B. E. Finucane
Paul Miller

e. (B3a/f73)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
March 29, 1954

Ross to Get Aquinas Ring Award

Barney Ross, former lightweight and welterweight champion of the world, will receive the first annual "Mission Bouts Award" at the Sports Arena Thursday night when 22 Aquinas Institute boxers compete for titles.

The presentation will be made by Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Newspapers . . . .

f. (B3a/f73)
*****

The Sun
April 1, 1954

Political Polka

By CURT GERLING

Hy Mandell and all his years with pestle and mortar never compounded a better prescription than the annual Lincoln Republican Club dinner that honored Carl Hallauer at the Sheraton Saturday night.

Usually such affairs are tedious. The speakers uninspired drone on and on, the food cold, the room hot and smoky. The Hallauer dinner was a glorious exception.

Paul Miller, Rochester's handsomest publisher, acting as emcee, handled the proceedings with a deft hand and humorous tongue. His frequent allusions to the track scandals via the wise crack drew numerous laughs and warmed up what could have been a cold affair. If Miller can be as consistently amusing, he should fire one or more of his columnists and do a writing stint himself.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

After the Gannett publisher set the formula and established the tempo no one let him down . . . .

Many speakers touched on the subject of Carl Hallauer's willingness to help everybody, anybody – and it was certainly no understatement. If all the guys, big and little, for whom Hallauer has devoted time, thought, and influence were present the armory wouldn't have been big enough to hold them . . . .

All-in-all, it was a highly successful dinner and it couldn't have happened to a nicer, or more deserving guy.

g. (B3a/f73)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
April 1, 1954

'King' Mahoney Night

Aquinas Mission Bouts Slated at Sports Arena

Award presentations, a new ring dedication and ceremonies honoring the memory of the late Ernest (King) Mahoney will add glamor to tonight's 17th annual Aquinas Mission Bouts at the Sports Arena . . . .

Barney Ross, former lightweight and welterweight champion of the world, and the Rev. Frederick P. Gehring, famed "Padre of Guadalcanal," will be guests of honor. Ross will be awarded the first annual Aquinas Mission Bouts Award for his outstanding service to his country during World War 2 and more recently for his contribution towards combating juvenile delinquency. The presentation of the award will be made by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers. Ross will referee one of the bouts.

To the outstanding boxer on the program will go the Ray Hickok Award . . . .

PHOTO:

DON CORBETT
. . . on Aquinas ring card

h. (B3a/f73)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
April 1, 1954

Here for Mission Bouts

Barney Ross Likes

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Bobo in Title Defense

By RALPH HYMAN

Barney Ross, first fighter to hold two titles – lightweight and welter – who later became a hero of a bigger fight, World War II, likes Bobo Olson in his middleweight defense against Kid Gavilan tomorrow night in Chicago . . . .

Barney is now public relations man for crooner Eddie Fisher.

Ross will be presented with the first Mission Bouts Award tonight by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers . . . .

*** * ***

ROSS was born in New York City on Dec. 23, 1909. When he was 3 years old, his family moved to Chicago, where his parents opened a grocery store. His father was killed in 1923 when a gunman held up the store. Barney was 14 then.

A few years later Barney turned to the ring to earn money t support his mother and four brothers and a sister.

In 1933 he defeated Tony Canzoneri for the lightweight title and the following year he conquered Baby Face Jimmy McLarnin for the welter crown.

During World War II, Ross enlisted in the Marine Corps and was in on some of the roughest and toughest fighting of the war at Guadalcanal where he won the Silver Star for gallantry in action. Ross will meet with some Marine Corps veterans of Pacific battles at a reception at Hotel Rochester following the bouts. That reception is open to all.

PHOTO:

BARNEY ROSS

i. (B3a/f73)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
April 2, 1954

Aquinas Star Double Winner

Tierney Cops Ring Title After Conquering Polio

By RALPH HYMAN

1293

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Few among the 4,500 people who saw 15-year-old Dick Tierney win the award as the outstanding boxer in the Aquinas Mission Bout finals at the Sports Arena knew that here was a lad who had won a far bigger fight before last night.

Four years ago Tierney lay in a bed at Strong Memorial Hospital, suffering from polio. He was there for two weeks, and when the doctors sent him home they told him the only thing that would cure his bad back and stiff neck was exercise . . . .

Tierney, one of eight children, was a guest at the Rochester Press-Radio Club Polio dinner in 1950. There he met Ezzard Charles, then heavyweight champion of the world . . . .

It was after meeting Charles and other celebrities of the sports world that Tierney decided he wanted to become both a boxer and a football player. He has relived both ambitions . . . .

Just before Tierney had climbed onto the canvas, his 18-year-old sister, Mary, had told him: "If you don't beat 'Angie' I'll beat you as soon as you get out of the ring." Her threat accomplished its purpose. Acclaimed as the top boxer on the 11-bout show, Tierney received the Ray Hickok award, a beautiful gold trophy donated in memory of Ray's father, S. Rae Hickok . . . .

Just after intermission, Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Newspapers, gave the Mission Bout Award to [Barney] Ross, who stopped here before going on to Chicago for the Bobo Olson-Kid Gavilan fight tonight . . . .

(2) PHOTO
Captions:

OUTSTANDING – Dick Tierney and his mother, Mrs. Richard D. Tierney, admire trophy presented him by Ray Hickok last night as outstanding boxer on Aquinas Mission Bout card. (Photo by Times-Union staff photographer Len Maxwell.

DEDICATION – The Ernest J. (King) Mahoney dedication plaque is presented to Father Arthur Looby by Martin Gullen as barney Ross, former boxing great, looks on. Ceremonies marked dedication of new boxing ring in honor of late King Mahoney.

j. (B3a/f73)

The Rochester Sun
April 15, 1954

E D I T O R I A L S

Civic center site protest heartening

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A decision important to the future of this city is being made in City Hall . . . where to locate the proposed new civic center.

It's a pity that so few Rochesterians are taking a vital interest in this matter. Because this new building must inevitably label the direction in which City Hall hopes to point our downtown development.

After a study made by the City Planning Commission, it was recommended that the new city-county building be located on the Spring-Exchange St. site.

We do not need to wonder where the impetus for that decision came from. Whether the old boys on the Planning Commission realize it or not, they were steered into that choice by the hierarchy of the Gannett newspapers.

If the civic center could be kept in that area, adjacent to the present Times-Union headquarters for the Gannett enterprises, there would be every reason to feel that the city was not moving away from the spacious offices of Paul Miller & Company.

But top officials of Rochester's five largest downtown retail establishments – Sibley's, McCurdy's, Forman's Edwards' and Neisners' – had the courage to come out against that site.

They recognized long ago the natural trend of business to the eastern side of the downtown district by the very location of their stores. They feel, and justifiably so, that the building in which the city's business is transacted, should be where it is convenient for the majority of people.

Obviously, anyone who comes downtown to do necessary shopping would be definitely inconvenienced by going to the other end of town to transact city business.

Besides, there are other important factors – aesthetic and practical – against the Spring Street location.

It is heartening to see these leading merchants showing the courage and leadership necessary to prevent the city from making a vital mistake – even if their action doesn't meet with the approval of the Gannett Empire.

k. (B3a/f73)

*****

Ogdensburg (N.Y.) Advance-News
May 9, 1954

THE POT OF GOLD

There is an old saying that a pot of gold lies at the end of the rainbow but no one has ever sought to reach it because they believed it unattainable.

This thought must have recurred to countless North Countrymen when they read last Thursday afternoon the almost incredible news that the House of Representatives passed the St. Lawrence Seaway bill after it had hung fire in Congress for fifty years . . . . After scant debate the Senate by a decisive vote passed the bill authorizing the United States to join with Canada in the project, the last great power and navigational proposal in North America. Its opponents were still confident they could beat it in the House but it quickly ran the gamut with a minimum of talk by a vote of 242 to 197. Hallelujah! . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It's been a long pull and a hard one. Congress has given the green light and President Eisenhower will put his John Hancock to the document in due course.

LET'S GO! AND THAT INCLUDES THE BRIDGE!

l. (B3a/f73)

*

Rochester Times-Union
May 17, 1954

Early Birds Breakfast in Rural Setup

Old MacDonald's Farm moved into Hotel Seneca today for the Early Birds breakfast of the Rochester Convention and Publicity Bureau.

The setting of the ballroom was rural, with a group of hotel managers decked in farmers' duds distributing the eggs and the chickens.

The theme, however, was industrial as J. Allen Doyle, executive secretary of the bureau told the group that he credited industries in creating the appeal that has made this one of the most popular convention cities.

He pointed out that in the past year 284 conventions have brought 120,000 visitors here. At the estimated rate of $50 spending by each of the visitors, the revenue [coming] into the city totaled $6,200,000.

* * *

DOYLE SAID that 116 conventions already are booked for Rochester between now and May of 1958. This figure does not include the ABC Bowling Congress which is scheduled to be held in the new Community War Memorial in 1956, and which will attract 183,000 visitors . . . .

* * *

THE BUREAU re-elected its entire slate of officers headed by Joseph L. Myler, secretary-treasurer of Neisner Brothers, Inc., as president. John W. Remington, president of Lincoln Rochester trust Co., and Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, were added to the directorate . . . .

m. (B3a/f73)

*

Democrat and Chronicle
May 27, 1954

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Subway Aids Traffic, Toronto Tells Group

By FRANK DOSTAL

Toronto's new $50,000,000 subway has made deep inroads into the traffic congestion of that Canadian metropolis while more than tripling the capacity of the city's main thoroughfare.

It has accomplished this in less than two months' operation, according to the Toronto Transit Commission.

At the same time, it has speeded transportation within the city by more than halving the time required to travel the distance between one terminal and another.

These facts were laid yesterday before a group of Rochester civic leaders invited by Frank Gannett to visit Toronto to study the newly opened subway. Flown to the Canadian city in the Gannett newspapers plane were Alexander M. Beebee, president of the Rochester Gas & Electric Corp. and the Rochester Chamber of Commerce; Lee McCanne, Chamber executive vice president; harry B. Crowley, prominent Rochester businessman and chairman of the Zoning Board of Appeals; Councilman Joseph Farbo, and Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett newspapers . . . .

n. (B3a/f73)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
August 18, 1954

Monroe County Fair Stresses Farm's Role at 10th Opening

Other Picture, List of Prize Winners, Page 16

Today at Fair
1 p.m. – Tractor pull.
2 p.m. – Cattle judging.
7 p.m. – Demonstration by 4-H Club members.
8 p.m. – Stock car racing.

The Monroe County Fair, that annual festival to which city folks go to see what the boys are doing down on the farm, opened yesterday under a 35-acre town of tents.

The 10th edition of the fair – which has a heavy agricultural emphasis this year – was born at 7 p.m. JoAnn Witmer, Monroe County Harvest queen, declared the gates open officially, although people had been streaming into the East Henrietta Road grounds since noon.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paid attendance for the day was announced as 5,500.

Visitors found the fair as timeless as ever. There is the dance of bursting popcorn and the rows of meaty vegetables. There are spun sugar candy booths and farm tractors, circus wheels and dozens of grilling frankfurters.

And, of course, there is the freak show – Nature's Mistakes they call it this time. Every inch of it is a fair – colorful and ageless.

Fair promoters talk in superlatives and this year they have records in every category. The 4,500 exhibits are the highest number since the festival began. There has never been a larger farm equipment display nor a bigger midway.

It was Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers and the opening-day speaker, who characterized the event as a "fair of superlatives." He outlined two reasons for it.

"First, all of us – no matter what our training and background – admire successful farming," Miller said. "Monroe County has some of the world's finest farms and farmers; we like to learn all we can about what they do and how they do it."

Secondly, Miller asserted, there is a growing need for closer cooperation and better understanding between town and country. He indicated the problems of the farmer are more and more the problems of the city dweller . . . .

o. (B3a/f73)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
September 27, 1954

City Historian Reveals Data in Cornerstone

Dr. Blake McKelvey, city historian, gave out a list, revised and corrected, of the documents which were placed in the Community War Memorial cornerstone at a ceremony yesterday. The list:

Resolutions of the City Council providing for the erection of the building and establishing its character and organization.

Reports of the Mayor's Committee on the War Memorial, Dec. 31, 1949, Paul Miller, Chairman . . . .

PHOTOS
Captions:

MAYOR WELCOMES – As cornerstone-laying ceremony got under way yesterday, Mayor Samuel B. Dicker addressed large gathering attending historic event.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

MAIN SPEAKER – Flanked by red, white and blue bunting at cornerstone ceremony, Rep. Kenneth B. Keating of 38th District congratulated local veterans for returning to civilian life and taking up useful and productive work at home.

9. 1955

a. (B4/f1)

*****

THE SUN

REFLECTS THE LIBERAL VIEW

Vol. XVIII – No. 2

January 13, 1955

10 CENTS

ROCHESTER N.Y.

"Paul Miller has
A large lap"

SEE POLKA ON PAGE 14

Political POLKA

By CURT GERLING

Paul Miller, we trust, has a large lap. This past week the Gannett publisher had to make room for five more. Already crowded with City Hall sycophants, and other politically ambitious, Miller had to squirm a bit to welcome four men and a lady to snuggle against his vest.

The new lap sitters were Bill Foster, John Roche, Earl Arnold, Clayton Handy and Wanda Pietrzak who obligingly voted to ban anything stronger than pop at the new Auditorium . . . .

Although the vote was recorded in the daily press as a split vote of four-to-three and "secret," it actually was five-to-two . . . .

This secret business is not new to Rochester. It's a time-worn device for those lacking the courage to face their friends, the public and reality – a curtain for the cowards. It is hardly suitable procedure for those entrusted with civic and public responsibility.

The disservice that the five commissioners performed can not be counted immediately. The articulate minority that opposed the wet aspects of the vote are hardly those who will attend sporting events, but can be counted for all the free expositions. It will certainly mean at least $100,000 a year loss of revenue. After the first few years this is going to seem bigger than ever. Chances are that the Memorial may become another white elephant like the subway (The Gannett Co. is also for the subway, which makes it one of the largest collectors of white elephants in history. All at Rochester taxpayers' expense.)

It's not only the taxpayer who gets it in the neck but a couple of nice fellows who have been trying to do the impossible for Rochester, viz., Harold Rand "who is expected to make a profit" as memorial manager, and Don Foote who "is expected to make it pay civic dividends." Both the manager and Deputy City Manager are now invited to take the dive with two large anvils tied to their legs.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

If we have put Paul Miller on the hook we want to take him off, right here. He was only doing a job for his boss, declaring another dividend to the WCTU that loaned Gannett his first important $50,000. The fact that Miller is serving up the over bled Rochester taxpayer is quite beside the point and of no interest whatsoever to him. Nor is the fact of any consequence to Miller that once again a freedom has been violated by intimidation of those who are slaves to expedience and who would dodge behind the secret ballot.

Miller knows a thousand who would seek to curry favor with his newspapers. We doubt if he secretly holds them in high regard. The religion of his newspapers is the "dry" line and was when he was still in high school. It is apt to be for as long as Miller lives. He did a job for his boss and a job on the taxpayers. It isn't the first time either has happened in Rochester. It required as much skill as it did circulation to put over the minority's view.

Like many of the five who will now sit on his lap Miller has been known to take a drink himself, not as many as some of the "dry-voting" commissioners, but it's unlikely that if you were a guest in his home or elsewhere that he wouldn't offer "to buy" and join you in one or more libations.

It was not necessary for him to compromise his integrity in making the Memorial dry. He declared himself on the issue long ago. He was biased and admitted it editorially. Now that it is over, at least for a few years, his only concern should be how he is going to keep his pants pressed with all his "friends" clamoring for knee space.

Most anyday [sic] he should expect to spread himself a bit. George Rockas, proprietor of the Times Square Tavern opposite the Memorial entrance, is probably just as happy about the situation as Miller's boss Frank Gannett. Rockas will want lap room too.

NOTE: The "ayes" and "nays" on the voting are our own conviction. No member of the Commission violated the agreement of "secrecy" when queried. We add that we believe they voted the way they thought the public wanted them to vote. Our contention is that they voted under a Gannett brain-washing that made a minority opinion seem to them a majority one.

b. (B4/f1)

THE SUN
REFLECTS THE LIBERAL VIEW
Vol. XVIII – No. 2
January 13, 1955
10 CENTS
ROCHESTER N.Y.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

EDITORIALS

City may run Memorial pop stands

Most of the members of the War Memorial Commission are more than a little embarrassed by the decision they had to make – the one that decreed nothing stronger than soda pop shall be sold at the new civic structure.

They admit that the combination of pressure from the dry Gannett crowd and the refusal of the American Legion to take a forthright stand left them no choice.

However, this is something they will tell you privately but deny in public:

The Commission expects to "get off the hook" of this unpopular decision by having the city take over the War Memorial concessions. Since the law specifically forbids a municipality to sell liquors, this would solve the embarrassing dilemma in which the Committee finds itself.

But, if that does happen, it should not satisfy the public, whose dollars are paying for that building.

Nor would it meet with approval from private purveyors of food and drink to see the city enter into open competition with them.

Besides, what would it do to the GOP philosophy and its hatred for "creeping socialism?"

This may not come to pass. So far it is only in the rumor stage. But at least one member of the commission seems to think it is only a matter of time before the city itself takes over the concessions.

That would not only mark the day when "red ink" starts [to] flow on the Memorial operation, but it would be completely wrong in principle.

c. (B4/f1)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
January 18, 1955

Paul Miller Appointed Aide In Chest-Red Cross Drive

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, will be vice chairman of the joint Community Chest-Red Cross Campaign to be held May 5 to 16 . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

d. (B4/f1)
*****

COMMUNITY CHEST-RED CROSS Campaign of Rochester and Monroe County May 5-16, 1955

70 NORTH WATER STREET – ROCHESTER 4 NEW YORK – HAMILTON 3160

CAMPAIGN ORGANIZATION

The 1955 campaign will operate under policies similar to those established for the first drive. The Red Cross will be a partner and not a Red Feather agency.

The appeal will be called the COMMUNITY CHEST-RED CROSS CAMPAIGN OF ROCHESTER AND MONROE COUNTY, and will be organized and directed by a joint committee of the Chest and Red Cross, headed by John W. Remington. Chest President and drive chairman. Paul Miller, member of the Board of Directors of the Rochester Chapter, American Red Cross, will be Vice Chairman.

MR. Remington is President of the Lincoln-Rochester Trust Company. Mr. Miller is Executive Vice President of Gannett Company and Editor of the Rochester Times-Union.

e. (B4/f1)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
May 6, 1955

Enthusiastic Workers Kick Off 3.6 Millions Chest-Cross Drive

The players were poised, the conductor raised his Red Feather and the 1955 Community Chest-Red Cross overture started with a crash of enthusiasm last night . . . .

Paul Miller, vice chairman of the appeal, said it was encouraging to see the Red Cross again join the Chest in one campaign. He noted that the city will be better off as more separate drives are brought under one united tent . . . .

f. (B4/f1)

Democrat and Chronicle
May 29, 1955

Press Institute

1302

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Renames Miller

Reappointment of Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, to a three-year term on the advisory board of the American Press Institute, an affiliate of Columbia University, was announced yesterday.

The institute, in its ninth year, conducts a number of newspaper seminars during the year. Members appointed with Miller to the board were B. M. McKelway, editor of the Washington Evening Star; Ben Reese, former managing editor of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and M. H. Williams, executive editor of the Worcester, Mass., Telegram and Evening Gazette.

g. (B4/f1)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
June 4, 1955

8th All High Festival Band of 600
Salutes Retiring Music Director

A blast of brass, resounding through Highland Park Bowl, last night saluted a quiet, gentle man in black-rimmed spectacles who helped found the first All-High Music festival eight years ago.

The 600 bandsmen (and women) came from 11 Monroe County high schools to play tribute to Alfred E. Spouse. He will retire next month as director of music for Rochester public schools after 35 years service in his field . . . .

Park Bowl Crowded

Spoken praise was directed toward Spouse later in last night's program by city, county and school officials. The tribute culminated in presentation of a public service plaque to the music director by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers . . . .

Miller Offers Salute

In giving the plaque to the retiring music director, Miller said the sponsors of the All-High Music Festival were "happy to salute you and thank you for your rich service to this community, and to wish you long life and health". . . .

h. (B4/f1)

*****

Times-Union
June 4, 1955

7,000 Crowd Slopes of Park
For All-High Music Festival

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The music he helped nurture for 35 years thundered around Alfred Spouse last night in Highland Park Bowl . . . .

BEFORE THE MUSIC started the festival's sponsors paid tribute to Spouse for his 35 years of dedication to Rochester music.

A plaque expressing the community's appreciation was presented by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers.

In his salutation to the retiring music director, Miller called Spouse the "music genius of these festivals."

"Al Spouse always found ways to make a good program better," Miller said.

Spouse became supervisor of vocal music in Rochester East and West High Schools in 1920 . . . .

i. (B4/f1)

PHOTO:
[Paul Miller presenting plaque to] Alfred Spouse, June 3, 1955

j. (B4/f1)

*****

Times-Union
June 29, 1955

Police Aides Complete
FBI Refresher Course

Nearly 100 graduates of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's National Academy completed their annual retraining course today at the Sheraton.

Talks by John O. Henderson, U.S. Attorney from Buffalo, and Robert Garland of the Graflex Corp., wound up a series of lectures aimed at briefing police and sheriff's officers on the most modern crime detection methods.

The officers, members of the FBI National Academy Associates, New York Chapter, have been meeting at the Sheraton since Sunday.

*** * ***

AT A BANQUET LAST NIGHT the guest speaker was Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers. He urged continued cooperation between the press and the law . . . .

k. (B4/f1)

Times-Union
June 30, 1955

Newspapers and Crime News:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Why Print It? Does It Help?

* * *

Keeping the Wicked Straight

By PAUL MILLER

This special article by Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, is condensed from an address prepared for the annual banquet meeting of the New York Chapter, FBI National Academy Associates, June 28 at the Sheraton.

Newspapermen are frequently asked, "Why print news of crime? What good does it do?"

The honest answer has to be this: "The good" that publication does, if any, is not always the test of what to print. A newspaper is a mirror of life, or ought to be. As we say often, it is for the public to change conditions, not to blame the mirror.

However, the publication of accurate news of crime and misdeeds does serve a multitude of useful purposes.

For example, publicity can give a measure of protection to the speeder or the evil-doer – it can protect him against exaggeration of his offense.

If all the facts in a case are published, the public obtains a correct understanding of the matter, and is able to draw fair conclusions. If the facts are not published, gossip may exaggerate them.

A Reminder

For the Weak

And then the newspaper also offers frequent reminders that crime does not pay.

As a widely-known Nebraska editor and commentator once said:

"The true portrayal of crime and vice is repellent and preventive in its influence, for the story is always tragedy.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Realization that the risks outweigh the gains, the certainty of a bad ending, and above all the fear of exposure to the world in the press, operate to keep the weak and the wicked straight . . .

"The police ferret out the criminals, the law authorities prosecute, the courts pronounce the penalties, the prison-keepers carry out the punishment – the overhanging sword of publicity cools that criminal impulse and prevents crime."

* * *

THERE IS NOT a law enforcement officer who cannot recall instances on which newspapers or newspaper reporters have helped in the cause of law enforcement. Let's look at a few:

Agents of the FBI have seen the results of the periodic publication of their list of "Ten Most Wanted" criminals. The names, descriptions and often the pictures of the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted" men are published in newspapers across the nation. Many of these criminals have been caught because photographs or descriptions were recognized by store clerks, gas station attendants or others.

City and state police and sheriffs' offices also have benefitted from the publication of crime news and from cooperation of the press. Often an unexpected break can be traced directly to a news item.

We had such a case in 1950 right here. A Rochester businessman, Charles G. Lennox, was brutally slain by a hitchhiker near Canandaigua. Two days later, and more than 100 miles away, a hotel clerk cashed a Christmas Club check bearing Mr. Lennox's name. The clerk recalled having read of the slaying of a man with the same name. He summoned police. The hitchhike killer was arrested within a few minutes.

There have been countless instances in which newspapers have cooperated in the hunt for a criminal not by publishing information but by withholding. I know of no responsible newspaper which would fail to go along with a reasonable request to withhold some information on the ground that publication would hamper the work of law enforcement officers.

It may be a tiny thing, perhaps the fact that a murderer or holdup man dropped a button or key at the scene of his crime. Or it may be the fact that a kidnapper is negotiating with the parents of his victim.

* * *

IN THE SAME SPIRIT, newspapers across the land have helped to further traffic-law enforcement and traffic safety. There have been volumes of articles explaining the laws, telling what to do to prevent accidents, pointing up hazards of the road, exploring new means of cutting the traffic toll.

The reporting of traffic-accident news, and of traffic arrests, undoubtedly has been a deterrent to reckless and speedy motoring. Take Rochester:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The city police (as if you didn't already know it) started a tough campaign against speeding back in 1951. Since then they have arrested hundreds of heavy-footed motorists annually. And do you know what we have learned at the newspapers?

Many speeders fear the publication of their names even more than they fear paying the fine!

Hardly a week passes that reporters or editors here do not politely turn aside arrested speeders who attempt to cajole, bribe or threaten, to keep their names out of print.

* * *

NOW A WORD about a matter which does not concern many law enforcement officers directly, but on which you may from time to time have an opportunity to help, if you wish.

There are those who are working constantly to bring more and more secrecy into the conduct of public affairs. It's like a disease. It has spread in and from Washington in recent years with the growth of Big Government by bureaus and boards and departments that reach out to every crossroads. It even infects some local governments.

Although police officers and newspapermen work well together, for the most part, some in other areas of public life want to operate as far as possible from the full glare of publicity that you law enforcement experts know often can be a help. They may mean well, but they are as wrong as can be.

Now here's what I want to tell you about. The American Bar Association has urged for 18 years that newspaper photographers be barred from courtrooms. Some 14 states have made such a ban a part of their state law. Yet with modern equipment, a newspaper photographer can work as quietly and as unobtrusively as a court reporter. This ban then has been outmoded by scientific progress. Moreover, it is, I believe, quite out of character with America.

Lawyers in some states are taking a new look at their anachronistic position. They are sympathetic with that large segment of the press which is urging a review of the barriers to fuller understanding of the courts. Possibly some of you will have an opportunity to look into the matter. I earnestly urge you to do so if you can. More, if you agree with my position, talk it over with your friends of bench and bar. I know how much they respect your judgment.

The Way

To Understanding

I have spoken of our relations almost solely from the press's side of things because that is the side I know about. Nothing is perfect and that applies to relations between you and the press as to everything else. You and we have found over the years, though, that when we have a problem or a difficulty, there is one sure way to get understanding – even if not always agreement; that is, talk things over frankly.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Talk won't solve everything, but it will go a long way. Many times I have seen differences grow and be magnified out of all proportion just because they were covered up. Don't ever cover yours; continue to take your newspapers into your confidence.

Tell them the truth, promptly and fully. It's the No. 1 rule of "Getting Along With the Press."

l. (B4/f1)

*****

The Gannetteer
August 1955

CRIME NEWS

* * *

why do we print it?

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice President, Gannett Newspapers

Excerpts from an address prepared for the annual banquet Meeting of the New York Chapter, FBI National Academy Associates, June 28 at Rochester.

Newspapermen are frequently asked, "Why print news of crime? What good does it do?"

The honest answer has to be this: "The good" that publication does, if any, is not always the test of what to print. A newspaper is a mirror of life, or ought to be. As we say often, it is for the public to change conditions, not to blame the mirror . . . .

m. (B4/f/2)

*****

Times-Union
August 9, 1955

Fair Will Offer Free Dancing

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

There will be free outdoor square dancing every night during the Monroe County Fair which opens at the Fairgrounds in East Henrietta road next Tuesday.

The outdoor dancing is possible due to the efforts of 13 local farmers who volunteered their services this past week and built an asphalt dance floor. Equipment for the project was donated by H. Leonard Baughman and the asphalt was donated by John Odenbach. The area will hold about 300 persons.

* * *

THE FAIR will open at 5:30 p.m. next Tuesday with a motorcade of harvest queens from the County Court House to the Fairgrounds, where the annual Queens' Dinner will be held. Principal speaker at the event will be Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers.

Other events scheduled for this year's fair include the Joie Chitwood auto daredevil show on Wednesday, Aug. 17, and the Cherokee Ranch Rodeo on Thursday, Aug. 18.

* * *

ALSO on Thursday, which has been designated "Industrial Day," a pie 15 feet in diameter will be cut by Marilyn Kita, Monroe County harvest Queen. Gaylord C. Whitaker, honorary chairman of the board of directors of the fair will speak.

Saturday will see a model airplane contest held for the first time at the fair. The event is scheduled from 10:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. and 24 trophies will be awarded.

n. (B4/f2)

Times-Union
August 12, 1955

State Watching Drought Effects, Gannet Farms Neighbors Day Told

Upwards of 2,000 persons were present at the annual Neighbors Day at Gannett Farms yesterday to hear New York's agricultural commissioner discuss the effects of the recent rains and the preceding long drought.

According to Commissioner Daniel J. Carey of the Department of Agriculture and Marketing, the state is doing everything it can to bring relief to farmers whose crops were damaged by the summer's drought.

"The lack of rain is serious and we are watching it closely," he said. "I hesitate to ask the governor to declare an outright emergency. It poses many problems, some of which are not immediately noticeable."

Carey, introduced by Mrs. Frank Gannett as a "farmer's farmer who operates his own dairy farm near Groton and is active in farm organizations," said he would rather see some help given to bring hay and feed into the state. That would be better, if necessary, he said than to see farmers pay too high prices.

He added, however, "We fell there will be plenty of hay and it is relatively cheap at the present time."

* * *

PAUL MILLER, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers who introduced L. B. Skeffington, agricultural editor of The Democrat and Chronicle and of The Gannett Newspapers, as host for the event, explained the origin of the annual Neighbors Day.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"First, of course," he said, "they represent an extension of Frank Gannett's idea of making this farm of community-wide benefit. These meetings bring together those interested in the special work undertaken here in behalf of better farming."

During the afternoon and evening, visitors toured the modern farms in Middle road, Henrietta, to see the latest practices in agriculture.

Miller told how Skeffington, who operates the Gannett Farms, brought the idea of a neighborhood party for farmers and planned the first combined meeting, outdoor supper and demonstration in 1946.

* * *

"FROM THE start, Miller continued, "the idea was to make these acres serve a useful purpose – as a farm that would be like one any large farm family might operate, with the considerable difference that The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union would finance special studies and experiments here which it was hoped would have wide benefit."

Earlier in the day, Stanley Deuel of Riga was crowned champion of the county plowing contest. John Hauslauer of Scottsville was declared winner of the contour plowing contest.

OTHER PRIZE winners in the level land plowing were: John Zimmer of Riga, Robert Leigh of Webster and Richard Meisenal of Henrietta.

Contest judges were Carl S. Winkelblech, professor of agricultural engineering at Cornell University; Louis Emery of Penfield, and Raymond Goff of Rush.

o. (B4/f2)

*

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N.Y., FRIDAY, AUGUST 12, 1955

STATE MAPS DROUGHT AID,
GANNETT FARMS CROWD TOLD

The state is doing everything it can to bring relief to those suffering because of drought-stricken farms, New York's agriculture commissioner last night told the Neighbors Day throng at Gannett Farms . . . .

Host for the day at the farms in Middle Road, Henrietta, was L. B. Skeffington, agricultural editor of The Democrat and Chronicle and of the Gannett Newspapers. He was introduced to the evening crowd by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett newspapers, who told of the origin of the gatherings . . . .

Origins of Event

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Recalling that "Skeff" and his wife had a farm of their own near Williamson, Miller told of their custom of having their neighbors and friends in for an occasional get-together. After Skeffington took over operation of the Gannett Farms, he extended the idea of the neighborhood party to the farmers, with the first combined meeting, outdoor supper and demonstration being held in 1946" . . . .

(2) PHOTOS
Captions:

CHECK SOIL – Looking over land at Gannett Farms, Middle Road, Henrietta, during annual Neighbors Day program are, from left: Daniel J. Carey, State Commissioner of Agriculture; Robert S. Jonas, Monroe County soil conservation aide; Horton Almond, head of State Bureau of Marketing, and L. B. Skeffington, kneeling, manager of Gannett Farms and Democrat and Chronicle and Gannett Newspapers agricultural editor. Big crowd attended event.

BEST SOIL-TURNERS – Stanley Deuel, left, of Churchville, was best in flat land plowing contest, and John Hauslauer, right, won in contour plowing event.

p. (B4/f2)
*****

The Gannetteer
September 1955

Beans and a Bible Verse

Neighbors' Day at Gannett Farms is always an important occasion for farmers in the Rochester area. There are contests . . . a picnic . . . talks by farm leaders . . . and demonstrations of scientific research and experiments on the rolling acres of Gannett Farms . . . But last month there was something more—

EFFECTS of the mid-August rains ending the Rochester area's lengthy drought provided the chief topic of conversation at the annual Gannett Farms Neighbors' Day Aug. 11 near Rochester.

Afternoon and evening programs, attended by farmers and their families and other guests, consisted of a plowing contest to pick the entrant for a state match, a soil and water management tour, a tour of corn trial plots, general tours of the modern farms, a picnic supper, movies and square dancing. More than 1,500 visitors dined on hots, beans, salads and beverages. Several hundred more farm folk appeared after the meal . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Host was L. B. Skeffington, agriculture editor of The Democrat and Chronicle. He was congratulated by Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Newspapers, who told of the origin of the gatherings . . . .

SKEFFINGTON gave guests a new sidelight on farming – and newspapers. He said:

"Last year there was considerable interest in our limited experiments with liquid nitrogen . . . .

"We did learn a few things about how to live with a drought. Most of these were discussed in the field today. One thing which paid off, and about which I have been talking for years, was making a lot of grass silage in the spring. We canned grass until it literally ran out of our ears. This was a life-saver, because we began feeding it in June when pastures went to pot.

"I could discuss some of these things for hours, but you hear from me frequently. I do want to give you another item about drought. Last Thursday the temperature was about 97. Hour by hour the corn was rolling tighter and the parched brown color of the fields was becoming more general . . . .

Friday afternoon the weather was just as bad, or worse. I was given the privilege of selecting the Bible verse to appear on the editorial page of The Democrat and Chronicle Saturday morning. The verse from the 35th Chapter and 7th Verse of Isaiah read:

"'And the parched ground shall become a pool,
And the thirsty land springs of water.'

"I went home and told my wife it was going to rain, because the Bible verse in The Democrat next morning would say so.

"That evening we had three-tenths of an inch. Saturday we had a full inch. Sunday morning we had two-tenths.

"Someone may say this was coincidence. To me, that is beside the point. It did rain! I think there is a moral or two here:

"First, read your morning Democrat. Second, and above all, never discount the power of faith."

Under a caption, "And the Rains Came," The D&C next day editorialized on Skiff's success as Bible-verse selector.

PHOTO:

ANNUAL NEIGHBORS' DAY AT GANNETT FARMS

Caption:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

AT RIGHT: Daniel J. Carey, New York State Commissioner of Agriculture and Markets and principal speaker at Gannett Farms' Neighbors' Day discusses farm and marketing conditions with MRS. FRANK GANNETT and PAUL MILLER (right), Group executive vice president.

q. (B4/f2)

CHEVROLET
Auto-Graphic
VOL. 9 No. 5 DETROIT, MICH., SEPTEMBER, 1955 PAGE 1

ROCHESTER SPEEDSTER WINS '55 DERBY

Dick Rohrer, 14, Takes City's First Title

The 18th All-American Soap Box Derby was the big one for Rochester, N. Y., as Richard Rohrer, lanky giant of a boy, whizzed to victory and won the $5,000 first prize, a 4-year scholarship presented by Chevrolet.

Representing the Rochester Times-Union, the 14-year-old, six-foot, one-inch youth, reeled off the fastest heats of the race, defeating the Detroit and Long Beach champs in the finals.

One of the 11 original cities which have taken part in all 18 of the All-American events, Rochester never before had taken home the championship and had placed fourth and six in two previous years . . . .

r. (B4/f2)
*****

Times-Union
October 26, 1955

State University Money Woes Outlined at Grange Convention

Funds totaling more than 250 million dollars are needed to finance presently known "essential needs" of the State University of New York, the chairman of the university's board told 600 delegates to the state convention of the Grange in the Community War Memorial today . . . .

Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Co., today addressed the Grangers on the necessity for harmonious relations between city and rural peoples.

Miller stressed that "the farmer needs the city people to buy his goods, and that city people can't get along without farmers."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"It is apparent that each needs the other, so they ought to have close and harmonious relations. To my mind that is nothing more than being good neighbors and trying to understand the other fellow's problems," he said.

"I do not need to tell you that many city people have heard of the so-called 'farm problem,' do not understand it, and sometimes are confused by the attitudes of politicians and even farmers themselves," Miller declared.

*** * ***

NOTING that there often is disagreement even among the farmers and farm organizations, he said "Is it any wonder that your city cousins may be confused?'

To remedy this, Miller suggested, "I believe the best thing farm organizations could do for farmers would be to take more of our New York farm thinking to Washington and to your national organizations . . .

"It does seem that we should have more of this search for unity on a fair and sound program at the national level. If we could have this approach, you would have a more favorable legislative reception and it would be much easier to achieve the better public relations you desire."

s. (B4/f2)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
October 27, 1955

Grange Gets Warning
On 'Cheap Food Policy'

By L. B. SKEFFINGTON
Democrat and Chronicle Agriculture Editor

Farmers were warned yesterday that unless their organizations are alert to develop sound improvements to the farm program they are in danger of becoming victims of a national "cheap food policy."

"That is the situation today in England," Roy A. Battles of Cincinnati, assistant to the master of the National Grange, told the State Grange convention in the Community War Memorial.

"There is no reason why we can't have a policy for agriculture that will be fair to farmers and consumers alike. Someone may tell you that it is difficult to work out. Sure it is, but we have national labor policies and we have policies that protect business."

Battles said he could readily endorse remarks to the Grange earlier in the day by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, to the effect that "farmers are best qualified to develop the answers to their problems, and there is need for unity among farm organizations."

"We are working on that now," said Battles. He referred to a recent all-day meeting between executive committees of the National Grange and the American Farm Bureau Federation. "We got together and put a lot of cards on the table," he said. “After we study them over a bit I think we will get together again and explore the way to things on which we may agree.”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

‘Diminishing Minority’

Miller said that rural people, “a diminishing minority of the population, sometimes feel that their city cousins do not understand their problems and are not interested. Some are confused by the attitudes of politicians and by disagreement among farmers themselves.” He said unity and cooperation among farm groups could be as effective in winning legislation and public support at the national level as it had been in New York. “What you need to do is take some of your new York thinking to Washington.”

He told how this idea of unity of action had been put into effect in New York, largely upon the initiative of a Granger, the late H. E. Babcock. He said the latter helped to set up the Conference Board of New York farm Organizations, in which all major groups have representation. “First rule when the board was formed – and today – was that all decisions must be unanimous. None of the member organizations have lost their freedom.”

As opposed to this “New York idea,” Miller quoted from Successful Farming, that at Washington the various organizations present conflicting proposals. “Thus testimony of one organization cancels out the testimony of another organization before a congressional committee.”

‘A Shining Example’

Miller offered “a shining example of what we mean when we talk about being good neighbors,” in the persons of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woodhull of Webster. “The town of Webster had more Grangers than any other community in the country because of them,” he said.

“The Woodhulls have brought more than 800 members into Webster Grange. What we need is [sic] more good neighbors like the Woodhulls in every community.” He mentioned that “Bob Woodhull has worked out his own farm program” and quoted him: “We keep about 2,100 chickens. When the market is good we don’t boost production ’way up. We keep about our average, about what we can handle and market. Some years are lean, but they average out fairly well.”

“Maybe,” said Miller, “if we had more of this Woodhull philosophy we would have less worry about farm surpluses” . . . .

t. (B4/f2)

Times-Union
November 18, 1955

Kaiser Memorial Committee Named

Fifteen of Rochester’s leading citizens have been appointed to a committee to create a memorial to the late Dr. Albert D. Kaiser.

Mayor Peter Barry today announced the acceptances of all the members of the Rochester Committee for an Albert D. Kaiser Memorial. He said the © 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"representative group" has been asked to determine what best possible form the memorial could take and to explore the "best possible means of obtaining it."

* * *

MAYOR BARRY said he expects to call a meeting of the committee for either Nov. 28 or 29 and probably will appoint a chairman at this meeting.

He said he will expect individual members of the committee to offer specific suggestions on the form the memorial should take and that the committee as a whole will decide from these suggestions. After the nature of the memorial is decided, he indicated, the committee will decide if it should raise funds for the memorial project.

Business, labor, medicine, education, social service and the press are represented on the committee. The mayor said he made "absolutely no suggestion" to the members as to possible forms for the memorial.

Dr. Kaiser, city health officer and one of Rochester's most beloved citizens, died Nov. 1 at the age of 67. Tributes from officials and private citizens in Rochester, Albany and Washington cited his selfless, untiring efforts as a public official and his many years as a world-famous pediatrician.

Suggestions have been made by men who knew and worked with Dr. Kaiser that a "living memorial" in the form of a University of Rochester teaching chair, scholarship or grant be established. Other suggestions have centered on continuation of his public health work and dedication of a public building to him.

* * *

THIS IS the committee named today by Mayor Barry:

Raymond N. Ball, chairman of the board, Lincoln-Rochester Trust Co.; Alexander M. Beebee, president, Rochester Gas & Electric Corp.; Dr. Burtis B. Breese, president, Rochester Academy of Medicine; James L. Burke, president, American Federation of Labor Central Trades and Labor Council; Dr. Albert Chapman, president, Eastman Kodak Co.; Herman M. Cohn, president, Superba Cravats, Inc.; Dr. Corneli[u]s W. deKiewet, president, University of Rochester; Bernard E. Finucane, president, Security Trust Co. of Rochester; Harry D. Goldman, president, Council of Social Agencies who has been elected judge of the State Supreme Court; Dr. Gordon M. Hemmett, president of the Monroe County Medical Society; Gilbert J. C. McCurdy, president, McCurdy & Co., Inc.; Paul Miller, executive vice president, the Gannett Newspapers; Richard P. Miller, manager, Rochester Community Chest, Inc.; Howard C. Seymour, superintendent of schools, Board of Education; and Lewis B. Swift, chairman of the board, Taylor Instrument Cos.

u. (B4/f2)

*

Democrat and Chronicle
November 30, 1955

Citizens Group
Maps Memorial

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

For Dr. Kaiser

A citizens' committee laid the groundwork yesterday for a memorial to Rochester's famed health officer, the late Dr. Albert D. Kaiser.

At an initial meeting in City Manager Robert P. Alex's City Hall office, the committee named on Nov. 18 by Mayor Peter Barry chose its officers and launched plans for public participation in the memorial.

Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett newspapers, was elected chairman; Lewis B. Swift, chairman of the board, Taylor Instrument Cos., vice chairman; and Herman M. Cohn, president, Superba Cravats, Inc., secretary.

As designated by Barry, the function of the committee will be to decide on the form of the memorial, where it shall be located, what means shall be taken for contributions and finally, to supervise the actual carrying out of the plan decided upon.

Two task groups appointed by Miller yesterday – subcommittees on screening and on contributions – will advance the memorial plan . . . .

v. (B4/f2)

*****

Times-Union
November 30, 1955

Civic Committee To Sift Proposals For Kaiser Memorial

New subcommittees of the Rochester Committee for an Albert D. Kaiser Memorial begin screening suggestions tomorrow on the kind of memorial and plans for its financing . . . .

*** * ***

THREE BASIC POINTS were set down as criteria for the proposed memorial. They are:

Contributions must be spontaneous.

A public fund should finance the memorial.

The memorial may have more than one objective but the primary one must be health . . . .

w. (B4/f2)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
December 2, 1955

More Ideas Sought

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

For Kaiser Memorial

Suggestions from the public on a memorial for the late Dr. Albert D. Kaiser, nationally known city health officer, were screened by a citizens' subcommittee yesterday at a City Hall meeting . . . .

x. (B4/f2)
*****

Times-Union
December 2, 1955

Suggestions
For Kaiser
Honor Studied

A subcommittee screening suggestions for a memorial to the late Dr. Albert D. Kaiser is expected to report Monday to the citizens' group named by Mayor Barry to plan and carry out the project.

Paul Miller, chairman of the Rochester Committee for an Albert D. Kaiser Memorial, said Harry D. Goldman, head of the screening unit, probably will report to the full committee at a 3:30 p.m. Monday meeting in City Hall . . . .

y. (B4/f2)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
December 6, 1955

UR Chair of Public Health
Chosen for Kaiser Memorial

An Albert D. Kaiser Chair of Public Health and Preventative Medicine at the University of Rochester will be Rochester's memorial to the late city health officer, a special committee voted yesterday.

The professor's chair, which a committee resolution envisioned as the beginning of a Department of Public Health in the School of Medicine and Dentistry, would be supported by public contributions . . . .

z. (B4/f2)
*****

Times-Union
December 6, 1955

Health Leaders Hail

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Kaiser Memorial Professorship Plan

Local and state leaders in medicine and public health today expressed gratification at the proposal to establish an Albert D. Kaiser memorial chair of public health and preventive medicine at the University of Rochester . . . .

* * *

DR. DONALD G. ANDERSON, dean of the UR medical school said:

"One of the dreams closest to Dr. Kaiser's heart was the establishment of a department of public health and preventive medicine in the medical school which would closely link the school and the community he loved so dearly in the promotion of better health for the people of Rochester" . . . .

"Resolved that the memorial should be the establishing of an Albert D. Kaiser Chair of Public health and Preventive Medicine at the University of Rochester, looking forward toward the development of a Department of Public Health, the objective of which would be:

"Research and study on community health problems, joining the practical experience and organization of governmental health agencies with the Medical Center's great resources of talent and equipment for scientific investigation.

"Strong emphasis on community health problems in the training of physicians, preparing them to work most effectively with health officials.

"Further development of the already intimate and effective relationship of the laboratories of the Health Bureau and the Medical School.

"Training physicians for full-time careers in public health and preventive medicine."

aa. (B4/f2)

*

Times-Union
December 12, 1955

UR Hails Tribute to Dr. Kaiser

De Kiewiet Welcomes Professorship Idea

Dr. Cornelius W. de Kiewiet has officially welcomed the proposal to establish an Albert D. Kaiser memorial professorship at the UR medical school.

A statement in which Dr. de Kiewiet said the UR is "deeply honored and touched" by the proposal was read Saturday at a meeting of the citizens' committee which made the decision on the form the memorial should take.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The establishment of a professorship generally is the highest honor a university can bestow, and any university would be pleased to have a chair bearing Dr. Kaiser's name," the statement said. "But such an honor will take on special meaning in the university in which he studied and which he served so long as friend, teacher and trustee" . . . .

10. 1956

a. (B4/f3)

Times-Union
January 4, 1956

Memorial Dedication Unit Named

Ceremony Expected by End of Month

By KERMIT HILL

Mayor Peter Barry today named a five-man committee to plan the formal dedication of the Community War Memorial.

The dedication is expected to be held this month.

Named to plan the dedication of the civic auditorium are:

Carl S. Hallauer, president of Bausch and Lomb Optical Co.

Raymond N. Ball, chairman of the board of the Lincoln-Rochester Trust Co.

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Co., Inc.

J. Mallory Loos, chairman of the Monroe County Veterans Coordinating Committee.

E. Willard Dennis, chairman of the board of Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Co.

*** * ***

THE AUDITORIUM, built as a memorial to Rochester war veterans, was opened for business on Oct. 14 but never has been dedicated formally because it was not complete. A shrine room at the north end of the building is in final stages and other finishing touches are going on the structure now, paving the way for the delayed formal dedication of the building as a veterans [sic] memorial.

The dedication committee has scheduled a meeting at 4 p.m. on Monday, Jan. 9, in Mayor Barry's office in City Hall . . . .

b. (B4/f3)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
January 6, 1955

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(1.) Miller to Speak
At Dedication of Reserve Center

Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Newspapers, will be principal speaker at dedication of the $500,000 Army Reserve Center Sunday at 2035 Goodman St. N., Irondequoit.

The Reserve center will be named in honor of the late James W. Wadsworth of Geneseo, former congressman and senator and staunch advocate of military preparedness for many years . . . .

(2.) A Big Birthday Party

U.S. Leaders Honor Carl Hallauer

Friends of Carl Hallauer from all over the nation honored the Rochester industrialist, civic leader and political figure at a big birthday party last night.

Some 800 persons turned out in the ballroom of the Hotel Seneca to hear the popular president of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. and Republican State committeeman praised by religious, business and political figures on his 62nd birthday.

Speakers included Fulton Lewis Jr., radio commentator, who read the tribute he paid Hallauer on his nationwide radio hookup last night.

Guests at the banquet were representatives of both major political parties, industries, labor organizations and all the major faiths. Telegrams and letters were read from Vice President Richard Nixon; former President Herbert C. Hoover; Mrs. Robert A. Taft, widow of the Ohio GOP senator whom Hallauer supported in the 1952 presidential convention . . . .

Lewis' news broadcast last included a reference to the dinner and a reminiscence that Hallauer was the only New York State delegate to the 1952 convention to hold out against "the pressure exercised by Dewey" for President Eisenhower's nomination. Hallauer backed Taft to the end despite Dewey's attempt to turn the entire state delegation over to Eisenhower.

"And whether you agree with him or not," Lewis quoted his broadcast tribute, "his actions certainly demonstrate the character of the man" . . . .

At Speakers' Table

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers . . . .

c. (B4/f3)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
January 10, 1956

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

War Memorial Dedication
Set for 'Sometime in May'

A special committee voted yesterday to hold off dedicating the Community War Memorial until May.

Mayor Peter Barry said after a meeting in his City Hall office that the committee decided an "adequate" dedication program could not be arranged before Feb. 6, the date the American Bowling Congress takes over the giant auditorium for its annual national tournament. So the group will arrange dedication ceremonies some time [sic] in May, after the ABC has left . . . .

d. (B4/f3)
*****

Times-Union
February 22, 1956

Paul Miller
Renamed Chest
Vice Chairman

Reappointment of Paul Miller as vice chairman of the joint Community Chest-Red Cross Campaign, to be held May 3-14, was announced today.

Miller, executive vice president of Gannett Co., Inc., will serve with John W. Remington, general campaign chairman and Community Chest president. He served as vice chairman of last year's joint campaign and in 1949 and 1950 was chairman of the Red Cross campaign . . . .

e. (B4/f3)

Democrat and Chronicle
February 23, 1956

Miller Is Renamed
Vice Chairman of Chest-Cross Drive

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Co., Inc., has been renamed vice chairman of the joint Community Chest-Red Cross campaign.

The reappointment was announced yesterday by Arthur M. R. Hughes, chairman of the Rochester-Monroe County chapter of American Red Cross.

Miller will serve with John W. Remington, general campaign chairman and Community Chest president, in the drive to be conducted May 3-14.

f. (B4/f3)
*****

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Democrat and Chronicle
March 9, 1956

Community Tribute Given Rabbi Rosenberg

Rabbi Stuart E. Rosenberg was dispatched formally to his new pastorate in Toronto yesterday with a tribute from the men and women he served in Rochester.

About 300 Jews and Christians joined to honor the spiritual leader of Temple Beth-El at a luncheon in the JYM&WA. Dr. Rosenberg, who is 34, has been leader of the congregation since 1946 . . . .

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, reported that Dr. Rosenberg's weekly inspirational column in The Times-Union may soon be syndicated nationally. Miller said: "His conviction is that people need and want inspiration in their daily living" . . . .

g. (B4/f3)

*****

Times-Union
March 9, 1956

Best Wishes Accorded To Rabbi Rosenberg

About 300 Jews and Christians joined to honor Rabbi Stuart Rosenberg yesterday before he left for his new pastorate in Toronto . . . .

Also joining in honoring Rabbi Rosenberg yesterday were Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers . . . .

h. (B4/f13)

*****

[Source unknown]
March 12, 1956

Keating Dinner Has Advance of 600 Tickets

More than 600 persons have purchased tickets for the Rochester Bar Assn. testimonial dinner March 20 for Rep. Kenneth B. Keating of Rochester.

More than 700 are expected to attend . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Co., Inc. will be toastmaster . . . .

i. (B4/f13)

*****

ROCHESTER BAR ASSOCIATION

SALUTES KENNETH B. KEATING

March 20, 1956 * ROCHESTER, N.Y.

j. (B4/f13)

Rochester Bar Association

209 Powers Building

Rochester 14, New York

21 March 1956

Mr. Paul Miller
Executive Vice President
The Gannett Newspapers
Times-Union Building
Rochester 14, New York

Dear Mr. Miller:

The Rochester Bar Association is eternally grateful to you and your organization for the assistance you have given to us in the presentation of the Keating testimonial dinner.

As I told the audience last night, the work and skill exhibited has really been that of you and those under your direction and we, the organized Bar, appreciate so much your gesture in permitting all the credit to go to the Rochester Bar Association when in truth it should go to you.

We appreciate very much the fact that you personally, with Carl Hallauer, helped us out of a bad hole by having the reception at the Rochester Club. You know how grateful we are for this.

Again – our sincere thanks.

Yours very truly,

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

ROCHESTER BAR ASSOCIATION
J. Frank Traynor (signature)
President

JFrankTraynor:hp

k. (B4/f16)

Hickey-Freeman Co.
Rochester, N.Y.

GENERAL OFFICES AND FACTORY
1155 CLINTON AVENUE NORTH
ROCHESTER 1, N. Y.

NEW YORK OFFICE
EMPIRE STATE BUILDING
350 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

March 21, 1956

Mr. Paul Miller
55 Exchange Street
Rochester, New York

Dear Mr. Miller:

Mrs. Hickey and I were "among those present" at Ken Keating's dinner last night. We would like you to know that we feel you did a beautiful job.

Your manner of speaking causes your listeners to feel very relaxed, as well as very interested in everything you have to say . . . . and you do have something to say!

Sincerely,

Tom (signed)

TFGH:sdm

l. (B4/f16)

MRS. CAROLINE WERNER GANNETT

March 21, 1956

Paul dear:

As you know full well, I have attended "stillion" dinners and have listened to so many "m.c.'s," but I can say honestly that I have never heard anyone as good as you were last night. It was a unique idea to make the speeches for each and every member of the speakers table. But even beyond that clever innovation, I was impressed by your personality, perfect diction (could hear every syllable), a latent humor, and complete control not only of yourself but of the entire audience. All of these things contributed to an inspiring occasion.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

If I have "gone a little overboard," it's all right – because that's the way I feel.

Am sending you more material about creative and imaginative education. Guess you might have used it for your performance last night.

Devotedly always.
Kyrie. (signed)

m. (B4/f13)

R. WALTER RIEHLMAN

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WASHINGTON, D. C.

March 21, 1956

Dear Mr. Miller:

Please accept my sincere thanks for all of your generosities and courtesies extended to me when I attended the party in honor of Ken Keating. I thoroughly enjoyed the affair and you certainly contributed largely to my having a most splendid time. Please accept my thanks and good wishes.

Cordially,

R Walter Riehlman (signature)

Mr. Paul Miller
Times-Union
55 exchange Street
Rochester, New York

n. (B4/f13)
*****

(1.) Democrat and Chronicle
March 21, 1956

Keating Lauded by Colleagues,
Remains Mum on Senate Offer

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By JAKE UNDERHILL

Rep. Kenneth B. Keating's friends praised him with speeches and applause last night, but the Rochester Republican's decision on running for the U. S. Senate remained unannounced.

Declaring he did not know whether Keating wants to go to the Senate, House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R-Mass) said he was "selfish" but that he wants Keating "to stay with me" and become chairman of the House Judiciary Committee next year . . . .

The top-ranking Republican in the House recalled that in 1936 he had been offered an opportunity to run for the Senate, but turned it down because he believed that in the House of Representatives he best could serve the country.

President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon sent their praise for Keating in two of the scores of letters and telegrams received at the dinner. The President said he was happy to join in praise of Keating's "outstanding public service."

"They don't come any better than Ken Keating," read the message from Nixon . . . .

Congressmen Introduced

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, toastmaster for the dinner, introduced the prominent political, legal and clerical figures at the speaker's table . . . .

PHOTO:
Caption:

SALUTE TO KEATING—Rep. Kenneth B. Keating, above, acknowledges ovation of more than 700 who jammed the Chamber of Commerce last night to honor Rochester Republican at testimonial. House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr., at left, was speaker. Martin lauded Keating's leadership in capital.

(2.)

Martin Predicts Ike-Nixon Sweep

Friends Laud Keating. Page 1

November's election will bring an Eisenhower-Nixon sweep and a "substantial" Republican majority in the House of Representatives, the minority leader of the House predicted here yesterday.

Rep. Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R-Mass) said no Democratic candidate for president "has a chance" of beating President Eisenhower in November. The Republican leader shrugged off questions on who will receive the Democratic nomination. He expected Vice President Nixon again to be a candidate.

In the event of a republican majority in the House, Martin would be returned to the speaker's chair. Rep. Kenneth B. Keating of Rochester would become chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, Martin pointed out.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Keating will have to choose between the House chairmanship, "a very, very important and very splendid job," and running for the U. S. senate, Martin said.

The minority leader and a delegation of other House Republicans arrived here yesterday afternoon for the Rochester Bar Assn.'s testimonial dinner for Keating, who represents the 38th District. Martin was principal speaker at the banquet attended by about 700 in the Chamber of Commerce.

With Keating and Martin in The Gannett Newspapers airplane which flew from Washington were Reps. Hugh D. Scott Jr. (R-Pa), former Republican national chairman; Harold C. Ostertag, 39th District Republican, and William R. Williams, Cassville Republican.

A former Virginian, but an outspoken advocate of civil rights legislation, Scott said hopes of civil rights legislation were "blasted" by the naming of Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss) as chairman of the influential Senate Judiciary Committee. Eastland became chairman on the death of Sen. Harley M. Kilgore (D-WVa).

The Pennsylvania congressman said he recently told Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler that he had seen no evidence that Southern Democrats would give any consideration to civil rights legislation.

Bills protecting civil rights will get out of the House Judiciary Committee, said Scott, who was dubious about their success in the Senate Committee. He revealed that he has an appointment today with Deputy Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers to discuss possible civil rights bill. – UNDERHILL.

(3) PHOTOS
Captions:

SPEAKERS' TABLE – Camera shows focal point of speakers' table. Dining from the left are Rep. Harold C. Ostertag, Martin, Keating and Paul Miller, the executive vice president of Gannett Newspapers, who last night served as toastmaster. The Bar Assn. held the testimonial dinner in Keating's honor.

FELLOW LAWYERS – Rep. Frank Traynor, at right, president of Bar Assn., gives a warm handclasp to fellow attorney, Rep. Keating, after presenting him a plaque.

OLD FRIENDS – Mrs. Charles W. Weiss Jr., national committeewoman from Rochester, confers at dinner with Rep. Hugh D. Scott Jr., ex-national GOP chairman.

o. (B4/f16)

*****

Times-Union
March 21, 1956

(1.)

Keating Mum on Senate Run As 700 Pay Tribute at Dinner

By KERMIT HILL

1328

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rep. Joseph Martin Jr. of Massachusetts, Republican leader and former speaker of the House of representatives, last night told 700 friends of Rep. Kenneth B. Keating that the Rochester legislator "would be a great credit to this great Empire State" as a United States senator . . . .

(3) PHOTOS
Captions:

GUEST OF HONOR – Rep. Kenneth B. Keating waves in response to tributes.

"MR. SPEAKER" – Rep. Joseph W. Martin Jr., Speaker of the House in GOP congresses, delivers main speech and high praise of Keating to more than 700 of Keating's friends who gathered in main hall of Chamber of Commerce last night.

LEADS IN TRIBUTE – J. Frank Traynor, president of Rochester Bar Assn., leads applause for Rep. Keating. Traynor presented legislator a silver plaque on behalf of association.

(2.)

Posner Explains Refusal To Attend Keating Dinner

William N. Posner, Monroe County Democratic chairman, said today he refused to attend the testimonial dinner for Rep. Kenneth B. Keating of Rochester last night because he did not want to participate in the "political build-up" of a Republican who might be running against Sen. Herbert H. Lehman, Democrat, in November.

Posner said in a written statement today:

"Keating is being actively advanced by Republican leader Fred Parrish as a candidate for the senator nomination to oppose Sen. Lehman next fall. The dinner, I reasoned, and, judging from the newspaper accounts I reasoned correctly, would obviously be a Republican political buildup of Mr. Keating and we Democrats simply would not lend ourselves to any movement against Sen. Lehman, a great public servant who has the respect and affection of all real Democrats and also a multitude of Republicans. Any self-styled Democrat who helped launch Keating in his senatorial venture could hardly hope to stand up and be counted as loyal to his party."

(Joseph S. Rippey, candidate of the anti-Posner Monroe County Democratic Political Committee for the Democratic county chairmanship, was seated at the head table at the Keating affair. He was introduced as "a Rochester Democratic leader" and a member of the bar association which sponsored the Keating testimonial dinner.)

Posner added that he also felt "the bar association should not be partisan since it obviously is made up of both Democratic and Republican lawyers." The association "would do well to ponder the ethics of their action," he said.

h. (B4/f3)

*****

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

STECHER – TRAUNG
Lithograph CORPORATION

SAN FRANCISCO
CALIFORNIA

OFFICE OF
THE PRESIDENT

ROCHESTER
NEW YORK

274 N. GOODMAN ST
ROCHESTER 7, NEW YORK

March 27, 1956

TO THE STOCKHOLDERS:

On Wednesday, March 21, 1956 at 4:00 p. m., we held our annual stockholders meeting at the offices of the corporation in Rochester, New York. The total number of shares present by proxy and in person were 168,419 of the 187, 056 shares of common stock outstanding or 90.0%. The President Charles W. Weis, Jr., and Executive Vice President Ralph J. Wrenn made brief reports.

We are very happy to announce that Mr. Paul Miller, Executive Vice President of The Gannett Newspapers was elected to your Board of Directors, and Messrs. Richard C. Alden, Kendall B. Castle, Harold A. Carpenter, Leslie H. Jackson, Hal W. Johnston, John W. Remington, Kenneth C. Townson, Charles W. Weis, Jr., and Ralph J. Wrenn were re-elected as directors of the Company.

At the directors meeting immediately following the stockholders meeting, the following officers were elected:

LESLIE H. JACKSON	Chairman of the Board
CHARLES W. WEIS, JR.	President
RALPH W. WRENN	Executive Vice President
RICHARD C. ALDEN	First Vice President
KENDALL B. CASTLE	Vice President
LEO P. BLANK	Vice President
W. BAYARD McCOY	Vice President
FRANK T. SHEEDY	Vice President
KENNETH C. TOWNSON	Secretary
HAROLD E. ROWLES	Treasurer

and the following appointments were made:

AVERY P. DUFFIN	Assistant Secretary
DONALD A. KELLER	Comptroller—Rochester Division

Earnings, sales, and bookings in the first two months of 1956 were excellent and substantially greater than they were for the same period in 1955 and 1954.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Thank you again for your loyal support and cooperation.

CHARLES W. WEIS, JR.

i. (B4/f3)
*

Times-Union
March 22, 1956

Stecher Pays* 25*c*,
Elects Director

Directors of Stecher-Traung Lithograph Co. yesterday declared the regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents a share on the common stock while Paul Miller was elected to the board of directors . . . .

j. (B4/f3)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
March 22, 1955

Stecher Nets $2.70,
Chooses Director

Stecher-Traung Lithograph Corp. reported yesterday net income of $563,475, equal to $2.70 a share on the common stock. This compared with $448,322 or $2.08 a share for the previous year.

Sales amounted to $12,078,164 as compared $11,056,836 in 1954.

At the annual meeting of stockholders yesterday, Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, was elected a director . . . .

k. (B4/f3)

HIGHLIGHTS – Published by Roch. Red Cross
April 1956

Community Chest-Red Cross Campaign
Of Rochester, Monroe County, May 3-14

(2) PHOTOS
John W. Remington
Paul Miller

Caption:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Here are the men and women who this year are in charge of the Community Chest-Red Cross Campaign of Rochester and Monroe County. John W. Remington is general chairman and Paul Miller is vice-chairman of the campaign.

l. (B4/f3)

Democrat and Chronicle
April 27, 1956

Eastman House Selects Miller

Election of Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, as a member of the Eastman House board of trustees was announced yesterday by Oscar N. Solbert, Eastman House director. He fills the vacancy created by the death of Dr. Albert D. Kaiser.

Other trustees are: Donald McMaster, president of Eastman House; James E. Gleason, board chairman; M. Herbert Eisenhart, Albert D. Chapman, Charles F. Hutchinson, Edward Steichen, Raymond N. Ball, Dr. C. E. K. Mees, Thomas J. Hargrave, Dr. Cornelius W. deKiewiet and George Dryden.

m. (B4/f3)
*****

Times-Union
May 7, 1955

Paul Miller Elected to Pulitzer Board

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, is one of four newspaper executives elected to the advisory board on the Pulitzer Prizes, it was announced today at Columbia University . . . .

n. (B4/f3)

Democrat and Chronicle
May 8, 1956

Husband-Wife Team Wins Pulitzer Award

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

NEW YORK, May7, 1956 (AP) – A husband and wife today became the first such writing team ever to win a Pulitzer Prize. They were cited for the poignant Broadway stage hit, "The Diary of Anne Frank."

Albert Hackett and Frances Goodrich won the drama award for their stage adaptation of the diary of a 13-year-old Jewish girl who died in a Nazi concentration camp in World War II. It costars Joseph Schildkraut and Susan Strasberg.

MacKinlay Kantor's "Andersonville," a historical recital of the horrors of a Confederate prison camp of the Civil War, won the 1956 Pulitzer prize for fiction.

The annual awards were made by the trustees of Columbia University under the will of the late Joseph Pulitzer, publisher of the old New York World and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. They have been an annual feature in the fields of music, literature and journalism since 1917.

None of the 1956 winners had won the prize before.

The Watsonville, Calif., Register-Pajaronian, with a circulation of 7,800, was selected as winner of the Public Service Award in journalism. The newspaper's crusade on corruption in public office led to the resignation of a district attorney and the conviction of one of his associates.

A roving three-man team from the Hearst newspapers, headed by Editor in Chief William Randolph Hearst Jr., won the International Reporting Award for exclusive interviews with top Soviet leaders.

Cited with Hearst were Kingsbury Smith, vice president and general manager of International News Service, and Frank Conniff, editorial assistant to Hearst. Other journalistic winners were:

LOCAL REPORTING under stress of an edition deadline – Lee Hills, executive editor of the Detroit Free Press for his coverage of the United Auto Workers' negotiations for supplemental employment pay.

LOCAL REPORTING no edition deadline – Arthur Daley of the New York Times, for his coverage of sports in his column "Sports of the Times."

NATIONAL REPORTING – Charles L. Bartlett of the Chattanooga, Tenn., Times, for his series exposing a conflict of interests and leading to the resignation of Harold E. Talbott as secretary of the Air Force.

EDITORIALS – Lauren K. Soth of the Des Moines Register and tribune, for his editorial invitation that led a Russian farm delegation to visit Iowa.

CARTOONING – Robert York of the Louisville, Ky., Times for "Achilles," his depiction of the weak heel of farm prices upon which the bulging figure of American prosperity rested.

PHOTOGRAPHY – The New York Daily News for consistently excellent news picture coverage. An outstanding example cited was George Mattson's air view of a bomber crash into the street of a Long Island city. Twenty-five other photographers for the Daily news were mentioned by name in the citation.

The winning newspaper receives a golden plaque. Individual journalistic winners get $1,000 each. Awards in letters and music are $500 each.

HISTORY – "The Age of Reform," Richard Hofstadter's study of the passion for progress and reform from 1890 to 1940.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

BIOGRAPHY – "Benjamin Henry Latrobe," a full length biography by Talbot Hamlin of America's first professional architect.

POETRY – Elizabeth Bishop's collection of poems, "North and South – a Cold Spring."

The 1956 Pulitzer Prizes are for work completed during the prior calendar year in all categories except drama and music. For the latter, the period is April 1, 1955 to March 31, 1956.

The winners are recommended to Columbia trustees by advisory groups in journalism, literature and music.

Three newspaper executives and one publisher were announced at the same time as new members of the advisory board on the Pulitzer Prizes. They serve three-year terms.

Norman Chandler, president and publisher of the Los Angeles Times, was elected to succeed Stuart H. Perry, publisher of the Adrian, Mich., Telegram, who resigned.

Elected to regular three-year terms were Barry Bingham, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal; Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, and Louis B. Seltzer, editor of the Cleveland, Ohio, Press.

o. (B4/f3)

BUMBLEBEE
May 17, 1956

MILLER on Pulitzer Board

Newest honor to come to Olympian PAUL MILLER, Executive Vice-President of the Gannett Newspapers, is his election for a three-year term as one of the fourteen members of the Advisory Board on the Pulitzer Prizes.

p. (B4/f3)

EDITOR & PUBLISHER
May 19, 1956

4 Elected As Pulitzer Advisors

Three editors from newspapers in Kentucky, New York, and Ohio, and one publisher from California have been elected to the Advisory Board on the Pulitzer Prizes, it was announced at Columbia University.

The editors will serve three-year terms on the Pulitzer Board. The publisher will fill a vacancy created by a resignation from the board. Their elections were disclosed at Columbia simultaneously with announcement of the winners of the 1956 Pulitzer Prizes. The 14-member board recommends to the University's Trustees outstanding examples of meritorious journalism. In May of each year, the Trustees vote on the awards.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Norman Chandler, president and publisher of the Los Angeles (Calif.) Times, was elected to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Stuart H. Perry, publisher of the Adrian (Mich.) Telegram.

Elected to regular three-year terms were Barry Bingham, editor of the Louisville (Ky.) Courier –Journal; Paul Miller, editor of the Rochester (N.Y.) Times-Union; and Louis B. Seltzer, editor of the Cleveland (Ohio) Press. They fill vacancies created by the retirements of Sevellon Brown, former editor and publisher of the Providence (R.I.) Journal; Kent Cooper, executive director of the Associated Press; and William R. Matthews, president and publisher of the Arizona Daily Star in Tucson, All three are retiring under a three term limit rule.

The only other vacancy, that of secretary of the Advisory Board, was filled by the reelection of John Hohenberg, professor of Journalism at Columbia.

Others on the board are: President Grayson Kirk, Columbia University; Hodding Carter, Delta Democrat-Times, Greenville, Miss.; Turner Catledge, New York Times; Robert Choate, Boston (Mass.) Herald; Gardner Cowles, Cowles Magazines, Inc., New York; J. D. Ferguson, Milwaukee (Wis.) Journal; John S. Knight, Knight Newspapers; Benjamin M. McKelway, Evening Star, Washington, D. C.; Joseph Pulitzer, Jr., St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

q. (B4/f3)

Rochester Times-Union
June 12, 1956

Mrs. Paul Miller Heads Library Board

A Pittsford woman who helped organize the Monroe County Library System is the new chairman of the system's board of trustees.

She is Mrs. Paul Miller of 5455 Clover St., who was a charter member of the board when the system was originated in 1952. Mrs. Miller was elected to a one-year term as chairman at a trustees' meeting last night in Rundel Memorial Building.

Mrs. Miller is also a member of the Genesee Hospital's board of supervisors, is chairman of the committee which is establishing the Mary Bonner Traynor Memorial Library for children in Genesee Hospital, and is a member of the board of directors of the Convalescent Hospital for Children.

Her husband is executive vice president of Gannett Co., Inc.

The 11 members of the board of trustees of the Monroe County Library System serve without pay. The board is the governing body of the system, which includes the Rochester Public Library, its 11 branch libraries and 17 libraries in Monroe County towns.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The system is regarded as a pattern for library organization in other communities. Books may be borrowed without charge from any one of the libraries or branches and returned without charge to that or any of the other units in the system. A fee charged to non-residents of Rochester for use of the Rochester Public Library or its branches was abolished when the system was set up . . . .

r. (B4/f3)

Times-Union
June 29, 1956

Lincoln Rochester
Elects Miller

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, today was elected to the board of directors of the Lincoln Rochester Trust Co.

Directors of Lincoln Rochester trust Co. today declared the regular quarterly dividend of 50 cents a share on common stock. The dividend is payable Aug. 1 to shareholders of record July 20.

s. (B4/f3)

Democrat and Chronicle
June 30, 1956

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, today was elected to the board of directors of the Lincoln Rochester trust Co.

t. (B4/f3)

B. FORMAN CO.

EXECUTIVE OFFICES

June 30, 1956

Dear Paul:

It is a pleasure to read that there has been added to your growing list of titles,

"Director, Lincoln-Rochester Bank."

Congratulations.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Sincerely,
Maurice (signed)
Maurice R. Forman

Mr. Paul Miller
55 Exchange Street
Rochester, N.Y.

u. (B4/f3)

POWER CITY TRUST OFFICE
THE MARINE TRUST COMPANY OF WESTERN NEW YORK
NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK

MARTIN J. TRAVERS
VICE PRESIDENT

August 7, 1956

Dear Paul:

I just learned via the AMERICAN BANKER of your election to the Board of the Lincoln Rochester Trust Company. Heartiest congratulations and best wishes. It is good to know that you are now "in the banking business."

I trust that the next time you are in Niagara Falls you will let us know so that we may have an opportunity to get together.

With warm personal regards,

I am

Very truly yours,
Marty (signed)
Vice President

Mr. Paul Miller
Executive Vice President
Gannett Company, Inc.
Rochester, New York

v. (B4/f3)

*****

LINC-ALL NEWS
PUBLISHED FOR AND BY THE EMPLYEES OF LINCOLN ROCHESTER TRUST COMPANY

VOLUME 13 ROCHESTER, N.Y. * JULY-AUGUST 1956 NOS. 2 & 3

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Covering Elections

We are happy to place these pictures on the cover of LINC-ALL NEWS. These are the people who have recently been elected or appointed by the Board of Directors of our bank to new offices as noted here.

PHOTO:
PAUL MILLER
(Gannett Co., Inc.)
Elected member of our Board of Directors

(10) PHOTOS:
Names
Titles

w. (B4/f3)

ROCHESTER COMMUNITY CHEST
FOUNDED 1918
70 NORTH WATER STREET * ROCHESTER 4, NEW YORK * HAMILTON 3160

August 1, 1956

TO BUDGET COMMITTEE PAR-BUSTERS:

Here are the proposed foursomes for the Budget Committee Invitation Golf Tournament to be held Tuesday, August 7, at the Irondequoit Country Club.

Section A Health	Section B Family & Child Care	Section C Character Building
Walter Bull, Captain	Jack Rubens, Captain	Eudie Rawcliffe, Captain
Ralph Eckberg	Sher Smith	John Remington
Berry Huntley	George Todd	Paul Miller
Louie Langie	Dick Miller	Jack DeMuth

x. (B4/f3)

From the desk of
RICHARD MILLER

August 6, 1956

1338

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul –

Thought you might like to add this photograph of the 1956 score board to your collection of odds and ends.

Dick

PHOTO:
1956 COMMUNITY CHEST – RED CROSS CAMPAIGN
1956 GRAND SUMMARY 1956

y. (B4/f3)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
September 7, 1956

40 Awards in 5 Years
Gannett Scholarship Winners Feted

"You are going to have a vast influence on the United States and the world," Mrs. Frank Gannett, chairman of the board of Frank Gannett Newspaperboy Scholarships, Inc., told 27 scholarship winners last night.

She spoke at an informal dinner at the Rochester Club marking the college graduation of the first winners. The dinner was the first gathering of scholarship recipients since the fund was established in May, 1952 . . . .

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Company, Inc., told the former newspaperboys "there isn't any better experience for anything you do than carrying newspapers."

To those just entering college, he pointed out that campus publications offer a good opportunity for extra-curricular activity. "It will help you if you never go into that kind of work," he said.

Miler observed that 11 of the Gannett newspaper executives and department heads present had been newspaperboys first, but none of the scholarship winners are apparently preparing for a newspaper career. "We didn't do a very good job of indoctrinating you," he noted with a smile . . . .

z. (B4/f3)
*****

Times-Union
September 8, 1956

Paper Routes Gave 'Em 'Head Start'

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

17 Scholarship Winners Feted

Seventeen former Times-Union newspaperboys, who feel that their paper routes gave them a "head start in life," were honored last night.

With them at the Rochester Club were 10 former carriers for the Democrat and Chronicle. The group was the available number from 40 young men who were winners of Frank Gannett Newspaperboy scholarships in the past five years,

They were praised by Mrs. Frank Gannett, who stated they would "have a vast influence on the United States and the world."

They were given advice by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Company Inc., and were encouraged by a dozen editorial and circulation executives of The Gannett Company.

The boys had one thing to say about it all – "We're glad we were newspaperboys . . . .

aa. (B4/f3)

*****

[a bookmark]:

Books
Sandwiched
In

Noon time
Book Reviews

Sponsored by the Rochester
Public Library

Tuesdays
12:13-12:52

October 2
through
December 4

$.75 lunch
(be sure to call HA 6200
on Monday for reservations)
or bring your own

OCTOBER 2
Dr. John Romano

1340

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The Menninger Story"
by Walker Winslow

Rochester
Public Library
115 South Avenue

(over)

OCTOBER 9
Miss Doris Savage
"The Accident"
by Dexter Masters

OCTOBER 16
Paul Miller
"The Right to Know"
By Kent Cooper

OCTOBER 23
Rabbi Joel Dobin
"The Scrolls from the Dead Sea"

OCTOBER 30
Miss Julia Sauer
"A New Respect for the American Indian in Books for Children"

NOVEMBER 6
Dr. William Diez
"African Interpretations in Recent Novels"

NOVEMBER 13
Dr. Katherine Koller
"From Pygmalion to My Fair Lady"

NOVEMBER 20
Dr. Murray Cayley
(to be announced)

NOVEMBER 27

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Dr. Arthur May
(to be announced)

DECEMBER 4
Sol Linowitz
"Brandeis, Free Man's Life"
by Alpheus T. Mason

bb. (B4/f3)
*****

Friends of the Rochester Public Library
115 South Avenue

Interim Bulletin
September 1956

[headings only]:

READER'S CHOICE
BOOKS SANDWICHED IN FRIENDS INSPIRE READING IMPROVEMENT
DISCUSSION GROUPS
CURTAILED HOURS

cc. (B4/f3)

Rochester Jewish Ledger
October 5, 1956

Paul Miller Opens
Forum at Beth El

Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Newspapers will open the fall and winter dinner forum series at Temple Beth El, Monday, Oct. 15, at 6:30 p.m. at the Winton Road Auditorium [see event flyer (B4/f3)].

Miller, who attended the Democratic Party convention in Chicago and the GOP convention in San Francisco and recently returned from the London Conference on the Suez situation, will give present [?] a round up analytical report of the coming U.S. elections and the problems facing the World in solving the Important Suez Controversy.

Preceding Miller's talk the newly elected president, Jack Schnier, of the Temple Men's Club of Beth El will be installed.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Justin L. Vigdor, chairman of the Oct. meeting, will preside.

PHOTO:
PAUL MILLER

dd. (B4/f15)
*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
Tuesday, October 9, 1956

AAUW Will Hear Miller On London, Cairo Trip

Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, will give a report on his visit to London and Cairo at 8 p.m. Thursday at the East Avenue clubhouse of Rochester Branch, American Assn. of University Women . . . .

ee. (B4/f3)

Times-Union
October 10, 1956

Temple Beth El To Hear Miller

Paul Miller, executive vice president of Gannett Newspapers Inc., will speak at the opening dinner forum in Temple Beth El's fall and winter series at 6:30 p.m. Monday in the Winton Road Auditorium [see event flyer (B4/f3)].

Miller will present an analytical report of coming elections and of problems facing the world in solving the Suez controversy. He attended both the Democratic and Republican conventions and recently returned from a visit to Egypt.

Jack Schnier will be installed as president of the Temple Men's Club before the talk.

ff. (B4/f3)

Democrat and Chronicle
October 10, 1956

Gannett Executive To Address Club

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, will address a dinner meeting of the Temple Beth-El Men's Club at 6:30 p.m. tomorrow in the Winton Road Auditorium [see event flyer (B4/f3)].

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Miller will analyze campaign strategies of the democrats and republicans and discuss the accuracy of various presidential polls in his talk, entitled "Behind the Election Headlines."

gg. (B4/f3)

*

BULLETIN TEMPLE
BETH EL

ROCHESTER NEW YORK

Affiliated with The United Synagogue of America

Vol. 30 October 3rd, 1956 28 Tishri 5717

PAUL MILLER TO OPEN
MEN'S CLUB SEASON

Paul Miller, Executive Vice-President of Gannett newspapers, will be the speaker at the Men's Club Opening Dinner Meeting to be held on Monday evening, October 15, in our Winton Road Auditorium . . . .

hh. (B4/f3)

*

Western New York
Newspaper Publishers' Association

FALL MEETING – November 2-3, 1956
TREADWAY INN – ROCHESTER, N. Y.

SCHEDULE OF EVENTS

Friday Evening –

Registration -- $1.00 per person.
See Leonard Weisbeck or Willard Allis.

9:30 Informal get-together in suite reserved by Ludlow Typograph Co., with their compliments. – Mr. Maus, Rep.

Saturday Morning – (Sibley Room)

9:30 1. Panel "Offset in the Small Printing Plant."
2. Panel "Offset for Newspaper Production."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

These panels promise to be loaded with interest and lively discussion – be there – listen and take part.

12:30 Luncheon – Tickets $2.50 per person including gratuity.

Saturday Afternoon –

2:30 Feature Writing – Miss Fawn Scheffell, well known Rochester Feature Writer.
Panel – Syndicated Material.

4:30 Election of Officers.

Saturday Evening –

6:00 Cocktail Party – Sponsored by Genesee Valley Trust Co. – your local Marine Midland Bank.

7:00 Dinner – Tickets $4.50 each (including gratuity).

Speaker – PAUL MILLER, VICE PRESIDENT GANNETT NEWSPAPERS. "SUEZ – THE MIDDLE EAST."

Mr. Miller who has known Prime Minister Anthony Eden, for many years recently visited him in England and later spent some time in the Suez Canal area studying the situation there and is therefore equipped to talk on the subject from first hand knowledge.

After the Dinner – Living Room.
Reception for the new officers sponsored by the Association. You are urged to stay and join in the fun.

ii. (B4/f15)
*****

The Gannetteer
December, 1956

(1.) Town Topics

By Roy Percy

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller, who personifies all the attributes of a real newspaperman, gave of his time and talents to the Western N.Y. Publishers who gathered at the Treadway in Rochester recently. These are the weekly newspaper men whose daily grind includes all departments of journalism, from being their own messengers, through the linotype, press, advertising, proofreading, editing, even to delivering the finished product to the post office or newsstand. And many of them do each and every job along the line, day in and day out. To them a nickel newspaper is the biggest bargain in the world.

And to these hardy souls, Paul Miller talked about his recent experiences in Suez, just as one of the gang. And after the session, which in their way may be for some time, as more than one editor still seemed unsatiated by his talk and wanted to query him on numerous other angles of the middle east. The greatest asset of the men in the upper echelon of success is that they are ever mindful of the smaller stars in the firmament of their profession, which in their way may be just as bright, but are farther removed from the center of the orbit. The weekly group was deeply impressed with his warmth and genuine personality. The session reminded us of the contacts the group used to have with Frank Gannett from time to time. It was like turning over an old page with a new picture.

(2.) PHOTO
Caption:

AT LEFT: Paul Miller (center) executive vice president of the Gannett Co., shows notes on Suez situation to R. J. Burow, general manager of The Commercial-News (left), and George B. Satterwhite, president of Danville Rotary Club, at luncheon where Miller addressed 300 Rotarians.

jj. PHOTO
1956 -8 F

Caption:
William T. Laverenz – Pres. Danville Chamber of Commerce

11. 1957

a. (B4/f23)
*****

[Reprinted from The Gannetteer of January 1957]

FOR NEWSPAPER LETTER WRITERS:

A 'Dear Sir' Dinner

 How Rochester editors gave recognition to contributors

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

At a 'Dear Sir' Dinner: Newspapers Honor Letter Writers

ROCHESTER'S newspapers tried something new after November's elections.

They drew up a list of the 100 best letters to the editor written during the fall political campaign. And they invited the writers to a free dinner at the city's Hotel Sheraton.

Sam Lubell, the pollster whose pre-election analyses of voting trends had been published in the morning Democrat and Chronicle, was principal speaker . . . .

Letter writers at the "Dear Sir" dinner represented a cross-section of Rochester population and opinion. A university head, two college presidents, many professors, lawyers, ministers, retired civic leaders, housewives, and students – all entered the banquet room to find their places marked by convention-badges as place-cards . . . .

As editor of the Rochester Times Union and executive vice president of THE GROUP, PAUL MILLER set the tone of the meeting with these welcoming remarks:

"The writers may not all realize it, but letters to the editor have a very high readership in both The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union.

"I believe one reason for this is that readers have learned that most letters printed are worth reading. It has long been our policy to encourage good letters in every legitimate way we know, and to print all we possibly can. Since The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle are the only daily newspapers in general circulation in the Rochester area, we believe we have a greater responsibility than might otherwise be the case to stimulate the freest possible public discussion of public matters and provide the forum in our papers.

"We express the newspapers' opinions on the editorial pages, and occasionally in editorials – clearly marked as such – on Page One. At the same time, we invite for publication expressions of contrary views in general and specifically. The Times-Union, for example, printed several pro-Stevenson editorials from other newspapers while itself editorially supporting President Eisenhower and Mr. Nixon. The Democrat and Chronicle, also supporting Ike, solicited letters on the other side.

"We apply this same policy to all matters of general public interest. We shall continue to do so.

"The only requirements are that letters be of reasonable length – sometimes we waive even that rule, as in the case of President deKiewiet's recent exposition on faculty pen pushers; and we may return letters that are possibly libelous or in too bad taste. In short, we believe in the care and cultivation of comment, on whatever side of any issue, for two main reasons:

"1. READERS are interested in the opinions of others so that letters to the editor have high content value in our newspapers. Letters make newspapers even more interesting.

"2. WE FEEL and accept a definite responsibility to get the widest possible expression of views into our pages, on any subject of vital interest.

"During the last campaign Rochester letter writers went at it with usual vigor, unusual determination and in unusual numbers. I believe they made a definite contribution to public understanding. I know that they helped keep campaign interest at a high pitch. (They kept my interest at such a high pitch that I wrote a letter myself!) They thus played a real part in getting out the big vote.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Times-Union and Democrat and Chronicle appreciate all of this. That is why we honor tonight the writers of what the editors regard as the 100 outstanding campaign letters. This is our way of showing that appreciation, and of registering anew our interest in readers' views.

"Have a good time.

"Now it is my privilege to turn this meeting over to Mr. L. R. BLANCHARD – known to most of you as Fay. He is editor of The Democrat and Chronicle and also editorial chairman of The Gannett Newspapers; also a Director of Gannett Co., Inc. He is one of the country's truly great editors.

"You know, of course, that he is going to abandon all of this – and all of us – around Jan. 1, 1957. He is going to retire and move to California. While we still have him around we want to see and hear all we can from him. So – it's your meeting, Fay, from here on" . . . .

Also heard were VINCENT S. JONES, Gannett Newspapers executive editor, and DON U. BRIDGE, general manager of The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle . . . .

Bridge noted that the Gannett policy of autonomy in local newspapers a few years ago created a situation where some of the newspapers which FRANK GANNETT owned supported a candidate he opposed.

"What did he do? He wrote a letter to the editor diametrically opposed to the editorial statements of the newspapers he owned . . . ."

Commented Executive Editor Jones in a weekly message to Group executives:

"The stunt is recommended to all newspapers with a substantial number of letter writers. All sorts of interesting variations have suggested themselves for future gatherings, at which the direct participation of the guests in the program would be a prime objective."

GANNETT
NEWSPAPERS

SO MANY newspapers have requested details on the "Dear Sir" Dinner for campaign letter writers at Rochester that we have reprinted the attached from the company publication of The Gannett Newspapers and are mailing it to members of the American Society of Newspaper Editors. If any additional information is desired, address . . .

News and Editorial Office
The Gannett Newspapers
Times-Union Building
Rochester 14, New York

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

b. (B4/f25)
*****

The Quill
for
March , 1957

Rochester Papers Find Formula for Hard Hitting Letters to the Editor

Freeswinging bipartisan policy wins approval during recent national campaign from both parties and helps get the voters to the polls.

By JOSEPH N. FREUDENBERGER

LETTERS to the editor – are they important to a daily newspaper? Is their importance increased when a field is served by only one paper? How can a newspaper attract voices of authority to its letter column?

Most dailies confront a letter problem such as that faced by the Rochester (N.Y.) Times-Union when Paul Miller became its editor in 1947. Cranks, crackpots and axe-grinders had enjoyed too free a hand. Many professional men were reluctant to submit letters. Some Democrats scoffed: "What can you expect from the one-party Republican press?" More restrained members of the Democratic organization didn't write letters.

To this problem, Editor Miller offered only this general solution:

"Readers are interested in the opinions of others so letters to the editor make newspapers more interesting . . . .

"We express the newspapers' opinions on the editorial pages. At the same time, we invite for publication expressions of contrary views.

"The Times-Union, for example, printed several pro-Stevenson editorials from other newspapers while itself editorially supporting President Eisenhower and Mr. Nixon."

LETTER writers applauded. Representing a cross-section of Rochester population and opinion, they came from fields of education, religion, law, industry and the home. In age they ranged from a young college student and an equally young housewife to a retired minister, a retired school superintendent and a professional writer.

Miller's idea of a post-election good will dinner (with pollster Sam Lubell as speaker) captured the imaginations of newspaper executives, politicians and students of government.

New York's Governor Averell Harriman, in a telegram read at the dinner, said:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"This is a unique event and I am sure that it will have a worth-while effect in stimulating even more widespread expression by your readers of their views on public issues.

"As a frequent reader of the 'Letters to the Editor' columns of our newspapers, I appreciate what a valuable open forum they provide for such discussions of important issues by the public. I commend your newspapers for an original idea and I join you in congratulating your guests of honor on their active participation as citizens in the discussion of public affairs."

Wrote Paul Butler, chairman of the Democratic National Committee:

"My warmest congratulations to the Gannett Newspapers and to the 'best letter' writers for the distinctive contribution which they have made to broader discussion of the issues before us these critical days. You have set an excellent example in effectively serving the major purpose of American elections – which is to make our people active participants in our political processes, rather than mere sideline observers or spectators."

WROTE Leonard W. Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee:

"This is an outstanding example of public service by the Gannett Newspapers. Your campaign has helped citizens develop and express their political views, enabling them to go to the polls and intelligently vote for the candidates of their choice."

But the "Dear Sir" dinner was more than a get-out-the-vote promotion (though Editor Miller believes in those, too). It was a get-together and get-acquainted meeting for opinion makers from many strata of Rochester society . . . .

c. (B7/f3)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, April 6, 1957

Mayor Peter Barry --A Fine Record

By PAUL MILLER

If Mayor Peter Barry isn't the best mayor in the country, try and name a better one.

Perhaps you may ask, why bring it up now?

Two reasons:

First, public officials receive too little appreciation from the rest of us, newspapers included.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Second, he will be up for election as councilman next autumn. If you want him to run again, why not tell him? The council, you know, elects our mayor.

I don't know what his attitude is now. No one could blame Pete Barry if he feels he's had it. His is a night and day job.

When Rochester's mayor, whoever he may be, isn't receiving a delegation, he's very likely a part of one going some place [sic] on city business.

When he isn't presiding at a dinner, he's speaking at one.

He's the center of the criticism, bickering, pulling and hauling – and, as mayor, rightly so – that are a part of civic affairs.

Pete Barry, 45 and a bachelor, takes all this in stride, or appears to – plus his probably-neglected regular job at R.G. and E.

* * *

WANT TO TAKE A LOOK at part of the record?

As a councilman, before becoming mayor, he was instrumental in getting real action on important phases of the city's capital improvement program, and sometimes against Republican political indecision.

He pushed the big program, started under Louis Cartwright and completed under City Manager Robert Aex, to build incinerators and modernize the whole refuse system . . . .

He supported improvements in water supply, fire protection, arterial highways (carrying the brunt of the battle with the state on speeding the Inner Loop) and parking garages . . . .

He is our best qualified city councilman on problems of engineering, traffic and public safety . . . .

I believe he was chiefly responsible on the council for completing our Community War Memorial.

* * *

THERE'S MORE:

As mayor, Barry very early took effective action to reduce the city affairs secrecy that had so long annoyed citizens and newspapermen alike. A newspaper associate puts it this way: "He is one of the best people at City Hall for a citizen and newspaperman to deal with. He is sympathetic to problems of particular groups, yet not afraid to push through a controversial program if he is convinced it's needed."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He is forward-thinking on the complex problems of city-county relationships. He is a guiding official on the Civic Center development.

*** * ***

AND FINALLY:

He is not anti-politics, but politics apparently is not his chief ambition in life.

If he goes higher in politics, after the further service as mayor which many hope he will accept, it will be the office seeking the man.

That may well be the case.

d. (B4/f25)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
May 8, 1957

Women Voter League Cited

The American Heritage Foundation today cited the New York State League of Women Voters for "outstanding public service" for its efforts in the national 1956 register and vote campaign.

A citation was presented at the league convention here today by Paul Miller, president of the Gannett Co., Inc.

Miller said in presenting the citation:

"Undoubtedly the election eve uprising in Hungary and the Middle East crisis were responsible for some votes. We believe, however, that the true story of what really happened can be found in the dedicated work of thousands of members of the New York State League of Women Voters. Thanks largely to their efforts, hundreds of thousands of our fellow citizens were moved from passive spectators into active, participating, voting citizens."

Mrs. Walter L. Fox, first vice president of the state league and voters [sic] service chairman, received the citation on behalf of the group. About 350 women delegates and guests attended the sessions at the Sheraton . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PRESENTATION – Mrs. Walter L. Fox of Syracuse holds American Heritage Foundation voter service award, presented to her today as state voters' service chairman, State League of Women Voters.

e. (B4/f25)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
Thursday, May 9, 1957

Women Voters to Pick 2-Year Agenda Today

Vigorous discussion of proposed projects by the State League of Women Voters for the coming two years marked yesterday's session of the League's state convention being held in the Sheraton Hotel . . . .

Highlighting the morning session was presentation of an American Heritage Foundation Award to the state league for its work in the national campaign to get out the vote last year.

Paul Miller, president of The Gannett Co., Inc., in presenting the citation said:

"Thanks to (the state league's) efforts, hundreds of thousands of our fellow citizens were moved from passive spectators into active, participating, voting citizens" . . . .

f. (B4/f26)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
May 13, 1957

Banquet at Barn To Fete Writers

A banquet honoring writers of The Democrat and Chronicle's Teen Fourth Estate will be held Saturday at The Barn, Gannett Youth Club, in East Henrietta Road.

The testimonial will be a special "Well Done" salute to some 70 teen reporters, representing 64 high schools, who write for the Monday morning area and city edition youth pages.

Paul Miller, president of The Gannett Co., Inc., and publisher of The Democrat and Chronicle, will be the main speaker . . . .

g. (B4/f25)

Ithaca Journal
Ithaca, New York

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

May 20, 1957

PHOTO:
Caption:

THE GANNETT MEDICAL CLINIC at Cornell University is nearly completed. Gift of the Gannett Foundation, the building on Central Ave. was inspected Friday by Mrs. Frank E. Gannett, wife of the president emeritus of the Gannett Foundation and the Gannett Co., Inc., and Paul Miller, president of the foundation and company. Mrs. Gannett is vice president of the foundation. Mr. Gannett was graduated from Cornell in 1898 and is a trustee emeritus of the university. From left are Louis S. Pickering, general manager of The Journal, one of the Gannett Newspapers; Mrs. Gannett; Dr. Norman S. Moore, chairman of the Department of Clinical and Preventive Medicine at Cornell; President Malott; Conway Todd of Rochester, the architect, and William J. Walters, editor of The Journal.

h. (B4/f26)

Rochester Commerce
May 1957

ORCHIDS and
CONGRATULATIONS

To Paul Miller, another Chamber of Commerce Trustee, came election to the Presidency of the Gannett Company, Inc. Paul Miller was Chairman of the special survey committee which reviewed the services and policies of this Chamber of Commerce in 1951. He came to the Gannett organization in 1947 from the Associated Press, where he had been assistant general manager, and Chief of its Washington Bureau. He is a member of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, the Advisory Board for the coveted Pulitzer Prizes, a member of the Advisory Committee for the American Press Institute, and is in his eighth year on the Board of Directors of the Associated Press.

i. (B7/f4)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, June 1, 1957

Holding Downtown Pull --Visitors Were Impressed

By PAUL MILLER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rochester was on proud display for representatives of a good cross-section of the nation's top merchants this week.

They came here under auspices of the Downtown Development Committee of the National Retail Dry Goods Association for a round of tours and meetings on Tuesday.

They went home – more than 50 department store executives, city officials and experts from 12 states and the District of Columbia – impressed particularly by:

1. The evidences of cooperation heading up at the Chamber of Commerce and elsewhere.

2. The forward-looking planning and building of Rochester city officials.

All of the visitors are interested, as we in Rochester are, in rebuilding and holding downtown values and downtown pull.

* * *

One store-keeper visitor brought along a cameraman who took hundreds of feet of sound film and will distribute it throughout the United States.

* * *

BY THE WAY, have you stopped by the Community War Memorial lately? Exterior improvements and ground beautification are about completed. Our Memorial, inside and out, can't be surpassed for utility and beauty by similar structures anywhere.

* * *

CAUTION NOTE: Rochester is doing well, as our visitors noted, but we were slow getting started on many things and we still have a lot to do.

Main thing as of now:

Keep up the cooperation that has made possible what has been done, so that we can keep pushing with all sensible speed on the much that still remains!

PHOTO
Caption:

BEAUTIFICATION – Exterior improvements at Community War Memorial are about completed.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

j. (B7/f5)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, June 29, 1957

AS I SEE IT

The Efficient Walter Wickins: Visitors Study and Take Notice

By PAUL MILLER

Walter H. Wickins is a remarkable man in many ways.

This is no news to the thousands who have come to know him well in the more than 40 years of his service to the town of Chili and to Monroe County. Before he retires, as he announced he will do at the end of his present term as county clerk, he will have to listen to this comment and read it many times.

There are many fine public servants in the Rochester area. Few ever have, or ever will make devoted friends of so many of their constituents.

Soft-spoken, mild-mannered, yet firm when he has to be, Walter Wickins runs his office with a quiet efficiency that has brought many a visitor from other countries and other states to study and take note . . . .

k. (B7/f5)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 6, 1957

AS I SEE IT

War Memorial Rumblings: Is It Time to Start Over?

By PAUL MILLER

Granted that anything new is bound to produce some headaches, there are too many signs of discontent at the Community War Memorial.

There may be too many cooks, for one thing. Also there may be a question of whether the management is (1) given its head enough or (2) really has the know-how to promote and run the Memorial properly in any event. Some suspect it has not yet had a fair chance to show.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

I RECALL THAT the successful operator of one of the biggest auditorium buildings in the country, brought in to advise Rochester while our Memorial was being planned, had chiefly this to say:

"Get a good professional manager and then let him alone."

Rochester has not followed that advice:

We hired a fine man locally and gave him local help, instead of getting an experienced professional.

A commission has the final say on all policy and operating matters.

A volunteer group was formed that was to help bring in major attractions and keep out questionable promoters.

* * *

SO FAR AS I CAN LEARN, all concerned have the best intentions.

But some of the results are disturbing, as Times-Union Sports Editor Matt Jackson has been bringing out in his column.

Is it time to back up, turn around and start all over? . . . .

l. (B7/f5)

*

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 13, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Not All We Should Expect, Better Than Critics Say

By PAUL MILLER

This column, taking note of criticism of Community War Memorial operations, speculated last week on whether the Memorial is being run properly and asked: "Is it time to back up, turn around and start all over?"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mail replies came promptly and, as usual in such matters, inconclusively. Over and above was a personal response by Earl Arnold, chairman of the War Memorial Commission.

* * *

MR. ARNOLD – reflecting an attitude not always seen among those who call at the newspaper when stirred by something in print – accepts criticism, discusses it objectively, and says he is eager to get at the reasons for it.

Briefly, he is convinced that (1) the management of the Memorial is a good team and (2) that the management is NOT harmfully restricted, by the commission which Arnold heads, or otherwise. He insists the commission sticks to policy and that the management is unfettered as to operations.

He concedes that all concerned have a lot to learn. He takes pride in the belief that they have corrected numerous scheduling and operational mistakes as they have gone along.

He invites criticism. He says this attitude is shared by those on the operating level at the Memorial.

* * *

I WAS IMPRESSED by Mr. Arnold's sincerity, his earnest endeavor to get at facts and his dedication to doing the best job he can as a citizen who has taken on an important public job and responsibility.

I could NOT agree that the Memorial is all Rochester has a right to expect, or that past performance as to program, promotion and ideas gives promise of the improvement many would like to see.

I DO believe that a better job is being done than some of the critics would have us believe and better, perhaps, than my column of last week indicated. I know that all of us are indebted for the time and effort being given by Mr. Arnold and his associates on the Memorial Commission . . . .

PHOTO:
Caption:
WAR MEMORIAL . . . "an important public job and responsibility."

m. (B7/f5)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 20, 1957

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

AS I SEE IT

Will Sen. Ives Run Again?
It Could Be Ken Keating

By PAUL MILLER

Airing Is Good
For War Memorial

It's a good thing, in a way, that the ruckus over the leukemia benefit show at the Community War Memorial should have broken out just now.

It will help further focus public attention on the Memorial in an otherwise quiet season. There have been complaints galore, some of which have been explored in the press. The more thorough the general airing , the better.

A public hearing is promised by the War Memorial Commission into complaints by sponsors of the leukemia benefit.

Until that hearing, perhaps next week, it is well to declare a moratorium on further Memorial discussion otherwise . . . .

n. (B4/f30)

Rochester Times-Union
December 20, 1957

(1.)

From Rennes
To Rochester

Paul Miller Relays Invitation
From Mayor in France

Paul Miller, president of The Gannett Newspapers, has been in Paris this week covering the NATO conference. Miller, who is also editor and publisher of The Times-Union, cabled the following letter to Mayor Peter Barry:

Paris, France
December 19, 1957

Dear Peter:

The Mayor of Rennes in West France says congratulations on your reelection and when is a Rochester delegation going to visit Rennes?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

This all started as you know, when a Rennes group of business and professional men and educators spent several days in Rochester in November 1956.

(Editor's note: The visit of the Rennes group, which included the mayor of Rennes, was sponsored by the U.S. State Department. The group toured city government facilities, factories and schools. A medal of friendship was presented to Rochester.

(Rennes is a railroad, government, business and university center with population of about 100,000.)

Since then, they've been expecting four or five Rochesterians to come over here and return the call, but I could only explain to Mayor Henri Freville when he visited me at the Hotel de Crillon last night that you had merely commissioned me to discuss the situation with him and report back to you.

* * *

WELL, HERE'S THE REPORT with a copy to President de Kiewiet (of the University of Rochester) who has an honorary degree awaiting him at the University of Rennes. The report:

Mayor Freville says he and his fellow Rennesians profited so from their Rochester visit that they've found ways to pay all expenses if a group of, say, four will come next spring from Rochester.

I was going to visit Rennes as you directed me to do and perhaps let that serve as the Rochester return visit.

The Mayor turned out to be here in Paris, however, so we got together and agreed that a visit by me at this time would have been too hurried.

They want to do it up brown for a Rochester delegation which would be brought over by ship and given a month's tour of France with special attention to West France.

* * *

I HAD SOME DOUBT about all this until I talked with His Honor. Now I have none. Here is my recommendation:

Get up this delegation and plan the trip. It will be a great pleasure for whoever goes, it will please your friends at Rennes and (says the Mayor) it will "promote better understanding."

It may be good business too.

When they visited Rochester they heard about a machine at Gleason Works that could be used by a Rennes manufacturer and the upshot is that this machine now is installed and working over here.

But let the Mayor know soon because there are plans to be made – and especially about that honorary degree for Dick de Kiewiet. These are fine folks and we can profit by knowing them better.

Cordially,
Paul Miller

(2.) Plans Delegation, Mayor Barry Says

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mayor Peter Barry said today he plans to organize a complete cultural exchange between Rochester and Rennes, including a visit by a Rochester delegation to the French city.

Barry said his plans have jelled as the result of Paul Miller's cabled letter to the Rochester mayor.

He is getting together a list of persons to be asked to serve on a coordinating committee to promote the project, Barry said.

Included would be exhibits prepared by Rochester business, museum, art gallery and other organizations to be sent to Rennes.

Barry said the project will promote person-to-person understanding between the United States and France.

"France is one of the real bulwarks of democracy in the world. With Communistic countries getting more difficult, the closer relations between France and America, the better off all free nations will be."

o. (B4/f29)

HIGHLIGHTS

Rochester-Monroe County Chapter American National Red Cross * 276 Clinton Ave. S., Rochester 7, N.Y.

VOL. 4, No. 2 DECEMBER 1957 ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Chapter Has a New Chairman

Newly elected chairman of the Rochester-Monroe County Chapter, American Red Cross is Paul Miller, president of the Gannett Co., Inc.

Mr. Miller succeeds Arthur M. R. Hughes, president of Genesee Valley Union Trust Company, who served three years as Chapter Chairman. The election followed the local Chapter's Annual Meeting in the Small Hall of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Miller's first Red Cross connection was as general chairman of the 1949-50 Red Cross Fund Campaign. He was elected to the Board of Directors that year.

A Director and First Vice President of the Associated Press, Mr. Miller is a member of the Advisory Board of the American Press Institute of Columbia University and of the Pulitzer Prize Board and past President of the New York State Publishers Association.

As Chapter Chairman, Mr. Miller is Chairman of the Chapter Board of Directors and is responsible, with the Board, for the administration of the Chapter.

PHOTO:

PAUL MILLER

Other Gannett Co., Inc. Titles

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Acquisitions
(Box # 6, 8, 14, 15, 18, 20, 21, 23, 28)

Writing of Paul Miller's skill at acquisitions, Andrew D. Wolfe, editor and publisher of The Brighton-Pittsford Post, wrote shortly after Miller's death in 1991:

Miller's soft-spoken, pleasing personality, his deft, gentle sense of humor, and the wide circle of friendships he had established with the AP then were to play a pivotal role in the Gannett Co.'s rapid expansion under his leadership.

When financial considerations or family disputes prompted many newspaper owners to consider selling, many thought of Miller.

Many of the major chains that could have been buyers were not well regarded, but "that nice Mr. Miller at Gannett" could be trusted by owners seeking to sell.

From 19 newspapers and a daily circulation of about 750,000 in 1957, the company grew to more than 50 newspapers and a circulation of about 2,300,000 in 1973, when Miller's tenure as chief executive officer ended.

Although his successor, Al Neuharth, made headlines with his eccentricities, purchase of large newspapers and other businesses, feuds, odd personal practices, and establishment of the USA Today newspaper, thoughtful newspaper people attribute the company's success to the work of Miller and to the foundations set in place by Frank Gannett.
(Brighton-Pittsford Post, August 28, 1991).

With at least nine (9) boxes of material, this subject (one of Paul Miller's recommendations) will undoubtedly become a monograph of the first order.

1. 1947

a. (B3/f52)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
July 8, 1947

"AP Aide Quits Post
To Join Gannett Staff"

Paul Miller, newly appointed executive assistant to Frank Gannett, president of Gannett Newspapers, will begin his new duties Aug. 1.
Miller resigned as assistant general manager of the Associated Press and chief of the Associated Press Washington Bureau to accept the position in the Gannett

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Group, which includes 21 newspapers and seven radio stations in New York, Connecticut, New Jersey and Illinois. He recently was a visitor in Rochester and attended the spring meeting of editors of Gannett Newspapers.

Gannett Comments

Commenting on the addition of Miller to his staff, Gannett said:

"For a long time I have been watching him very carefully and I was so favorably impressed by him that I urged him to come with us.

"Ever since the death of Leroy E. Snyder I have been searching for a man who could ably fill his place and add strength to our organization. This move does not in any way affect anyone in our organization. Mr. Miller will have special work of great importance and will relieve me of many of my burdens.

"Although Mr. Miller has gone far in the newspaper business he is only 40 years old. He has made friends throughout the country and few newspapermen are better known than he is. He has four children and with Mrs. Miller will come to Rochester to reside.

"I know that in a short time he will make a place for himself in this community and he will be of great service to our papers and me." . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

PAUL MILLER
New Gannett Newspapers
executive.

b. (B2/f44)
GANNETT NEWSPAPERS
ACQUISITIONS & DISPOSITIONS
(1906-mid-1979)

c. (B2/f46)
Memo (July 26, 1979)
ACQUISITION POLICY APPROACH AND RESULTS

2. 1948

3. 1949

a. Gannett acquired Potsdam (N.Y.) Courier-Freeman (B2/f44)

4. 1950

5. 1951

6. 1952

7. 1953

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

8. 1954

Gannett acquired Niagara Falls (N.Y.) Gazette (B2/f44)

a. (B3a/f73)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
December 11, 1954

Niagara Falls Fetes Gannett Organization

NIAGARA FALLS, Dec. 10 – High hopes for the continued steady growth of the City of Niagara Falls was expressed tonight by top officials of The Gannett Newspapers at a civic dinner officially welcoming the Gannett organization to this community.

Frank Gannett, president, and Paul Miller, executive vice president, of The Gannett Newspapers, were principal speakers at a dinner meeting sponsored by the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce in recognition of the Gannett acquisition of the Niagara Falls Gazette.

The Gannett Company purchased The Gazette on Nov. 10. The late Alanson C. Deuel, who died Oct. 19, was publisher of the Gazette for 50 years and a personal friend of Mr. Gannett . . . .

Gannett, permitting himself a backward glance at a distinguished newspaper career, said he considers his fight against President Franklin D. Roosevelt's proposed court-packing bill, which Gannett declared threatened to destroy the Constitution, a highlight of his experience.

Raps Big Government

Preservation of the Constitution, with the freedom of liberties it guarantees us, he said, is a "must" for U.S. citizens.

"All over the world," Gannett said, communism is a threat. Communism is only socialism magnified. Communism is big government, where the government manages everybody and everything. We want none of it here in America, but we will have it if our Constitution isn't defended at all times, and preserved. Remember that socialism is always the first step toward communism.

Gannett said that although a number of people wanted to buy The Gazette, the late Mr. Deuel, its publisher, wanted the Gannett Group to have it.

"He had known me personally for half a century," Gannett told his audience. "He knew our ideas about journalism. He was sure that in our hands The Gazette would remain what it had been under his management – a strong, clean, good newspaper devoted to the interests of the community" . . . .

Other Gannett officials present were Herbert W. Cruickshank, general manager and treasurer of The Gannett Newspapers; Lynn N. Bitner, general business manager; L. R. Blanchard, general executive editor and editor of The

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Democrat and Chronicle; Vincent S. Jones, director of the News and Editorial Office; Frank E. Tripp, chairman of the board of directors and vice president of The Gannett Newspapers; Herbert D. Taylor, general auditor; Cyril Williams, secretary assistant treasurer and comptroller of The Gannett Newspapers; Irving H. Fitch, advertising director of The Gannett Newspapers; Don U. Bridge, general manager of the Rochester Gannett newspapers, and Alan F. Best, superintendent of buildings for The Gannett Newspapers.

b. (B4/f1)
*****

The Gannetteer
January 1955

(3) PHOTOs:

Caption:
AT GANNETT DINNER in Niagara Falls were Herbert W. Cruickshank, general manager of the Gannett Newspapers; Councilman Calvin L. Keller, who presented the key to the city to Gannett; FEG, president of Gannett Co., Inc. and president of the Niagara Falls Gazette; Mrs. Gannett. BACK ROW – the Rev. Chester C. Beebe, president of the Niagara Falls Religious Fellowship; Harold Reagan, president of the Chamber of Commerce; Paul Miller, executive vice-president of Gannett Co., Inc.; the Rt. Rev. Msgr. P. J. Tronolone, Catholic dean of Niagara County, and Frank Tripp, who is chairman of the board of Gannett Co., Inc.

Caption:
GAZETTE EXECUTIVES and civic leaders at Dec. 10 dinner given for Mr. and Mrs. FEG by Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce. In right foreground is Vincent S. Jones, director, Group News and Editorial Office.

Caption:
GROUP EXECUTIVES and Gannett executives got acquainted at this table at C. of C. banquet for Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gannett last month. From foreground (left): Edgar K. Warren, Gazette auditor; Herbert D. Taylor, Group general auditor; Don U. Bridge, general manager, Rochester newspapers; L. R. Blanchard, Group general executive editor; Lynn N. Bitner, Group general business manager; Cyril Williams, Group comptroller, Allan Best, superintendent of Group buildings; (from foreground, right): Kenneth Fillingham, Gazette composing room foreman, with Clifford O. Peterson, Gazette display advertising manager, and Irving H. Fitch, Group advertising director. All were asked to rise when introduced at the dinner.

NIAGARA FALLS DINNER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

‘Our Objectives and Aims:’
Text of Gannett Speech

By FRANK GANNETT

THANK YOU for your warm and generous welcome. To receive it is pleasing indeed.

I can understand that you are interested in knowing what sort of man heads the organization which will control your favorite newspaper, the Niagara Falls Gazette. Alanson Deuel gave you a newspaper which you have supported generously for years. I hope we may continue to give you one you will like and support. It is a challenge, but we are going to try to give you an even better paper in the years ahead.

Somehow in reading St. Paul’s letter to the Philippians, I was reminded by a passage in it of our objectives and aims for The Gazette: “And now , brethren, all that rings true, all that commands reverence, and all that makes for right; all that is pure, all that is lovely. All that is gracious in the telling; wherever virtue and merit are found – let this be the argument of your thoughts.”

When Mr. Deuel knew that his days were numbered, he gave much thought to getting his affairs in shape. He was reluctant to give up The Gazette. A number of people wanted to buy the paper, but Mr. Deuel wanted us to have it. He had known me personally for half a century. He knew our ideas about journalism. He was sure that in our hands, The Gazette would remain what it had been under his management – a strong, clean good newspaper, devoted to the interests of the community.

I am proud and happy to have The Gazette added to our Group, now numbering 23 fine newspapers. All are successful and enjoy hearty support in the cities in which they are published.

THE deciding factor which caused me to buy the Niagara Falls Gazette was my faith in the future of the paper and the future of Niagara Falls. I am convinced that Niagara Falls is going to grow into a still greater industrial community. It took faith to make this big investment, but I have confidence in the paper and confidence and faith in the community in which it plays such a great part. I hope The Gazette will continue to be a vital factor in the building of the community, become even larger and of even greater importance and influence.

Aside from the additional electric power that will be available for local industries when the necessary legislation is enacted, Niagara Falls will continue to draw great throngs here to see one of the greatest spectacles on our continent.

From a sketch of my life in a booklet which you may already have seen, or will soon have an opportunity to read, you will see that I was a poor boy. My ancestors settled in Massachusetts in 1638. One ancestor I should like to mention particularly. He was my great-great-grandfather, Benjamin Gannett. He married Deborah Sampson who was so fired with patriotic spirit that, disguised as a man, she volunteered to join Washington’s army. She was accepted for army duty, entered Army ranks and fought in the campaign around Tarrytown. In one of these battles, she was wounded but lest it be discovered that she was a woman, she probed the wound and extracted the bullet herself. General Washington heard of her great bravery and courage and bestowed on her the highest possible honors. He asked her to come see him which she did.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Early in the Second World War, a Liberty ship was launched near Baltimore. I attended the launching. It was christened the Deborah Sampson, recognizing the part she played in inspiring others to help win the Revolutionary War. This ship is still in commission.

During the Civil War, my father answered Lincoln's call for volunteers. My father was in the 2nd New York Cavalry under General Sheridan, and was with Sheridan when he made his famous ride to Winchester.

My father's health was ruined by exposure and duty in the Army and when he returned to civil life, there was little income. My mother, with four children, had a tough time trying to supply food and clothing for us. I went to work early and soon was self-sustaining.

I HAVE SHOCKED many people by telling them that I have been thankful I was born poor. I never inherited a penny but being poor taught me that I had to work hard and could not afford to waste time.

My father insisted when I undertook a job, that I should finish it. It was customary for me to help in the hoeing of the corn on a farm where we lived. My father said when I started a row of corn, I had to finish that row. That I did, you may be sure, under his watchful eye!

I was ambitious to get an education, encouraged by my mother. She insisted that we move several times , so I would have better schools. As a high school senior, I won a scholarship to Cornell University and was graduated after four years, paying all my expenses at the University. At the time I was graduated in 1898, I had $1,000 in the bank. I made my money mostly by doing newspaper work for newspapers in large cities.

Immediately after my graduation, Cornell's President Schurman was appointed by President McKinley as chairman of the First Commission to study the Philippines. He asked me to be his secretary. This association with President Schurman was an education in itself and this appointment, as his secretary, took me around the world and I visited all the principal countries.

When Judge William Howard Taft succeeded President Schurman as chairman of the Commission to the Philippines, he urged me to be his secretary, but I had decided that I wanted to be a newspaperman. When I was in Paris, I received a cablegram from Mr. Taft offering me a position as his secretary , but I sent him a reply, thanking him for the compliment and regretting that I could not accept. If I had gone with Mr. Taft, I would have had a great experience in public service, including being with him in the White House, but I said no to all of this in order to go ahead with my plans to be a newspaperman.

ONE MORNING early in February 1937, while at breakfast in Miami Beach with my beloved wife, I read a dispatch from Washington saying that Roosevelt had proposed his court-packing bill. I was heartsick when I read this, as were thousands of Americans all over the country. I determined to do what I could to avert such a disaster, so I got a reservation to Washington and on arrival there, immediately went to the office of Senator Borah. He was a great leader in the Senate and had tremendous power and influence. He felt as I did about the Roosevelt proposal. He said, "Frank, you are right. If this idea is carried out, it will destroy our Constitution and our form of government. Make no mistake about that. It is just devastating in its purpose.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He said further, "I wish you would get busy and try to create opinion against this proposal." He said there was enough strength in the Senate to hold off any action for three months or so, but that we would have to get public opinion behind us when the fight was made on this measure. I took it up with the heads of the Bar Association and with prominent lawyers. They too viewed the proposal with grave concern. Many also got busy. Notably active was former Congressman Samuel B. Pettengill of Indiana. It wasn't long before the whole nation was aroused over this destructive proposal of the President.

I conferred frequently with Senator Borah. He said that the forces against this measure were increasing every day. He named various senators who had joined him in his position against it. Every newspaper in the country began to discuss the possibility of this change in the Supreme Court and from all parts of the country we got evidence of the intense feeling against it. Finally the day approached for a vote in the Senate. Borah said that our side needed 13 votes. He pulled out of his pocket a roll of the Senate. A group of Senators assembled and went over the list to see what the possibilities were of getting 13 votes against the measure. One by one we gained strength, but after working all afternoon we still lacked number of votes. But you know the rest of the story. Our efforts and the efforts of those who joined us from all parts of the country finally produced a vote that killed the court-packing bill.

As a result of my work in connection with the court-packing bill, I received suggestions from various parts of the country that I be a candidate for President. When the Republican Convention was held in 1940, there were delegates from many states who wanted me to get the nomination. I have always taken satisfaction in the fact that I had 33 delegates who were for me on the first roll call.

I seldom look back, but occasionally I permit myself to do so. Thus it is that in a most interesting life, I regard this experience in connection with the court-packing bill as a highlight. For that reason, I related it to you in this personal visit here tonight.

IN CONCLUISON, let me urge every one of you to do his part in keeping this a land of opportunity, as it has been for me. That means we must preserve the Constitution, with the freedom and liberties which it guarantees to us. All over the world, Communism is a threat. Communism is only socialism magnified. Communism is big government, where the government manages everybody and everything. We want none of it here in America, but we will have it if our

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Constitution isn't defended at all times and preserved. Remember that socialism is always the first step toward Communism.

It has been a joy for me to be here tonight and I hope we may get to know each other better and better in the years that lie ahead. Thank you for your warm welcome. I bid you all good-night.

GAZETTE CIRCULATION CONTINUES TO RISE

An Audit Bureau of Circulations report recently received by C. CLIFFORD FROST, circulation manager of the Niagara Falls Gazette, showed The Gazette with an average net paid circulation of 33, 451 for the year ending Sept. 30, 1954.

An increase of 697 in average net paid circulation for the month of November was reported by Frost in The Gazette's first month as a Gannett newspaper.

NIAGARA FALLS DINNER

Newspapers as Effective Mass Media: The Text of Paul Miller's Speech

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice-President, Gannett Newspapers

YOU DON'T BUILD a good newspaper overnight. It develops over many years, just as a person's character develops. In time its readers come to know it for what it is. If it is truly successful, the newspaper is a good neighbor, a good citizen, a trusted confidant.

The Niagara Falls Gazette has succeeded because it is that kind of newspaper.

It is that kind of newspaper because of ALANSON CHASE DEULE and the men he had around him, many of whom are here tonight.

We are happy to have this opportunity, before a civic gathering, to pay tribute to the memory of a man and to the newspaper which is his monument.

In The Gazette, the people of the Falls area have a newspaper which would do credit to very much larger cities. The newspaper world has recognized this for a long time. The Gazette is an interesting, appealing, stimulating product. Its physical plant is one of the most modern and complete anywhere.

You are all proud of it, I know. And we of the Gannett Company are proud of our new association with it.

Mr. GANNETT told you some stories about himself. Here's one he didn't tell you:

The other day he was discussing the Niagara Falls Gazette with associates. He related that when he was just out of Cornell, he became secretary to the Chairman of the first U. S. Commission to the Philippines. On his way out he met some young Englishmen in Hong Kong who were on a world tour and going next to the United States. He told them he was from New York State.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Well then," one said with interest, "you must know all about the great Niagara Falls. We are going there as soon as we can."

Much to his embarrassment, Mr. Gannett had to admit that he'd never been there.

"I thought then," he said in telling the story, "here I have been reared 100 miles or so away and I never have seen Niagara Falls! I determined to go as soon as I returned to the United States. I did. But I never dreamed I would ever own the Niagara Falls Gazette!"

HOWEVER, he must have had other newspapers in mind, even then. Shortly he bought in at the Ithaca Journal. And he formed a lifetime partnership with ERWIN R. DAVENPORT and FRANK TRIPP at Elmira.

From about 1918 onward ownership began expanding. They had to expand. As they tell it now, there were so many families living off the Elmira property that they couldn't earn enough there in Elmira to feed them all.

Erwin Davenport is living in Florida now. Frank Tripp is chairman of the board of Gannett Co., Inc. He's also a nationally known columnist. Anyway, he's a Niagara Falls-known columnist because his column appears in The Gazette every week. And a second book of his writings has just come off the press.

The book, by the way, is $2.

There now are 23 newspapers, 3 television stations and 4 radio stations in The Gannett Group. Numerically it is the largest organization of its kind in the United States. These properties are mainly in New York State. Then there is a newspaper in New Jersey, one in Connecticut, and a newspaper, radio and TV station in Danville, Ill.

AS ONE newspaper after another was added in the early years, Frank Gannett and his associates concluded that it would be morally wrong as well as poor business to remold them to some general standard. Instead, local management was encouraged to retain and develop the personality of each newspaper – and also of the individuals in local management, themselves. They called it local autonomy.

The principal of local autonomy is nursed along more carefully and stressed more emphatically in The Gannett Group than in any other newspaper organization I know. That's why it's called a Group, not a chain. A chain is characterized by a dictated policy. There is usually a uniformity of practice, appearance and style. The opposite is true in The Gannett Group.

It happens that I don't recall seeing anything in the editorial columns of the Niagara Falls Gazette with which I could disagree very much. I doubt if others at Rochester have. But, no matter; THOMAS J. BERRIGAN is the editor of this newspaper and ROBERT T. HARROLD the general manager. They both live in Niagara Falls; not Rochester.

Niagara Falls is so near, though, and such an inviting spot, that I expect it to become No. 2 on the list of Gannett cities most visited by Rochester executives.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Saratoga Springs has long been No. 1. You wonder why? As many as six executives have been known to head out across the state at about the same season to study the Saratoga situation.

Judging from that, Niagara Falls will require heavy and frequent inspection between about May 11 and July 30 . . . . They tell me those are the Hamburg track dates.

PEOPLE who know of Frank Gannett's strong convictions sometimes ask how he can stand for editorial autonomy in his newspapers – that is, some vigorously expounding a point of view counter to his.

If you wonder, too, let me tell you of an incident in the New York state gubernatorial campaign of 1950.

Mr. Gannett, a Republican, made up his mind that he personally could not support either Republican Dewey or Democrat Lynch. He said so publicly.

One day The Associated Press carried a story reporting who each of the New York State Gannett newspapers was supporting.

It said that 16 were backing Dewey.

The Rochester newspapers printed the story. So did others in the Group. Some pointed out editorially that it proved that we do adhere to the autonomy principle enunciated by Mr. Gannett himself.

I showed the story to Mr. Gannett. He looked at it long and thoughtfully. Then he said:

"You know, Paul, sometimes I don't know about this autonomy business!"

That was all he ever said about it, to my knowledge.

YES, IT IS assumed that Gannett newspapers will be clean and community-minded and patriotic and fair. From there on, the local management is on its own as to specific editorial problems and issues.

In advertising and circulation and in business practice Gannett newspapers aim to be good neighbors also.

Briefly, and as a general policy, we believe in the lowest feasible advertising and circulation rates. We'd rather get more advertising at a low rate than carry less advertising at a high rate, even if net income were equal. Why? It's better business for us and for our communities. Among other things, low rates mean more advertisers, including little fellows, can use the newspapers regularly, profitably and with adequate space. The overall picture, present and future, is better for newspapers which adhere to this principle, and for the communities they serve.

The same for circulation. Many Sunday newspapers throughout the nation are now 25 cents a copy. Many more are 20 cents. The Gannett Sunday newspapers only recently went from 10 to 15 cents – and while many daily newspapers are selling now at 7 and even 10 cents a copy, every Gannett newspaper is a nickel with one exception.

This is no commitment!

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Gannett management believes, in short, that the newspaper – to keep its place and to give maximum service with reasonable profit – must remain an effective mass medium. We propose to do everything possible to keep it that.

We are interested most of all in home-delivered circulation within productive training areas. Why? Because that's where it usually does the most good for us and for advertisers.

These newspapers are produced for family reading in the home. No advertising is accepted that it is believed might be harmful. Liquor advertising is excluded – it will be excluded here as current commitments expire. A close watch is kept on the comics. Standards of decency are insisted on in advertising and news.

ALL OF WHICH adds up to this: You aren't going to see any radical changes or upheavals in the Niagara Falls Gazette. Anyway, big changes don't always make big improvements.

In Oklahoma, where I was reared, a farm magazine printed a photo of a deserted farmhouse in a desolate, windswept field. It was the picture of decay. The magazine offered a prize for the best 100-word essay on the disastrous effects of land erosion.

The story goes that a bright Indian lad won a prize with this contribution:

"Picture show why white man crazy. Cut down trees. Make too big tepee. Plow hill, water wash. Wind blow soil. Grass gone. Door gone. Window gone. Squaw gone. Whole place gone to heck. No pig. No corn. No pony.

"Indian no plow land. Keep grass. Buffalo eat grass. Indian eat buffalo. Hide make plenty big tepee. Make moccasin. All time eat. Indian no hunt job. No work. No hitchhike. No ask relief. No build dam. No give dam.

"White man heap crazy."

We'd be "heap crazy," believe me, if we contemplated any major changes in the Niagara Falls Gazette!

NOW I HAVE an announcement of special interest to Niagara Falls.

First, a little background.

The majority of the common stock of Gannett Co., Inc., is owned by the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation, Inc. The Foundation was established by Mr. Gannett in 1935. It has received the stock through periodic gifts by him since.

His goal in setting up the Foundation was (1) provide maximum security for employes [sic], (2) keep the newspapers independent of any outside influence and (3) provide means for the organization to contribute to worthy institutions in the communities where our newspaper are published.

In May of 1952 the Foundation took a great step. It created Frank Gannett Newspaperboy Scholarships, Inc. Through this organization scholarships are awarded each year to a number of carrier boys to attend the college of their choice.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The scholarships carry a $3,000 award payable $375 each semester. The money is provided $2,000 by the Gannett Foundation and $1,000 by the participating newspaper.

There are already 88 boys in colleges throughout the United States , thanks to this plan.

It is a pleasure to announce The Gazette now is a participating newspaper. It has been assigned two scholarships. Thus, in 1955 two Gazette newspaperboys will go to college, each to be provided with $3,000 over a four-year term to help toward the cost of his education.

Our hopes for The Gazette and for Niagara Falls are high. This city has everything. It is growing and developing and improving right along. If the power situation can be worked out – and preferably if private enterprise is given a chance to do this job – then Niagara Falls will go ahead even faster. Yes, the sky is the limit.

Niagara Falls is going places and the Gannett Newspapers are going right along with it!

Before his untimely death, Alanson Deuel told friends:

"The one thing I was determined, once I had made up my mind to relinquish control of The Gazette was that it must continue to be the same strong force for community good that I have always tried to make it.

"That's why I decided to sell to Frank Gannett. The Gannett Newspapers are outstanding in public service."

None of us – at Rochester, in the management and staff here – none of us will ever knowingly let Mr. Deuel down.

The Niagara Falls Gazette and the city of Niagara Falls will continue to go forward together. Let no one here ever doubt that they will.

9. 1955

10. 1956

11. 1957

a. (B4/f26)

*****

The Gannetteer
June 1957

(1.) Paul Miller: New President of Gannett Co. And of the Gannett Foundation

PAUL MILLER on April 11 was elected president of the Gannett Co., Inc. He succeeded FRANK GANNETT, its founder, who has become president emeritus.

Miller also was elected president of the Gannett Foundation and of WHEC Inc., Rochester radio-television subsidiary of the Gannett Co.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Frank Gannett actively directed the Gannett Co. until two years ago when he was injured in a fall and later suffered other complications which have kept him confined to his Rochester home.

Frank E. Tripp of Elmira, Gannett's long time [sic] associate, who for many years was general manager of the company, continues as chairman of its board. He has also been elected president of all the other subsidiary companies in the organization, consisting chiefly of the operating companies of the various newspapers.

Succeeding Miller as vice president of the Gannett Foundation is Mrs. Frank Gannett. Her husband established the foundation in 1935 to guarantee the continuation of his newspaper organization. The foundation holds 67 per cent of the operating company's outstanding common stock.

The bulk of the net income of the foundation is distributed for public, charitable, educational and general philanthropic uses and purposes in those areas where Gannett newspapers circulate generally.

ONE OF the most widely known leaders in the newspaper industry, Tripp since 1922 has been publisher of the newspapers in his home town, Elmira. He was general manager of the Gannett Group from 1925 to 1951.

For his work in heading up all newspaper promotions for all seven bond drives in World War II he received the U.S. Treasury's Distinguished Service Citation.

Tripp was chairman of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. from 1940 to 1944. His weekly column for years appeared in more than 130 newspapers.

(2.)

President Miller on Group Expansion: 'We Can Be Interested . . .'

(Continued from preceding page)

AS FOR opportunities for advancement within The Group, he told a gathering of Gannett circulation men: "There'll always be new opportunities. You should think whether you are doing the kind of job that will make someone think about you if there's another opportunity elsewhere in our organization . . . .

"As to where and when opportunities will come, time and events will tell. Things can happen fast, as you have seen. There are bound to be openings from time to time. Also, our company is not necessarily through expanding. We are not going to expand just for the sake of expanding. But we can be interested in good newspapers in good communities that fit our type of operation."

THE NEW president, who already had visited each of the 23 Gannett newspapers, has stepped up his rate of travel since April 11. In one 10-day period he visited Plainfield, N.J., and conferred with executives of the Courier-News; addressed an annual dinner of the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce; spoke to teen-age correspondents of The Democrat and Chronicle in Rochester, and dined at Ithaca with department heads of the Ithaca Journal before touring the Gannett Medical Center on the Cornell campus.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(3.)

A Statement
by Frank Tripp

IF PAUL MILLER will accept the designation, I am proud to call him "my boy."

It was a long and thoughtful search by both Frank Gannett and me to find a man equipped to some day [sic] become the president of The Gannett Newspapers.

We were both of an age to make the choice necessary when Paul came; and there seemed to be an organization-wide realization at once of his destiny.

I say he is my boy because I found him. Frank Gannett had barely met him.

The search was for a man of country-wide acquaintance and newspaper knowledge. We found one who qualifies even worldwide. I believe that Paul Miller is today's best known man in world journalism, and personally knows more of his contemporaries both in and out of the newspaper field.

In his activity, I would have said the same of Frank Gannett. It had to be a rare type to succeed Frank.

But most important it had to be a man who would accept the traditions of Gannett newspapers, marry them and perpetuate them. Most of all, the human relations that make for the security of Gannett people.

PAUL has met this test in his every action and attitude. All that Gannett Newspapers have meant to all of us is safe and secure under his leadership. He has no pals to bring along, no strange policies to nurture, no weird newspaper notions.

Long before he became president he was one of us, dedicated to the same things and the same future that we all have striven for.

In my book, what more can we ask of a successor to the man who built it all – a man we love?

(4.)

THE GANNETTEER

In the Gannett Group Are:

The Rochester Times-Union
The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
The Hartford (Conn.) Times
The Elmira Star-Gazette
The Elmira Advertiser
The Elmira Sunday Telegram
The Utica Observer-Dispatch
The Utica Daily Press

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Ithaca Journal
The Newburgh News
The Beacon News
The Albany Knickerbocker News
The Ogdensburg Journal
The Ogdensburg Advance-News
The Plainfield (N.J.) Courier-News
The Olean Times-Herald
The Malone Evening Telegram
The Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News
The Saratoga Springs Saratogian
The Binghamton Press
The Niagara Falls Gazette
The Massena Observer (semi-weekly)
The Potsdam Courier and Freeman (weekly)

The five radio stations in the Gannett Radio Group are:

WHEC, Rochester, 1460
WENY, Elmira, 1230
WHDL, Olean, 1450
WDAN, Danville, Ill., 1490
WINR, Binghamton, 680

The television stations are:

WHEC-TV, Channel 10, Rochester, N.Y.
WDAN-TV, Channel 24, Danville, Ill.

b. Gannett disposed of the Olean (N.Y.) Times-Herald (B2/f44)

c. (B4/f29)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
November 18, 1957

Gannett Co. Buys TV in California

STOCKTON, Calif. – The Gannett Co. – which has newspaper, radio and television interests in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Illinois – today projected its first expansion into the Far West.

Paul Miller of Rochester, N.Y., president of Gannett Co., Inc., announced the signing of an agreement for purchase of TV Station KOVR in the rich Central Valley of California. KOVR operates on Very High Frequency (VHF) over

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Channel 13 and is affiliated with American broadcasting Company. It is licensed to Stockton and serves the three principal cities of the valley – Stockton, Sacramento and Modesto . . . .

d. (B4/f29)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
November 19, 1957

Gannett Co. Acquires California TV Station

STOCKTON, Calif., Nov. 18 – Purchase of television station KOVR in the Sacramento Valley of California by Gannett Co., Inc., was announced yesterday by Paul Miller, president. It is a three million dollar transaction, subject to approval by the Federal Communications Commission, which has authority over the licensing of all broadcast stations . . . .

e. (B4/f29)

Editor & Publisher
November 23, 1957

Gannett Co. Buys Station In California

ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Paul Miller, president of Gannett Co., Inc., this week announced the signing of an agreement for purchase of a Stockton, Calif., television station by the Gannett Co.

The station, KOVR, is a 316,000-watt station licensed to operate on VHF channel 13. It serves Sacramento and Modesto as well as Stockton. It is affiliated with the American Broadcasting Co.

The Gannett Co. proposes to acquire the capital stock of Television Diablo, Inc., owner and operator of KOVR for $1,100,000, with Diablo remaining committed to repay its outstanding indebtedness, approximately $2,000,000.

Principal stockholder of Television Diablo, Inc., is H. Leslie Hoffman of Los Angeles, president of Hoffman Electronics Corp. The concern manufactures radio, television and high fidelity equipment.

Mr. Miller said: "Terry H. Lee, general manager of KOVR, has agreed to remain with the company until July 1, 1958."

In the Gannett Group are 22 newspapers, four [five?] radio stations and three television stations, all east of the Mississippi.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Representing the Gannett Co. with Mr. Miller in investigation and negotiations, extended over several weeks, were Cyril Williams, treasurer; Lynn N. Bitner, general manager; and C. Glover Delaney, managing director of Gannett radio and television properties.

Formal request for approval of the transaction will be made at once to the Federal Communications Commission.

f. (B4/f29)

The Gannetteer
December 1957

PURCHASE of television station KOVR in the Sacramento Valley of California by Gannett Co., Inc., was announced Nov. 18 by PAUL MILLER, president. The transaction is subject to approval by the Federal Communications Commission, which has authority over the licensing of all broadcasting stations.

KOVR-TV, operating on Channel 13, is a VHF station licensed to Stockton and serving the three principal cities of the Sacramento Valley – Stockton, Sacramento and Modesto. Its maximum power transmitter (316,000 watts) is situated atop Butte Mountain, near Jackson in Amador County, heart of the famous Gold Rush country of 1849.

KOVR serves nearly 450,000 TV homes in this rapidly growing agricultural and industrial area which has a population of 1,500,000. It is affiliated with the American Broadcasting Co. network.

The Gannett Co. proposes to acquire the capital stock of Television Diablo, Inc., owner and operator of KOVR-TV, for $1,100,000, with Diablo remaining committed to repay its outstanding indebtedness, approximately $2 million.

Principal stockholder of Television Diablo Inc., is H. Leslie Hoffman of Los Angeles, president of Hoffman Electronics Corp. The concern manufactures radio, television and high fidelity equipment and is active in the government missile and military electronics programs.

“We plan to retain substantially the same staff now operating the station and to announce a program for improved and expanded service to this great and growing area,” Miller said.

“We are particularly pleased that Terry H. Lee, the present general manager of KOVR, has agreed to remain with the company until July 1, 1958. Mr. Lee has been a tremendous factor in the development program of the present KOVR, and his help and guidance will be of major assistance to the Gannett Company.”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

C. GLOVER DELANEY of Rochester, managing director of Gannett Company's Broadcast Division, will devote considerable time to plans for development of KOVR.

Representing the Gannett Company in investigation and negotiations, extended over several weeks, were CYRIL WILLIAMS, treasurer; LYNN N. BITNER, general manager; DELANEY and Justin Doyle of the Rochester law firm of Nixon, Hargrave, Devans & Dey.

The Gannett Company operates other television and radio properties. On Nov. 4, a million-watt UHF station went on the air in Binghamton. Other stations in the Gannett organization are: WHEC, and WHEC-TV, Rochester, N.Y.; WENY, Elmira, N.Y.; WDAN and WDAN-TV (UHF), Danville, Ill., and WINR, Binghamton, N.Y.

THE GANNETT CO. Inc., founded by FRANK GANNETT, who is now president emeritus, operates 22 newspapers in New York State, Connecticut, New Jersey and Illinois.

Gannett News Service maintains bureaus in Washington and Albany. J. P. McKinney & Son, national advertising representatives, a subsidiary of the Gannett Company, has offices in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Syracuse. Legal formalities were completed at mid-month and it was expected that an application for formal approval by the FCC would be presented in a few days. Normally, FCC action on such a transfer requires two to three months.

Hoffman, commenting on the agreement said:

"We have put a great deal of time, money and effort into the development of KOVR as an instrument of real service to the valley area. I am delighted that the purchaser is the Gannett Company, because I know it will carry on and expand policies to the continued best advantage of the people of this area.

12. 1958

13. 1959

14. 1960

15. 1961

16. 1962

17. 1963

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

a. Gannett acquired San Bernardino Sun

18. 1964

19. 1965

a. Gannett acquired Cocoa Tribune, June 1, 1965 (B4/f3)

20. 1966

21. 1967

a. (B1/f3)

Gannett Co., Inc. Annual Report 1967
newspapers/television/radio
"As I look back over 1967, I wonder if you would not be even more interested in a reporter's observations than in a company president's look at the purely financial aspects, outstanding as they were. I shall try to provide both in introducing this, your Company's first Annual Report."

Top
"Gannett Washington Bureau Chief Robert Lucas greets a prime news source, President Lyndon Johnson at the White House. In background (from left) are Al Neuharth, Gannett executive vice president; Calvin Mayne, Rochester Times-Union associate editor, and Paul Miller, Gannett president." (PHOTO)
Bottom Left
"Peter Behr, Rochester Times-Union reporter, interviews U.S. Marine while on assignment covering Vietnam war for Times-Union and other Gannett newspapers." (PHOTO)
Bottom Right
"Sanders LaMont, space writer for Gannett's TODAY, stands beside mockup of U.S. lunar module at Cape Kennedy moonport." (PHOTO MISSING)

22. 1968

a. (B1/f1)

ANNUAL MEETING of Shareholders
May 13, 1968
Rochester, N.Y.
"FIRST ANNUAL MEETING since Gannett Co., Inc. went public . . . ."

b. (B1/f3)

Gannett Co., Inc. Annual Report 1968
newspapers/television/radio
"Building for the future remains a cornerstone of Company policy—building of new plants . . . building of new listenership and readership . . . building of evermore-competent staffs . . . building and maintaining public confidence through conscientious public service."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

23. 1969

a. (B1/f1)

GANNETT CO., INC.
Annual Shareholders' Meeting
Rochester, N.Y.
May 12, 1969
"report on some developments in . . .
modernization and automation of plants and equipment"

b. (B1/f4)

GANNETT CO., INC. ANNUAL REPORT 1969

Report of the President

"Gannett Co., Inc. set new records in 1969 for the eighth consecutive year. Four new dailies were added to the group, bringing the number we currently publish to 33 dailies and 12 community weeklies in six states."

"During 1969, Gannett stock was listed for trading on the New York Stock Exchange (with the ticker symbol GCI), to provide greater recognition of Gannett Company as a major national enterprise. During the second half of the year, a three-for-two stock split was effected and cash dividends were increased by more than 10%, reflecting the continued growth of the company."

Recent Acquisitions

"Gannett publications are located in smaller to medium-sized metropolitan areas contiguous to large cities, predominantly in those that show greater-than-average growth trends."

"Fitting into this pattern are the morning, evening, and Sunday newspapers acquired during 1969 at San Bernardino, California, and at Pensacola, Florida."

c. (B1/f17)

"Planned Growth in the Awareness Industry"

AN ADDRESS BY PAUL MILLER
President, Gannett Co., Inc.
October 8, 1969
Chicago, Ill.
BEFORE
Financial Analysts
THE CHICAGO CLUB
Chicago, Illinois

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

24. 1970

a. (B1/f1)

GANNETT CO., INC.
Shareholder's Annual Meeting
Rochester, N.Y.
May 26, 1970

"Paul Miller, presiding as president and chief executive officer of Gannett Co., Inc., was advanced to chairman and chief executive officer by the Board of Directors following the 1970 shareholders' meeting."

"On March 19, 1969 . . . Gannett became listed on the New York Stock Exchange."

b. (B1/f4)

Gannett Co., Inc. Annual Report 1970

Acquisitions and Dispositions: "On April 24, 1970, the Company acquired for cash the operating assets of the Melbourne (Fla.) Times, an evening newspaper of 9,000 daily circulation covering the South Brevard County area near Cape Kennedy. Central and North Brevard County are served by other Gannett newspapers in Cocoa and Titusville."

"On July 31, 1970, the Company acquired the Times Herald Co. which publishes evening and Sunday newspapers (circulation 40,000 daily and Sunday) in Port Huron, Michigan, the evening newspaper (circulation 10,000 daily) in Utica, Michigan, two weekly newspapers and an industrial printing plant."

"Included among the assets acquired with The Times Herald Co. was a minority interest in Federated Publications, Inc. which publishes seven newspapers in four Midwestern and western states."

"The sale of the two weekly newspapers in Newark, N.Y. was completed as of December 27, 1970. These newspapers had operated at a loss."

"The sale of radio stations WEZY-AM and FM in Cocoa, Florida was completed as of December 27, 1970. These stations had operated at a loss."

25. 1971

a. (B1/f4)

Gannett Co., Inc. 1971 Annual Report
Seventeen Additional Newspapers, Another Year of Growth

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

From the Chairman and Chief Executive

"By the year's end, after the addition during 1971 of 17 newspapers, Gannett newspapers extended 'Form coast to coast, Hawaii and beyond,' numerically the largest newspaper group in the United States—53 newspapers in 16 states."
"We are frequently asked about 'Gannett's acquisition program.' Actually, there isn't any 'program.' There is assuredly an acquisition 'policy.' It is to concentrate on adding newspapers which are dominant in growing markets. We are in touch with ownerships throughout America—either on their motion or ours—whom we consider would fit profitably and happily into our Group. Many of our acquisitions have come to us; we like to regard this as a tribute to the kind of socially-conscious, community-oriented, fiscally-responsible newspapers which Gannett newspapers endeavor to be."

Acquisitions
"On April 14, 1971, the Company acquired . . . the Burlington, Vermont Free Press and the Chambersburg, Pennsylvania Public Opinion."
"On July 1, 1971, Federated Publications, Inc. was acquired . . . ."
"On July 31, 1971, the Company assumed the liabilities and acquired the assets of the Binghamton, New York Sun-Bulletin . . . ."
"On November 1, 1971, the Company acquired the six newspapers of Honolulu Star-Bulletin, Inc."
"On November 18, 1971, the Company acquired the Fort Meyers, Florida News-Press . . . ."
. . . and Dispositions
"On July 6, 1971, the Company disposed of the Inland Printing Co. of San Bernardino, California, a commercial printing company. Inland reported a loss of approximately $41,107 for 1970 despite record revenues of $773,884."

b. (B1/f1)

GANNETT CO., INC.
Shareholders' Annual Meeting
Rochester, N.Y.
May 12, 1971

"First, as to recent acquisitions. During the last 12 months, your company added four newspapers in three states."
"The staff is geared to provide operating help and counsel as needed to all of our affiliates."
"Beyond that, we are now in the midst of a professional re-examination of our entire operating structure, aiming for more efficient management . . . ."

26. 1972

a. (B1/f4)

Gannett Co., Inc. 1972 Annual Report

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Progress
"The Nashville Banner and the El Paso Times joined the Gannett Group on January 14 and June 7 [or June 9? see (B4/f3)]."

b. (B1/f1)

GANNETT CO., INC.
Annual Shareholders' Meeting
Rochester, New York
May 9, 1972

"1971 was Gannett's greatest year of growth."
"Gannett today is numerically the largest newspaper group or chain in the United States and the most widely diversified geographically. It embraces 52 newspapers in 15 states and on the Island of Guam."
"Gannett now produces and sells one of every 29 newspapers sold in the U.S.—and they are nearly 90 percent home-delivered."
"Gannett has expanded steadily over the years, but 1971 saw 17 newspapers join us."

27. 1973

a. (B1/f4)

Gannett Co. Inc., 1973 Annual Report

Gannett Co., Inc. is a national newspaper company which publishes 51 daily newspapers in 15 states and the territory of Guam. The newspapers have a combined circulation of 2.2 million copies daily and are located in 32 growth markets serving a population area of about 10 million. Pending are the purchase of six additional daily newspapers in four states."

28. 1974

29. 1975

a. (B1/f2)

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION
Washington, D.C. 20549
Form 10-K
ANNUAL REPORT
For the fiscal year ended December 28, 1975
ACQUISITIONS 1971-1975
DISPOSITIONS 1971-1975
NEWSPAPER PUBLISHING

30. 1976

a. (B1/f10)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"There was a story. Which was generally favorable, in New York magazine a week or two ago. It began with a reference to Frank Gannett and his ambition to be president of the United States—and he did seek the Republican nomination in 1940. That's all right. But the other thing was the implication that he used all his newspapers for political purposes, and nothing could be further from the truth. He didn't . . . ."

"There is a tendency to think that this company only started when we went public in 1967. Many people don't realize that, for example, when I came here, this was then the largest—numerically—newspaper company in the U.S. This was way back in 1947, and while we were largely centered in New York and the Northeast, at that time it was numerically the largest group, as it is today. So I have felt that the least that any of us following on could do was make the point, every time we had the opportunity, that we could not have done what we've done if we hadn't had this sound, no-debt, safe, well-regarded company to work with."

Broadcasting: Radio and TV
(Box # 13, 15, 17)

1. 1948

a. (B3/f53)

The Gannetteer
May 1948

Miller named to handle Group radio and TV

To All Gannett Newspaper and Radio Executives:

EFFECTIVE immediately Paul Miller will assume general supervision of Group radio and television matters, in addition to his other executive duties.

The purpose is to coordinate all of our radio activities under one head. This appears wise for a number of reasons, three being:

First, it is desired to widen the scope of Group public service through closer working relationships between our newspapers and radio stations.

Second, more general executive attention to radio is demanded by the expansion of our radio operations and our future interest in FM and TV.

Third, the control of radio, so much centralized in Washington, demands the acquaintance and know-how which Paul Miller has.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Herb Cruickshank and I are too absorbed in the specific management of our properties and their general problems to give radio the detailed attention it requires.

Therefore you will please address to Paul Miller any radio or television matters which you wish to pursue with the Central Office.

THE GANNETT NEWSPAPERS

F. E. Tripp, G-M.

THE GANNETTEER

b. (B3/f53)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Rochester, N.Y.
October 13, 1948

6 Gannett Radio Stations
Now Run on Group Status

Radio stations affiliated with The Gannett Newspapers in New York, Illinois and Connecticut henceforth will be known as "The Gannett Radio Group," it was announced yesterday.

The six stations are: WABY, Albany; WDAN, Danville, Ill.; WENY, Elmira; WHDL, Olean, WHEC, Rochester, and WTHT, Hartford, Conn.

In making known the name by which the stations as a whole henceforth will be known, Frank Tripp, general manager of The Gannett Newspapers explained:

"The aim is to facilitate cooperation among group stations and to establish the Gannett Radio Group as a specially considered entity in the radio-television industry.

"All of our radio and television operations will continue under the general executive supervision of Paul Miller, who assumed this responsibility in addition to other duties some time back.

"Additionally, however, Miller is designating two consultants for all of our stations as follows:

"Group counsel – Gunnar Wiig, who continues as general manager of WHEC, Rochester.

"Group chief engineer – Bernard C. O'Brien, who continues as chief engineer of WHEC, Rochester.

"Both Wiig and O'Brien have for years made their experience and services available to all of our stations. The arrangement Miller is making for them rightly recognizes and regularizes their contribution," Tripp's statement concluded . . . .

c. (B3/f53)

*****

Rochester Times-Union

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

October 13, 1948

Six Stations Included
In Gannett Radio Group

d. (B3/f53)
*****

Olean Times-Herald
Friday, October 22, 1948, p. 3

Cooperation Between Newspaper and Radio
Stressed At Meeting

Featured by a discussion of ways and means of bettering the service to the public of their stations, members of the Gannett Radio Group concluded a two day session at the Olean House this afternoon.

Closer cooperation on news coverage between the radio stations and the newspapers with which they are affiliated was an important subject before the panel . . . .

PHOTO:
Caption:

AT RADIO CONFERENCE. These broadcasting executives, members of the Gannett Radio Group, concluded a two-day conference at the Olean House today, at which they discussed problems confronting radio stations owned by the Gannett Company . . . .

e. (B3/f53)
*****

The Commercial-News
Danville, Illinois
Thursday, October 28, 1948

Gannett Assistant
Sees C-N, WDAN
During 2-Day Visit

PHOTO:
Caption:
Paul Miller, right, executive head of The Gannett Radio Group, chats informally with Robert J. Burrow, manager of WDAN, Group Station. This picture was taken in front of The Commercial-News as Miller, assistant to Frank Gannett, president and publisher of the Gannett Group of Newspapers, was making his first get-acquainted visit to Danville.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By BOB WRIGHT

Paul Miller, assistant to Frank Gannett, president and publisher of The Gannett Group of Newspapers, was in Danville Thursday on a two-day visit, his first since he became associated with the organization in July 1947.

A topflight newspaperman, Miller is serving as executive head of The Gannett Radio Group, a unit of which is Station WDAN.

He described the new WDAN building as "efficiently planned and attractive" and had words of praise for The Commercial-News.

"In the profession," he said, "The Commercial-News is regarded as unusually enterprising, not only from a journalistic standpoint but as outstanding in the public service it performs."

Miller made the trip from his Rochester, N. Y. headquarters to Chicago by plane. Robert J. Burow, WDAN manager, met him there Wednesday and the two motored to Danville. The Gannett executive will go to Pawhuska, Okla., Sunday to speak at a mortgage-burning ceremony in the church where his father, the Rev. James Miller, deceased, was pastor more than 20 years ago.

In an automobile tour of the city Thursday with E. C. Hewes, editor and publisher of The Commercial-News, Miller found the industrial development most impressive, since it balances the solid prosperity of the surrounding agricultural area . . . .

f. (B3/f53)

The Gannetteer
December 1948

PHOTOS:
WDAN's NEW HOME:
— other photos on following pages.

Caption:

Paul Miller (right) appears pleased with his inspection of the new building, studios, and other offices of WDAN-Danville, after a tour with Station Manager Bob Burow (left), If you'd see the new plant, just turn this page . . .

2. 1949

a. (B3/f56)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Thursday, March 24, 1949

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

D & C Begins
Broadcast
From Office

"Good evening, this is Ralph Knox bringing you the news highlights from the Democrat and Chronicle . . . ."

It was the same message WHEC radio listeners hear every night at 11 o'clock, but this time it came straight from the D&C newsroom's own radio studio . . . .

PHOTOS:
NEWSROOM OF THE AIR

Caption:
George R. Shoals, The Democrat and Chronicle's managing Editor; Gunnar Wiig, general manager of Station WHEC, and Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, from left in upper photo, participated in ceremonies opening new radio news studio in D&C newsroom last night. Lower photo shows Cliff Carpenter, D&C radio news editor, standing; Ralph Knox, WHEC news editor, who broadcasts news, and Craig Williams, engineer, with back to camera.

b. (B3/f56)
*****

Editor & Publisher
April 30, 1949

Greater Help from Radio
Forecast to AP Members

"Much Remains to be Done,"
Says Board; Mclean Re-elected

An unprecedented increase in cooperation between members of the Associated Press in covering stories of more than local proportions received primary notice in the report of the directors to the annual membership meeting in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel April 25.

Several cases-in-point were cited, but "news contributions from radio" are not at a par with those of other members, the report said, and "there is no disposition on the part of radio members to represent the results as adequate. Much remains to be done before (their) full potential is realized."

Staff Not 'High Hat'

Enhancing of staff-member and staff-staff cooperation is part of a special program, begun in AP's first year in its second century at the recommendation of Associated Press Managing Editors Association in 1948.

Executive Director Kent Cooper explained that APME had grown from a condition which prevailed about 15 years ago, when editors had the impression that AP management was too aloof and unwilling to heed criticism of the service. The APME operation, he said, has demonstrated that headquarters personnel is not "high hat."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Radio stations, said President Robert McLean, are making a contribution – not alone in money – that is considerable. He cited their contribution in news gathering, pointed to an increase in radio members from 456 to 940, and noted that 30 state AP radio associations have been formed . . . .

c. (B3/f56)

*

Rochester Times-Union
May 13, 1949

Gannett Radio
Chiefs Confer

A discussion of methods of increasing the public service of their programs is the theme of a two-day meeting of managers of Gannett radio stations now in progress in Washington . . . .

d. (B3/f56)

*

Broadcasting Magazine
May 23, 1949, p. 63

GANNETT CONCLAVE DeLaney Named Chairman

O. GLOVER DELANEY, general manager of WTHT Hartford, has been elected chairman of the Gannett Group radio stations for the coming year. He replaces Dale Taylor, general manager of WENY Elmira, N.Y. Robert J. Burow, station and promotion manager of WDAN Danville, Ill., is the new secretary.

Officers were elected at the wind-up of a two-day radio conference held May 12-13 at the Statler Hotel, Washington, by the Gannett Group. Members of the FCC were honor guests at the dinner.

The conference agenda included a talk on Gannett radio operations by Paul Miller, Gannett Group vice president and coordinator of the six stations in the group . . . .

e. (B3/f56)

The Gannetteer
May 1949

PHOTO:
BELOW: Rochester WHEC listeners now hear news-casts straight from The Democrat and Chronicle's own newsroom radio studio, officially put in use Mar. 23. Participating in the inaugural program (from left) were Cliff carpenter, new D&C radio news editor; Gunnar Wiig, WHEC general manager; Craig Williams, engineer; George R. Shoals, D&C managing editor, and Paul Miller, vicepresident of the Gannett Company and chief of all its radio interests.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

3. 1950

a. (B3/f64)

The Times-Picayune Publishing Company

The Times Picayune New Orleans States
LAFAYETTE SQUARE NEW ORLEANS 4

Office of
GEORGE W. HEALY, JR.
Vice-President
The Times-Picayune Publishing Co.
Managing Editor
The Times-Picayune

July 29, 1950

Mr. Paul Miller,
Vice President,
The Gannett Newspapers,
Rochester 4, N. Y.

Dear Paul:

I just completed your South American series. It was excellent, giving me a chance to re-enjoy the trip. Incidentally, you were smarter than I. Margaret wanted to know what Evita wore, and I couldn't tell her. Now, thanks to you and Fleur, I can.

My radio interviews are getting to be too much of a bad thing. After WTPS and WWL I received a call from WDSU and WDSU-TV and am booked there at 1:30 p. m. Monday. WTPS and WWL, I'm sure, have no platters; but if I can get them to cut one at WDSU, I'll send you a copy. You probably are lucky that the radio stations in Rochester aren't like those in New Orleans, with each having a Latin American program at least once a week.

I'm glad you couldn't get WWL. I was almost as hoarse as I was in Buenos Aires, and I'm sure the program was bum. The Latin American expert who interviewed me incidentally was worse off than I. He had just taken a shot for his latest case of dysentery, contracted in Bolivia.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Best regards,

Sincerely,
George (signed)
George W. Healy, Jr.

GWH/MM

4. 1951

5. 1952

6. 1953

7. 1954

a. (B3a/f73)

Rochester Times-Union
November 3, 1954

Press, Radio, TV Gave Joint Coverage

All Facilities
Combined for 1st Time

The news gathering facilities of The Times-Union, The Democrat and Chronicle, WHEC-Radio and WHEC-Television were combined last night for the first time to give Rochester and area residents a new service in election reporting.

The traditionally quick and accurate returns coverage by the newspaper staffs poured fast-mounting figures into a score of adding machines to prepare totals for today's final election tables. WHEC-Radio and TV kept pace with up-to-the-minute coverage over the air.

WHEC's television operation, set up in The Times-Union news room and opened at 7:30 p.m., brought into focus for viewers the mechanics, the excitement, the mounting tensions of election night.

More than 100 persons participated in the news-TV-radio combine, which brought to listeners not only the color and excitement of election news coverage, but also interviews with winning local candidates.

First to go on the air was triumphant Republican Rep. Kenneth B. Keating, presented by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett newspapers. After welcoming Keating to the scene of the combined election coverage operation, Miller pointed out:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union always combine forces for the compiling of election returns. In recent years, WHEC-Radio has been brought in to report on a spot basis directly from the joint newsroom.

"Tonight, for the first time, WHEC-Television is added in an integrated operation designed to give the fullest possible news coverage to the area. We know this first experience will leave much to be desired, but I can assure listeners and hearers that we hope to learn from it and to do better still next time."

When WHEC-TV's "live" telecast from The Times-Union newsroom ended at 11 p.m., the station shifted to its studios, where further combined newspaper and television coverage was offered.

This included showing over the air of pictures taken at Republican and Democratic headquarters by Times-Union cameramen.

C. Glover DeLaney, general manager of WHEC, said today:

"Approximately 40 members of the staff of WHEC joined with the members of the two newspapers to bring results as swiftly as available to the Rochester area viewers. The success of the effort encourages us to make even more elaborate plans for similar coverage of future elections."

PHOTO
Caption:

ELECTION INTERVIEW – Rep. Kenneth B. Keating speaks before WHEC-TV camera in Times-Union newsroom during interview with Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers. This followed posting of returns assuring Keating's reelection.

8. 1955

a. (B4/f1)

American Newspaper Publishers Association
CRANSTON WILLIAMS, General Manager
370 Lexington Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

GENERAL MANAGEMENT BULLETIN

No. 15 March 16, 1955

ANPA TO BE AT A.B.A. MEETING ON NEWSPAPER COVERAGE OF COURT TRIALS

Jack R. Howard, Scripps-Howard Newspapers, New York, N. Y., and Paul Miller, Gannett newspapers, Rochester, N. Y., will represent ANPA at April 2 meeting in Washington, D. C., called by American Bar Association to discuss mutual responsibilities in court trials and publicizing of court proceedings.

J. R. Wiggins will represent American Society of Newspaper Editors and Edgar Kobak, National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters. American Bar Association representatives are Justice Douglas L. Edmonds, California, chairman of A.B.A.'s Judicial Administration Section, and Wilber

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

[sic?]M. Brucker, Detroit, Mich., chairman of A.B.A.'s Committee on Professional Ethics and Grievances.

b. (B4/f1)

*****

Times-Union
March 16, 1955

Miller to Represent Publishers
At Parley on Trial Coverage

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, will represent the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. at a meeting called to discuss news coverage of court trials . . . .

c. (B4/f1)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
March 17, 1955

Gannett Executive to Attend
Meeting on Trial Coverage

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett newspapers, will represent the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. at a meeting to discuss newspaper coverage of court trials in Washington on April 2 . . . .

d. (B4/f1)

[Source unknown]
(probably General Management Bulletin)
April 2, 1955

PRESS AND BAR GROUPS DISCUSS CANON 35 OF A.B.A.
ON USE OF CAMERAS IN COURTROOMS

Release from Washington, D. C., April 2 follows:

Representatives of national organizations of publishers, editors and broadcasters met with representatives of the American bar Association in Washington today at the Statler Hotel for a preliminary discussion of the reporting of court proceedings.

Views were exchanged on Canon 35 of the canons of Judicial Ethics of the American Bar Association, drafted in 1937 and since adopted as a rule of court procedure in 21 states. The canon precludes the use of cameras, broadcasting or television equipment in court rooms. The media organizations oppose this canon.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The conference group was convened without any authority to act but solely for the purpose of obtaining a clarification of the respective positions of the bar and the media. A further exchange of views at a later date on the various aspects of the question was decided upon.

Attending today's meeting were:

American Newspaper Publisher Association

Paul Miller, Gannett Newspapers, Rochester, New York

Jack R. Howard, Scripps-Howard Newspapers, New York

Chairman, Freedom of Information Committee

Edgar Kobak, New York, National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters

American Society of Newspaper Editors

J. R. Wiggins, Washington Post and Times Herald, Washington, D. C.

American Bar Association

Honorable Wilbur M. Brucker, General Counsel, Department of Defense, Washington, D. C.

Honorable Douglas L. Edmonds, Supreme Court of California, San Francisco, California

Don Hyndman, Director of Public Relations, American Bar Association, Chicago, Illinois

Richard P. Tinkham, Chairman, American Bar Association, Committee on Public Relations, Hammond, Indiana

[For previous reference, see General Management Bulletin, No. 15, March 16, 1955.]

e. (B4/f2)

Niagara Falls Gazette
September 19, 1955

Prayer for Health of Ailing Publisher Opens Parley of Gannett Executives Here

More than 100 executives of the Gannett Group of Newspapers, Radio and Television Stations today heard Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Co., Inc., open a two-day group editorial and business conference at Hotel Niagara with a prayer for the health of Frank E. Gannett and the continuance of the idealistic spirit in newspapering.

Mr. Miller singled out the Niagara Falls Gazette, newest member of the group, as a lively newspaper in a "great town." He said that the Gannett Co. is "very happy to be here" as he welcomed publishers, editorial and business executives of the 23 newspapers, four radio stations and two television stations that comprise the group.

Founder of the Company

Mr. Miller's opening prayer follows:

"Our Father in Heaven: Please bless FEG (Frank E. Gannett) and Dav (E. R. Davenport) and others unable to be here today, and be with us as we talk newspapering – a pursuit, let us never forget, where idealism is essential to continuing success. Amen."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Gannett is founder and president of the Gannett Co., Inc. Mr. Davenport is a retired official of the company now living in Florida.

This morning the delegates to the annual group meeting listened to a report on group operations by Lynn N. Bitner, general manager. Mr. Bitner cited 1955 as a peak year in newspaper circulation and advertising and noted that a rising standard of living and growing population in the United States bodes well for the future.

He was followed to the rostrum in the hotel ballroom by G. Glover Delaney of Rochester, who heads the group's radio and TV operations. Mr. Delaney's topic was "Working with TV and Radio."

Albany Man Speaks

Henry W. Stock, advertising manager of the Albany Knickerbocker News discussed the work of the Brand Names Foundation.

Cyrus H. Favor, circulation manager of the Utica Daily Press and the Sunday Utica Observer Dispatch, discussed "Why Do People Buy Our Newspapers?"

Mr. Bitner spoke at a joint luncheon meeting in the hotel's Terrace Room.

Following the opening session this morning, the visitors split into three groups for separate meetings. These were group meetings for news and editorial personnel, radio and television officials, and advertising and business representatives . . . .

Blanchard, Jones Preside

L. R. Blanchard, editorial chairman of the group, and Vincent S. Jones, executive editor, presided at the editorial conference. Irving H. Fitch, advertising director, was chairman of the advertising and business meeting, and Mr. Delaney presided at the radio and TV meeting . . . .

In his remarks Mr. Miller paid tribute to Herbert Cruickshank, who will retire this year as treasurer of the Gannett Co. Also at the speaker's table with Mr. Miller and Mr. Bitner was Frank Tripp, chairman of the board of the Gannett Co., Inc.

Mr. Miller called on Don U. Bridge, general manager of the Rochester Times-Union and the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, who said he had talked with the hospital today and was happy to report that Mr. Gannett, who was stricken ill in April, was showing improvement.

Dinner Meeting Planned

A dinner meeting of the conference delegates will be held in the hotel ballroom this evening . . . .

Besides the 20 New York State newspapers that are members of the group, three out-of-state newspapers are represented at the conference. They are the Hartford (Conn.) Times, the Plainfield (N.J.) Courier News and the Danville (Ill.) Commercial News.

Among the delegates arriving here yesterday were officials of Radio Station WHEC, Rochester; WENY, Elmira; WHDL, Olean, and WDAN, Danville, and Television Stations WHEC-TV, Rochester, and WDAN-TV, Danville . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PHOTO
Caption:

GANNETT GROUP CONVENES HERE – More than 100 executives of the 23 newspapers, four radio stations and two television stations that comprise the Gannett Group met at Hotel Niagara today for a business and editorial conference. Left to right, Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Co., Inc.; Kenneth K. Burke, vice president and general manager of the Niagara Falls Gazette, newest member of the group; Lynn R. Bitner, group general manager, and frank Tripp, chairman of the board of the Gannett Co. Inc.—Gazette Photo. Additional picture on page 15.

9. 1956

a. (B4/f3)

Democrat and Chronicle
March 28, 1956

Brown, Miller Testify In Channel 10 Hearing

WASHINGTON, March 27 (GNS) – Gordon P. Brown, owner of WSAY in Rochester testified today that he lost "out of pocket" approximately $200,000 on the operation of his radio station since 1947.

"For the last two or three years," Brown said, "I haven't even taken any salary out of WSAY for myself . . . This year, the WSAY operation was not profitable."

Brown testified as the first witness again today at a hearing before FCC Examiner Elizabeth C. Smith on a "protest case" which Brown has brought against the Federal Communications Commission over the Channel 10 television service in Rochester.

The second witness was Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Co., Inc., who appeared in response to a subpoena issued by Brown's lawyers. The Gannett Co. owns WHEC and WHEC-TV.

The FCC on March 11, 1953, awarded the Channel 10 license to WHEC and WVET, owned by the Veterans Broadcasting Co., to operate on a "share-time" basis. Brown is seeking to prove that the FCC grant was "contrary to the public interest."

Brown also contends that WVET and WHEC have improperly denied him the right to rebroadcast certain radio programs on his own station, which originally were broadcast over WVET and WHEC-AM radio stations.

He sought to introduce 1952 correspondence between himself and the two radio stations in which he says his requests were denied.

Brown was identified as the president, general manager, and sole stockholder of the Federal Broadcasting Corp., which owns WSAY. At one point, he was asked by his lawyer to "tell the history and experiences" of his radio station.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Started in 1935

Brown said in substance:

He first "hit the air" in Rochester with a 100-watt, daytime only, radio station in 1935. By 1938, he obtained FCC approval to increase his power to 250 watts. By 1943 he was up to 1,000 watts, and WSAY is now operating on 5,000 watts.

He had a network connection with the Mutual Broadcasting System in the early 1940s until Station WVET came into being. He lost that network connection to WVET in 1947, and "we have not been able to get affiliation since that time."

"We never tried CBS because it was affiliated with WHEC," Brown said. "I had talked to CBS, pointing out the superiority of our facilities and coverage, but was not able to get anywhere."

In the last year that he had a network connection, Brown said, he made "close to $100,000 from network programs. Since that time, he said, "revenue has decreased tremendously."

Brown agreed to make his financial statements for the years 1947 through 1952 available from FCC files for incorporation in the public record of the hearing.

Miller said he has been with the Gannett organization for 8 ½ years. Before that, he was with the Associated Press for 15 years, and was chief of the AP Washington Bureau for 5 ½ years.

He testified about business interests of the Gannett Co. Miller said that a majority of the voting stock is controlled by the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation Inc., which is run by a board of directors.

Strong Public Service

Miller said that Frank Gannett, president of the company, "has been ill since last April;" that Frank E. Tripp is chairman of the board of directors of the foundation; and that "I am operating head of the company."

Concerning the Gannett newspaper and radio-television operations, Miller said:

"Our whole philosophy is to keep it local. We're strong on public service, and everything has to do with the local communities that we serve, the same as with our radio and TV stations. Public service is number one."

Miller said The Gannett Group had been in formation for approximately 50 years. In Rochester, he said, the company publishes The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union.

These are the only two daily newspapers, he said, but other publications in the community include The Catholic Courier Journal, The Jewish Ledger, The Daily Record, a German language newspaper, the magazine WE, and until recently The Sun.

Miller said the Sun was a weekly newspaper "published by a young man named Curt Gurling, a fine young man, but he closed it down." Miller also pointed out that there are six radio stations in Rochester, and two television stations. "We have one-fourth of the TV service in the community," he said.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

William A. Roberts, Brown's lawyer, asked a number of questions about the advertising and editorial content of The Gannett Newspaper[s], their news and feature services, and "who determines political policy on your newspapers?"

Question Overruled

This question was overruled by FCC examiner Smith as not being pertinent to the case. "Just because this is a political year," she said, "Let's not turn this case into a political forum."

"Are any types of advertising prohibited?" asked Roberts.

"Yes, sir," Miller replied. "We do not accept any liquor advertising." He went on to say that "beer, wine, and any other alcoholic beverages" are also excluded.

"But their sale is legal and customary in Rochester?"

"Yes," Miller replied.

Miller said the two Rochester newspapers use the news and feature services of AP, UP, INS, Chicago Daily News, NEA, and King Features. "The number of services is a matter of local determination," he observed.

Roberts asked how "policy" was determined on The Gannett Newspapers.

"That is worked out in general discussion," said Miller. Editorial policy is left up to the editors of the two Rochester papers, just as it is throughout the group. The local editor is the boy."

The executive editor of The Gannett Group, Miller said, "is a man of good general newspaper experience, who advises with the other editors on newspaper problems, but not on policy."

The advertising director of the group, he said, "has somewhat the same responsibility. He serves in an advisory capacity." Miller said the group has no "fixed rules," but that its executives meet in a group conference "either once or twice a year."

Miller also testified that there are separate national advertising agencies handling accounts for the newspapers, and for the radio-television stations. "We fix rates for radio and TV wholly apart from the newspapers," he said.

'Fair Rate' Policy

"Are your rates based on fixed policies?" Roberts asked.

"The rates should be fair," Miller said. "That's the top policy." He offered to furnish advertising rate cards, and make an advertising man available for further testimony if desired.

Roberts asked about Gannett Co. operations in the Radio-TV field in Albany and Elmira. He stated for the record:

"I can show it has been the practice of Gannett to apply for TV and radio licenses, even to build a station and then abandon it, for the purpose of concentrating media in its own hand."

Roberts also called attention to an agreement between Stations WVET and WHEC not to sell to any outsiders, should either party wish to abandon its half of the “share-time” TV operation in Rochester, but to make a first refusal offer to the other partner.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Hearings are scheduled to continue tomorrow, when Brown’s lawyers have other witnesses waiting to appear, who have not yet been identified.

Brown was the first witness to be heard as hearings in his “protest case” were opened by the FCC Monday. After pointing out that Rochester’s two daily newspapers are owned by the Gannett interests, he argued there is a monopoly of the media of communication here. Brown added that the situation has existed in Rochester since The Gannett Group took over the former Journal-American from the Hearst interests on June 30, 1937.

Copies of the last issue of the Journal-American published on that date and others from editions of The Democrat and Chronicle and Times-Union issued on July 2, 1937, were introduced in support of Brown’s claim.

Charges Collusion

Roberts, Brown’s counsel, said, “We will undertake to show that in collusion with Hearst, The Gannett Newspapers and Hearst newspapers acquired a monopoly in Rochester and Albany by mutually suppressing one [another’s ?] newspapers.”

In the course of giving testimony, Brown voiced objection to the way in which program listings for WSAY were carried by the newspapers. He cited an instance in which, according to his claim, the listings specified that a Bing Crosby program was recorded rather than “live.”

Brown’s second witness was John G. Corey, editor and publisher of the local news magazine, We. Corey, who was asked to “describe the manner of operation of The Gannett Newspapers as of 1935,” was identified as a “newspaperman who has lived for 35 years in Rochester.”

Corey said:

“I wrote a profile on Gannett in 1945. I took exception to remarks of the editor of The Democrat and Chronicle that each Gannett newspaper stood on its own feet. The profile was complimentary to Gannett – very complimentary. But the truth is, all the editors took their orders from the editorial chief, who at that time was Fay Blanchard.” (Corey’s reference was to L. R. Blanchard who since 1950 has been editor of The Democrat and Chronicle and who was general executive editor of The Gannett Newspapers.)

‘Common Gossip’

When asked to account for his professed knowledge of Gannett editorial policy workings – in view of the fact that he had never worked under Gannett management and had acknowledged he did not associate with Gannett Co. officials – Corey replied: “Common gossip in Rochester.”

He added it was gossip among Gannett newspaper reporters he had met “on various stories and in various bars.”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In reply to a question regarding the "active political interest" of the newspapers, Corey said, "They give coverage to both parties."

Corey asserted that the Rochester newspapers in certain instances had "not disclosed news." He cited, as unreported by the dailies, two deaths at Rochester State Hospital for Mentally Defective Children at Newark, and the methods used by a furnace company to sell furnaces to Brighton area residents following the 1951 gas explosions disaster in that town. Corey claimed that each of the stories had been "exposed" by his publication.

b. (B4/f15)

Times-Union
October 4, 1956

* * *

EYE ON THE NEWS – Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, will report on his recent trip to the scene of the Suez Canal dispute on Eye on the News on Channel 10 at 7:15 p.m. today. Mayor Peter Barry also will be a guest on the program with a special message on voter registration.

c. (B4/f15)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
October 5, 1956

Suez Cited as Showing End to Power Politics

The day of power politics as the solution to international tensions has disappeared, Paul Miller said last night.

The executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers in a television report described his recent trip to the Suez Canal area, scene of the present international dispute over Egyptian seizure of the waterway.

"The day of the display of power as the answer to international tensions has disappeared," Miller said. "The day of negotiation as the answer to such problems has now arrived."

The Suez incident has made it clear that the answer lies in negotiation not the threat of force, the newspaper executive said.

Egyptians do not consider they seized the canal, Miller said. They look upon their action as nationalization of a home-owned enterprize [sic] within their own border, he added.

Miller reported that he witnessed no display of hostility to himself or other Westerners during his stay in the Suez area. He also pointed out that Western fears that Egypt lacked the ability to run the canal have been proved false by the amount of traffic now using the waterway. Miller spoke over “Eye on the News” on Channel 10.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

10. 1957

a. (B4/f26)

*Broadcasting * Telecasting*
April 22, 1957

Miller Elected Gannett President

PAUL MILLER, executive vice president of the Gannett Co., has been elected president of the firm. Frank Gannett, founder, was elected president-emeritus, and Frank E. Tripp, continuing as chairman of the board, becomes president of all subsidiaries except Gannett Foundation and WHEC Inc., Rochester, which are headed by Mr. Miller, president. Mr. Miller, former assistant general manager of the AP and Washington bureau chief, has been with Gannett since 1947. Gannett owns WHEC–AM–TV Binghamton, WENY Elmira, an interest in WHDL Olean, all N.Y., and WDAN-AM-TV Danville, Ill. [and others?].

b. (B4/f26)
*****

The Gannetteer
June 1957

(1.) Paul Miller: New President of Gannett Co. And of the Gannett Foundation

PAUL MILLER on April 11 was elected president of the Gannett Co., Inc. He succeeded FRANK GANNETT, its founder, who has become president emeritus.

Miller also was elected president of the Gannett Foundation and of WHEC Inc., Rochester radio-television subsidiary of the Gannett Co.

Frank Gannett actively directed the Gannett Co. until two years ago when he was injured in a fall and later suffered other complications which have kept him confined to his Rochester home.

Frank E. Tripp of Elmira, Gannett’s long time [sic] associate, who for many years was general manager of the company, continues as chairman of its board. He has also been elected president of all the other subsidiary companies in the organization, consisting chiefly of the operating companies of the various newspapers.

Succeeding Miller as vice president of the Gannett Foundation is Mrs. Frank Gannett. Her husband established the foundation in 1935 to guarantee the continuation of his newspaper organization. The foundation holds 67 per cent of the operating company's outstanding common stock.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The bulk of the net income of the foundation is distributed for public, charitable, educational and general philanthropic uses and purposes in those areas where Gannett newspapers circulate generally.

ONE OF the most widely known leaders in the newspaper industry, Tripp since 1922 has been publisher of the newspapers in his home town, Elmira. He was general manager of the Gannett Group from 1925 to 1951.

For his work in heading up all newspaper promotions for all seven bond drives in World War II he received the U.S. Treasury's Distinguished Service Citation.

Tripp was chairman of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. from 1940 to 1944. His weekly column for years appeared in more than 130 newspapers.

(2.) The Group's New President:

A Versatile Newsman . . . Executive . . . Civic Leader . . . Global Traveler

IN ASSUMING the presidency of Gannett Co. Inc., PAUL MILLER pledged a continuation of the unique policy of local autonomy under which FRANK GANNETT always has delegated authority and responsibility to the management of each newspaper in the Group.

Under this system, editorial policies are determined locally by the men who live in and know their communities. This is unlike a chain operation, in which methods and practices are dictated from a central office.

Miller joined the Group as executive assistant to Gannett on Aug. 1, 1947. He was elected a director and a vice president of the company in 1949. At the request of Gannett, he took over many of the duties which the founder had performed for many years.

In 1951 he was elected executive vice president. Since May 1955, he has been operating head of the company. He is also publisher and editor of the Rochester Times-Union and publisher of The Democrat and Chronicle.

His basic philosophy of newspapering was sketched in a bylined article on The Times-Union editorial page two days after his elevation to the presidency:

"A good newspaper is not built overnight. It develops over many years, just as a person's character develops. In time its readers come to know it for what it is. If it is truly successful, the newspaper is a good neighbor, a good citizen, a trusted confidant . . . like a good man or a good woman. It will be doomed to failure, ultimately, if it is not trustworthy, fair and clean. This is especially true of cities of homes.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"That general thinking has been behind the growth and development of newspapers in the Gannett Group, founded on a small beginning by Frank Gannett . . . .

"It is assumed that Gannett newspapers will be clean and community-minded and patriotic and fair. From there on, the local management is on its own as to specific editorial problems and issues."

REGARDING pricing of our products, Miller wrote:

"Briefly, and as general policy, we believe in the lowest feasible advertising and circulation rates. We'd rather get more advertising at a low rate than carry less advertising at a high rate – even if net income were equal. Why? It's better business for us and for our communities. Low rates mean that more advertisers, including little fellows, can use the newspapers regularly, profitably and with adequate space. The overall picture, present and future, is better for newspapers which adhere to this principle, and for the communities they serve.

"The same for circulation. Gannett newspapers have ever been among the last in the nation to up circulation rates.

"The Gannett management believes, in short, that the newspaper – to keep its place and to give maximum service with reasonable profit – must remain an effective mass medium.

"We are interested most of all in home delivered circulation within productive training areas. Why? Because that's where it does the most good for us and for advertisers.

"Our newspapers are produced for family reading in the home by young and old. No advertising is accepted that it is believed might be harmful. Liquor advertising is excluded. A close editorial eye is kept trained on the comics. Standards of decency are insisted on in advertising and news copy."

(2.)

President Miller on Group Expansion: 'We Can Be Interested . . .'

(Continued from preceding page)

AS FOR opportunities for advancement within The Group, he told a gathering of Gannett circulation men: "There'll always be new opportunities. You should think whether you are doing the kind of job that will make someone think about you if there's another opportunity elsewhere in our organization . . . .

"As to where and when opportunities will come, time and events will tell. Things can happen fast, as you have seen. There are bound to be openings from time to time. Also, our company is not necessarily through expanding. We are not going to expand just for the sake of expanding. But we can be interested in good newspapers in good communities that fit our type of operation."

THE NEW president, who already had visited each of the 23 Gannett newspapers, has stepped up his rate of travel since April 11. In one 10-day period he visited

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Plainfield, N.J., and conferred with executives of the Courier-News; addressed an annual dinner of the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce; spoke to teen-age correspondents of The Democrat and Chronicle in Rochester, and dined at Ithaca with department heads of the Ithaca Journal before touring the Gannett Medical Center on the Cornell campus.

(3.)

A Statement
by Frank Tripp

IF PAUL MILLER will accept the designation, I am proud to call him "my boy."

It was a long and thoughtful search by both Frank Gannett and me to find a man equipped to some day [sic] become the president of The Gannett Newspapers.

We were both of an age to make the choice necessary when Paul came; and there seemed to be an organization-wide realization at once of his destiny.

I say he is my boy because I found him. Frank Gannett had barely met him.

The search was for a man of country-wide acquaintance and newspaper knowledge. We found one who qualifies even worldwide. I believe that Paul Miller is today's best known man in world journalism, and personally knows more of his contemporaries both in and out of the newspaper field.

In his activity, I would have said the same of Frank Gannett. It had to be a rare type to succeed Frank.

But most important it had to be a man who would accept the traditions of Gannett newspapers, marry them and perpetuate them. Most of all, the human relations that make for the security of Gannett people.

PAUL has met this test in his every action and attitude. All that Gannett Newspapers have meant to all of us is safe and secure under his leadership. He has no pals to bring along, no strange policies to nurture, no weird newspaper notions.

Long before he became president he was one of us, dedicated to the same things and the same future that we all have striven for.

In my book, what more can we ask of a successor to the man who built it all – a man we love?

(4.)

THE GANNETTEER

In the Gannett Group Are:

The Rochester Times-Union
The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
The Hartford (Conn.) Times
The Elmira Star-Gazette
The Elmira Advertiser
The Elmira Sunday Telegram
The Utica Observer-Dispatch

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Utica Daily Press
The Ithaca Journal
The Newburgh News
The Beacon News
The Albany Knickerbocker News
The Ogdensburg Journal
The Ogdensburg Advance-News
The Plainfield (N.J.) Courier-News
The Olean Times-Herald
The Malone Evening Telegram
The Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News
The Saratoga Springs Saratogian
The Binghamton Press
The Niagara Falls Gazette
The Massena Observer (semi-weekly)
The Potsdam Courier and Freeman (weekly)

The five radio stations in the Gannett Radio Group are:

WHEC, Rochester, 1460
WENY, Elmira, 1230
WHDL, Olean, 1450
WDAN, Danville, Ill., 1490
WINR, Binghamton, 680

The television stations are:

WHEC-TV, Channel 10, Rochester, N.Y.
WDAN-TV, Channel 24, Danville, Ill.

c. (B7/f6)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
September 28, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Conference with a Goal: Better Newspapers for You

By PAUL MILLER

No business or professional group brings its own activities under more critical, searching examination than newspapermen in convention apply to newspapers.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Some conventions seem largely given over to self-praise.

This is much less true of a newspaper gathering – although we of course enjoy our share.

For the most part, it's "How come we didn't do so and so?" and why don't we do it this way next time?" almost from the moment a chairman gavels for order.

So it will be when executives and department heads of newspapers in The Gannett Group – including The Times-Union and Democrat and Chronicle – assemble here for their own annual two-day clinic next Monday and Tuesday. Operating heads of affiliated radio and TV stations also will be on hand for meetings of their own.

Rochester is headquarters of the Group which newspapermen and students of newspapers elsewhere refer to as notable in a number of respects, two in particular:

1. The lack of uniformity as to size, ranging from a fine weekly at Potsdam, N.Y. to the dailies of Rochester and Hartford, Conn.

2. The policy of autonomy. There is no central editorial dictation or control.

* * *

FOUNDER FRANK GANNETT, ill at his Rochester home, will be absent again this year, but his two closest long-time associates will be actively on hand.

Frank Tripp, chairman of the board, is known in Rochester and throughout our Group for many things, not least being his weekly column.

E. R. Davenport, more or less retired now, but very much a factor, spends several months each year at his Florida home, but is known widely as the former general manager of the Rochester newspapers.

* * *

AS IN MANY OTHER FIELDS, the problem of ever-rising costs will dominate many of the discussions.

Inflation is a dangerous threat to our national life. Each dollar in terms of what you can buy with it has dwindled from 100 cents (its 1939 purchasing power) to 49.7 cents.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Newspapers have been fighting to hold the line for years, not only in campaigns for economy in government and elsewhere, but also in their own pricing policies. Even so, many have had to go reluctantly to 6, 7 or 10 cents daily, and more will be forced to do so in the future.

But name any other product that you could buy for a nickel 10 years ago that still sells for a nickel today – yet has steadily improved in quality, content, service and appeal.

*** * ***

THE ADVANCES of recent years have been many:

Color printing – adopted expensively by many newspapers and with more coming along all the time; better local and worldwide picture coverage and reproduction; sharper, more interesting, more effective news writing and advertising; broader coverage in all fields, including sports and women's news.

All these are tangible, appreciated advances, significant to every community newspapers serve.

*** * ***

ALL AND MORE will be discussed and reviewed at the meetings here at the Sheraton next week.

People, however, not processes, will have No. 1 billing:

A new training program, more than a year in preparation, among the best in the newspaper world, will be outlined.

Under this program, to be undertaken throughout the Gannett Group, young men and women will be given organized training that is sure to mean (1) even greater opportunities for them in the years that lie ahead, and (20 still better newspapers for readers and advertisers.

d. (B4/f29)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
November 18, 1957

Gannett Co. Buys TV in California

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

STOCKTON, Calif. – The Gannett Co. – which has newspaper, radio and television interests in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Illinois – today projected its first expansion into the Far West.

Paul Miller of Rochester, N.Y., president of Gannett Co., Inc., announced the signing of an agreement for purchase of TV Station KOVR in the rich Central Valley of California. KOVR operates on Very High Frequency (VHF) over Channel 13 and is affiliated with American broadcasting Company. It is licensed to Stockton and serves the three principal cities of the valley – Stockton, Sacramento and Modesto . . . .

e. (B4/f29)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
November 19, 1957

Gannett Co. Acquires California TV Station

STOCKTON, Calif., Nov. 18 – Purchase of television station KOVR in the Sacramento Valley of California by Gannett Co., Inc., was announced yesterday by Paul Miller, president. It is a three million dollar transaction, subject to approval by the Federal Communications Commission, which has authority over the licensing of all broadcast stations . . . .

f. (B4/f29)

Editor & Publisher
November 23, 1957

Gannett Co. Buys Station In California

ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Paul Miller, president of Gannett Co., Inc., this week announced the signing of an agreement for purchase of a Stockton, Calif., television station by the Gannett Co.

The station, KOVR, is a 316,000-watt station licensed to operate on VHF channel 13. It serves Sacramento and Modesto as well as Stockton. It is affiliated with the American Broadcasting Co.

The Gannett Co. proposes to acquire the capital stock of Television Diablo, Inc., owner and operator of KOVR for $1,100,000, with Diablo remaining committed to repay its outstanding indebtedness, approximately $2,000,000.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Principal stockholder of Television Diablo, Inc., is H. Leslie Hoffman of Los Angeles, president of Hoffman Electronics Corp. The concern manufactures radio, television and high fidelity equipment.

Mr. Miller said: "Terry H. Lee, general manager of KOVR, has agreed to remain with the company until July 1, 1958."

In the Gannett Group are 22 [23?] newspapers, four [five?] radio stations and three television stations, all east of the Mississippi.

Representing the Gannett Co. with Mr. Miller in investigation and negotiations, extended over several weeks, were Cyril Williams, treasurer; Lynn N. Bitner, general manager; and C. Glover Delaney, managing director of Gannett radio and television properties.

Formal request for approval of the transaction will be made at once to the Federal Communications Commission.

g. (B4/f29)

The Gannetteer
December 1957

PURCHASE of television station KOVR in the Sacramento Valley of California by Gannett Co., Inc., was announced Nov. 18 by PAUL MILLER, president. The transaction is subject to approval by the Federal Communications Commission, which has authority over the licensing of all broadcasting stations.

KOVR-TV, operating on Channel 13, is a VHF station licensed to Stockton and serving the three principal cities of the Sacramento Valley – Stockton, Sacramento and Modesto. Its maximum power transmitter (316,000 watts) is situated atop Butte Mountain, near Jackson in Amador County, heart of the famous Gold Rush country of 1849.

KOVR serves nearly 450,000 TV homes in this rapidly growing agricultural and industrial area which has a population of 1,500,000. It is affiliated with the American Broadcasting Co. network.

The Gannett Co. proposes to acquire the capital stock of Television Diablo, Inc., owner and operator of KOVR-TV, for $1,100,000, with Diablo remaining committed to repay its outstanding indebtedness, approximately $2 million.

Principal stockholder of Television Diablo Inc., is H. Leslie Hoffman of Los Angeles, president of Hoffman Electronics Corp. The concern manufactures radio, television and high fidelity equipment and is active in the government missile and military electronics programs.

"We plan to retain substantially the same staff now operating the station and to announce a program for improved and expanded service to this great and growing area," Miller said.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"We are particularly pleased that Terry H. Lee, the present general manager of KOVR, has agreed to remain with the company until July 1, 1958. Mr. Lee has been a tremendous factor in the development program of the present KOVR, and his help and guidance will be of major assistance to the Gannett Company."

C. GLOVER DELANEY of Rochester, managing director of Gannett Company's Broadcast Division, will devote considerable time to plans for development of KOVR.

Representing the Gannett Company in investigation and negotiations, extended over several weeks, were CYRIL WILLIAMS, treasurer; LYNN N. BITNER, general manager; DELANEY and Justin Doyle of the Rochester law firm of Nixon, Hargrave, Devans & Dey.

The Gannett Company operates other television and radio properties. On Nov. 4, a million-watt UHF station went on the air in Binghamton. Other stations in the Gannett organization are: WHEC, and WHEC-TV, Rochester, N.Y.; WENY, Elmira, N.Y.; WDAN and WDAN-TV (UHF), Danville, Ill., and WINR, Binghamton, N.Y.

THE GANNETT CO. Inc., founded by FRANK GANNETT, who is now president emeritus, operates 22 newspapers in New York State, Connecticut, New Jersey and Illinois.

Gannett News Service maintains bureaus in Washington and Albany. J. P. McKinney & Son, national advertising representatives, a subsidiary of the Gannett Company, has offices in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Syracuse. Legal formalities were completed at mid-month and it was expected that an application for formal approval by the FCC would be presented in a few days. Normally, FCC action on such a transfer requires two to three months.

Hoffman, commenting on the agreement said:

"We have put a great deal of time, money and effort into the development of KOVR as an instrument of real service to the valley area. I am delighted that the purchaser is the Gannett Company, because I know it will carry on and expand policies to the continued best advantage of the people of this area."

11. 1958

12. 1960

13. 1961

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

14. 1962

15. 1963

16. 1964

17. 1965

18. 1966

19. 1967

20. 1968

21. 1969

a. (B1/f4)

GANNETT CO., INC. ANNUAL REPORT 1969

Broadcasting

While we expect Gannett's broadcasting commitment to expand, broadcasting accounted for only 4% of total revenues in 1969. We now operate six radio stations, two television stations and one CATV (Community Antenna Television) network. Under the limitation set by the FCC, we could acquire three more AM stations, five more FM stations and five television stations. We are also interested in further expansion in CATV.

22. 1970

a. (B1/f1)

GANNETT CO., INC.
Shareholder's Annual Meeting
Rochester, N.Y.
May 26, 1970

Paul Miller, presiding as president and chief executive officer of Gannett Co., Inc., was advanced to chairman and chief executive officer by the Board of Directors following the 1970 shareholders' meeting.

On March 19, 1969 . . . Gannett became listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

23. 1971

a. (B1/f4)

Gannett Co., Inc. 1971 Annual Report

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Acquisitions and Dispositions
On November 12, 1971, the sale of radio station WDAN AM and FM, located in Danville, Illinois, was completed for $250,000 in cash.
The sale of radio station WINR AM in Binghamton, New York, was completed for $285,000 on February 26, 1971.
On March 29, 1971, the sale of television station WINR was completed for $780,000.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION
Washington, D.C. 20549
Form 10-K
ANNUAL REPORT
For the fiscal year ended December 28, 1975
ACQUISITIONS 1971-1975
DISPOSITIONS 1971-1975
NEWSPAPER PUBLISHING

Staff Building
(Box # 8, 14, 15, 28)

1. 1942-1943 (B3/f34)
(PM's "Diary")

The greatest satisfaction to me in my first months at Washington was the realization that the Staff and I were getting along and that all of us were plugging away at telling the Story of Washington with an enthusiasm and a fidelity that were getting some good results. I had felt in my earlier experience with The AP, viewing the AP news reports from Washington from an outlying bureau, that we often were old maidish and stilted and sissified. There were little things: The insistence through habit of writing with wases and weres and hads instead of ises and hases and haves, where proper, affected me like the sound of fingernails on a blackboard. I was the new boss and I knew it. I always had a violent aversion myself to a new boss who walked in, took a look around and started moving furniture. I never worked that way. As opportunity afforded, I talked with individuals informally about this and that. I went around urging "Write like you talk! Why back up into some special style just because you are telling it on a typewriter rather than face to face?" The report began to unbend and the process continues. And I'd always felt we were too much inclined to be relayers and not enough inclined to be reporters from Washington. By the time I felt in position from all viewpoints to tackle that one, the relationship in the staff was such that the point could be made with emphasis and even harshness where worthwhile. The new boss business had worn off. We were in there slugging all together. No one, I felt sure, thought that I criticized to be criticizing. All knew I had confidence in every key man and most of the others and that in riding them eternally on "reporting not relaying" I was interpreting to them the voice of the membership we served . . . I often thought, as I often think still, that this soft-voiced manner of handling a staff may not get results as quickly as the loud shout and the heavy pencil and the abrupt right-now. But I always come back to this: It gets the results over the long haul and a brusque, overly-ambitious new boss may ruin many of his men at the start. Certainly he will ruin them insofar as self confidence is concerned. And in this business, the best reporter and writer is the one who writes with easy self confidence; the best employe the one who likes and respects his boss.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

2. 1950

a. (B3/f62)

*****

[source unknown]
December, 1950

Printer for 54 Years Honored
At Gannett Employes' Party

They put the spotlight on George J. Englert of 315 Bronson Ave. yesterday afternoon in Powers Hotel ballroom and the oldest employe in point of service on the Rochester Gannett newspapers took it like the veteran printer he is.

In his hand Englert held a sizeable check, presented by Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Company, for his 54 years with The Democrat and Chronicle . . . .

PHOTO:
"HONOR D&C VETERAN EMPLOYE"

Caption:
George J. Englert, left, veteran printer of The Democrat and Chronicle, received a check in appreciation of his long service, during annual Christmas party for nearly 400 employes of mechanical departments of The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union at the Powers Hotel yesterday. With Englert are Paul Miller, center, vicepresident of The Gannett Company, and Neal Murphy, Democrat and Chronicle business manager.

b. (B3/f62)

The Newsmagazine WE
December 25, 1950

"TALK OF THE TOWN"

By Archie LaBounty

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Ever since the Brady case there has been a new topic of conversation, very secret at first, but which has now become the talk, not of the town, but of politicians, East avenue, and newspaper circles. Subject of this conversation is Paul Miller, editor of the Times-Union, and a vice president of the Gannett newspapers. When Miller came to town he was hailed as a great newspaperman who was going to do "things" for the Times-Union. And he is a great newspaperman. He knows the game from top to bottom and there is no question but had he tended to his newspaper business there would not be such a wave of criticism sweeping over his broad shoulders and well-set head.

But something has happened to Miller. At least that is what they are saying. By "they" I mean newspaper men on Miller's own staff, mechanical, business and editorial, and on the staff of the Little Old Lady of Main Street, the D&C. Also some politicians are getting in on the pow wow and not a few are saying that Miller is on his way out.

Asked about this newspapermen admit that there is trouble within the inner sanctum of the Times Union. At least two have said that Miller is scheduled to depart for an executive job with the Associated Press. All of which is very confusing in view of the very fine things that were said of him when he first came to Rochester.

Too Much Dutch

There is no question about it, Miller is in Dutch with some very prominent people of the city. He is in Dutch with some of his own staff who, of course, dare not say so under penalty of a kick in the slats. He is in Dutch with Republican politicians for his attempts to usurp the powers of Monroe County's Republican leader. And it is reported that he is in Dutch with Frank Gannett, who announced himself against Dewey in the recent political campaign only to find Miller sitting in the driver's seat with a curt, "Now boss, you don't know what you are talking about. Dewey is our man and the Times Union will support him. Now please go sit on a tack until this campaign is over."

There is another report that Miller is in Dutch with John G. Corey, editor and publisher of WE. That isn't true. The opposite is true. Corey is in Dutch with Miller. Or so it would seem from the following incident that occurred several weeks ago:

Corey was walking down Exchange street from Police Headquarters. In front of the Times Union Building he was hailed by Gannett, who was sitting in his car. Gannett and Corey passed the time of day and discussed the political situation, which was off the record. Just then Miller came out of the TU Building and strolled over to the car. Gannett was about to introduce his editor to Corey (he didn't know that the two had previously met) when Miller popped up and said:

"Oh yes, we've met. He's the fellow who calls me a s.o.b. every once in a while."

Now that wasn't nice. Corey never called Miller any such name, not even off the record. Why Corey wouldn't dream of calling Miller such a terrible name.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Miller Invites Criticisms

Corey has, however, criticized Miller. He has criticized the TU editor for a number of reasons, most important of which is his seemingly [sic] desire to dictate to political leaders just how they should conduct their affairs. I have never heard of any political leader going to Miller to tell him how to run the TU.

In the very last issue of WE Corey was very critical of Miller. And he had every right to be. Corey is a newspaperman who believes that a newspaperman's first duty is to get the news and print it. A real newspaperman never, never uses the power of the press as a sort of blackjack to force political leaders to do something they don't want to do.

When Corey learned that it was Miller who led the delegation of ministers to Fred Parrish's office to demand the return of Dave Brady to City Hall as commissioner of public safety he could hardly believe it. Miller has a fine reputation as a newspaperman and he has a wealth of experience. He knows the ethical newspaper practice from the unethical newspaper practice. Consequently, it was hard to believe that the new editor of the TU would deliberately take the lead in forcing the wish of a minority group on a political leader who was having enough troubles trying to keep his machine in good working order.

This newsmagazine already has reported how Miller and an unofficial committee of ministers forced Parrish to order Brady's return to City Hall only to have the roof fall on their heads when the Brady bomb exploded. There is no need of repeating it here. But it has been pointed out before and it should be pointed out again that Miller went too far in his duties as an editor. He is his own worst enemy. The criticisms now hitting him from all directions are of his own making. Rochesterians have a habit of giving anybody anything they ask for. Miller asked for criticisms and he is getting them.

A Personal Matter

More important than anything else we've said in this column thus far is the report, from the Times Union, no less, that Miller no longer is in the good graces of his boss – Frank Gannett. Rochesterians know that Gannett allows his editors complete freedom in running his newspapers. But when it comes to the TU, it is an entirely different matter. The TU is Gannett's first love. That was the paper that really got him started in a big way. And he always was the editor until illness caused him to take things a little easy.

Now Corey is a publisher and he is also an editor. If illness lays him low and he employs someone to take his place, most assuredly he is going to expect that new man to run things as he, Corey, wants them run. If Corey had other papers in other towns he wouldn't care what they did, consistent with common decency and good newspaper work, as long as they made money. But his own personal paper, built along the lines he set down after years of hard struggling, would have to be run the way it always had been run under his editorship.

Another thing that is hurting Miller is the new attitude of some of Rochester's more prominent citizens toward him in the last few months. They simply can't see Miller interfering in affairs that are of no concern to him personally. In the case of

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Miller and his ministers calling on Parrish, the TU editor made it a personal matter.

_____

Close to Blackmail

A good newspaperman or a good editor, if he held the convictions that were Miller's, would have written an editorial calling on Parrish to reinstate Brady in City Hall. That would have made it a matter of public concern. And there could be no criticisms. But to call on Parrish in person with several ministers giving him moral support or any other kind of support was out of bounds. For what Miller and possibly the ministers too, said in effect was, "Put Brady back at his job or else." And in any man's language that is a threat. In fact if it is not blackmail it is mighty close to it.

Al Moss, veteran political writer for the TU, is said to have received an order from Miller – after that meeting with Parrish – to write a story that Brady would return to City Hall. Everybody remembers that story. We here on WE have not questioned Moss about that angle because we don't want to shove him out on a limb. After all Moss is a member of the TU staff. And he is truthful. We don't want him answering questions that would embarrass him with his big boss.

It's too early yet to judge what all this is going to lead to. Maybe Miller will take that AP job if it has been offered. If he does everybody will wish him luck. He isn't a bad guy. The real trouble seems to be that the editorship of the TU went to his noodle and he felt that it entitled him to throw orders around outside of his own sphere.

If only he would throw his weight (on the editorial page of his newspaper) around in such a manner as to erase some of the human misery in Rochester what a guy he would be. Thousands of our underprivileged citizens, most of them aged persons, would cheer him to the echo and in future political campaigns when the TU advised the election of certain individuals they would flock to his banner. As it is now the only banner these unfortunate people have to turn to is WE. That explains why support of political candidates by WE is far more important to men and women running for office than the support of the TU and D&C combined. (For verification see results of last campaign).

3. 1951

4. 1952

5. 1953

6. 1954

7. 1955

   a. (B4/f1)

The Gannetteer

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

April 1955

Between Nagging and Praise: A Balance

By PAUL MILLER

Executive Vice President, Gannett Newspapers

Editor and Publisher, Rochester Times-Union

. . . AN editorial page, to be effective, must strike a reasonable balance between constant nagging and criticism and constant praise and acquiescence.

It is my hope that The Times-Union editorial page does strike such a balance and that it will continue to do so in the future.

When we have something to criticize, as we often have had in the past, we want to go after it firmly though fairly. But when there are developments that call for a pat on the back, we want to be as prompt to recognize them.

One more thing:

As you know, efforts have been made to make the editorial page the product of many minds and hands rather than of a very few. That policy will be continued and expanded. To staff members who have gone out of their way – as many have – to contribute ideas and copy to the editorial page, sincere thanks. They have helped build a lively page out of one that otherwise would be much less appealing. To those of you who have not joined in, this is an invitation to do so at any time . . . .

– From a bulletin board notice in The Times-Union newsroom.

b. Heselden came from Geneva Daily Times, August 1, 1955 (B4/f3)

c. (B4/f2)

The Gannetteer
OCTOBER * 1955

Blanchard Named To New Post; Jones Is Executive Editor

TWO members of the headquarters staff of the Gannett Group of Newspapers took over new duties last month.

L. R. BLANCHARD became editorial chairman, a new office. For 14 years he had been head of the News and Editorial Office, most recently with the title of general executive editor.

VINCENT S. JONES became executive editor for the Group. For five years he has been director of the News and Editorial Office.

Blanchard will concentrate on editorial pages in the organization, continuing also as editor of The Democrat and Chronicle. The 23 newspapers in the Group work together for improvement in content and style. The editorial chairman is charged with coordinating those efforts. He will have a rotating committee of Gannett editors working with him. Named as first members of the committee were WARD S. DUFFY, editor, Hartford Times; WILLIAM J. WOODS, editor, Utica Observer-Dispatch; and FREDERICK G. EATON, managing editor, Ogdensburg Journal.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

As executive editor, Jones will continue to maintain liaison with the various newspapers, aiding them in all aspects of news and staff management. He is the current president of the Associated Press Managing Editor Association –filling an office held in 1951 by Blanchard.

Announcement of the changes was made by PAUL MILLER, executive vice president of the Gannett Group. He said:

"There are far-reaching possibilities in the special work which Blanchard is to undertake. There is not a better man anywhere to head up our study and improvement program than 'Fay' Blanchard. He is a great technician; he also runs a splendid editorial page. It is quite possible that after a year or so he will have assembled material of value and utility far beyond the Gannett Group."

Of Jones, Miller said: "Vin Jones has earned a nationwide reputation in his field and is in demand as a speaker before newspaper groups throughout the country on such topics as typography, news content, and illustration."

8. 1956

9. 1957

a. (B4/f25)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
January 17, 1956

Miller to Address
Southern Editors

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, will address the North Carolina Press Assn. at Duke University at Durham, N.C., Jan. 25.

He will address a dinner meeting which is a feature of the association's midwinter institute Jan. 24-26 at Duke University and at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

b. (B4/f25)
*****

The Durham Sun

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Durham, N.C.
January 26, 1957

N. C. Editors, Publishers Hear Warning At Duke –
Segregation Said Top Problem

North Carolina newspaper editors and publishers were told at Duke University last night that the racial segregation issue is the "foremost" problem facing the state.

Thomas L. Robinson, publisher of the Charlotte News and president of the N. C. Press Assn. said there is a "tendency among Tarheels to consider the (segregation) matter closed now that North Carolina has its Pearsall Plan and its pupil assignment law.

Robinson spoke at the annual Duke University dinner meeting of the Midwinter Press Institute. The institute ended today after a morning session in Chapel Hill.

In his address, Robinson called on the state's newspapers to "answer the continuing challenge of our times – how to help our state realize its destiny."

He said the state's Pearsall Plan and Pupil Assignment law are "limited tools" in the segregation issue, and said a solution to the problem still must be worked out "by responsible citizens who will act with calm, constructive good will and a respect for human dignity."

Robinson urged that newspapers place "reason above rant and never give aid and comfort to the voices of hysteria and confusion."

Another speaker, Paul Miller of Rochester, N.Y., executive vice president of The Gannett newspapers, told the group that Tarheel newspapers are among the best in the country, but urged the newsmen to strive for an even better product.

He told the N.C.P.A. members that "All you have to do is build and sell ever better newspapers despite ever higher production costs, in the face of ever tougher competition, and for a rightly ever more demanding readership."

He cited the ever increasing cost of publishing newspapers and noted that there is no "Univac" or "patent medicine-type relief anywhere in sight" for the newspaper ills.

However, he did point out that newspapering offers many compensations and noted that "the opportunities are greater today than ever for young people."

Miller challenged the newspaper men and women present to make their newspapers more useful; to keep them "local, but not isolated" and to make them "stand for something."

He cautioned publishers to keep themselves close to readers and advertisers by finding out just what these people think about their newspaper; and also urged the publishers and editors to exercise more care in hiring and developing personnel, "never forgetting that it is as important to weed out misfits promptly and considerately as to recognize and encourage the qualified" . . . .

c. (B4/f25)
*****

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Gannetteer
March 1957

For Meeting Ever Tougher Competition Five Fundamentals for Newspapers

By PAUL MILLER

Condensed from Address at a Duke University Dinner for North Carolina Press Association at Durham, N.C., Jan. 25.

I'VE NEVER LIVED in North Carolina, but my work has taken me from coast to coast and back again. And I know this:

Whether life sets us down on an oil town newspaper in Oklahoma, moves us around the country with The AP, with the Frank Gannett organization in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Illinois – or wherever – so long as it's newspapering, it's a great life . . . .

The Gannett Group embraces almost every size paper anybody ever worked on – 23 newspapers, including a weekly and a semi-weekly. Some of the finest men in the business are getting out those widely differing newspapers. I suspect that all would agree – as you will – that the basic job is the same no matter how large the newspaper or how small: . . . .

The cost of everything that goes into a newspaper is on the rise, and no patent medicine-type relief in sight . . . . Any revolution that will radically cut publishing costs has been a long time coming – and it may be a lot longer, try as we will to hurry it along. This may not be popular, but I fear it's true. In the meantime, and in the foreseeable future, the fundamentals remain pretty much the same. I will list and discuss five that seem particularly important to me.

1. WE MUST PUBLISH useful NEWSPAPERS.
2. WE MUST KEEP OURSELVES, AS MANAGEMENT, CLOSE TO READERS and advertisers – and to employes [sic] and associates as well, for mutual strength and mutual profit.
3. WE MUST NEVER FORGET for a minute that with all our urgent need for better, more efficient, less costly machines and methods – people still come first.
4. WE MUST MAKE OUR NEWSPAPERS STAND FOR SOMETHING.
5. WE MUST KEEP OUR NEWSPAPERS LOCAL, but not isolated.

SURELY, no work comes nearer having everything to offer than ours – smiles as well as tears, brickbats as well as roses, setbacks as well as matchless opportunities for community leadership, service and achievement.

Yet, every now and then, I run into somebody who, if already in newspaper work, doesn't appreciate just what he's got – or who, if a youngster, wonders whether "the future" would hold sufficient promise for him on a newspaper.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I don't understand the newspaperman who doesn't fully appreciate being one. I figure he's either out of pocket in the first place or has never labored at or closely observed any other pursuit; hence just doesn't have reason to know how well off he is.

I usually find that the young fellow who doubts whether there's a "future" in newspapering hasn't found out what he could easily find out by a little study of newspapers – or should be told, but all too often isn't, by one of us so-called newspapermen.

The opportunities are greater today than ever for young people, even with the numerical contraction of dailies which has gone on a long time and will continue. Any young fellow who wants to get along and who has the stuff, can get along on a newspaper if he'll hustle. By get along, I mean make good progress. Newspaper bosses are suckers for a young fellow who is qualified , who is interested in going places and who – most of all – shows it by hustling. How they love the fellow who gives his assignment a little more than he has to. How they pity the one who just puts in his time. Pity is right. He's missing half the fun of our great business and he'll be a long time attracting the favorable eye of any one [sic] looking for somebody to promote.

d. (B4/f26)

*****

The Gannetteer
June 1957

(1.)

Paul Miller: New President of Gannett Co. And of the Gannett Foundation

PAUL MILLER on April 11 was elected president of the Gannett Co., Inc. He succeeded FRANK GANNETT, its founder, who has become president emeritus.

Miller also was elected president of the Gannett Foundation and of WHEC Inc., Rochester radio-television subsidiary of the Gannett Co.

Frank Gannett actively directed the Gannett Co. until two years ago when he was injured in a fall and later suffered other complications which have kept him confined to his Rochester home.

Frank E. Tripp of Elmira, Gannett's long time [sic] associate, who for many years was general manager of the company, continues as chairman of its board. He has also been elected president of all the other subsidiary companies in the organization, consisting chiefly of the operating companies of the various newspapers.

Succeeding Miller as vice president of the Gannett Foundation is Mrs. Frank Gannett. Her husband established the foundation in 1935 to guarantee the continuation of his newspaper organization. The foundation holds 67 per cent of the operating company's outstanding common stock.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The bulk of the net income of the foundation is distributed for public, charitable, educational and general philanthropic uses and purposes in those areas where Gannett newspapers circulate generally.

ONE OF the most widely known leaders in the newspaper industry, Tripp since 1922 has been publisher of the newspapers in his home town, Elmira. He was general manager of the Gannett Group from 1925 to 1951.

For his work in heading up all newspaper promotions for all seven bond drives in World War II he received the U.S. Treasury's Distinguished Service Citation.

Tripp was chairman of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. from 1940 to 1944. His weekly column for years appeared in more than 130 newspapers.

(2.)

President Miller on Group Expansion: 'We Can Be Interested . . .'

(Continued from preceding page)

AS FOR opportunities for advancement within The Group, he told a gathering of Gannett circulation men: "There'll always be new opportunities. You should think whether you are doing the kind of job that will make someone think about you if there's another opportunity elsewhere in our organization . . . .

"As to where and when opportunities will come, time and events will tell. Things can happen fast, as you have seen. There are bound to be openings from time to time. Also, our company is not necessarily through expanding. We are not going to expand just for the sake of expanding. But we can be interested in good newspapers in good communities that fit our type of operation."

THE NEW president, who already had visited each of the 23 Gannett newspapers, has stepped up his rate of travel since April 11. In one 10-day period he visited Plainfield, N.J., and conferred with executives of the Courier-News; addressed an annual dinner of the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce; spoke to teen-age correspondents of The Democrat and Chronicle in Rochester, and dined at Ithaca with department heads of the Ithaca Journal before touring the Gannett Medical Center on the Cornell campus.

(3.)

A Statement by Frank Tripp

IF PAUL MILLER will accept the designation, I am proud to call him "my boy."

It was a long and thoughtful search by both Frank Gannett and me to find a man equipped to some day [sic] become the president of The Gannett Newspapers.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

We were both of an age to make the choice necessary when Paul came; and there seemed to be an organization-wide realization at once of his destiny.

I say he is my boy because I found him. Frank Gannett had barely met him.

The search was for a man of country-wide acquaintance and newspaper knowledge. We found one who qualifies even worldwide. I believe that Paul Miller is today's best known man in world journalism, and personally knows more of his contemporaries both in and out of the newspaper field.

In his activity, I would have said the same of Frank Gannett. It had to be a rare type to succeed Frank.

But most important it had to be a man who would accept the traditions of Gannett newspapers, marry them and perpetuate them. Most of all, the human relations that make for the security of Gannett people.

PAUL has met this test in his every action and attitude. All that Gannett Newspapers have meant to all of us is safe and secure under his leadership. He has no pals to bring along, no strange policies to nurture, no weird newspaper notions.

Long before he became president he was one of us, dedicated to the same things and the same future that we all have striven for.

In my book, what more can we ask of a successor to the man who built it all – a man we love?

(4.) THE GANNETTEER

In the Gannett Group Are:

The Rochester Times-Union
The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
The Hartford (Conn.) Times
The Elmira Star-Gazette
The Elmira Advertiser
The Elmira Sunday Telegram
The Utica Observer-Dispatch
The Utica Daily Press
The Ithaca Journal
The Newburgh News
The Beacon News
The Albany Knickerbocker News
The Ogdensburg Journal
The Ogdensburg Advance-News
The Plainfield (N.J.) Courier-News
The Olean Times-Herald
The Malone Evening Telegram
The Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News
The Saratoga Springs Saratogian
The Binghamton Press

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Niagara Falls Gazette
The Massena Observer (semi-weekly)
The Potsdam Courier and Freeman (weekly)

The four radio stations in the Gannett Radio Group are:

WHEC, Rochester, 1460
WENY, Elmira, 1230
WHDL, Olean, 1450
WDAN, Danville, Ill., 1490
WINR, Binghamton, 680

The Television stations are:

WHEC-TV, Channel 10, Rochester, N.Y.
[WINR-TV, Binghamton?]
WDAN-TV, Channel 24, Danville, Ill.

e. (B7/f6)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
September 28, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Conference with a Goal: Better Newspapers for You

By PAUL MILLER

No business or professional group brings its own activities under more critical, searching examination than newspapermen in convention apply to newspapers.

Some conventions seem largely given over to self-praise.

This is much less true of a newspaper gathering – although we of course enjoy our share.

For the most part, it's "How come we didn't do so and so?" and why don't we do it this way next time?" almost from the moment a chairman gavels for order.

So it will be when executives and department heads of newspapers in The Gannett Group – including The Times-Union and Democrat and Chronicle – assemble here for their own annual two-day clinic next Monday and Tuesday.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Operating heads of affiliated radio and TV stations also will be on hand for meetings of their own.

Rochester is headquarters of the Group which newspapermen and students of newspapers elsewhere refer to as notable in a number of respects, two in particular:

1. The lack of uniformity as to size, ranging from a fine weekly at Potsdam, N.Y. to the dailies of Rochester and Hartford, Conn.

2. The policy of autonomy. There is no central editorial dictation or control.

* * *

FOUNDER FRANK GANNETT, ill at his Rochester home, will be absent again this year, but his two closest long-time associates will be actively on hand.

Frank Tripp, chairman of the board, is known in Rochester and throughout our Group for many things, not least being his weekly column.

E. R. Davenport, more or less retired now, but very much a factor, spends several months each year at his Florida home, but is known widely as the former general manager of the Rochester newspapers.

* * *

AS IN MANY OTHER FIELDS, the problem of ever-rising costs will dominate many of the discussions.

Inflation is a dangerous threat to our national life. Each dollar in terms of what you can buy with it has dwindled from 100 cents (its 1939 purchasing power) to 49.7 cents.

Newspapers have been fighting to hold the line for years, not only in campaigns for economy in government and elsewhere, but also in their own pricing policies. Even so, many have had to go reluctantly to 6, 7 or 10 cents daily, and more will be forced to do so in the future.

But name any other product that you could buy for a nickel 10 years ago that still sells for a nickel today – yet has steadily improved in quality, content, service and appeal.

* * *

THE ADVANCES of recent years have been many:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Color printing – adopted expensively by many newspapers and with more coming along all the time; better local and worldwide picture coverage and reproduction; sharper, more interesting, more effective news writing and advertising; broader coverage in all fields, including sports and women's news.

All these are tangible, appreciated advances, significant to every community newspapers serve.

* * *

ALL AND MORE will be discussed and reviewed at the meetings here at the Sheraton next week.

People, however, not processes, will have No. 1 billing:

A new training program, more than a year in preparation, among the best in the newspaper world, will be outlined.

Under this program, to be undertaken throughout the Gannett Group, young men and women will be given organized training that is sure to mean (1) even greater opportunities for them in the years that lie ahead, and (20 still better newspapers for readers and advertisers.

f. (B4/f29)

The Gannetteer
November 1957

Reporter-Adman Training Courses Planned for New Staffers

TRAINING PROGRAMS for beginners in reporting and advertising were outlined last month at a meeting of Group executives in Rochester. Parts of the training program already have been put into effect in some plants.

President PAUL MILLER announced the program, developed by JOHN E. HESELDEN, Group personnel director, with the aid of newspaper department heads in Rochester, Utica and Albany. Programs will be conducted individually by Group newspapers.

Trainees will include recent college graduates and other outstanding young men and women who are entering newspaper work for the first time. They will work from manuals prepared by Group executives and will follow courses of supplementary reading. New staffers with a year or two of newspaper experience will be expected to take only part of the full course, tentatively scheduled to require 21 weeks. Here's how the full 21-week period might be spent:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

– One day of orientation and explanation of basic newspaper goals and principles.

– Three weeks of study and work in a circulation department, with a circulation executive directing the training in marketing, area coverage, quantitative values, delivery systems and growth factors.

– Two weeks in observing mechanical department operations, including copy handling and press production.

– Twelve weeks in the department for which the trainee is being prepared. Newsmen would spend this in working on various desks and major beats, studying editing techniques and writing routine stories. Advertising trainees would spend one week in classified, nine weeks in retail – accompanying regular salesmen on their calls – and two weeks in general advertising.

– Three weeks (for admen) in the newsroom; three weeks in the advertising departments (for newsmen).

– Eight days in the business office, studying bookkeeping and accounting practices, newsprint accounting, statistical s cost surveys, billing and budgeting.

PRESIDENT MILLER said young men and women will be given organized training "that is sure to mean (1) even greater opportunities for them in the years ahead, and (2) still better newspapers for readers and advertisers." He said there is no desire "to standardize news gathering and ad selling procedures. The sole aim is to supply operating executives with a tailor-made plan which can be followed in developing promising younger people."

Assisting Heselden in setting up the program have been J. J. BURKE, Rochester Times-Union; CYRUS H. FAVOR, Utica Daily Press; HENRY W. STOCK, Knickerbocker News, Albany; ANTHONY T. POWDERLY, Democrat and Chronicle, Rochester; HERMAN E. MOECKER, Knickerbocker News, Albany; JOHN E. GARTLAND, traveling auditor, Gannett Co., Inc.; and HOWARD HOSMER, Rochester Times-Union.

g. (B4/f29)

*****

The Gannetteer
November 1957

EFFECTIVE JAN. 1, 1958

* Henry Stock Named Group AD Director

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* Zimmerman Chosen Plainfield General Manager

TWO appointments effective Jan. 1 were announced Sept. 30 by PAUL MILLER, president of the Gannett Company, at the annual conference of executives of all the newspapers and radio and television stations in the Group, which was held at Rochester.

HENRY W. STOCK, advertising director of the Albany Knickerbocker News, will become advertising director of all the Gannett Newspapers, with his headquarters in Rochester. He will succeed IRVING H. FITCH, who retires after serving in that post since 1951.

A. WALLACE ZIMMERMAN will become general manager of the Plainfield (N.J.) Courier-News, one of the fastest-growing afternoon newspapers in the country. CHAUNCEY A. STOUT will retire as publisher on the eve of his 80th birthday, having been an executive of The Courier-News for more than half a century . . . .

10. 1958

11. 1959

12. 1960

13. 1961

14. 1962

15. 1963

16. 1964

17. 1965

18. 1966

19. 1967

a. (B1/f3)
Gannett Co., Inc. Annual Report 1967
newspapers/television/radio

"As I look back over 1967, I wonder if you would not be even more interested in a reporter's observations than in a company president's look at the purely financial aspects, outstanding as they were. I shall try to provide both in introducing this, your Company's first Annual Report."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Top
"Gannett Washington Bureau Chief Robert Lucas greets a prime news source, President Lyndon Johnson at the White House. In background (from left) are Al Neuharth, Gannett executive vice president; Calvin Mayne, Rochester Times-Union associate editor, and Paul Miller, Gannett president." (PHOTO)
Bottom Left
"Peter Behr, Rochester Times-Union reporter, interviews U.S. Marine while on assignment covering Vietnam war for Times-Union and other Gannett newspapers." (PHOTO)
Bottom Right
"Sanders LaMont, space writer for Gannett's TODAY, stands beside mockup of U.S. lunar module at Cape Kennedy moonport." (PHOTO CUT OUT)

20. 1968

a. (B1/f3)
Gannett Co., Inc. Annual Report 1968
newspapers/television/radio
"Building for the future remains a cornerstone of Company policy—building of new plants . . . building of new listenership and readership . . . building of ever-more-competent staffs . . . building and maintaining public confidence through conscientious public service."

(B1/f1)
b. ANNUAL MEETING of Shareholders
May 13, 1968
Rochester, N.Y.
"FIRST ANNUAL MEETING since Gannett Co., Inc. went public . . . ."

c. Jack Purcell came September 1, 1968; departed February 28, 1978 (B4/f3)

21. 1969

a. (B1/f4)
GANNETT CO., INC. ANNUAL REPORT 1969

Employes

Gannett has approximately 8,000 employes, about one-third represented by unions. Although we are introducing mechanization and automation for improved efficiency and lower production costs, it is an established policy of this company that no employe shall lose a job as a direct result of this modernization. Manpower savings do result through attrition.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

During 1969 a record number of our employes were sent to professional seminars at Columbia University, Stanford University and elsewhere. Recruiting and training programs were upgraded. Benefit programs for employes were improved.

For the first time, a Gannett Medallion for Public Service was offered during 1969. It was won by the Plainfield (N.J.) Courier-News for its part in staging a summer training program in journalism for outstanding Negro high school students.

22. 1970

a. (B1/f4)

Gannett Co., Inc. Annual Report 1970

Executive Incentive Plan: Under the Company's Executive Incentive Plan, which has been in effect since its approval by the stockholders in 1969, the Executive Compensation Committee of the Board of Directors authorized $489,862 for distribution to executives with respect to 1970 out of an available fund of $991,346, as computed under the terms of the Plan.

23. 1971

a. (B1/f4)

Gannett Co., Inc. 1971 Annual Report (B1/f4)

Under the Company's Executive Incentive Plan, which has been in effect since its approval of the stockholders in 1969, the Executive Compensation Committee of the Board of Directors authorized $625,222 for distribution to executives with respect to 1971, out of an available fund of $1,475,010, as computed under the terms of the Plan. A separate bonus was in effect during 1971 for executives of Federated Publications, Inc. In 1972, those executives will be included within the basic Gannett plan.

b. (B1/f1)

GANNETT CO., INC.
Shareholders' Annual Meeting
Rochester, N.Y.
May 12, 1971

First, as to recent acquisitions. During the last 12 months, your company added four newspapers in three states.
The staff is geared to provide operating help and counsel as needed to all of our affiliates.
Beyond that, we are now in the midst of a professional re-examination of our entire operating structure, aiming for more efficient management . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

c. Doug McCorkindale came July 1, 1971 (B4/f3)

PAUL MILLER: WITNESS TO HISTORY

Titles:

Chronological

Paul Miller: Oklahoma's 'Boy Sportsman,' 1906-1932
Paul Miller and the Associated Press, 1932-1978
The War Years: Paul Miller's Confidential Files, 1941-1946
Paul Miller and the Gannett Co., Inc., 1947-1979

Topical

Paul Miller and the American Presidents, 1943-1979
Trips, 1945-1976
Paul Miller and Postwar Conservatism, 1945-1979
Paul Miller and Richard Nixon: From Ike to Watergate, 1952-1974

Chapters:

CHAPTER ONE
Introduction

CHAPTER TWO
Oklahoma's "Boy Sportsman," 1906-1932

CHAPTER THREE
Paul Miller: Rising Star, 1933-1942

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

CHAPTER FOUR
World War II and the Origins of the Cold War, 1942-1946

1942-1944

"Paul Miller's Confidential Files and the Origins of the Cold War, 1942-1946"

1945

Directed AP staff at UN Organization Conference in San Francisco
(April 25-June 26)

First Round the World Pan American Globester Flight
(September 28-October 4)

1946

"Paul Miller's Confidential Files and the Origins of the Cold War, 1942-1946"

1947

CHAPTER FIVE
Containment, The Marshall Plan, and Korea, 1947-1953

1948

1949

Miller attended the annual International Conference of Newspaper Publishers in Free Countries as the United States delegate, and initiated a resolution aimed at defending the freedom of the press against any attempt at government control in free countries.
The Millers began their trip by flying from New York to London, where they spent four or five days before flying to Amsterdam, scene of the editors' convention.
Later they flew from Frankfurt-on-Main to Berlin in a coal-carrying American Airlift plane, noting the highly precise schedule on which the airlift is operated and which enables it to carry 8,000 to 9,000 tons of supplies into Berlin daily.
Western Europeans are sharply divided in their opinions on the Marshall Plan, the Russians and other aspects of postwar life, Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers and editor of The Times-Union, said today.
Returning to Rochester with Mrs. Miller this morning after a trip to England and the Continent they began June 7, Miller told of greatly divergent views he met in talking with Europeans.
"One will tell you that their recovery is going on apace, that everything is fine and the Marshall Plan is a great help," he said.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

“Then another will say that they are living in a fool’s paradise and that this is due to the Marshall Plan. Another will say that the Russians will never plan to make war. Still another will oppose this idea.”

1950

Miller was one of 30 American editors, publishers and radio executives who were guests of Pan American Airways on the inaugural flight of a new luxury run from New York to Buenos Aires. High point of the week-long journey, during which the group made stopovers in Trinidad, Rio de Janeiro and Montevideo, was a half-hour press conference with the Argentine president. Throughout the meeting the smooth, poised Peron was grilled by the editors on all phases of Western Hemisphere questions, Miller said.

1951

Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, just returned with Mrs. Miller from a four-week trip to Europe.

They docked in Montreal yesterday aboard the Canadian liner Empress of France, then flew to Rochester. There was a coincidence involved in the voyage.

“I met with [Prime Minister Sir] Anthony Eden in his House of Commons office in London,” Miller said. “He mentioned that I must have had quite a trip, and then remarked that he was about to make an interesting trip himself.

“I asked him where he was going. Eden said he was bound for Canada aboard the Empress of France. So I told him we’d have plenty of chance to talk later. Which we did.

“In France, the Communists are strong. But many of the French argue that their Reds are not Russian Communists and would not constitute a pro-Soviet force in the event of an open war.

“Meantime, French Communists daily chorus the defeatist arguments of the French doubters or “neutralists.” And they charge that America is “occupying” the country, a charge which one could understand as our fine-appearing American boys strolled the streets or drove about on SHAPE missions in Paris.

“It was a great privilege for me to talk with Prime Minister Clement Atlee in London, and a tremendous thrill to talk in Paris with Gen. Eisenhower.

“The general talked very frankly regarding the entire rearmament picture at his headquarters and expressed optimism despite obvious difficulties that remain.

“But he is not talking politics with anybody.

“Ike unquestionably commands the confidence of more people throughput the British Isles and Western Europe than any other individual.

“It seemed that everywhere Mrs. Miller and I went, we ran into people who know of Rochester. One was Frank Gentle, the No. 1 British sports promoter, who has visited Rochester and has a married daughter living here.”

The Millers visited with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Patterson in Switzerland (Patterson is the new U. S. minister there), and with Perle Mesta, U. S. minister to Luxembourg. Miller and his wife flew to London July 3.

CHAPTER SIX

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1954

Miller visited Guatemala after the anti-Communist counterrevolution and wrote a series of first-hand reports (November 6-14).

French Premier Mendes-France faced a panel of three newsmen, and answered questions in English.
Mendes-France predicted the Paris agreements between the Western nations and the Saar agreement between West Germany and France will be ratified as they now stand by the national governments of the countries involved.
He noted that the Saar agreement has drawn heavy criticism in West Germany and said, "I can assure you that in my country the agreement has been criticized by people who feel my position was too weak."
"When an international agreement is criticized by both sides, it is a good one," he added.
Mendes-France came here from Washington yesterday after several days of conferences with Secretary of State John Foster Dulles. Tomorrow he is scheduled to make a major foreign policy speech before the United Nations.

1955

If you have a young son in the armed forces, and are worrying about him, don't.
Barring a war, God forbid, he is better off than at home for awhile. And certainly he is getting training and discipline that will fit him for many (though not all) aspects of life as not even home and college can do.
I suspected that. Now I feel convinced of it after a visit to my own son at Camp Pendleton, Calif., on the eve of his departure for duty in Japan.

To paraphrase an old bromide, England hasn't lost a father, she has gained a son, as Anthony Eden replaces Winston Churchill as prime minister.
For Churchill's and Eden's relationship has been a father-and-son fondness of deepest mutual respect and affection, Paul Miller, who has known Eden since World War II years, said yesterday.
Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, recalling his personal contacts with Eden, painted an intimate picture of the new prime minister. Eden, who has visited Rochester twice in the last nine years, is also an old friend of Frank Gannett and Douglas C. Townson.
And although "Winnie" has raised his last V-for-victory sign as Britain's prime minister, Eden no doubt will be in touch with him frequently, Miller said.
"They have been a great team. They were together at every conference, every meeting. And if there were times when they were separated, they got together as soon afterwards as possible to compare notes and fill one another in."
Anthony Eden has visited in Rochester twice in the last nine years.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Eden visited in Rochester on June 29, 1946, when he was foreign minister. He stopped off here briefly to exchange greetings with Gannett. The Gannett Newspaper plane flew Eden from Toronto to New York, and Gannett accompanied the statesman to New York. Again, on Aug. 27, 1951, he flew to Rochester from Toronto in the Gannett plane. And while here that day he was guest of honor at a dinner of approximately 40 civic and industrial leaders in the Rochester Club. Gannett introduced him to the assemblage. Miller arranged for that 1951 visit to Rochester.
He first met Eden at a dinner given in Washington by Cordell Hull, then Secretary of State. Later, during World War II, he became more closely acquainted with him after Eden had paid several visits to Washington.
In 1951 Mr. and Mrs. Miller were in Europe, and after visiting France, Switzerland and Luxembourg, made a date from Paris with Eden to see him at 4 p. m. the following day in his office at London.

1956

Paul Miller, accompanied by Mrs. Miller, visited Venezuela, Guatemala and Mexico. They were guests of Creole Petroleum Corp. in Venezuela. They had a look not only at Caracas, the capital, but flew more than 2,000 miles on visits to other sections of the country, with particular attention to U.S. oil and industrial interests.
In Guatemala, which Miller visited a year ago after the overthrow of the Communist-dominated government by Carlos Castillo Armas, they were received by Castillo Armas, now president, and visited various Guatemala beauty spots. In Mexico, they talked with newspaper, business and government people, interviewed President Ruiz Cortines and visited the former president, Miguel Alaman [sic]. Miller said: “There isn’t anything like Caracas in this world”

Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Newspapers, was received at 10 Downing St. last night by Prime Minister Sir Anthony Eden.
Miller is here on a study of the Suez crisis. He expects to go to Cairo over the weekend, returning to Rochester at the end of next week.
The prime minister and Miller have been friends for some years. The publisher told reporters his visit was merely “a friendly call,” adding: “I was delighted to find Sir Anthony looking exceedingly well, and in good spirits and optimistic as always.”
Miller arrived in London Wednesday by plane from New York.

Miller: “I flew in a British European Airways plane to Brussels, a flight of about an hour and fifty minutes. It was a beautiful flight. We arrived in bright, and indeed, hot sunshine at the big Brussels airport from which Louise and I took off for London after visiting Perle Mesta at Luxembourg, in 1951. There, I changed to a Sabena (Belgian Airlines Plane) for Athens and then on to Cairo. We arrived in Athens, after a perfectly beautiful flight over the Alps and over a number of interesting cities, including Florence, at about 9 p.m. We were on the ground there for half an hour or so and by a little after midnight were over the lights of Cairo. Cairo is a city of about three million and has many good and brightly lighted streets, so that the effect, coming after hours of darkness with no towns or cities of consequence, was startling.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"On Wednesday, I got up expecting to see Nasser and then get packed and leave on a 3:00 a.m. plane the following morning, Thursday, for Rome and London. I was to see Nasser in the evening. However, something came up and they called an emergency cabinet meeting and he was unable to keep the appointment. Around 11:00 o'clock they called me to ask if I could stay over and see him next day, as the cabinet meeting made it impossible that evening. Well, I had seen and done everything else that I had come to Cairo for, and I was by now getting tired and eager to start for home. I just couldn't see putting in another day, as I thought something might come up the next day, too.

"So - - 3:00 a.m. found me in a British European Airways plane bound for Rome. We arrived in Rome about 8:00 a.m., on a beautiful, clear, cool morning; spent an hour there. Were off again for London, arriving about 1:30 p.m. I had slept little on the flight from Cairo and was delighted when the British Airways people had someone meet me at the plane and inquire whether I wouldn't like to be sent to a hotel nearby for some rest. I said I sure would! I went to this little old English hotel, converted from a former country place, beautiful with acres of carefully cropped ground, and slept until about 5:30. Then I got up and had tea, which they prepared for me in a little lounge, made some calls to some friends in London, and the BEA car was back again to take me to the airport for the flight home."

1957

Paul Miller: "PARIS, Dec. 15 – President Eisenhower prayed for peace today.
He joined perhaps 800 other worshippers at the great gray American Cathedral in special interfaith services for success of the NATO conference.
The President was seated in a pew well forward in left center. He bowed humbly there during prayers, forehead on his arms, his thinning hair accentuated.
Thus he worshipped on the eve of this conclave of Western powers joined for peace through mutual defense in 1949 and faced with critical new threats now.
Temperatures were in the 20s. A raw wind whipped the decorative flags outside.
Worshippers kept on their coats at the start. They craned at the President and his party.
Secretary Dulles took part in the Episcopal reading service under flags of NATO countries hanging from the high vaulted ceiling.
The President joined at the close in the century-old hymn concluding: "Whom shall we trust but Thee O Lord? Where rest but on this faithful word? None ever called on Thee in vail; give peace, O God, give peace again."
At least one American [Miller] recalled Washington on his knees at Valley Forge and Lincoln praying alone in his study, watching Dwight D. Eisenhower this bleak cold Sunday in Paris."

1958

Paul Miller and other Rochester, New York notables successfully completed "A Mission of Goodwill: From Rochester [NY] to Rennes[France]"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1959

1960

Paul Miller made a trip to Havana, Cuba (February 27-29)

1961

1962

Invited to White House lunch by President John Fitzgerald Kennedy along with other leading newspaper executives (January 23).

Trip to Russia with other United States editors (June 25-July 25).
Miller visited the Soviet Union with a dozen other American newspapermen.
The 23-day tour was climaxed by an interview with Nikita Khrushchev and a trip to Berlin with one of his closest friends, Walker Stone, editor-in-chief of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

Published Russia: 1962 (October).

CHAPTER SEVEN
Into the Darkness: LBJ and the War in Vietnam, 1963-1968

1963

Luncheon guest of President Lyndon B. Johnson at the White House (December 11)

1964

Miller helped lead local opposition in Rochester [NY] to militant organizer Saul D. Alinsky's work following the Rochester riots of 1964.
Yet Miller also visited the inner city to talk with black leaders of the new FIGHT organization founded with Alinsky's help.
And Miller conceived the idea of a far-ranging series of reports on the positive aspects of racial integration in many communities that won a 1964 Pulitzer Special Citation for Gannett—the first Pulitzer award ever bestowed on a newspaper group or chain.

Attended Inter-American Press Association Convention, Mexico City (October.)

Attended the inauguration of President Gustav Diaz Ordaz, Mexico City (December 9).

1965

Attended the inauguration and Inaugural Ball of President Lyndon B. Johnson (January 20).

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Attended the funeral of the Right Honourable Sir Winston Churchill at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, London (January 30).
Kent Cooper died. Paul Miller, in London for the funeral of Sir Winston Churchill, returned to New York.

1966

Inter-American Press Association Convention, Lima, Peru, San Salvador (October 19-26).

1967

Visited with President Lyndon B. Johnson at the White House (January 22).

1968

Pan American Inaugural Flight – New York to Moscow passenger service (July 15).

CHAPTER EIGHT

New Directions: Nixon, Kissinger, and Ford, 1969-1976

1969

Attended Sunday worship services at the White House, at President Nixon's invitation (April 1).

Luncheon for Former President Lyndon B. Johnson and Mrs. Johnson, at Cape Kennedy Hilton (July 15).

Attended White House dinner with other Associated Press executives (October 12).

1970

Member, President's Commission for the Observance of the 25th Anniversary of the United Nations (March).

European Trip: London, Prague, Bucharest, Budapest, Belgrade, Dubrovnik (side trips to Sarajevo, Sveti Stefan, and Boka Koforsha), Rome, Barcelona, Palma, Barcelona, and Lisbon (June 21-July 21).

1971

Pacific Area Trip: Honolulu, Guam, Manila, Tokyo, Hong Kong, Seoul, San Francisco, and Denver (July 9-August 4).

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PHOTO:
In Editorially Speaking (Volume 29, 1971).
Paul Miller (left), on Far Eastern tour before Gannett Group was joined by the six newspapers of Honolulu Star-Bulletin, Inc., is welcomed to Seoul by Bong-Kyun Kim, superintendent general and chief of foreign affairs division, Korean National Police, and Lee, Eun-woo (right), vice president, Donghwa News Agency.

1972

In July and August of 1972, Miller and another close friend, Wes Gallagher, president of the Associated Press, visited the Chinese mainland for three weeks with their wives. After both visits to the Communists countries [1962 visit to the Soviet Union], Miller wrote and spoke extensively about what he saw and heard.

Miller also took a group of AP executives to China and negotiated an agreement for regular news exchange between AP and the Chinese news agency. For the first time in twenty-two years, an American news agency had a regular news channel with China. Stories penned by Miller during and after his China trip, later became the booklet, China Opens the Door (1972).

1973

In January, Miller traveled to Paris with Secretary of State [William Pierce] Rogers for the signing of the Indochina peace treaty.
Miller travels widely, usually on Gannett business, but also to a lesser extent for the A.P. Paul Miller's travel by air in 1973 was 125,963 miles, including a Pacific swing toward the end of the year.

1974

Miller travels widely, usually on Gannett business, but also to a lesser extent for the A.P. Paul Miller's travel by air in 1974 totaled 80,816 miles.

1975

Miller travels widely, usually on Gannett business, but also to a lesser extent for the A.P. This year, his second China visit, capped a 28,000 mile Pacific arc tour.

1976

In May/June of 1976, Paul Miller traveled to Taiwan (Republic of China), Hong Kong and Japan, a distance of 22,500 miles.

CHAPTER NINE

American Malaise: The Carter Years, 1977-1979

1977

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

U.S. News and World Report named Paul Miller one of the five most influential newspaper executives in the United States.

1978

1979

CHAPTER TEN
Epilogue: America "Reborn Hard"

Paul Miller's Confidential Files and the Origins of the Cold War, 1942-1946

I
Outline

I. Introduction

A. Origins of the Cold War historiography

1. Michael J. Lyons
2. David M. Kennedy
3. Martin Gilbert

II. The Anglo-American Commitment to "Torch"

A. 16-27 July 1942

4. Roosevelt's 16 July Memo sent Hopkins, Marshall and King to London
5. Churchill elated over decision for "Torch"
6. Stalin's disappointment at the decision
7. Stalin invited Churchill to Moscow
8. Roosevelt advised Churchill on how to deal with Stalin
9. Churchill expressed his dread of going to Moscow

III. Churchill and Stalin, 31 July- 16 August 1942

B. 12 August 1942

10. Harriman reported to Roosevelt as the talks opened
11. Churchill spoke plainly to Stalin
12. Stalin: "May God help this enterprise to succeed"
13. Stalin grasped the strategic benefits of "Torch"
14. Roosevelt cabled his satisfaction to Churchill

C. 13 August 1942

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

15. Churchill and Molotov met that morning
16. Stalin presented an aide memoire to Churchill and Harriman that night.
17. Harriman described the meeting as “very rough sledding”
18. Stalin almost accused the British of cowardice
19. Stalin more or less backed down after Churchill took offense
20. Stalin dismissed plans for allowing US aircraft to traverse Siberia
21. British and Americans perplexed about Stalin’s abrupt mood swings

D. 14 August 1942

22. Harriman responded to Stalin’s aide memoire
23. Harriman described the state dinner in a cable to Roosevelt
24. Churchill and Stalin parted that night with a handshake

E. 15 August 1942

25. Stalin invited Churchill for drinks; Churchill accepted
26. Churchill met Stalin’s daughter; Stalin invited Molotov to dinner also
27. Cadogan arrived with a draft of a joint communique
28. Churchill and Stalin issued a joint communique

F. 16 August 1942

29. Churchill left Russia at 5:30 A.M.; cabled Stalin from Teheran
30. Churchill cabled War Cabinet and Roosevelt
31. Roosevelt cabled his assurances of Anglo-American support to Stalin

IV. Stalingrad: October-November 1942

32. Capturing Stalingrad became an obsession for Hitler
33. Roosevelt and Churchill proposed an Anglo-American air force in Russia
34. Stalin ignored the proposal in his 7 October communication to Roosevelt
35. Churchill expressed dismay to Roosevelt over abrupt Soviet silence
36. Roosevelt offered his own explanation of silence to Churchill
37. The Russians counterattacked on 19 November 1942
38. By 22 November, German Sixth Army encircled
39. Robert Sherwood identified that point as the beginning of the Cold War

V. General James Burns’s Memorandum, 1 December 1942

40. Burns prepared a memo for Hopkins that paralleled the latters’ feelings

VI. Overview: Paul Miller’s Confidential Files, March, 1943 – March, 1946

VII. Paul Miller’s Biography, September, 1906 – June, 1942

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

VIII. Paul Miller's Diary, June, 1942 – February, 1943

A. FDR

B. Henry Morgenthau

C. Harold Ickes

D. George Marshall

E. Ernest King

F. Henry Wallace

G. Jesse Jones/Donald Nelson

IX. Paul Miller's Confidential Files, March – June, 1943 (B3/f34)

A. Personal information/anecdotes regarding Churchill, 24 March

B. Briefing from Adm. King, 5 April

C. Evening with Gen. Joseph Stilwell, 18 May

D. Off-the-record conference with Gen. Marshall, 9 June
1. WLB to PM

X. Paul Miller's Confidential Files, July – December, 1943 (B3/f35)

A. Adm. King met with a few newsmen, 17 August

B. Secret session with Gen. Marshall, 28 August

C. Off-the-record party for Churchill, 4 September

D. White House meeting with Roosevelt, 21 October
1. Miller also met with Willkie later that night

E. Off-the-record dinner for Nelson, late November, 1943
1. Sterling Green to PM who was not there

F. Adm. King met with newsmen, 21 December

XI. Paul Miller's Confidential Files, 1944 (B3/f36)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A. Gen. Marshall held the “most amazing” off-the-record conference, 1 January

B. Evening with Adm. King, 19 February

C. Gen. Marshall met with “usual group” on 13 March
1. AP had carried critical story of Anzio landing on 7 March

D. Gen. Pat Hurley spoke off-the-record to Overseas Writers Club, 15 March

E. Off-the-record evening with Adm. King, 17 April

F. Miller called on Gen. Marshall at his home to extend speaking invitation, 18 April

G. Adm. King met with the “usual group” except for Miller, 15 August
1. Glen Perry of the New York Sun to PM who was not there

H. Miller attended a White House press conference
1. Roosevelt’s health had declined considerably

I. Marshall spoke at a dinner hosted by his secret conferees, 9 September

H. Adm. King held off-the-record evening talk at newsman’s home, 17 October

I. Gen. Marshall held a secret news conference, 21 October
1. Miller unable to attend; he sent Beale

J. Harriman shared his thoughts on Russia at a luncheon, 3 November

K. Asst. Sec. of War John J. McCloy was guest of honor at a luncheon, 15 December

L. MacArthur shared his opinions with reporters on Leyte, 19 December
1. AP reporter to PM who was not there

M. One reporter’s impressions of FDR at Warm Springs, November-December, 1944

XII. Paul Miller’s Confidential Files, 1945 (B3/f37)

A. Stettinius off-record conference, early January, 1945
Jack Bell [JB] to PM (WLB) who were not there

B. Adm. King shared information/opinions with a group of newsmen, 5 March

C Gen. Marshall held off-the-record conference, 24 March
1. William Beale [WLB] to PM who was not there

D. Exchange between PM and Archibald MacLeish, June, 1945

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1. Letter from PM to MacLeish
2. MacLeish reply to PM

E. Gen. Marshall called off-the-record conference in the morning, 7 August
1. Hiroshima

F. Tony Vaccaro related a number of stories about Potsdam, 9 August

G. Adm. King said goodbye to reporters at their last meeting with him, 20 August

H. Miller met with Truman for twenty minutes, 22 August

XIII. Paul Miller's Confidential Files, 1946 (B3/f37)

A. Harriman shared his thoughts on Russia in off-the-record session, 4 March

XIV. Conclusion

XV. Endnotes

II
Introduction

Scholars differ widely in their assessments of when the first signs of the postwar rupture between the Western democracies and the Soviet Union known as the Cold War emerged. For instance, Michael J. Lyons writes that "Soviet historians [have long] argued that a cold war between Russia and the West had existed for many decades before the period that we now refer to by that name. They contend that the Cold War was merely put on hold during World War II to facilitate the defeat of the common enemy only to flourish anew in the war's aftermath."[1] David M. Kennedy, however, points to events during the war itself, specifically, Prime Minister Winston Churchill's trip to Moscow in August of 1942 at which time he sought to defend the joint British and American decision to invade North Africa, and thus delay a "second front" in Europe until 1943 at the earliest. Kennedy wrote:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

> Peering into that Kremlin gloom in August 1942, some historians have discerned the first shadows of the Cold War, that decades-long legacy of distrust and tension that was among the most bitter and ironic fruits of the wartime Grand Alliance. Certainly the Soviets at this point had ample reason to doubt their Western partners. The North African debate might have rent a tear in the fabric of Anglo-American unity, but it threatened to open a gaping chasm separating the Western allies from their Russian comrades-in-arms. Roosevelt meanwhile could do little more than reassure the Soviet leader that "we are coming as quickly and as powerfully as we can.[2]

But while British scholar Martin Gilbert pays scant attention to Churchill's visit, he attaches great significance to an entirely separate set of circumstances that began to develop at the same time:

> On August 7, the German refugee scientist Klaus Fuchs became a British citizen, taking an oath of allegiance to the British Crown. At that time, he was working in Britain on the "Tube Alloys" project, the Anglo-American research on the atomic bomb. At the same time, he was passing the innermost secrets of the project to the Soviet Union. With the military struggle against Germany at its most intense, the Allies in that struggle remained alert to the basic division of ideology and aim which had pitted their systems against each other before the war, and would dominate their relationship again once they had been victorious against Germany. Even at the moment when such a victory could in no way be guaranteed, the minds that had to focus with all their power on the means to secure that victory were well aware of the conflicts that might come in the postwar era.[3]

Unfortunately, all three of the historical examples in the brief review above fail adequately to acknowledge the historical processes that led to the Cold War – that strained political and military equilibrium between the United States and the Soviet Union that persisted for decades following the successful conclusion of the Second World War. Despite numerous international crises, however, it fortunately never erupted either into conventional or nuclear conflict. Although there may be some merit to the arguments of those Soviet historians who saw a "cold war" that stretched all the way back in time to relations between Tsarist Russia and Western Europe, they take no account of the enormous differences in U.S.-Soviet relations between the pre- and post-atomic worlds. Anglo-American students of the Cold War may safely discard this approach for that reason. And while tracing the beginning of the Cold War to a meeting between Churchill and Soviet Premier Josef Stalin in the summer of 1942 may be more intellectually satisfying than attributing it to some broad span of history, such a course neglects to consider the serpentine interplay of political and military factors that affected all of the wartime decisions made by the members of the Grand Alliance.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

For instance, from 16 July to 2 August, "leaders of the Big Three met in the final conference of the war, appropriately code-named TERMINAL, in Potsdam, Germany. Stalin, Truman, and Churchill – initially – drew up terms for the surrender of Japan. The thrust of the conference was political, however, with the first indications of suspicion and mistrust manifesting themselves. In a real sense, Potsdam was the termination of World War II and the onset of the Cold War."[4]

Finally, limiting the causes of the Cold War to a race to acquire atomic weapons omits completely the very real ideological divide that surfaced between the Western Democracies and the Soviet Union during World War II; and, clearly, the historical record convincingly documents that divide well before the end of that conflict.

III
The Anglo-Americans Commit to TORCH

July 16-27, 1942

The origins of that ideological split, however, do not lie with Stalin's strident demands for an Allied "second front" on the European continent by 1942. Nor was its first manifestation the diplomatic impasse that arose during Churchill's visit to Moscow that summer to explain his joint decision with U. S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt to confront German forces first in North Africa. Although their decision meant delaying the promised cross-Channel invasion until at least 1943, and which, understandably, angered

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Stalin and the other members of the Politburo, the actual result of Churchill's August, 1942 mission to Moscow was, in fact, the complete restoration of the accord that had prevailed among the United States, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union almost from the beginning of the German invasion of Russia launched by Adolf Hitler in June, 1941.

The British and Americans arrived at that decision during talks held in July, 1942, in England. With a memorandum dated 16 July 1942, U. S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt dispatched Harry Hopkins, General George C. Marshall, and Admiral J. Ernest King to London "as my personal representatives for the purpose of consultation with appropriate British authorities on the conduct of the war."[5] Beginning on 20 July, the American delegates – all of whom strongly advocated a joint Anglo-American landing on the European continent by 1942 if possible and under no circumstances later than 1943 – met with their resistant British counterparts only to deadlock over the feasibility of even a limited cross-Channel invasion in 1942 [code-named "Sledgehammer"]. Two days later, Marshall announced to his British hosts that in view of the impasse the Americans would defer to the President for directions on how best to proceed. Churchill barely concealed his excitement over Roosevelt's response:

> President Roosevelt replied at once that he was not surprised at the disappointing outcome of the London talks. He agreed that it was no use continuing to press for "Sledgehammer" in the face of British opposition, and instructed his delegation to reach a decision with us on some operation which would involve American land forces being brought into action against the enemy in 1942.
>
> Thus "Sledgehammer" fell by the wayside and "Gymnast" [code-name for the Allied invasion of North Africa] came into its own. Marshall and King, though naturally disappointed, bowed to the decision of their Commander-in-Chief, and the greatest goodwill between us all again prevailed.
>
> I now hastened to rechristen my favourite. "Gymnast". . . vanished from our code-words. On July 24 in an instruction from me to the Chiefs of Staff "Torch" became the new and master term. On July 25 the President cabled to Hopkins that plans for landings in North Africa to take place "not later than October 30" should go ahead at once. That evening our friends set off on their journey back to Washington.[6]

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

IV
Churchill and Stalin, 31 July -16 August 1942

Unfortunately for Churchill, his other partner in the Grand Alliance held infinitely harsher feelings than did his American "friends" with respect to any delay in establishing a second front in Europe. On 23 July, Stalin responded to an earlier, somewhat evasive telegram from Churchill by stating unequivocally that regarding "the question of creating a second front in Europe, I am afraid it is not being treated with the seriousness it deserves. Taking into account the present position on the Soviet-German front, I must state in the most emphatic manner that the Soviet Government cannot acquiesce in the postponement of a second front in Europe until 1943."[7]

Nevertheless, on 31 July, Stalin invited Churchill and the Chief of the Imperial General Staff to Moscow "to consider jointly urgent questions of war against Hitler as a menace" having "just now reached a special degree of intensity."[8] Churchill readily accepted hoping to convince Stalin of the strategic benefits of an Anglo-American invasion of North Africa. Before he left, Roosevelt shared his thoughts on how to deal with Stalin in the following cable:

> It is essential for us to bear in mind our Ally's personality and the very difficult and dangerous situation that he confronts. I think we should attempt to put ourselves in his place, for no one whose country has been invaded can be expected to approach the war from a world point of view. We should tell Stalin quite specifically in the first place that we have decided upon a course of action for 1942. Without advising him of the precise nature of our proposed operations, I think we should tell him without any qualification that they are going to be made.
>
> I agree with you that we should run another northern convoy if there is any chance of success, despite the great risk which is involved. But I think that you should not raise any false hopes in Stalin relative to this.
>
> The Russian need is urgent and immediate. I believe it would mean a great deal to the Russian people and their army if they were to know that units of our air forces were fighting with them in a very direct manner. I am discussing this matter of putting air power directly on the Russian front and I am hopeful that this can be done. I imagine that Stalin is in no mood to engage in strategic discussions of a theoretical nature and I am sure that, except for our major operation, the giving of our direct air support to the Russians on the southern end of their front is the enterprise that would suit Stalin best.[9]

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Churchill made the trip, but with a feeling of dread so acute that he later recalled:

It was like carrying a large lump of ice to the North Pole. Still, I was sure it was my duty to tell them the facts personally and have it all out face to face with Stalin, rather than trust to telegrams and intermediaries. At least it showed that one cared for their fortunes and understood what their struggle meant to the general war. We had always hated their wicked regime, and, till the German flail beat upon them, they would have watched us being swept out of existence with indifference and gleefully divided with Hitler our Empire in the East.[10]

August 12, 1942

Churchill arrived in Moscow in the afternoon of August 12 determined to begin his discussions with Stalin as soon as possible. Roosevelt's special envoy Averill Harriman who was also present at the talks reported:

At every point Stalin took issue with a degree of bluntness almost amounting to insult. He made such remarks as – that you cannot win wars if you are afraid of the Germans and unwilling to take risks. He ended this phase of the discussion by stating abruptly but with dignity that although he did not agree with the arguments he could not force us to action. He showed little interest in ROUNDUP [a code-name for an invasion of continental Europe], expressing the opinion that grave difficulties confronted it. Up to now, the atmosphere was tense, no agreement having been reached on any point.[11]

Churchill then attempted to steer the conversation away from a second front in Europe and toward the Anglo-American bombing campaign over Germany. Although Stalin seemed to appreciate its overall negative effect on Germany, Churchill knew that the central issue of their meeting lay unresolved:

After this interlude which relieved the tension, Stalin observed that from our long talk, it seemed that all we were going to do was no "Sledgehammer," no "Round-up," and pay our way by bombing Germany. I decided to get the worst over first and to create a suitable background for the project I had come to unfold. I did not therefore try at once to relieve the gloom. Indeed I asked specially that there should be the plainest speaking between friends and comrades in peril. However, courtesy and dignity prevailed.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The moment had now come to bring "Torch" into action.[12]

Toward that end, Churchill showed his drawing of a crocodile to Stalin to make the point "that it was as well to strike the soft underbelly [of Europe] (the Mediterranean) as the snout (Northern France)." The Russian leader asked if a date for the landings had been agreed upon, to which Churchill answered 1 October at the latest. Stalin next inquired whether "Torch" might not bring Vichy France and Spain into the war on the side of Germany, and where the operation might conceivably lead. To this last question, Churchill assured him that the European continent remained the ultimate objective. And after Harriman added that Roosevelt agreed completely with Churchill regarding "Torch," Stalin abruptly cried, "May God help this enterprise to succeed!"[13]

To the surprise of both Churchill and Harriman, Stalin had grasped almost immediately several strategic implications of Torch:

It would take the German enemy in the rear.
It would provoke French and Germans to fight each other.
It would put Italy out of action.
It would make it all the more advisable for Spain to stay neutral.[14]

Following the three hour and forty minute meeting, Churchill and Harriman separately cabled Roosevelt to express their satisfaction at the spirit of accord which now prevailed in Moscow, and their admiration for Stalin's intellect. Roosevelt replied to Churchill:

The cordiality shown by Mr. Stalin and his understanding of our difficult problems make me very happy. Give him my warm regards and keep me advised of progress. I wish I could be with both of you so that the party could be made complete.[15]

August 13, 1942

The talks held on August 13, however, were less satisfactory, and exposed the continuing rift between the Russians and their Western guests. The day began with a meeting between Churchill and People's Commissar of Foreign Affairs Vyacheslav Molotov. Already the day before Molotov had dampened the mood of solidarity when he had asked if "Torch" might not be possible a month earlier than planned. On this day he began by labeling the entire operation "ambiguous," and reminded Churchill of the promises made during Molotov's diplomatic missions to London and Washington several months prior regarding an Anglo-American landing on the continent in 1942.[16]

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The discussions continued in that vein at an eleven o'clock meeting that night as Stalin opened the talks by presenting copies of the following aide memoire to Churchill and Harriman:

> As the result of an exchange of views in Moscow which took place on the 12th of August this year, I ascertained that the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Churchill, considered that the organization of the second front in Europe in 1942 to be impossible.
>
> As is well known, the organization of a second front in Europe was pre-decided during the sojourn of Molotov in London, and it found expression in the agreed Anglo-Soviet communique published on the 12th June last.
>
> It is also known that the organization of a second front in Europe had as its object the withdrawal of German forces from the Eastern front to the West, and the creation in the West of a serious base of resistance to the German-Fascist forces and the affording of relief by this means to the situation of the Soviet forces on the Soviet-German front in 1942.
>
> It will be easily understood that the Soviet Command built their plan of summer and autumn operations calculating on the creation of a second front in Europe in 1942.
>
> It is easy to grasp that the refusal of the Government of Great Britain to create a second front in 1942 in Europe inflicts a moral blow to the whole of the Soviet public opinion, which calculates on the creation of a second front and that it complicates the situation of the Red Army at the front and prejudices the plan of the Soviet Command.
>
> I am not referring to the fact that the difficulties arising for the Red Army as the result of the refusal to create a second front in 1942 will undoubtedly have to deteriorate the military situation of England and all the remaining Allies.
>
> It appears to me and my colleagues that the most favorable conditions exist in 1942 for the creation of a second front in Europe, inasmuch as almost all the forces of the German army, and the best forces to boot, have been withdrawn to the Eastern front, leaving in Europe an inconsiderable amount of forces and these of inferior quality. It is unknown whether the year of 1943 will offer conditions for the creation of a second front as favourable as 1942. We are of the opinion, therefore, that it is particularly in 1942 that the creation of a second front in Europe is possible and should be effected. I was, however, unfortunately unsuccessful in convincing Mr. Prime Minister of Great Britain hereof, while Mr. Harriman, the representative of the President of the United States, fully supported Mr. Prime Minister in the negotiations held in Moscow.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(signed) J. STALIN[17]

For the remainder of that meeting, the British and Americans present experienced what Harriman described as "very rough sledding."[18] In a complete reversal from his position the previous night, Stalin made it clear that the Soviet Government had no interest in "Torch." Stalin went on to berate the Western Allies for discontinuing the northern supply convoys, and for being so reluctant to land just six or eight divisions on the Cherbourg Peninsula when the Russians were at that moment withstanding 280 German divisions fighting in the Soviet Union. Stalin also seemed to question whether the British infantry – in contrast to the Russian infantry and even the R.A.F. – might be afraid to fight the Germans, to which Churchill coldly answered: "I pardon that remark only on account of the bravery of the Russian troops."[19]

Harriman also recounted how at the meeting Churchill became so heated in his defense of Anglo-American strategy that his interpreter fell behind in his transcription. Churchill then turned his full wrath upon the poor fellow at which point Stalin burst out laughing and exclaimed: "I do not understand your words but I like your spirit."[20] Although the mood relaxed somewhat, the atmosphere at the meeting remained tense. Indeed, after Harriman pressed Stalin about the plans for flying American aircraft across Siberia, he brusquely answered: "Wars are not won with plans."[21]

At first perplexed by the Soviets' abrupt mood swing, the British and Americans at last concluded that Stalin's sudden change in attitude from amicable partner on the night before to petulant ally this night was the result of pressure on Stalin from certain members of the Politburo, particularly Molotov, to hold a hard line. Harriman remembered that he and Lord Beaverbrook had experienced a comparable Soviet reversal during earlier negotiations in Moscow, as had British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden the year prior. There would be other instances as the war progressed.[22]

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

August 14, 1942

The following day Harriman responded to Stalin's aide memoire:

> I have had an opportunity to study the memorandum of the 13th August you handed me last night, an identical copy of which you simultaneously gave to the Prime Minister. I have also had an opportunity to read the Prime Minister's aide-memoire of the 14th August replying to your memorandum.
>
> I do not believe that any useful purpose would be served in comments by me additional to what the Prime Minister has said. I feel, however, that I must reaffirm his statement that no promise has been broken regarding the second front.[23]

The state dinner in the Kremlin on the night of August 14 featured yet another turnabout by the Soviets. Harriman briefly described the event in a cable to Roosevelt:

> Last night we dined in force at the Kremlin with all members of the Soviet General Staff as well as all members of the Defense Committee. Stalin seemed to be entirely oblivious of the unpleasant exchanges of the previous night. He was in the best of spirits and most cordial to the Prime Minister and myself. When Churchill arrived at the dinner, however, he still appeared somewhat annoyed by the rough treatment he had received but he became more and more interested in his talks with Stalin as the evening progressed. The subjects of discussion ranged from theories of military tactics to post-war policies. Churchill talked in some detail about the air squadrons for the Southern Russian front which you and he have in mind.[24]

Churchill excused himself from the dinner at 1:30 a.m., after having declined an invitation to watch a movie with the others. As he was leaving, Stalin rose to escort the Prime Minister the full length of the Kremlin's labyrinth of passageways and stairwells all the way to its main entrance where the two leaders bade each other goodnight with a warm handshake.[25]

August 15, 1942

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Churchill and Stalin met again at 7:00 p.m. the next evening for one final discussion which the former described as "useful and important." As Churchill prepared to leave, Stalin, who "seemed suddenly embarrassed," invited the Prime Minister for drinks, an invitation to which Churchill readily accepted, despite the fact that his plane was set to leave at dawn the next morning. Whereupon the two men soon proceeded cordially in the direction of Stalin's house.[26]

Upon their arrival, the Soviet leader led the way to his private apartment. Churchill described it as "of moderate size, simple, dignified, and four in number – a dining room, working-room, bedroom, and a large bathroom." Churchill next met Stalin's daughter, "a handsome, red-haired girl, who kissed her father dutifully." She and "a very aged housekeeper" then began to set a table. As Churchill followed the proceedings he observed that "[m]eanwhile Stalin had been uncorking various bottles, which began to make an amazing array. Then he said, 'Why should we not have Molotov? He is worrying about the communique. We could settle it here. There is one thing about Molotov – he can drink.' I then realized that there was to be a dinner."[27]

Molotov soon joined the two leaders and their interpreters for dinner, drinks, and talk.

> We actually sat at this table from 8:30 till 2:30 the next morning, which with my previous interview, made a total of more than seven hours. The dinner was evidently improvised on the spur of the moment, but gradually more and more food arrived. We pecked and picked, as seemed to be the Russian fashion, at a long succession of choice dishes, and sipped a variety of excellent wines. Molotov assumed his most affable manner, and Stalin, to make things go, chaffed him unmercifully.
>
> At about 1 A.M. Cadogan arrived with the draft [of the joint communique], and we set to work to put it into final form. A considerable sucking-pig was brought to the table. Hitherto Stalin had only tasted the dishes, but now it was half-past one in the morning and around his usual dinner hour. He invited Cadogan to join him in the conflict, and when my friend excused himself, our host fell upon the victim single-handed. After this had been achieved he went abruptly into the next room to receive the reports from all sectors of the front, which were delivered to him from 2 A.M.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

onwards. It was about twenty minutes before he returned, and by that time we had the communique agreed. Finally, at 2:30 A.M. I said I must go. I had half an hour to drive to the villa, and as long to drive back to the airport. I still had General [Wladyslaw] Anders to see. I begged Molotov not to come and see me off at dawn, for he was clearly tired out. He looked at me reproachfully as if to say, "Do you really think I would fail to be there?"[28]

The following was the published text of the communique.

Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Winston Churchill, with the President of the Council of the People's Commissars of U.S.S.R., J. V. Stalin.

Negotiations have taken place in Moscow between President of the Council of the People's Commissars of U.S.S.R., J. V. Stalin, and Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Winston Churchill, in which Mr. Harriman, representing the President of the United States of America, participated. There took part in the discussions the People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs, V. M. Molotov, Marshall K. E. Voroshilov, from the Soviet side; the British Ambassador, Sir A. [Archibald] Clark Kerr, C.I.G.S. Sir A. [Alan] Brooke, and other responsible representatives of the British armed forces, and the Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Sir A. [Alexander] Cadogan, from the British side.

A number of decisions were reached covering the field of the war against Hitlerite Germany and her associates in Europe. This just war of liberation both Governments are determined to carry on with all their power and energy until the complete destruction of Hitlerism and any similar tyranny has been achieved. The discussions, which were carried on in an atmosphere of cordiality and complete sincerity, provided an opportunity of reaffirming the close friendships and understanding between the Soviet Union, Great Britain, and the United States of America, in accordance with the Allied relationships existing between them.[29]

16 August 1942

Churchill's plane left Russia at 5:30 A.M. the next morning. Understandably exhausted, he slept much of the way. After landing in Teheran, Iran, the Prime Minister sent the following message to Stalin:

Prime Minister to Premier Stalin 16 Aug. 42

On arriving at Teheran after a swift and smooth flight I take occasion to thank you for your comradeship and hospitality. I am very glad I came to Moscow: firstly, because it was my duty to tell the tale; and secondly, because I feel sure our contacts will play a helpful part in furthering our cause. Give my regards to Molotov.[30]

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

That same day, Churchill also recounted the details of his final night in Russia both to the War Cabinet and Roosevelt. The Prime Minister concluded his report optimistically:

> On the whole, I am definitely encouraged by my visit to Moscow. I am sure that the disappointing news I brought could not have been imparted except by me personally without leading to serious drifting apart. It was my duty to go. Now they know the worst, and having made their protest are entirely friendly; this in spite of the fact that this is their most anxious and agonising time. Moreover, M. Stalin is entirely convinced of the great advantages of "Torch," and I do trust that it is being drive forward with superhuman energy on both sides of the ocean.[31]

Roosevelt's subsequent cable to Stalin expressed his regret at being unable to attend the recent conferences and sought to reinforce the "comradeship" alluded to by Churchill that now hopefully prevailed among the three leaders of the Grand Alliance:

> It is a matter of regret to me that I could not have joined with you and Mr. Churchill in the Conferences in Moscow. I am fully cognizant of the urgent requirements of the military situation particularly in relation to your own Eastern Front. We have gained, I believe, a toehold in the Southwest Pacific [Guadalcanal] from which the Japanese will find it very difficult to dislodge us. We have had substantial naval losses there but the advantage gained was worth the sacrifice and we are going to maintain hard pressure on the enemy.
>
> I am very well aware that our real enemy is Germany and that we must bring our forces and our power against Hitler at the earliest possible moment. I can assure you that this will be done just as soon as is humanly possible to arrange for the shipping. In the meantime, more than a thousand tanks will leave this country for Russia in August and other critical supplies, including aircraft, are being expedited.
>
> Believe me when I tell you that we are coming as quickly and as powerfully as possibly we can. Americans understand that Russia is bearing the brunt of the fighting and the casualties this year and we are filled with admiration for the magnificent resistance you are putting up.[32]

The sentiments contained in Roosevelt's communication thus solidified the accord reestablished so painstakingly by Churchill and Stalin over the preceding days. Scholars therefore must look elsewhere for "the first shadows of the Cold War." But they may, in fact, be discernible as early as October, 1942.

Throughout the late summer and early fall of 1942, the German assault on Stalingrad nearly succeeded in capturing that city for the Nazis. To meet the crisis, Stalin made a number of leadership changes; and by October, the struggle had developed into a savage battle of attrition in the streets, buildings, and even the sewers of the city that for Hitler had become an obsession.[33] It was with these events in the background that Stalin had at first been so unrelenting in his demands for a second front in Europe as Churchill arrived in Moscow on August 12, 1942.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In an effort to aid Stalin beyond "merely" invading North Africa, Churchill and Roosevelt proposed establishing an Allied air force in the Caucasus region of the Soviet Union. Under this plan – code named "Velvet" – the Americans would provide heavy bombers, the British medium or light bombers and fighter escorts. Additionally, the arctic shipping convoys to Russia would continue despite the considerable risks involved.[34]

In Stalin's 7 October communication to Roosevelt, however, the Soviet leader made no mention of an Allied air force on Russian soil:

> As it is reported, the difficulties in the deliveries arise in the first place from the shortage of tonnage. In order to relieve the tonnage situation, the Soviet Government would be willing to agree to a certain curtailment of the deliveries of American war materials to the Soviet Union. We are willing to discard for the first time being all of the deliveries of tanks, artillery, munitions, pistols, etc. But at the same time we are extremely in need of an increase in the deliveries of pursuit planes of modern type (such as [Bell P-39] "Aircobra") and of securing to us under all conditions of certain other supplies. It should be borne in mind that the [Curtiss P-40] "Kittyhawk" planes do not stand the fight against present German pursuits.
>
> It would be well if the United States would in any case secure the following monthly supplies to us: 500 pursuit planes, from 8,000 to 10,000 trucks, 5,000 tons of aluminum, from 4,000 to 5,000 tons of explosives. In addition, it is essential to secure the delivery within 12 months of 2 million tons of grain (wheat) as well as such quantity as possible of fats, concentrated food and canned meat. We could import a considerable amount of food via Vladivostok by Soviet ships provided the United States agree to cede to the U.S.S.R. at least 20 to 30 ships to reinforce our merchant marine. All of this I already talked over with Mr. Willkie, confident that he will report it to you.
>
> As to the situation at the front you certainly know that during the recent months our situation in the South and especially in the region of Stalingrad has worsened due to the fact that we are short of planes. The Germans have in the South at least a two to one superiority in the air which deprives us of the possibility to cover our troops. The > experience of the war has shown that the bravest armies become helpless if they are not protected from the blows from the air.[35]

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Sometime later Churchill expressed his dismay to Roosevelt in a cable sent on 24 October of the near total absence of substantive correspondence with Moscow since he and the President had last sent their proposals for supplies and air support in the Caucasus two weeks earlier. Indeed, the only reply that the Prime Minister had received was a simple, "Thank you." And in Moscow, Molotov's secretary was neatly deflecting all inquiries by the British Ambassador to Moscow, Sir Archibald Kerr, as to the reasons why.[36]

Roosevelt offered his own explanation to Churchill in the following cable:

> Having come to the conclusion that the Russians do not use speech for the same purposes that we do, I am not unduly disturbed about the responses or lack of them that we have received from Moscow.
>
> I feel very certain that the Russians are going to hold throughout this winter. We must be able to prove to Stalin that we have carried out obligations one hundred per cent and we must therefore proceed vigorously with our plans for supplying them and for setting up an air force to fight on their front.
>
> Nothing has been heard here about difficulties in arrangements for landing fields on the Caucasus front but I shall explore this immediately from this end.[37]

V
Stalingrad, October-November 1942

Just as Roosevelt predicted, the Russians did "hold throughout this winter." In fact, all throughout the months of October and November, Stalin and his generals had been assembling enormous reserves of men and materiel for massive counterattacks against the flanks north and south of the German Sixth Army then attacking at Stalingrad. The Soviet's aim was nothing less than the encirclement and eventual destruction of that army. Unfortunately for the Germans then locked in their desperate struggle for the city, Hitler had entrusted the defense of Sixth Army's flanks to poorly-led and ill-equipped

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rumanian, Hungarian, and Italian armies. Consequently, as the Russians launched their first counteroffensive in the north on 19 November 1942, it was the Rumanians who took the brunt of the Soviet assaults. Within twenty-four hours, 65,000 Rumanian soldiers had been taken prisoner.[38]

On 20 November, the Soviets attacked in the south and there Rumanians, Hungarians, and Italians all retreated before the Russian onslaught. By 22 November, the Russian pincers had slammed shut at the city of Kalach on the Don River and sealed the fate of the 250,000 men of Sixth Army now trapped in Stalingrad. In response to the catastrophe, Hitler broadcast an order to "Hold on!" and flew to his headquarters at Rastenberg in East Prussia to take "personal command of his encircled army.[39]

Referring specifically to those critical months of October and November, 1942, award-winning author Robert Sherwood later identified that period for future generations as the time when the Soviet Union began once again to distance itself politically and militarily from its British and American wartime allies – and to pursue foreign policy strategies that led ultimately to the Cold War:

> The mysterious silence out of Moscow at that time was not due, as some alarmed authorities (not including Roosevelt or Churchill) then feared, to the possibility of a separate, negotiated Russo-German peace; it was the direct result of the historic circumstance of improvement in the situation at Stalingrad. The need for immediate help became less desperate day by day and the Russians never did agree to the project for a British-American air force in the Caucasus.[40]

VI
General James Burns's Memorandum

1 December 1942

But despite the "mysterious silence" from Moscow, the long, brutal, and costly struggle against the Axis powers remained. With the Allies' common goal of defeating

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Germany, Italy, and Japan in mind, General James H. Burns drafted a memorandum for Hopkins that offered the United States a blueprint for future relations with the Soviet Union. The document is remarkable not only because it so closely paralleled Hopkins's own views regarding Allied strategy for winning the war, but also for its piercing assessment of the relative importance of Russia to the United States in the postwar world:

> 1. There is nothing new or original in this paper. It is simply a summary of what is believed to be the consensus of best ideas.
> 2. We not only need Russia as a powerful fighting ally in order to defeat Germany but eventually we will need her in a similar role to defeat Japan. And finally, we need her as a real friend and customer in the post-war world.
> 3. With reference to the importance of Russia in the defeat of Germany.
> No arguments are necessary. She is as essential as the United Kingdom and the United States.
> 4. With reference to the importance of Russia in the defeat of Japan.
> It is generally conceded that the "step-by-step" plan for reaching Tokyo by way of the Pacific Islands must be supplemented by large scale bombing attacks based upon Asia which will have as their target the very heart of the Japanese Empire and the source of its strength.
> This will require very substantial ground forces for the defense of bases, and in addition a large air force, together with its personnel, its ground installations, its planes, its gas, its spare parts, its ammunition and all other supplies. An operating force of 1000 bombers requires approximately 200,000 tons of supplies per month. This strength can hardly be placed in Asia without the assistance of Russia.
> Even though we captured Burma, the capacity of the Burma Road is relatively negligible – perhaps 25,000 tons per month – and could not be made substantial for many, many months.
> We could take into Asia only a negligible quantity of men and supplies by way of the Persian Gulf and the circuitous route to China to the north of the Himalayas – perhaps 10-20,000 tons per month. Of course, its capacity could be greatly increased but its maximum probabilities are not great. Even this route goes through Russia.
> We can hardly hope to reach the Chinese coast without the capture of Singapore and other strong points in that region and such capture may be beyond our capabilities for a long time to come.
> However, if Russia would join with us, we would not only have the forces to help us but in addition, we could move men and supplies to Russia and through Russia to the eastward by way of the Trans-Siberian Railway to Eastern Asia. Furthermore we could move some supplies – certainly planes and perhaps some ships – by way of Alaska and Siberia.
> In other words, with Russia as an active and powerful ally, we should be able to bomb Japan effectively in the not too distant future. Without her, the time factor may be much longer. And we must remember that each month of this war will cost us many lives and billions of treasure.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Even though we cannot obtain the help of Russia as an active ally against Japan, it would be of great importance if she would assist us in getting men and supplies into China.

5. If it is accepted Russian help is necessary to defeat both Germany and Japan, it is conversely true that the defeat of Russia by one or both of these countries might prevent us from defeating either Germany or Japan.

Such a defeat might occur if we do not help Russia to the limit, for her war with Germany has deprived her of a great part of her population, of her raw materials, of her industries, of her transportation, of her reserves, and of her food lands.

Such a defeat might also occur if Japan should now join Germany in the war on Russia. It seems therefore that it would be much more advantageous to our cause if a Russo-Japanese war could be postponed until Germany is defeated.

6. With reference to our need for Russia as a real friend and customer in the post-war period.

If the Allies are victorious, Russia will be one of the three most powerful countries in the world. For the future peace of the world, we should be real friends so that we can help shape world events in such a way as to provide security and prosperity.

Furthermore, Russia's post-war needs for the products of America will simply be overwhelming. She must not only rehabilitate her war losses in homes, industries, raw materials and farms, but she must provide the resources for the inevitable advances in her standards of living that will result from the war.

7. From the above, it seems evident that Soviet relationships are the most important to us of all countries, excepting only the United Kingdom. It seems also evident that we must be so helpful and friendly to her that she will not only battle through to the defeat of Germany and also give vital assistance in the defeat of Japan, but in addition willingly join with us in establishing a sound peace and mutually beneficial relations in the post-war world.

8. Suggestions for improving relationships.

(a) Arrange for a conference between the President and Mr. Stalin at some appropriate time and place.

(b) Establish a better spirit of "Comrades-in-Arms" by sending General Marshall, Admiral King and General Arnold or other appropriate military representatives to confer with corresponding Russian officials in Moscow or some other appropriate location and to discuss freely our plans, our capabilities and our limitations.

(c) Do everything possible in a generous but not lavish way to help Russia by sending supplies to the limit of shipping possibilities and by sending forces to Russia to join with her in the fight against Germany.

(d) If at all feasible, arrange with Britain and Russia for an attack on Narvik and the Northern Norway Coast to open up the Northern Supply Route to Russia and to deprive Germany of Swedish iron ore.

(e) Send to Russia an ambassador of top rank as to national standing, vision, ability and willingness to serve the country first.

(f) In general, treat Russia as one of the three foremost powers in the world.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(g) Establish the general policy throughout all U.S. departments and agencies that Russia must be considered as a real friend and be treated accordingly and that personnel must be assigned to Russian contacts that are loyal to this concept.

(h) Work to the general plan of assisting Russia to defeat Germany, of postponing a war between Japan and Russia until Germany is defeated, and of seeking Russian assistance at the proper time as an ally in the war with Japan. If this last cannot be achieved, then strive to obtain her agreement to assist in the transportation of supplies into China.

(i) Offer Russia very substantial credits on easy terms to finance her post-war rehabilitation and expansion.

(j) Agree to assist, in every proper and friendly way, to formulate a peace that will meet Russia's legitimate aspirations.[41]

Endnotes

[1] Michael J. Lyons, World War II: A Short History, 4 ed. (Upper Saddle River, NJ: Pearson Prentice Hall, 2004), 193.
[2] David M. Kennedy, Freedom From Fear: The American People in Depression and War, 1929-1945 (New York: Oxford University Press, 1999), 580.
[3] Martin Gilbert, The Second World War: A Complete Story (New York: Henry Holt and Co., 1989; Holt Paperbacks, 2004), 348-49.
[4] Robert Goralski, World War II Almanac: 1931-1945 (New York: G.P. Putnam's Sons, 1981), 414.
[5] Memorandum for Hon. Harry Hopkins, General Marshall, and Admiral King, Subject: Instructions for London Conference, July 1942, 16 July 42; quoted in Winston S. Churchill, The Second World War, 6 vols. (Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1948-53), 4:441-444; Robert E. Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins: An Intimate History (New York: Harper Brothers, 1948), 603-605.
[6] Churchill, Second World War, 4:440-48.
[7] Stalin, Moscow, to Churchill, 23 July 1942; quoted in Churchill, Second World War, 4:270-71.
[8] Stalin, Moscow, to Churchill, 31 July 1942; quoted in Churchill, Second World War, 4:454; Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 616.
[9] Roosevelt, Washington, D.C., to Churchill, 29 July 1942; quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 616.
[10] Churchill, Second World War, 4:475.
[11] Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 617.
[12] Churchill, Second World War, 480-81.
[13] Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 617-18. With regard to Stalin's sudden outburst, the author notes: "The translation of this remark, as given by Churchill to Roosevelt, was: "May God prosper this undertaking!" See also Churchill, Second World War, 4:481.
[14] Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 618; Churchill, Second World War, 4:482.
[15] Roosevelt, Washington, D.C., to Churchill, 12 August 1942; quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 618.
[16] Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 618-19; Churchill, Second World War, 4:484-85.
[17] Quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 619-620.
[18] Quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 620.
[19] Quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 620. See also Churchill, Second World War, 4:486.
[20] Quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 620.
[21] Quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 620.
[22] Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 621.
[23] Quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 620.
[24] Harriman, Moscow, to Roosevelt, 15 August 1942; quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 621.
[25] Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 621; Churchill, Second World War, 4:492-94.
[26] Churchill, Second World War, 4:495-96. See also Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 621.
[27] Quoted in Churchill, Second World War, 4:496.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

[28] Churchill, Second World War, 4:496-497, 499. Churchill's wry sense of humor was much in evidence on this occasion. As he recalled it: "I turned the talk on to Molotov. 'Was the Marshal aware that his Foreign Secretary on his recent visit to Washington had said he was determined to pay a visit to New York entirely by himself, and that the delay in his return was not due to any defect in the aeroplane, but because he was off on his own?' Although almost anything can be said in fun at a Russian dinner, Molotov looked rather serious at this. But Stalin's face lit with merriment as he said: 'It was not to New York he went. He went to Chicago, where the other gangsters live.'"
[29] Quoted in Churchill, Second World War, 4:500.
[30] Churchill, Teheran, to Stalin, 16 August 1942; quoted in Churchill, Second World War, 4:500-01.
[31] Churchill, Teheran, to War Cabinet and Roosevelt, 16 August 1942; quoted in Churchill, Second World War, 4:502.
[32] Roosevelt, Washington, D.C., to Stalin, 18 August 1942; quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 622.
[33] Lyons, World War II, 184-85.
[34] Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 638-39.
[35] Stalin, Moscow, to Roosevelt, 7 October 1942; quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 639-40.
[36] Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 640.
[37] Roosevelt, Washington, D.C., to Churchill, 27 October 1942; reproduced in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 641.
[38] Gilbert, Second World War, 381.
[39] Gilbert, Second World War, 381.
[40] Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 641.
[41] Burns, Washington, D.C., to Hopkins, 1 December 1942; quoted in Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins, 642-43.

VII
Paul Miller's Biography

September 1906 – June 1942

His early life was typical of one of a large family of a struggling Mid-west preacher. Born in the village of Diamond, Missouri, on September 28, 1906, he got his schooling wherever his father, the Rev. James Miller, was assigned as a minister for the small Campbellite denomination.

Oklahoma A. and M. had the nation's best wrestling team but Paul Miller told the world about it as he worked his way through that college as the team's publicity man. He also found time to play a "mean tackle" as he puts it on the football team.

After college he worked on half-a-dozen Oklahoma dailies before joining the AP at Columbus. It was at Columbus that he met the future Mrs. Miller, blue-eyed attractive Louise Johnson, then society editor of the Columbus Dispatch.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The AP office was on the same floor as the Dispatch city room and Miller frequently watched pretty Miss Johnson as she wrinkled her brow while answering letters to the lovelorn.

Even in those days Miller was a go-getter and he decided to give Miss Johnson a real lovelorn problem. He left this note on her typewriter: “What can a lonely newspaperman do in Columbus on his night off?”

A copy boy brought back this reply: “You could take me out tonight.” He did and the next month they were married.

A year after joining the Associated Press at Columbus he was transferred to the foreign news desk in New York.

The next year he was night editor in Kansas City.

In 1936 Miller was given his first executive assignment, Chief of Bureau at Salt Lake City, Utah.

The following year he became Bureau Chief for Pennsylvania and Delaware.

During the 1940 Republican National convention at Philadelphia Miller became intimately acquainted with the late Brian Bell whom he was ultimately to succeed as head of the Washington Bureau. Bell, who died last June, had brought his staff from Washington to cover the convention which was to nominate Wendell L. Willkie for the Presidency.

The youthful Miller and the fast graying Bell sat together in the press section as father and son, the veteran outlining details for covering such a convention with the possible foresight that someday the dynamic young man at his side might succeed him. Bell even explained why two cases of candles had been brought from Washington: “You see, Paul,” he said in his fatherly-sort-of-way, “several years ago the electric power failed at a convention and our men couldn’t get their stories out. We’re not going to be caught that way again.”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In 1941 returned to New York as Executive Assistant to Mr. Cooper.

Then in April, 1941, Cooper called Miller to New York as an Executive assistant and placed him in charge of the newly-created Press Association Inc., which provides feature service to independent organizations and news service to radio stations. He also took charge of the AP membership department and promotion service. When AP purchased World Wide Photo Service from the New York Times Miller was placed in charge and the Photo service was merged with the AP’s special feature service to form the Wide World News Service.

It’s this story that he likes best about his Alma mater. While living in New York City he was a frequent visitor to the University Club. One night a Harvard graduate asked him: “And which is your university Paul, Harvard, Yale or Princeton?”

Miller drawled back: “Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College---and proud of it too.” He recalls there were a few raised eyebrows but he remained a member of the club.

Then in June, 1942, came his appointment to the top Capitol post, Chief of Bureau at Washington.

Only ten years ago Miller joined the AP at Columbus, Ohio, and with a hop, skip and jump has landed in one of the world’s most important news spots.

Now that Washington has become the most important Capitol of the World with Churchills, Molotovs, Kings and Queens coming and going the Chief of Bureau there for the world's largest news gathering organization must be "tops" and Paul Miller, now only 35, is just that as a writer, editor and news executive.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In fact, many newspapermen who have worked with Miller believe that someday he may even become successor to Kent Cooper as General Manager of the Associated Press.[1]

[1] Reproduced from Harold L. Wiand, "A Hop, Skip and Jump---That's the AP's Paul Miller," 1942, in Paul Miller Papers, Special Collections and University Archives, Oklahoma State University Libraries, hereafter PMP, (B3/f39).

VIII
Paul Miller's Diary

June 1942-February 1943

Or is a Foreward [sic] required in a diary? I don't know. I never before started a diary. And I never before wrote anything under the impressive and committing head "Forward."

Yet this diary requires a flash-back, at least. It requires something to bridge the gap between a day in June of 1942 and this wintry day in February of 1943 when I finally am getting around to "keeping a diary." Once the gap is bridged, I have concluded, making a somewhat daily entry should not be so burdensome from now on.

It was, as indicated, a day in June – the 16th, to be exact – when KC suddenly and unexpectedly informed me:

"You know, you are the new Bureau Chief at Washington."

So, inevitably and as naturally as day follows night, we were transferred.

I was delighted. So was Louise. Like Will Rogers, who said he never met a man he didn't like, Louise and I never made a move we didn't like.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Two weeks later I was in Washington and Louise, Ranne and Jean were in Columbus with her family and on June 29, 1942 I wrote KC a letter I had written previously from Kansas City, Salt Lake City, Harrisburg and Philadelphia:

"I went to work here today. Sincerely yours."

The first months here found me concentrating on learning my way about.

I'd never been in Washington previously, except for brief visits. I didn't know where anything was. I didn't know anybody. Impressions swirled around in my brain grewer [sic] brighter or dimmer, gave way to new and better ones . . .

FDR

I met the President in the way of all so-so newcomers: Kirke Simpson and I moved up to his desk after a press conference, picked up the convoy of Steve Early and pushed up to Mr. Roosevelt's chair for a handshake and a glad-to-see-you. Mr. Roosevelt was laughing. He said he'd taken [Secretary of the Treasury] Henry Morgenthau for $45 at poker up home over the weekend; that they were playing at Henry's house so that Henry couldn't make the excuse of having to go home. I marveled at the President's apparent good humor and good appearance amid the trials and red-hot criticism of the time.

Henry Morgenthau

Outside we saw Mr. Morgenthau awaiting an appointment. He looked as gloomy as the President jokingly wanted to make it appear that Henry should look, being out $45. Later I was to learn that Mr. Morgenthau seldom looked precisely jubilant, at least under conditions in which I would see him.

Harold Ickes

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I'd always hated [Secretary of the Interior] Harold Ickes. His ignorant criticism of The Press galled me. He was one of the most horrible of the New Deal's smearers and I never shall forget the utter miserable taste of some of his campaign utterances against men I rated vastly his betters. But meeting him, and seeing him in a press conference, gave me a new impression. I took back nothing I'd thought about him previously. But I did parallel past impressions with a new one of a forthright, gimlet-eyed little battler I could like for all the actions that I felt inexcusable. That night I told Louise: "Of all the people "I've seen up to now, believe it or not, I'll take Harold Ickes . . ." I thought that now I was rationalizing and I fell to explaining to myself that I wasn't.

George Marshall

General Marshall [5 stars, Army Chief of Staff during WW II, later Secretary of State & Secretary of Defense] I soon came to rate the most astute handler of personal public relations in all Washington. It was not long after Pearl Harbor, certainly months before I came here in June of 1942, that a dozen or so top Washington correspondents and commentators, along with representatives of The AP, UP and INS, received invitations to meet the General in his office. He was feeling them out and he was close-mouthed from fear and suspicion and the first such meetings were worth little. Indeed, even by July [1942], when I first was invited in, the General still was afraid to answer many questions and inclined to skirt around most subjects. But he loosened up as he went along and by the time of the invasion of North Africa he was chatting with us as freely as another reporter, even reading messages from General Eisenhower detailing the general's difficulties politically and otherwise – and few of those who came to these conferences had any nominee for Supreme Commander of the United Nations Forces other than

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

General Marshall! The contacts paid the General tremendous dividends otherwise. He sold the Army's point of view so well that I have known Ray Clapper, tops in my book among all the Washington correspondents and commentators, to build two or three columns around a Marshall press conference in the days immediately following one. Everything was off the record. It was OK, however, to merely state the positions and situations as Marshall had given them without any attribution. And many of those who attended the conferences adopted the official (Marshall) view as their own and wrote it as such.

Ernest King

Later, but not much later, Admiral King [5 stars, Fleet Admiral, Chief of Naval Operations during WW II], hated by many as a martinet and regarded by most as a man whose happiness increased in direct ratio to the distance between himself and the nearest newspaperman, sought through the offices of a close friend, Seeley Bull, to do as well for the much-criticized Navy. The Admiral's efforts were not unsuccessful. Many of those who spent evenings with him over a Scotch at Seeley Bull's decided that the Admiral was OK; he was just shy and didn't understand. Mr. Bull told me he fathered the suggestion that Admiral King undertake a personal campaign to improve relations with the Press. The Admiral was doubtful. Mr. Bull spoke of what General Marshall was doing. Later he told me the Admiral said:

"Yes, I know about Marshall. But he has made a lot of enemies, too, among those he doesn't invite." (I never saw more than 20 of Washington's 500-odd newspapermen at one of the meetings with General Marshall.) So it was decided that Mr. Bull would have in not more than eight or ten of us at a time, in his home, and that the Admiral would spend the evening narrating, arguing, bantering. It was an education for the Admiral – and a delight – as it has been for many before him and will be for many yet to come.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Henry Wallace

I was surprised to find myself liking Henry Wallace [Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of Commerce, Vice President of the United States] – as a friendly conversationalist, that is to say. I did not immediately make up my mind about Wallace the Vice President. I did decide at once that he was an interesting character and a personality of many facets. I first called on him months after I came to Washington. Before the call, I had shaken his hand a time or two at dinner parties. I wanted to ask him to do a by-liner for us which we might use in the daily wire column "Today on the Home Front." A piece about simple diets. The idea had occurred to me while reading someplace that Wallace was a nut on odd diets made up of simple foods. He wouldn't go for it. He said he had been talking too much of late, he feared. I told him I would come back and see him with the same suggestion later. He looked tired although it was only 11 a.m. South American and/or Mexican trappings adorned (or littered) his desk and office. Woven baskets. I asked him about the reports that he exercises violently and he grinned. He had played two sets of tennis before setting out for his office from the Wardman Park that very morning. And he had walked all the way across town – a distance, I'd say, of at least 3 miles. As a fellow who really enjoys walking only when it's on a golf course, I was impressed.

Jesse Jones/Donald Nelson

Irving Perlmeter [Assistant Press Secretary in the White House Office, December, 1950-January, 1953], the best financial reporter on our staff and a man with varied contacts including a closeness to Jesse Jones [head of Reconstruction Finance Corporation (RFC), 1932-1945; United States Secretary of Commerce, 1940-1945], turned in an interesting memorandum. Jones was compalining [sic] about Donald Nelson [director of priorities of the United States Office of Production Management, 1941-1942; chairman of the War Production Board, 1942-1944]. "It's all right for a man to do some billy-goating," Jones had said. "But he ought not to be going to New York to do that twice a week. Leastwise, he ought not to be going that often when he was trying to run WPB." Jones always harped on that point about Nelson. Months later, when Nelson wound up in another "crisis" at WPB and fired [Ferdinand] Eberstadt [chairman of the Army and Navy Munitions Board; vice chairman of the War Production Board], Jones told Perlmeter he'd advised Nelson to take a vacation. "He needs some time off for billy-goating anyway," Jones explained.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

IX
Overview: Paul Miller's Confidential Files

March 1943 – March 1946

For the remainder of the war, American journalist, Paul Miller, maintained a chronological record that offers considerable insight into the gradual decline in relations between the Soviet Union and the United States as those relations developed from March, 1943 to March, 1946. And while Miller's files provide information on a wide variety of topics of interest to students of the Second World War, perhaps the most interesting material relates to the extent to which America's leaders were able to pursue the recommendations outlined in Burns's memorandum to Hopkins. For as the war drew to a close in the summer of 1945, it became clear to most American observers that the cooperative wartime relationship between the two powers that had existed before the © 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Russian victory at Stalingrad had subsequently deteriorated into one of mutual suspicion and self-interest at the expense of postwar harmony.

Two months prior to Churchill's difficult meetings with Stalin in August of 1942, Associated Press general manager, Kent Cooper, had named Miller, then his executive assistant, to head the A.P.'s Washington, D.C. bureau. Not long after assuming his duties in the capital of a nation then engulfed in a world war, Miller began to assemble files of confidential memoranda that he prepared from off-the-record meetings with several of the nation's top military and political figures, in particular, General George C. Marshall and Admiral Ernest J. King. Other notable figures who provided Miller with confidential information included Churchill; Roosevelt; Wendell Willkie; Secretary of the Navy, Frank Knox; Commander of the China-Burma-India Theater, General Joseph W. Stilwell; Chairman of the War Production Board, Donald M. Nelson; former Secretary of War and one of Roosevelt's personal overseas representatives, Major General Pat Hurley; Ambassador to the Soviet Union, Averell Harriman; Assistant Secretary of War, John J. McCloy; Supreme Commander of Allied Forces in the Southwest Pacific Area, General Douglas MacArthur; Secretary of State Edward R. Stettinius, Jr.; Commander of the Far East Air Forces, Lieutenant General George C. Kenney, and President Harry Truman; Arranged chronologically for the three years from March, 1943 to March, 1946, the files contain a great deal of information regarding both America's military strategy during the last half of the war and its leader's visions for the postwar world. The files also reveal the thoughts and feelings of men who, while they had learned from long experience with the public to guard their remarks, nevertheless often expressed themselves freely during their off-the record briefings to the select group of newspaper correspondents of whom © 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Miller was one. Finally, the files expose many of the ideological fault lines between East and West that surfaced during the war and that strained postwar relations between the Soviet Union, Great Britain and the United States.

X
Paul Miller's Confidential Files

March-June, 1943

1. (B3/f34)
[24 March 1943]

CONFIDENTIAL

AJG: (PLs show to LS)

You've seen our stories, of course, that American pilots fly Churchill's private plane. They are here now, having flown [Sir Anthony] Eden [Great Britain's Foreign Secretary during WW II, later Prime Minister, 1955-57] over. The British Embassy and Consolidated (which builds [B-24] Liberators) got up a little luncheon yesterday for one of the pilots, Jack Ruggles. He is a San Francisco boy. Has a wife and child. He was in the R.A.F. Ferrying Command when picked for his special job. Everything was, of course, "off the Record," but some of it will be interesting to you and possibly even helpful.

Ruggles says the present plane, "The Commando," doesn't even have shatter-proof glass or self-sealing fuel tanks, among many sacrifices made to save weight in order to save capacity for the stove, refrigerator, etc., etc., Churchill has to have. BUT, most secret, complete new arrangements are being made. In other words, I take it a bigger and better job is coming up now for Churchill's personal use.

Churchill isn't a heavy drinker; constant is the word. He clambers about the plane with a cigar in one hand and a glass in the other. When he's riding [as in horses], as he frequently does, with Pilots Ruggles and Van Der Kloot, his aide keeps handing him a new, fresh glass.

On all flights goes a sufficient stock of Black Label; also cordials, sauterne, etc. Churchill takes his private physician, his aide, his private secretary, two stenographers and a body-guard.

Besides being an American-made plane, it has much American equipment. Two Simmons beds, for example.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Churchill sleeps about 4 or 5 hours a night.

After the return from Moscow, Van Der Kloot and Ruggles were told they'd done a good job, so could have two weeks off. They flew the milk route (London to Newfoundland) and so to their normal base, Montreal. Ruggles picked up his wife and child and went to San Francisco to see his family. Three days later came a telegram that he was to report in London a couple of days later and adding that plane reservation already had been made out of San Francisco for Montreal. He arrived in London – and found he was brought back for a week-end with Churchill at Churchill's country place, along with Van Der Kloot, Harold Balfour [First World War Flying Ace, later British Under Secretary for Air] and wife, John Martin (Churchill's private secretary) and wife.

Churchill took great pleasure in showing them around his place. He pointed out one building he said was put up in 1486. "Gosh," said Ruggles, "that's before Columbus discovered America." "Yes," Churchill said, "that was before Columbus' Great Indiscretion."

They had a big dinner and then sat around. Cocktails before dinner. Sauterne with Port and coffee. Then no intermission and bingo, there's the Black Label. After a little, Churchill said the Head WAAF was inspecting new WAAF barracks put up at a regular Army camp. She turned to the General showing her about and said, "There seems to be everything but a dining room." "Oh," the General explained, "the WAAFs will mess with the soldiers." The Head WAAF looked puzzled. "I know that," she said then, "but where will they eat?"

Whereupon Mrs. Churchill, as if at a signal, departed the room.

Churchill has a former fencing room fitted up for movies, sound effects and everything. They trooped in there, meantime noting that every time the Johnny Walker situation was represented by anything other than a full glass, someone showed up with a refill.

Van Der Kloot wasn't drinking, but Ruggles was. And so was "The Boss," as they invariably call Churchill. After the movie, Churchill reappeared in pajamas and a small cap [Josef] Stalin gave him perched over his forehead. As Ruggles tells it, he was "shooting off my big face" by then and Churchill was holding up his end. Ruggles threw in a remark that it was a hell of a note the way England treats her colonies and did Mr. Churchill expect to see Ghandi [sic] any time soon.

Churchill was walking up and down in front of a huge fireplace, his false teeth slipping a bit so that he whistled a little as he talked. He turned around and shook his fist at Ruggles. "See him! That miserable little miscreant is in the only place I'll ever see him, right now – in jail!"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Yeh, says Ruggles, but if it weren't for Russia, where would England be right now?

What Churchill replied to that was rivaled only by what he caught from Van Der Kloot (who is, practically, Ruggles' superior) next day. But the essence of Churchill's tirade, he says, was that "you can have Russia. And Uncle Joe [Stalin], too."

Weeks later Churchill handed Ruggles a clipping. It turned out to be an A. P. Herbert poem, the burden of which was that there are many shouting for a second front today; but where were these same second-fronters when tiny, muddled Britain was standing off the Nazis alone!

PM
March 24, 1943

2. (B3/f34)

STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL April 5, 1943

AJG:

There was another little social gathering with Admiral King last night, others on deck being Lew Wood of the New York Times, Joe Harsch of the Christian Science Monitor, Pete Brandt of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Lyle Wilson of United Press, Marc Foote of the Booth papers, Bob Sherrod [a future Pulitzer Prize winner] of Time and myself.

Another Casablanca is coming up around the end of June or First of July. He didn't even hint as to where the conference might be. Nor whether there is any hope of getting Russia in this time. He did say "Uncle Joe" still is playing a lone hand – and doing all right. [In fact, it ended up at Tehran, Iran, was held in November-December 1943, and Stalin did attend.]

He says MacArthur has plenty of naval strength, if he knew how to use it. Says MacArthur doesn't know how to use a navy. Somebody said MacArthur didn't have any, and King said yes, he had all he should need. King says Australia is one of nine fronts and therefore the complaints from there and calls for more personnel and equipment is a manifestation of "localitis" (King's favorite term) which can be expected but need not be a matter for concern. He thinks going up from Australia in fighting back at Japan is the wrong way, anyhow; the assault ought to be frontal, says he. Better still, we ought to find ways to get the Chinese manpower applied against the Japs, as the Russian manpower is applied against the Germans. He seems to think, incidentally, that if Russia is well supplied, Russia can do the main, big job against the germans [sic].

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

3. (B3/f34)
May 18, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

Mr. Cooper:

Mr. Eugene Meyer [publisher of the Washington Post] had several of us at his home last night with General Stilwell. The general proved a willing and able talker. Highlights follow:

General Chiang is a very cautious ruler whose lot is with Chinese money interests and who proposes to stay on top. One way of staying on top is to bat down anyone who starts coming up. This accounts for a great deal of General Stilwell's difficulties in obtaining Chiang's generals and troops for training. Stilwell said it took him five months to persuade Chiang to make available the man Stillwell still regards as the best of the Chinese generals. The reason is that the Chinese troops Stilwell is training in India are being trained for the specific purpose of retaking Burma. Stilwell suspects that Chiang thinks a victorious Chinese general could return home from Burma and do anything he wanted to do at the head of those ably trained troops.

The Chinese Communists seem to me to have Stilwell's sympathy also. However, he has given them no aid and he doubts they are receiving anything from Russia. He says a Chinese Communist is a guy who thinks taxes should not be more than he can bear and that interest on loans should not exceed 10 per cent per month! Guys who feel that way in China, says Stilwell, are regarded as trouble-makers.

Stilwell doubts whether, unless there is a change in top thinking, we will get any British help in China. This despite the fact that there are huge, fairly good Indian forces that could be made available. He says any suggestion that the well-trained British troops in India be used with the Chinese is greeted by the plea that the U.S. will have to supply astronomical supplies of jeeps, trucks, small guns, etc., etc., before the British could move.

Stilwell doesn't look for us to get any help from Russia either. However, and I never heard this before, we're getting very real help from Russia through sheer force of defensive circumstances, e.g., Stilwell says Japan has her top troops, some 22 divisions, tied up in Manchukuo, balancing a like number of Russian troops on the Russian border. He says American troops haven't seen any of the top Japanese forces except in the air. His belief is that if and when the Americans and the Chinese are able to drive Japan from China, batting out their brains in the process, Russia will move in – but not until then.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Stilwell says we never will lick Japan without big-scale fighting in China. He says talk of bombing from Siberia and even Vladivostok is just plain talk. He says, for one thing, even if we got permission to get our air forces into Vladivostok, which he doubts, and if we bombed from there, the Japanese reaction would be so violent against Vladivostok that he thinks the Russians would immediately run us out.

The general was asked how long the war with Japan would last. He just laughed."

"Years and years, and more years."

PM

4. (B3/f 34)

June 9, 1943

PM:

General Marshall held an off-record conference June 8. Just returned from North Africa where he accompanied Churchill, he appeared in excellent spirits. A summary:

Is there a chance of a German crack-up in 1943? Sometimes these situations crack very fast once they have started. Witness North Africa and Germany in the summer of 1918, after a tremendous spring offensive. – General Patton lost every one of eight bets on North African mop-up. Three main factors in this question: (1) that the Russians hold when the attack comes that's been expected any day – I believe they will although I hate to say that because when I've said before they would NOT hold, they have – and can counter-attack in September instead of later in the winter; (2) that the air pounding from England keeps growing, and (3) that Italy collapses.

As to the first, we still don't know what the Russian plans are; they won't even give us German troop dispositions on the front which would help a great deal. I was to have gone from Casablanca to Moscow, but Stalin said he didn't want to see me; guess he's been having too many visitors asking questions – visitors are a lot of bother when you've a war to fight. We do know that Russia will fight. And they're getting more factories into production; they now tell us there are some things we've been sending that aren't needed any more. When Germany is defeated, Russia will have to attack Japan. She can't make a deal with either one because they won't keep their agreements and she can't have those Jap armies on her back door. I'm just as glad I didn't go. I didn't want any mission to Moscow; I'd have asked some questions and demanded some answers – the way to deal with those fellows is to be as tough as they are.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(2) The air attack from England is going up. At the end of March we had 300 big bombers over there – it takes six weeks or at the least a month of training over there prior to operations. That meant we couldn't put more than 150 in the air at a time. At the end of May, we had 700 there; there'll be 1,250 by September. Daylight bombing is terrifically destructive. Only the best German pilots will go into one of these formations; they were pulled in for the job and it gave us air superiority over North Africa and on the Russian front – the Russians appreciated this. When we send over two large groups of big bombers, the Germans sometimes have been able to attack only one. Think what that means when we can send over half a dozen groups. The day we lost 15 bombers, on one mission, another wasn't even touched. The British will increase their night bombing too, but not as rapidly as we are going up.

(3) The Italian collapse isn't going to come from Houdini waving a wand. Are there a million Allied troops in North Africa? Well, there are a good many. And they are in hard training? Yes. Will a German surrender come from air bombing alone? Put me down as saying land troops are absolutely necessary to a German defeat.

I hope the press will hit hard at this propaganda against bombing that is being thrown at us. Saw a story from the Vatican about some truck driver being shot up. What nonsense! Remember what those fellows have done. We've got to be tougher than they are to whip them.

The troops in North Africa are developing into fine, tough outfits. They're outgrowing that period of believing as soon as the fighting is over here we'll go home, and getting the attitude of veterans, that we're in it to the finish. I went over with Prime Minister Churchill, flying from Newfoundland to Gibralter [sic] and then on to Algiers. The day after Churchill's arrival in Gibraltar, the Germans broadcast he was there. Visited troops and conferred with Eisenhower and British Commanders; gave Eisenhower some support in some discussions. Admiral [Commander-in-Chief, Mediterranean Fleet, Andrew] Cunningham is a great fighter, is worshipped by the Navy Personnel and backs Eisenhower to the hilt. He's a great source of strength to us.

Glad I didn't have to get into any political discussions. [General Henri] Giraud is a straightforward General, who doesn't know anything about politics and only wants to get along with the job. I formed my opinion of [Charles] DeGaulle [sic] in London; he wrote a book at the right time. There are a lot of people around him who are pulling this way and that for certain interests. Giraud is the simon-pure soldier. [General Albert Julien Georges] Catroux is well thought of and so is General [Alphonse Joseph] Georges, who has just come out. There is a growing feeling all sides that [Pierre Francois] Boisson is the strongest man of the lot. The French troops fought well, even with old equipment. We'd been training some with new equipment but they didn't show a great deal of interest until we began to unload the new stuff for their use. Getting it has made a big difference in the morale of fellows who for three years have felt they were licked and couldn't do anything to help themselves.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Are you going to be supreme commander of any invasion force? Well, saw in the paper that [Army Air Forces General Joseph Taggart] McNarney went to the White House the other day, and that meant he was going to get my job. I went today so I guess that puts him out again. I suppose fellows have to make a living writing . . . . . what McNarney actually went there for was to supply some information on planes on this pressure campaign [Herbert Vere] Evatt is always throwing up around here. The way to win a war is to hold and concentrate your knock-out punch, not to scatter your strength.

As the result of studies which were wound up on the basis of experience in North Africa, and assuming that the Russians hold, we're going to concentrate on training rather than continued expansion. Starting in August, we'll cut the draft take from 285,000 to 150,000 a month (Marshall was vague on figures; Selective Service says it's taking 300,000 a month, a figure which would include Navy and Marines). We'll put over into 1944 the 12 divisions that were going to be formed from August to January. Then we can revalue the situation on the basis of the Russian Army. This would mean taking 500,000 to 700,000 fewer men – the figures haven't been worked out finally. (CM checking) There's always the problem of ballooning your expansion so that your fine commissioned and non-com personnel is spread too thin; that's been a problem of the India Army. We'll canibalize [sic] our organizational units. With a fine Russian Army in the field, we won't be needing as many divisions. At the start we thought Russia would be knocked out and we'd planned more than twice as many. Either we had to do that or say we could not win and compromise. We've never said that.

The Japs have picked up three of our ships that were transferred to the Russian Flag. Don't know what has happened to them.

- - - - - - -

General Marshall gave the impression, without direct answers, that he expects to continue as Chief of Staff. Linked to the stress on bombing damage to Germany, is the impression that amphibious operations will be directed this summer against Italian territory. As the victorious commander in North Africa, that would seem to spell Eisenhower's continuance in charge of operations from that springboard.

WLB – 6/9/43

XI
Paul Miller's Confidential Files

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

5. (B3/f35)

August 17, 1943

Confidential

Dear Mr. Cooper:

Admiral King met again with a few newspapermen here while I was out of town on vacation. The host kindly had an extensive set of notes copied for me and I am letting his lengthy memorandum follow in full, since he says it was by far the most informative of these secret sessions:

CONFIDENTIAL

Monday
July 26, 1943.

Last evening at Alexandria we had the sixth off-the-record seminar with Admiral King. Present were Ray Henle of the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, Turner Catledge of the New York Times, Marquis Childs of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Felix Belair of Time Magazine, Glen Perry of the New York Sun, and myself. It was the most interesting meeting we have yet had with the Admiral.

To begin with, naturally, we talked about the Italian situation. King has not changed his position that Italy is a liability and a hindrance to Germany, and that she will be one to us. He said, when I asked him whether he thought Hitler might have cut Italy loose, that he had been thinking along those lines himself.

He believes that there are 60,000 to 70,000 German troops in Sicily, and he figures they will all fall into our hands. Admiral Cunningham, he pointed out, controls the straits of Messina, and they can't get away. As for the German troops in Italy, he suggested that they could find the way to get out of Italy if that country, as seems probably [sic], collapses. He added that we could use north Italian air fields to bomb southern Germany, Austria, the Skoda works in Czechoslovakia, etc., if we could establish ourselves there, but that as far as land operations are concerned we would bump into the Alps, an almost impassable barrier. On the other side of the picture, Italy has some twenty divisions in the Balkans, and if they are pulled out Germany will either have to replace them, which will weaken the war against Russia, or get out.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Stalin, he pointed out, is a very smart fellow, and he is working for Russia all the time. He is playing a lone hand, and has never subscribed to the Atlantic Charter, unconditional surrender, or the United Nations. King, I believe, is in error on this as far as the record goes, as I think Molotov signed the United Nations declaration. But spiritually, he is dead right, of course.

Stalin, King feels, is much too smart to want to take over Europe, for it would only be laying up future troubles for his country in trying to control unruly subjects, just as Germany laid up trouble for herself. He believes Russia will take the Baltic states and part of Poland, but will be willing out of a realistic appraisal of the situation to draw a north-south line from occupied Poland down to the Black Sea.

Russia he went on, has always been concerned about a warm-weather outlet to the sea, and in this the Bosporus has always figured, leading to international alliances, and to wars. He said a British acquaintance of his, a naval officer, recently remarked that the Bosporus was essentially a canal, and as such ought to be internationalized like the Suez Canal. King regards this as most significant, since Britain has always stood against free use of the Bosporus and its control by all nations. King went on to say that by getting Esthonia [sic], Lithuania, and Latvia, Russia would get to the Baltic all right, but would still have to face the fact that the Kattegat and the Skaggerack [sic]also constitute a canal, in Swedish and Danish hands. He suggested that this waterway too be internationalized. This, in his opinion, would give Russia what it wants and thus work toward a lasting era of peace.

While on the subject of Russia, he referred once more to the basic strategy for Europe. He admitted it was over-simplifying it to say that it was to utilize Russia's geographical position on her manpower against Germany, but that this was still the essential plan. Hence strategy calls for getting everything possible into Russian hands to fight the Germans, and at the same time create the maximum diversions elsewhere to siphon off German strength.

However, Russia is very close-mouthed. We do not know right now just how strong she is, what reserves she has, how well she is equipped to attack the Germans. Our observers are still not being permitted to observe anything. The same thing is rue in the Pacific. However, as far as Europe is concerned, King expects the picture to be much clarified in the coming month, and believes we will pretty much be able to add the thing up at that time.

Eisenhower, he said, has three alternative plans for future operations. The Italian collapse, however, took us by surprise. We were prepared to fight, and our plans to do so are now suddenly negated. However, I gathered that we plan to pick up all Mediterranean islands and the southern part of Italy, thus spreading the threat to Germany, and go on from there. We are not in a position to mount any offensive from England, and won't be for some time.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Regarding the Atlantic and the U-boat situation: Sinkings of U-boats in July will be as good as May, which is excellent news. On the other hand, sinkings by U-boats will be three times as much as in June. June was the all-time low, and July sinkings are well under those of last March, but the change shows how the battle can and does fluctuate. King said the auxiliary carriers had helped an awful lot, although the escort ships are the real killers. The Germans, when we get strength in a place where they are operating, move to greener pastures, and it takes a little while for us to catch up. But we're doing a swell job on the U-boats.

At the present time, he said, the British and American air forces in England are being beefed up plenty. A tremendous force is being built up. He estimates that the Ruhr has been knocked out between 20 and 40 per cent, but he does not think Germany can be bombed out. Too much of their industry has gone underground, and too much has been pulled out of bombing range.

To get back to the Pacific, King is very much puzzled by Japan's failure to attack Russia. She can never feel secure while Russia holds the maritime provinces, and her attack would help Germany. She has plenty of troops in Manchuokuo [sic] with which to attack, yet has not done so. King can't figure it out.

In this connection, he revealed that Russia is operating about a hundred ships between our northwestern ports and Vladivostok, which means the ships must go through the Sea of Japan. Of these, fifty are American Liberty ships given to Russia under lend-lease. They are, of course, manned by Russian crews and they carry cargoes that can be called unfinished munitions of war only by the greatest stretch of the imagination. The Japs some time ago seized three of these ships on the ground that they were enemy-owned. They did not touch the cargoes, but they kept the ships tied up in Japanese ports until about three weeks ago, when Uncle Joe turned on the heat and the Japs released the vessels.

However, King is afraid that the Japs will wait until there are some fifty of these ships available in the Sea of Japan at the same time – something that can happen because we are putting the stuff on the docks of the Pacific coast faster than the Russians can unload it in Siberia, and hence there is congestion – and then pounce on the lot, picking up something like 500,000 tons of shipping at a time when Japan is badly pinched for shipping tonnage. The motives are clear: to get the shipping, and also the obvious fact that the munitions are either held in Siberia for possible use against Japan or are sent overland to the European front for use against Japan's ally.

What the Russians would do about such a seizure, King doesn't know. He hopes Stalin would go into Japan after them. At which point it developed that we still don't know anything about Russian air installations along the Siberian coast. The only Americans to fly over Siberia were [Wendell] Willkie and his party, and they flew the northern route. They never saw what we are most anxious to know about.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

We have told the Russians that if Japan jumped them, it would take a minimum of three months for us to get any real help to them in Siberia, and maybe four months, if they didn't fill us in on what they had there now, so we could be ready. No dice. We even offered as bait to hold a hundred heavy bombers in readiness to fly to Siberia the minute trouble started. Stalin's answer was "Fine. Give us the bombers now. We can use them." And as you know, the Russians have taken possession of our planes under lend-lease at Fairbanks, Alaska, and fly them home themselves. Our people never get in.

But he is not too pleased with the Pacific situation. United Nations war strength now is being distributed on a basis of 85 per cent against Germany and 15 per cent against Japan. The result is that the Japanese are digging in. He wants to see at least 25 per cent used in the Pacific, or if possible 30. This might somewhat prolong the war in Europe, but over the long run would work out all right because it would enable us to about double our pressure on Japan, force them back, and make it difficult for them to get established. On paper the British have agreed to this, but it is proving difficult to get them to implement it. By and large it appears that the British Members of the Combined Chiefs of Staff appear to want to let the whole Japanese picture slide until Germany is beaten and the European mess settled insofar as fighting is concerned.

King was next asked what happened when the Combined Chiefs of Staff did not agree. Then, he said, the decision was up to FDR and Mr. Churchill. Who won in such cases? Admiral King replied that Mr. Churchill "is a very persuasive talker!" King also paid tribute to Harry Hopkins. Hopkins is, he says, very intelligent and has always been extremely helpful to the Services in the war effort, whatever his political or economic views may be. Hopkins sees the war picture in its true perspective and he always backs up FDR when Mr. Churchill is doing some of his persuasive talking. King likes Churchill very much indeed, although he laughingly said that he always had his hand on his watch when Mr. Churchill was trying to "sell" a point. Mr. Churchill, said King, is first, last and always for the British Empire and you have to always remember that when dealing with him. This, remarked the Admiral, is as it should be and Churchill is respected for it. It is apparent that King has a real and personal fondness for Churchill. When Churchill sees King after a long absence, Churchill always blurts out: "I want an hour with you!", which King says, is always flattering. Churchill, says the Admiral, has really read the books on military strategy whereas FDR has had them read to him. It was here that King volunteered the statement that he thought that Walter Lippman [sic] had done the country a great service in writing the book about our foreign policy. In the Navy's War College, he said, senior officers have to work out our foreign policy and then determine what our military strategy will be and what Naval force will implement it.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

These officers have difficulty in finding out what our foreign policy really is – if, in fact, we do have a foreign policy, and this makes it difficult. Now that we are grown, we had better get a foreign policy and stick to it.

King pointed out – and it is undeniably true – that the thing to do is figure out what you expect your foreign policy to accomplish and then determine what nations this policy will not please. These nations are, therefore, your potential enemies and Naval Power can then be calculated on a more or less known basis.

While still on the subject of Foreign Policy, King said that after this war – and whether we are criticized for imperialism or not – we have got to take over and run the Mandated Islands of the Pacific and this may, perhaps, include the Solomons. For national safety the United States has got to dominate the Pacific. Congress will have to give us the arms and ships to do this job. We are now in a world where the game is for keeps and we have to defend ourselves. It is time we learned this and when we have learned it, it will make for Peace.

The meeting adjourned at midnight.

Sincerely yours,

Chief of Bureau.

6. (B3/f35)

August 28, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC
AJG

General Marshall called in Ben McKelway, Casey Jones, Ray Clapper, Earl Godwin, Duke Shoop, Bob Wood (CBS), David Lawrence, Jim Wright, Fulton Lewis, Lewis B. Wood and a few others the afternoon of August 25, for a secret session.

In this connection, General Marshall told a joke about General Stilwell. Marshall said he was trying to get some disposition made of a second negro air fighter unit (the first is in North Africa), so he sent a message asking Stilwell if he'd take the unit. Stilwell messaged back:

"I'll take anything that will fight."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Marshall said he was somewhat taken back by this, thinking Stilwell was trying to put him on the spot so that Marshall would bear the responsibility if they didn't fight; but, after further exchanges, Marshall said he realized that this simply was Stilwell's point of view and the view he has taken in his terribly difficult situation from the very start.

Marshall said of Russia that the situation remains unchanged. Uncle Joe is fighting his own war – yelling for help in France and meantime, refusing even to let us have a look at Russian-Siberian air bases or to let us know their dimensions. Marshall stoutly insisted that he doesn't fear a Russo-German deal. He says the Russians can't afford to make a deal now. As for the Russian situation on the Siberian bases, he said he could see Uncle Joe's view which is this:

Russia can't fight a two-front war. If Russia even made a move for collaborating with the United States in Siberia, Japan would have to attack Russia.

However, Marshall said he is confident that Russia will jump the Japs along the Siberian border as soon as the German end of the war is won.

General Marshall said he knows Stalin was informed, incidentally, of the Quebec decisions because he (Marshall) drafted a message which Roosevelt and Churchill sent to Stalin the night before the public statement was given out at Quebec. Well, he said, at least I know I drafted a message for them – I don't know what they sent.

We have started a tremendous new movement of air force personnel to England which will give us two crews for every plane. At the same time, we still are moving about 300 bombers into England monthly. The idea of the double personnel is three-fold: (a) it will mean lighter over-all percentage losses at each station, thus, the experts hope, helping maintain morale; (b) it will mean bombers can be kept in the air more and (c) provide more relief time for the airmen.

The General got out the confidential files of the Ploesti raid. They are from secret eyewitnesses and tell a story of major success, an important factor being that civilians suffered relatively no losses and the damage to the [oil]fields really was material. Incidentally, here's the inside reason for our heavy loss in bombers: Through a mixup, the second flight came in 40 minutes late and ran smack into [anti]aircraft fire which by then had had time to organize. The late comers also ran into bursting delayed action bombs.

We are not now sending convoys to Russia by the Northern route; losses were too heavy, worst being 22 out of one 26-ship convoy. Elsewhere in the © 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Atlantic, General Marshall is optimistic about the U-boats. He says, however, he is not sure the battle is won. He says we have some highly secret weapons and the Germans may be just refitting their subs to meet our devices. (Our best guess here is that electronics figure in the devices, whatever they may be, because Censorship has issued a number of notes of late, warning against references to new weapons, etc., in that field).

The question was raised: Does the Army have a color problem?

Marshall was silent a moment. Then he said:

Well, I'll tell you. I know what to do about how to fight the Germans and the Japs, but the negro problem is the biggest one of all. I figure it's just a cross I have to bear. It's a terrible waste, but we have to take them, train them and try to utilize them. We got together an air fighter unit of negroes that might be said to be almost the pick of the race. We sent them to North Africa and I haven't had any report yet on how they are doing. They were in the Pantelleria show.

Here he was interrupted by Ray Clapper, who volunteered that he'd heard, first hand, about this fighter group – and that after losing three or four planes in its first flight over Pantelleria, it was no good.

It was then that General Marshall remarked that a second negro unit had been offered General Stilwell, leading to the reply mentioned earlier in this memorandum.

The General says that in a number of places in the Pacific, the ratio of colored troops now is about 50%, but that they simply can't stand up under tough fighting. He also told of the political pressure in relation to utilization of negroes is a major problem. He spoke especially of a campaign in the negro press. (Later, I learned – not from Marshall – that he has been known to hear from the White House about a negro complaint at some camp or other, even before he hears about it from his own Army channels).

PM

7. (B3/f35)

September 4, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM TO KC:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

There was an off-the-record party today for Mr. Churchill. He answered questions with no holds barred. Highlights:

Q. What do you think are the prospects of Germany breaking this year?

A. It is hard to say. These Germans are frightfully logical. We have no way of knowing when they may turn a few pages in their Blue Book to the section marked "How to Surrender." However, we would be silly to count on it. I can conjure another picture for you and one which must not be put aside – that is, the Germans pulling out of Russia and out of the Balkans – then we have the trapped beast; though trapped they still can lash out much more easily in any direction.

Q. Do you believe a change in Administration in this country would affect the progress of the war or the settlement of the peace?

A. There still is the Declaration of Independence. I hope nobody here will come meddling in our politics; check me out on any meddling here.

Q. Has China made any overtures looking toward the recovery of Hongkong [sic] and, if so, what has been the response?

A. Well, China doesn't hold Hongkong [sic], Japan does. I have said that we British don't want anything new out of this war. I have also said we don't propose to give up anything. And don't forget this: Hongkong [sic] is important only to the extent that the British have made it important, not through the efforts of any one else.

Q. Do you think we are unnecessarily forcing the United States to fight Japan for years because of the policy of trying to whip Germany first?

A. It is useless to deny that Japan is being given the opportunity to dig herself in. Japan already has done so in many places. Furthermore, she has been having rather good luck with some of the peoples she has subjugated – indeed, better luck, I should say, than we have or than you have had. However, you know all of the reasons for trying to run the war as we are running it. And you have had our pledge which I have no hesitation about restating now; namely, that once we have disposed of our enemies in Europe, we British will throw all of our strength at your side in disposing of the common enemy in the Pacific. Meanwhile – make no mistake – powerful forces are being brought to bear in the Pacific even now.

Q. What is the real likelihood of an early meeting of Churchill and Roosevelt with Stalin?

A. For months, I have had in Moscow a standing offer to go any place at any time to meet with Marshall Stalin. I would restate that today but it is true that he is actively directing the Russian war and it can not [sic] be overlooked that the © 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Army in Russia is obtaining an increasingly important position in Russian affairs. We are arranging for a meeting of representatives of the three foreign offices. All the while, we are fighting this war for the best common end and we are taking the position, which I would be glad to argue with Marshall Stalin – or anybody else – that no blood should be shed unless strategically. We are moving only where we believe it wise from the standpoint of military expediency, nowhere for political expediency.

PM

8. (B3/f35)

October 21, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL

KC:

The following were invited to The White House the morning of October 20 for a session which all were pledged not to discuss in any way, the understanding being that the President had decided to talk freely, for background only, with a secret selected group including:

Steve Early [White House Press Secretary under FDR and HST] (who conceived and promoted), George Fielding Elliott, Ray Clapper, Bob Wood, Walter Lippmann, Richard Harkness, Dorothy Thompson, Ben McKelway, Casey Jones, Lyle Wilson, William Neil, Earl Godwin, Ernest Lindley, William Hillman, Anne O'Hare McCormick, Raymond Graham Swing – and Kirke Simpson and myself. The President also had Under Secretary Stettinius, Elmer Davis, Robert Sherwood, General Surles, Captain Lovette and Judge Rosenman.

By pre-direction, we went to the side near the Treasury and were more or less sneaked in. We met the President in his study on the second floor of The White House. The President had [Under Secretary of State, Edward R.] Stettinius sit by his side at his desk. The rest of us occupied easy chairs placed in front of the desk.

FDR looked very tired. His eyes were red when he removed his glasses. He constantly scratched his head, rubbed his face, pulled at his ears. He had to have several questions repeated two or three times before he could hear them. But he laughed heartily, brightened up as the session moved along, and he was dressed smartly and cheerily in a light tan suit, white shirt and tan and blue striped tiw [sic].

I forgot to mention that Falla also was on hand, nosing form feet to feet, sniffing busily to see if he could find any old friends.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The meeting began at 11 A.M. and lasted until a little after 12. Much of it was just talk and rehash, so – having given you the picture – I think I can best sum it up by taking up merely the highlights that seemed to me worthwhile as new insight into Administration thinking and worrying and planning.

3. I never had any idea what a terrific job it would be to mount the cross-channel invasion. (This is about the way he said it. Kirke and I agree that he seemed to be talking in the past tense. We are convinced now that the cross-channel effort may come rather soon.) And it will have to be a major American project. When the British divisions now in England are gone, they're just ain't no more.

4. Why do the Russians keep yipping about a Second Front?* Honest, I don't know; I just don't know. They've been informed all along. We told them in advance about going into Italy. For one thing, I don't believe the Russians realize what a job it is to organize a drive of the magnitude they envisage over a distance of 3,000 miles; they just don't know. Could it be that the Russians are just looking for an alibi? Well it is no secret that such a story is going around – the story that the Russians may be yelling for a second front to build up a case of long pleading as an alibi of record should they turn around, now, and make peace with the Germans. I don't know.

5. The Nazis have 25 or 26 divisions in Italy – more than we have, but we have the air superiority which means we need less strength on the ground. Many of these divisions have been pulled off the Eastern Front.

6. Could the British and ourselves lick the Germans alone if Russia quit? It would be mighty tough, depending on what Germany got from the Russians and where the fighting actually stopped.

9. What good can come of the Moscow conference? I dunno. Hope springs eternal. I still hope we can get together with Stalin (FDR pronounces Stal like Al and in like een). He'll have to come a quarter of the way, though. In ideology, Mr. President? Nope, grinning, in distance. Nothing definite has been arranged. The Moscow meeting will talk about anything and everything. Heretofore, we've had to deal with Russians here who simply can't open their mouths without checking first at Moscow. Now, finally, we are talking at the top – and for the first time.

The President wound up by saying he hoped we could get together again, before too long. Hillman, who worked with Steve Early organizing the thing and hand-picking the list, reminded all and sundry again that the meeting was arranged under a pledge that none would tell anybody anything about it.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PM

* I went by Wendell Willkie's room at the Mayflower last night. He held forth socially and off-record until 1 A.M. with 15 or 20 newspapermen on a catch as catch can basis. He said he could and did see anything he wanted in Russia because Uncle Joe trusted him (Willkie). Not so, however, FDR, said Mr. Willkie, because the Russians don't think they can trust FDR thanks to the fact that FDR solemnly promised, in June, 1942, that a Second Front of Russian specifications would open by or before January, 1943.

Incidentally, Willkie was good on Willkie last night. Examples: (1) What chance have I got for the nomination? Well, who else is there? (2) Two to one I get the nomination!

8. (B3/f35)

Curator's note:

This interview can be dated late November 1943, on the basis of the following news items in the New York Times referring to events mentioned in the report.

1943 Nov 9, 1:3 "[Nelson] has just returned from an official visit to the Soviet Union.

1943 Nov 13, 8:8 Washington predicts resignation of WPB exec vice chm and return to General Elec Co. [Wilson].

1943 Nov 20, 17:7 [Wilson] conf with Byrnes; will remain if Roosevelt insists.

--whp 4ja85

Confidential

KC
AJG

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Sterling Green, Staffer in charge of our War Agencies coverage, gives me the following memorandum:

Notes on off-record dinner given by correspondents for [Chairman, War Production Board, 1942-1944] Donald M. Nelson.

NOT to be used in any form, whether or not attributed to Nelson.

Stalin:

Nelson said his "secret mission" for President Roosevelt was to find out what Russia wanted for post-war rebuilding. He got an "order" for 1 ½ to 2 billion dollars['] worth of railroad and industrial equipment.

He presented to Stalin, and then to President Roosevelt, a plan for taking payment in raw materials to be stockpiled in this country indefinitely, "sterilized" from commercial use, and to be used only when Congress next declares a state of national emergency.

In opening the interview Nelson praised the Red Army. Stalin said they deserved no credit because they were fighting for their homeland. Nelson said their stand was at least, then, a tribute to brilliant leadership. Stalin replied his generals should know their business, because "they already have made every mistake it is possible to make."

Nelson asked what Russia needed to restore the country and bring up the Russian living standard. Stalin was doodling with a pencil as the conversation went on.

Stalin asked whether Russia could get long-term credits. Nelson said "Yes, if you'll pay for it." He suggested a gradually ascending curve of payment, to be made in materials which would replenish this country's badly depleted reserves of critical metals.

Stalin said, "Fine, fine." Then he asked how President Roosevelt would receive the idea. Nelson said he could NOT speak for the President but would present the plan to him as soon as he returned.

As they talked, Nelson noticed that Stalin's doodles turned into figures. Nelson told him he had come to find out what Russia wanted after the war. Stalin read off the columns he had penciled.

The list began with 30,000 kilometers of steel rail (about 5 million tons), 40,000 locomotives (average pre-war U.S. production, about 1,500 a year), and so on into industrial equipment and machinery, all heavy goods.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He asked if the U.S. could supply it. Nelson said: “That’s a small order.”

(Actually, Nelson admitted it would be necessary to convert some other types of plant to locomotives to fill that part of the order.)

In the opening moments of the conversation Nelson explained that he was not a politician. Stalin said: “I don’t like politicians either,” and he smiled. He said he was glad that Nelson was an American businessman, and then added:

“I don’t trust the British.”

(In telling this, Nelson waited until a waiter had left the dining room.)

At another point, before Nelson had explained his plan, Stalin asked how Russia would pay for the equipment; he banged his fist on the desk and said, “Russia always pays her debts.” He added that he meant payment in full – not tokens.

Nelson told Stalin, “You will have to raise the standard of living of the Russian people or your government will not survive.”

Stalin said he agreed that this was true.

Twenty years will be required, Nelson estimated, to rebuild Russia and bring up the Russian living standard. The country now, he said, is like the America of 1849.

Nelson’s plan is to stockpile the exchange imports of oil, manganese, chrome, copper and other resources. The oil could be brought in and put into the ground for storage until needed, in formations which have gone dry. Nelson said it was “a hell of a lot smarter” than stockpiling gold at Fort Knox.

Arrangements would have to be made to arrive at a suitable standard of exchange; and for the “sterilization” of the raw materials, as gold is sterilized.

“You can call it barter if you want, but what the hell would we do with more gold? We’ve tried every possible way to find an industrial use for gold, as we did silver, but we’ve had no success.”

The U.S. government would pay manufacturers for the industrial equipment to be shipped to Russia, taking reimbursement in material from the Soviet.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Nelson said he had no idea on how the arrangements could be made, and no interest in that point; this is for others to do. Other countries besides Russia would pay off in materials, he said.

Embassy in Moscow:

The U.S. embassy in Moscow is in “the most hellish shape imaginable.” Americans said they didn’t go to it because they “weren’t welcome.” He indicated that Admiral [William Harrison] Stanley was to blame for the situation , without saying so.

He said he had heard that General [Philip Ries] Faymonville was yanked from his job as head of the supply mission and demoted to colonel because there was “bad blood” between him and Standley; also that Faymonville had refused to be “a G-2 for the army,” holding that his was a supply mission exclusively. Nelson said he had no real knowledge as to the truth of either report.

But he did say positively that the U.S. correspondents got no help from the embassy; they are NOT permitted to send material in U.S. diplomatic pouches and make a practice of using the British pouches; that they are unable to find out in good time what is going on in the outside world, and get such information from BBC.

“For four days no news got to the embassy at all. Standley had sold the only radio. He said it was all right, because he owned the radio.”

Faymonville got abrupt orders to proceed to Teheran, Iran, there to receive further orders. He did not know he was being relieved of the Moscow post until he got there. At Teheran, he met Averill Harriman, the incoming ambassador. Harriman was horrified and immediately arranged for Faymonville to return to Moscow with him, to make decent farewells.

Nelson said he was convinced Harriman had no knowledge of or part in Faymonville’s removal. The general was immensely popular with the Russians, Nelson said, and seemed eminently fitted for the job.

Nelson stayed at the embassy in the fore part of his Moscow visit, and occasioned some comment by so doing. He was told that no other American of consequence had stayed there.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Molotov:

In a conversation with Molotov Nelson raised the question of the post-war treatment of the German people. Molotov said they should be "re-educated."

"But they have always been ready to follow into war any leader who promised to get them something that belonged to somebody else," Nelson expostulated.

Molotov said he disagreed; the German people had been "poisoned", they should be re-educated, and the job should be done by the United States, England and Russia.

On his return, Nelson unfolded his plan to Roosevelt. He said FDR called it "most interesting."

Roosevelt, incidentally, was keenly interested in Stalin's personality, wanted to know whether he had a sense of humor. The answer, said Nelson, is yes.

(Someone asked Nelson whether his plan was not a frank acknowledgement that he thought there would be another war 20 years or so hence: "Certainly," he replied, "who doesn't?")

[Maxim Maximovich] Litvinoff [sic], said Nelson, appears to be in high repute and told Nelson, with an air of imparting confidential information, that he was in charge of post-war planning!

He said Russian officials, some of them representing labor, were surprised to learn that American labor did not want wage incentive plans for boosting production. Nelson said it took half an hour's explanation to make them understand why. Nelson explained that the managements of many firms opposed pay incentives also; labor for the reason that they boosted productivity standards to "speed-up" levels; management because they increase earning standards beyond peacetime norms.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In Sverdlos [sic] (spelling?), Siberia, a wing tip was ripped off Nelson's converted Liberator when it tangled with a parked plane. Local Russian engineers asked his permission to build a replacement. He thought it impossible for them to do, but said "go ahead." Meanwhile he was flown on in another plane. The Russians took off the other wing tip, built one like it in reverse. The job was so good that that plane was flown to Cairo, where Air Force engineers didn't even replace the tip; they left it on for its trip to the U.S. (Not with Nelson in it.)

Nelson said "a pretty fair estimate" of Russian aircraft production would be 2,200 combat planes a month, 2,600 or 2,700 planes overall. This is about the same as Britain, he said. He estimated U. S. production would be around 8,500 overall this month.

SFG

9. (B3/f35)

December 21, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC
AJG

Admiral King met with the following Saturday night, December 18, at the home of a friend in Alexandria: Ray Clapper (Scripps-Howard), Lyle Wilson (UP), William C. Murphy (Philadelphia Inquirer), Glenn Perry (New York Sun), Roscoe Drummond (Christian Science Monitor), Marquis Childs (St. Louis Post-Dispatch) and myself.

It was the first opportunity any of us have had to talk off-the-record with any of the participants at Cairo and Teheran.

The bulk of the conversation turned about small things that were interesting but of no particular significance, and I will pass them by. The significant points were these:

1. King says the Marshall-to-London deal has been called off.

2. He says plans for the cross-channel invasion have been set back again where they were in the first place – next Spring.

3. He lets the impression stand, without doing anything to emphasize or to refute it, that the British still don't care to hurry along an invasion from the British Isles.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

4. We're trying to bypass some Japanese strong points in the Pacific, in operations now in progress and impending, but there's no chance of hopping over Truk; and no chance of Russian bases in Siberia in the foreseeable future.

The Admiral contended all over the place that he and Admiral Leahy and General Arnold talked the President out of moving Marshall. He seemed to want us to understand that no Teheran decision made the change. By way of emphasizing his own part, he said the President came up to him while they were in Iran and said:

"Well, I let you keep George."

Frankly, I take this with salt and several here (Fry, Hightower and Simpson) are industriously prowling the White House and the War Department today in an effort to break out the story from a source we shall be free to build on and justified in going with flatly and all the way.

Admiral King said there had been built up here too good a working team of himself and Arnold and Leahy and Marshall to have it broken by moving Marshall to London. So they'd all (except Marshall) talked turkey to FDR about it. He said Marshall never had said a word, but he'd bet Marshall feels "relieved" now.

The plan now is, King said, for Eisenhower to go to London fairly soon and take over the whole operation. As a reorganizational move partly tied in with this, Eisenhower as of December 10 became chief of all Allied operations in the entire Mediterranean area, his command thus being measurably enlarged.

He said the situation now had been compared with that in the last war when Pershing commanded the invasion abroad and [General Peyton C.] March was Chief of Staff, commentators having pointed out that Pershing had the more important assignment by far.

"It's not that way this time," King said. "We have troops all over the world. The Chief of Staff is in the key spot."

I remarked that probably all of us in the room had felt some months ago that the cross-channel invasion could not be expected before Spring and asked Admiral King if he would feel free to say whether anything had been done in the recent conferences that would lead toward an earlier effort.

He quaffed himself another quaf [sic] of Schlitz and said, sure, he'd answer that.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The answer is no, he said, adding:

"I have been one of those who have felt that we could get all ready and then heave ho when we get a nice piece of weather. But the decision – as of right now, anyway – is that we'll continue to stockpile until Spring."

It was then someone asked him if the British were in any hurry to get the big invasion effort moving, or whether they still liked the way the Russians were going on land and glad to leave it there. I believe the Admiral said something about the British never having fought a war of their own if there was anybody else they could get to fight it for them.

P.S. Another piece of off-the-record stuff, NOT from King: the reason FDR looked so tanned and fit when he returned was that he did not have any hard trip home. No, he spent nine days aboard the Iowa and, indeed, cruised and sunned in waters right here at home before actually landing and coming back to the White House

XI
Paul Miller's Confidential Files

1944

1. (B3/f36)

January 1, 1944

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC
AJG

General Marshall held the most amazing off-the-record conference yesterday that I have seen. He had the usual group, with a few new additions, and it was obvious from the start that he had something in particular on his mind, and that everything else he was saying was secondary to getting this one matter off his chest.

Beginning, he traced his flight from Teheran back home by way of the south, southwest and central Pacific headquarters. Here, in thumbnail, are highlights:

Marshall appeared quite worked up over the growing hospital lists of patients who actually have, or who imagine they have, some affliction which makes them unfit for front-line service. He said even a good doctor frequently finds it hard to tell whether a man is lying . . . . He said the situation had gotten so bad that he wanted to get out a statement about it, but General Surles (Director of Army Public Relations) was against it; so he read us his proposed statement off-the-record. Among other things, besides the foregoing, he blamed the condition on the scarcity of doctors, the tendency of line officers to send malingerers to the hospital rather than fool with them trying to make them work or fight; and to "our system since the 1920s of being paternal to everybody, so that our youngsters have grown up thinking they don't have to do anything and that the Government owes them a living." He growled that "the Army now has the responsibility of trying to undo all the wrongs wrought by paternalism."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(Please read that last again. I thought it was significant that he would thus comment openly and could not help recalling what I reported to you previously of his comment on race problems.)

I think Marshall would like to slap a few malingerers himself. After telling us about the situation, he recalled that at Teheran there was talk of psychological difficulties among troops, warding off fear, etc., and that Stalin, after listening to some of this, said:

"In the Russian Army the only thing to fear is to be caught showing any fear."

Marshall said he was worried about the speculative stories on the coming European invasion and asked for written suggestions as to how to stem them. The suggestion was made to him that the Germans should be more confused by the many speculative stories than by a few and he said mebbe so.

He admitted Eisenhower's prediction that the German war would end in '44 may have been intended partly as part of the psychological war. But he said he agreed with Eisenhower that '44 is the year.

2. (B3/f36)

February 19, 1944

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM TO KC:

We had another evening with Admiral King last night, the others present besides myself including Felix Belair of Time; Marquis Childs, United Features; Barnet Nover, The Washington Post; Dewey Fleming, The Baltimore Sun; Bert Andrews, The new York Herald-Tribune; Lyle Wilson, United Press and Phelps Adams, The New York Sun.

Admiral King said we are ahead of schedule in the Pacific, 'way behind schedule in Europe and in India, definitely going ahead with the cross channel invasion, honestly apprehensive of the German secret rocket, and that there now is little hope and no real expectation that the European war will end in 1944. As for the war with Japan, he says that's a matter of years, despite our recent and unexpectedly easy conquests.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Continuing, and urging us to utmost secrecy, King said the British were still desirous of avoiding a cross channel invasion. As a matter of fact, he said that was a large consideration in the Quebec decision to send Marshall to London; it was felt he was the only man who could keep the British in line for the invasion, the British well known policy of letting someone else do the fighting not having been altered in lo, these many years.

He implied that the British were about to back out of the invasion plan at the time of Teheran and that Churchill had to be hit on the head before they actually could be got on the dotted line.

"It was Pal Joey who bopped him," the Admiral said. He explained that Stalin got everything he wanted at Teheran and that a definite agreement on a general time for the European invasion was one of those things.

He then told us that he could sympathize with the British on their reluctance for the cross channel effort, in a way, because it is no wild rumor that the Germans actually are all set with two types of rocket bombs with which the Nazis propose to fire loads of deadly disease germs into England if and when the Allies start the invasion. One of the rockets is a free type and the other is directed. We have by no means knocked out the installations which will be used to fire them. The peril is real.

Somewhat reluctantly, he said – and began by cautioning utmost secrecy – the Allies are ready to retaliate in kind on Germany if the Germans do let go.

Admiral King says the relationship of Allied strength in the Pacific is about 15% as to 85% in the Atlantic and European theaters. He says we'll need about 50% of that 85% after the termination of hostilities in Europe to whip Japan. He says the United States Fleet will need no help from the British, but is sufficiently powerful to wind it up alone.

The Admiral said he didn't look for us to use gas against the Japanese, expressing the belief that American public opinion would not permit it. The point also was raised that there was fear that if we used gas against the Japs, the Germans might use gas in England – suggesting the possibility the British might have urged against using gas in the Pacific, thinking of their own position. Note: The realists hereabouts, however, say the real reason for not using gas is that it isn't sufficiently effective!

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM March 13, 1944

KC

AJG

On Tuesday, March 7, we carried a story for afternoon newspapers by John M. Hightower telling – for the first time so far as I know – of the really critical nature of the Allied position on the Anzio beachhead in Italy. Hightower's story also disclosed that the idea of going into Anzio was of British origin, and it was indicated that there was not too much enthusiasm in Washington for this particular venture. In this connection, one is beginning to hear more and more here about the whole Italian campaign being one we might well have avoided.

With that as a background, I rather suspected there was going to be a defence [sic] of the Italian campaign when the Bureau of Public relations at the War Department telephoned this morning that General Marshall wanted to see his usual group in his office for an off-the-record session at 12 noon.

I went over with Ben McKelway, others on hand including Arthur Krock, W. K. Hutchinson of INS, Duke Shoop of the Kansas City Star, James Wright of the Buffalo News, Casey Jones of the Washington Post, Frank Kelly of the New York Herald Tribune, Ernest Lindley of Newsweek, Roscoe Drummond of the Christian Science Monitor, and Marquis Childs.

We found General Marshall looking very fine, and apparently in very good spirits. He shook hands with each of us as we entered the room and took up seats ringing his desk.

His discussion of the Italian campaign was not a defensive one. He said the value of the Italian campaign now is that it drains off German manpower that otherwise would be on the western front or facing Russia. He said our principal objective in Italy was incidentally to take Rome for political reasons, but principally to get the air fields above Rome. He indicated, as have others, that we never had any thought of going much beyond Rome – even had the Germans started pulling out, as I believe our leaders at one time expected they would do. He admitted that losses on the Anzio beachhead have been terrible, saying that the British and Canadians had sustained even heavier losses proportionately than had the Americans.

(It was interesting to contrast General Marshall's factual delineation of the Italian situation with the attitude of Admiral King toward the operation, as reported in my memorandum of February 19, 1944.) . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He then discussed a subject which has won increasing attention here; namely, the resurgence in popular and strategic concepts of the plain old rifle soldier. He gave us these facts:

In the United States Army, approximately 11 percent of the personnel are rifle soldiers. Yet, on the Italian front, 70 percent of our casualties have been suffered by these men who make up only 11 percent of our total engaged forces. The story is about the same everywhere.

General Marshall said that we frankly had underestimated our needs in this category. He recalled that some Americans were going to win the war from the air and others were sure it would be won by machines, and he did not spare himself in criticizing that concept. He said we are now opening up new training posts and turning out greater numbers of riflemen as fast as we can. He says no strategist , however committed to air power or armor, any longer denies that the old-fashioned dough-boy still has to bear the brunt. Indeed, the tanks cannot even operate effectively now until the foot soldiers have broken a way through for them. Tanks are all right unless the other fellow has tanks or anti-tank guns, and then you are right back where you started. And the reason foot soldiers have to break through first is that mine fields will hold up a tank advance until they can be cleared.

Jumping up to England, General Marshall volunteered nothing specific about the invasion – time or place. He said merely that our major effort now is to try to knock out the German air fighter strength. He said that's the real reason for the daylight bombing of Berlin by the U.S. Air Forces – German fighters will come up there. Incidentally, he inadvertently illustrated how incorrect a picture it is possible to get from communiques when he said that on our latest Berlin raid the communique indicated a thousand American bombers participated, but that actually only about 250 ever got to Berlin. The reason only a fourth of the bombers got there was that the weather was so bad over the Channel that many were called back before they even got on their way in France.

He said we still aren't positive what the Germans have on the so-called "rocket coast," but expressed the opinion Radar-directed airplanes are a certainty, for one thing. (He made no mention of the bacteria-carrying rockets about which I was told earlier, and which I reported to you in confidence February 19.)

He spoke well of the Russian effort, although admitting he charges off to exaggeration about 50 percent of all Russian claims as to German planes shot down. He refused to make a guess as to when the war might end. He said things are looking very much better in the Pacific generally.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

4. (B3/f36)

March 15, 1944

MEMORANDUM: (Off-record but not confidential)

General Pat Hurley spoke off-the-record for the Overseas Writers Club here today, and in discussing the Turkish situation indicated a new proposal is being worked out by which the Allies hope to obtain something from Turkey. (As things stand now, the Turks are giving us virtually no help and are refusing to go all out unless they are paid off in war materiel at such a rate that it isn't worth the cost.)

Aside from this, Hurley said four factors dominate all post-war considerations:

1. Gold. He said you will hear that the United States has all the gold in the world buried in the ground, but he urged that Russia's steadily increasing gold production not be overlooked – implying the U.S. has information that Russia is building up gold reserves that will give us something to think about in the future.

2. Oil. He said we are depleting our own reserves, giving them away to the Russians and the British, and that we have to find new sources. He said he hadn't made up his mind completely about Government ownership. However, recalling that he represents five oil companies whose properties were expropriated by Mexico, he said he felt some Government ownership would be helpful to us in our expansion in foreign fields. He said the Government would be in a better position to help specific U.S. industries abroad if it owned a share or two. He favors the pending proposal to build a pipeline for oil in the Middle East.

3. Shipping. Hurley said we talk about holding on, after the war, to the Liberty shipping we are building up now. However, he predicted we will decide it is to our advantage to turn a lot of this over to the British so that Britain can maintain itself commercially. He added that the main cornerstone of our foreign policy is and has been that we must help maintain a strong Great Britain. He said it is essential to our welfare in every way that we keep Britain strong – and added that he also agrees with all those who say that's the way we have kept ourselves busy a good share of the time for the last 30 years!

4. Air. He said there undoubtedly will be conflicts with the British and others, but that come what may we rightly are beginning to take steps now to assure maximum protection for our interests in that field after the war.

5. (B3/f36)

April 17, 1944

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

CONFIDENTIAL

KC
AJG

Notes on an off-the-record evening, April 16, with the following other reporters, and Admiral King: Turner Catledge, New York Times; Ernest Lindley, Newsweek; Jim Wright, Buffalo News; Dick Wilson, Cowles Publications; Pete Brandt, St. Louis Post-Dispatch; Marquis Childs, columnist.

The talk of an indefinite postponement of the invasion is just that – talk. The date, within narrow limits, was set at Teheran, however much over Mr. Churchill's prostrate form. The date was not indicated last night, but the best guess possible from what was said is somewhere around July 1.

Our overall plans have been expanded by "almost 100 per cent" over previous plans. It is hoped that overwhelming force, as at Kwajalein, will do the job. The effort will be many-pronged. King said he told FDR there would be so many boats a man could walk across the channel. The big French ports will be aimed at. The intention will be to get them open for direct U.S. to France shipments, within the least possible time.

At Teheran, Mr. Stalin asked how about that second front. Mr. Churchill held forth for some time as to the problems, etc., etc. When he had quite concluded, Mr. Stalin said, in effect:

"Yes, I know – but how about that second front."

Roosevelt sided with Stalin. (Though it wasn't necessary for anybody to side with Uncle Joe.)

King, more optimistic than a month ago, said he wouldn't be surprised to see Germany out of the war by the end of 1944. The reason is Russia's continued amazing showing. He says the Germans have even pulled a reserve division out of Northern Italy and troops out of France to try to stop the Russians.

6. (B3/f36)

April 18, 1944

CONFIDENTIAL

KC

I called on General Marshall today to extend a speaking invitation and found him also prepared, apparently, for an off-record fill-in. I was alone with him 35 minutes.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He commented, as he read a note someone tiptoed in and handed him – a note he pencilled [sic] a reply without hesitation:

"I have to act on the biggest problems in the world, and I can't even take time to read over what I dictate. Yesterday I had 'em all in here – Stalin, Churchill, all of 'em on messages of one kind or another. I was writing stuff that will be dug up for histories – and I couldn't even read it over . . ."

As for things in general:

"It's slow here now. Damn, how I miss Harry Hopkins. Let me tell you something in strictest confidence:

"The most miserable period of my life was six months as Deputy Chief of Staff. I knew we were going to get into war and I knew ways to cut it shorter by a year. Nobody paid much attention.

"Then one time, I found the truth about Harry Hopkins. I heard him tell off Churchill. He's the toughest man in this war. What he says to some of these people, including the President, is awful. He's just tough. He doesn't care . . . After I got to know him, I could get things done. He's a realist all the way.

"And yet nobody seems to know what a valuable man he is. And you can't say how valuable he is, or the President is reflected upon."

(I'd heard him say some of these things about Hopkins before. In this, however, he seemed to me to say that Hopkins is the President's backbone with the foreigners and braces us against being taken for even more than everybody here knows we have been taken for already.)

7. (B3/f36)

August 15, 1944

STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL

KC

AJG

Admiral King met with the usual group, with the exception of myself, while I was absent from Washington, and I am letting follow a memorandum which was provided me by Glen Perry of the New York Sun:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A believes that the war against the Germans will be won by the end of this calendar year, if not earlier. He looks upon the revolt of the German officers as a sign of great German weakness. A believes the Germans are fools for refusing to give up territory. He lays the blame for this entirely upon Hitler and says that if the German generals really were in charge at the present time they would fall back from territory they know they cannot conceivably hold. Hitler, however, forces some of the best divisions of the German army to remain in fixed positions when their condition is hopeless. Therefore, he loses his troops. A says this is not strategy, this is Hitler's dicta.

A continues to be amazed, as he says the entire Joint Chiefs of Staff is amazed, by the success and speed of the Russian armies. He says he cannot understand how they can get their supplies up to such a fast-moving front. A emphasized this phase of the thing so strongly that he was asked if he suspected there was collusion between the Germans and the Russians. A gave no very conclusive answer to that question but we thought he left room for the idea. The idea of collusion between the Germans and Russians was kicked around quite a bit, with the people who were there with King (eight of us) talking about it more than he did, and I think the net result of his remarks was that he thought the chances were against collusion. He said he had no evidence of it, but was willing to think about it.

You have seen reports in the paper about the secret weapon used on Guam. A said he knew of no new secret weapon but that he thought it was only new to the man who saw it. He spoke of this weapon as if it were like a reserve fuel tank kicked off an airplane and when it explodes it consumes all the oxygen within a wide radius so that the men within that radius suffocate. A hoped that this would prove to be the weapon which would knock off the rocket-launching stations in France. He said if they could just get that explosive near the apertures of these rocket-launching platforms it would consume all of the oxygen and no one could breathe inside the rocket-launching installation.

8. (B3/f36)

Washington
August 18, 1944

CONFIDENTIAL

KC
AJG

I am no doctor, but I think President Roosevelt is in very serious condition.

I attended a White House press conference this morning for the first time in months. It was the first time I had seen him since, I believe, May.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Regardless of his doctor's repeated statements, his face is thin and drawn. His eyes look bad. He appears to have more trouble with his enunciation due to his teeth. Even his voice is weak – the reporters had to keep urging him to speak louder.

In short, he looks sick and he looks tired and he lacks fire. He almost looked pitiful.

I came back and checked our biographical matter. We are getting to work at once filling in on the Hawaii trip. We will have a reporter go to Hyde Park when Roosevelt does at all times, regardless.

9. (B3/f36)

September 9, 1944

Confidential

KC

AJG

A dinner was given honoring General Marshall last night by those who have attended his so-called secret conferences. After some by-play, Marshall spoke. Highlights:

He thinks the war can be over in Europe three weeks from now, PROVIDED (a) that our replacements and supplies can catch up with the advance, (b) that the Russians are able to get rolling, and (c) that we are able to get large numbers of heavy bombers working from near the German border. Given another set of circumstances – supply problems on our part, Russian difficulties – the war could run into the winter.

We have a gasoline pipeline under the channel to Cherbourg and already have heavy bombers operating out of France, along with hundreds of fighters that now never have to go to England at all.

He thinks but doesn't know that Rommell [sic] is dead. He says a major factor in the success in France has been the way we have knocked off top German generals. Counting Rommell [sic], he says we have killed at least two, that one has gone crazy and another was badly shot up. One corps top command was killed to a man in a single bombardment.

He admits we have fought a costly war, in terms of materiel, but says it was done, and is being done, advisedly; the aim is to spend more money and save more lives. In the Pacific, for example, he says the bombardment cost in an island attack is stupendous, but that the alternative is to take a heavier loss in life during the landings.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He doesn't think the Germans will use gas because, he says, unless they have something we don't know about, the Allies have more gas ready to use and better protection against gas than have the Germans.

He might like to use gas against the Japs, but would be deterred by consideration of civilians on the Jap-held islands.

Chiang Kai-shek is in the midst of another shaky period, but that is the case much of the time and he is expected to hang on again as he has in the past.

10. (B3/f36)

October 17, 1944

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

Admiral King met with Phelps Adams, Ernest Lindley, Bert Andrews, Lyle Wilson, Joseph Harsch, Raymond Graham Swing, Arthur Krock and myself last night for another off the record talk which was held at Adams' home.

Speaking of assault shipping – troop and machine landing craft, etc. – he said there is a "serious slippage" in shipyard production just now, owing to the number of workers quitting the shipyards to look for more permanent work and employment. He said it was a very serious thing because it apparently reflected a national feeling that the war is now over when, said he, it definitely is not. He said the Army made a mistake in cutting back on its personnel, as evidenced by present personnel shortages in Europe where he said we have found the need in some categories much greater than anyone anticipated.

-2-

As for the Russian problem, King said they will cooperate with the United States, but one of the stumbling blocks is that Russia doesn't want to do anything for or with Britain. There is new talk of a Tripartite Chiefs of Staff instead of the present setup which involves only the British and the Americans. King thinks the Russian moves in the Balkans now are political, but conceded that the Russian setbacks on the Vistula before Warsaw may have forced them to spread out in the Balkans merely because that's the only place they could move.

King estimates, emphasizing that it's a very rough guess, that the United States may be able to demobilize about 30 per cent of its army after the war is won in Europe but concedes the extent of demobilization may be affected by policing necessities. He expressed confidence that the Russians will come in against Japan in due course, but didn't say he had anything definite to back up the opinion.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The main theme running through his remarks all evening was that the Navy can work all around the Japanese islands, but that until the European war is over and big forces of assault troops are available there can be no big assault upon the China coast or upon Japan proper.

11. (B3/f36)

[See original in file, dated 10/16/44 and 10/17/44; To PM, from WLB]

October 21, 1944

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC

AJG

General Marshall held a secret news conference October 16. I was unable to go and sent Beale. His report follows:

- - - - - -

Summary of off-record conference held by General Marshall October 16 upon return from week's trip to European front:

Highspot: We are trying to knock out Germany by the end of the year. Marshall will not predict when the war will end, but is going to put the men in there and keep pressing

Two major current problems: Supply and manpower. Manpower difficulties to a large degree are incident to supply troubles.

SUPPLY

NOT a commander on the European front is getting all the supplies he is asking.

The reconstruction of railroads has been marvelously efficient. We have now reached the point where land transport can handle more than can be unloaded at available ports and beaches. This spells the importance of ANTWERP. Antwerp could handle 40,000 tons a day and double our present loading capacity. But first the British and Canadians must clear the banks of the Wester Schelde where German artillery commands the approaches to Antwerp. Up to now, not even mine sweepers have been able to approach the city.

MANPOWER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The infantry rifleman is bearing the brunt of the fighting and suffering 92 per cent of the casualties. The system for replacing casualties is working and the units are being kept up to strength, but the infantryman needs a rest. Starting on orders I cabled back, we are going to send in infantry regiments carrying only their lightest arms and equipment to rotate these front-line regiments so they can drop back for a rest. We'll send them in light until we can move their heavy material. That will enable us to get these fresh troops in the line by the first part of December instead of the first part of February, if we took their full material. It will keep a whole division tuned up and in fighting trim to have a few fresh regiments and the knowledge there's a chance to drop back before the white alley turns up. We'll do with regiments what we were able to do only with single men during the last war.

We are going to give relief on a full regiment basis by using six divisions behind the lines in France, six more than were diverted to England because of the supply problems in France and three over here.

Casualties as a whole are running below pre-invasion estimates, but the infantry casualties are running higher. We are getting 60,000 men a month from Selective Service. Eisenhower alone has asked for 50,000 a month. The staff here wants me to raise our ceiling of 7,700,000; we have more than that now.

I don't foresee now any increase in the 60,000 a month Selective Service figure.

THE ENEMY

We are fighting a tough crust of resistance all along the line; about 25 per cent are fanatics and 75 percent controlled by fanatics.

Nobody can tell when the break may come. We expect piecemeal surrenders.

European Sidelights: Troops on the front are now being delivered winter clothes and equipment, just as they were at this time of October 1918. There are 1,900,000 U.S. troops in France; only 300,000 of these on duties back of the lines. Air-ground cooperation has reached a perfection we never dreamed possible.

The Siegfried Line is a strong fortification. I went through part of it. But it's only as strong as it is manned. These shark's teeth look fine, but General Collins told me most of our advances had been along the roads. We'd blow out the stuff, repair and move ahead. The Germans have been infiltrating back to their pill-boxes at night. To stop this we've sent out tractors to fill them full of dirt. Sometimes we take a torch and seal the steel doors. If the Germans refuse to come out they're sealed inside.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

RUSSIA

The Soviet operations on the Vistula above Warsaw didn't work out and they've been regrouping since. We might see something on the Central Russian front soon. Russia has been doing a lot in the Balkans and Hungary. It's tougher going for the Russians outside their own country; they've lost some maneuverability while the Germans have gained some. The Russians do not have civilians coming in behind the troops to rebuild.

V-2 BOMB

The Germans are planning to use the V-2 bomb against us in Antwerp and it could cause us a lot of trouble. They've been firing them at Norwich, England, about the only point in range. Some jet-bombs have been used against the 1st Army.

12. (B3/f36)

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC

AJG

BRIEF NOTES ON A COUPLE OF OFF-RECORD OCCASIONS

1. At a luncheon, Ambassador Averell Harriman took the same line as most other Administration people toward Russia; namely, that all the United States is supposed to do is to be sure to stroke Stalin the right way. Harriman made one definite prediction – that whatever cooperation Russia does finally give against Japan, after the European war, will not be satisfactory in our view. He said the Russians are all asking the question whether the United States will "be friends" or be isolationist. I asked him whether he thought the United States ever had been as isolationist as Russia herself is now. He replied that Russia, in its growth as a government, now is just about where we were in the late eighteenth century. Of course he said the election of Dewey would be a tragic setback internationally, adding that the Russians would take this as proof that the United States was not going to be "friends."

November 3, 1944

13. (B3/f36)

December 15, 1944

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

KC:

AJG:

Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy was guest of honor at a Eugene Meyer dinner last night, attended by Walter Lippmann, Casey Jones, Bert Andrews, Ernest Lindley, Arthur Krock and myself.

It is clear from the evening of conversation that:

1. A considerable cleavage has grown up between the military and our diplomatic service. The former apparently is contending that diplomacy should have been able to head off the Anglo-American grief over Greece, Yugoslavia, et al.

2. Stimson and McCloy, at least, are trying to work out some arrangement for diplomatic representation on the Combined Chiefs of Staff. The idea would be that future diplomatic strategy would be planned jointly along with future military moves. The argument is that such advance planning would have kept England and the United States from showing the world a divided front as now. The big trouble about this is, of course, that it still leaves Russia out. What has she to gain by playing with us and the British? Stalin is having his way now.

3. The Army and Navy are worrying about Mr. Roosevelt in connection with their efforts to get strong legislation providing for a year's real military service for every boy. Mr. Roosevelt – acting as if he were reading from one of Eleanor's speeches – consistently talks about everything else but military training for this proposed year. I recall, incidentally, that at one press conference he told me how the boys should learn to brush their teeth, use hammer and saw, be good citizens. What the Army and Navy want is a year of military training as intensive as is given in war training camps. It appears likely the Army and Navy will get up some sort of joint statement within the next month or so.

4. It was remarked that the Army Air Forces' comments on the B-29 raids are markedly conservative by contrast with AAF comment at the start of earlier operations such as bombing of Germany from England. McCloy said he thought a lesson had been well learned – since we still can lose upwards of 50 bombers on a raid over a Germany that General Arnold a year ago described as nearly paralyzed.

You will see from all this what I regret to say is a general turn in thinking here. There is pessimism, confusion and doubt all round. It has been reflected also in what you may have seen coming from the floor of the House and Senate in recent days. At times it almost appears that the isolationists are on the verge of coming back. I mention this merely as a reporter, not as a lament or the contrary.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PM

14. (B3/f36)

December 19, 1944

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC
AJG

The following memorandum was made by one of the reporters who recently visited MacArthur on Leyte, while on a Pacific tour. All of this reports MacArthur's opinions as expressed to this reporter and others, coupled with the reporter's impressions.

It was originally planned to give some B-29's to MacArthur. A magnificent field with 10,000 foot runways was built for them near Darwin. (Batchellor Field.) He said he made five separate emphatic requests to Washington and George Kenney almost quit over the row. He said that every mistake that supposedly intelligent men could make has been made in this war. The North African operation was absolutely useless, yet all the available strength of both Great Britain and the United States was thrown into the task.

He said while he was in John McGraw's office some years ago Willie Keeler made his famous remark "Hit 'em where they ain't," and that is what he, Mac, has done so far. He said that thus far we have been able to outthink them and he believes we will continue to outthink them. He said that only on this basis has it been possible to make the advances that have been made in the South and Southwest Pacific, with inadequate ground forces. He said that both he and Nimitz have been and are now criminally undersupplied with ground forces. That he said, demonstrates the differences between the European and the Pacific theaters. "We hit them where they are in Europe, not where they ain't." Patton's army, which is trying to battle its way through the Vosges in the Luneville-Baccamt sector, can't do it. He repeated – they can't do it. No army could do it. The Italian campaign, again hitting the Germans where they were deployed to meet us, has slowed down just as much. They are fighting this European war in terms of war of a quarter of a century ago.

The Chinese situation is disastrous. It is the bitter fruit of our decision to concentrate our full strength against Germany. A strategy as old as warfare is that while you deliver your main blow with your main force in one place you retain enough strength to hold the enemy in check elsewhere. Thus in ignoring the Pacific, we violated one of the most fundamental rules of warfare. We did not have sufficient strength in the Pacific to hold the enemy while destroying him in Europe. He said that if he had been given just a portion of the force which invaded North Africa he could have retaken the Philippines in three months because at that time the Japanese were not ready. “They are now. The Philippines are the strategic key to the western Pacific. For he who controls the Philippines controls the China coast. And our control of it would have halted the Jap drive. Now. That decision may cost us one million casualties in the Pacific.”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The MacArthur plan for the re-invasion of the Philippines has unfolded exactly as he planned it when he reached Melbourne in March 1942. Every step has been in accordance with a strategy which had fully matured in his mind at that time.

He lashed out in a general indictment of Washington, asserting that “they” are fighting this war as they fought the last war. He said that most of them have never been in the front lines and that they aren’t rotating field officers back into Washington. (He’s not entirely accurate on this.) Nimitz is his friend and good pal and closest supporter, and he has a high regard for the Navy. But he suspects that that regard is not reciprocated. This is the first time since MacArthur reached Australia and began the drive back to the Philippines that he has had superiority in men and equipment. He is getting adequate supplies for the men he has available. In continuing his criticism of Washington he said that the history of the world will he Pacific for the next 10,000 years. He said we made the same old mistake of intervening in European quarrels which we can’t hope to solve because they are insoluble. He said that Europe is a dying system.

It is worn out and run down, and will become an economic and industrial hegemony of Soviet Russia. We cannot sell them anything but machinery and equipment for the production of goods. The lands touching the Pacific with their billions of inhabitants will determine the course of history (repeating) for the next 10,000 years. Whoever dominates the Pacific, dominates the course of world history for an incalculable period. Japan saw that. And that is the whole logical basis of her Greater East Asia Co-prosperity sphere. Japan saw that if she dominated Asia she would dominate the world.

Stalin, he believes, also knows the Pacific picture and while fighting in Europe is actually looking over his shoulder toward Asia. He believes that Russia is determined to wipe out the disgrace of the Russo-Japanese war and restore the status quo ante bellum by reacquiring the warm water port of Port Arthur, an outlet to the Pacific. If Chiang Kai-shek is displaced or overthrown, China will be thrown into utter and total confusion. He said that there was no more reason for replacing Stilwell than there would be “for replacing me.”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He said the U.S. interest in the Pacific is not imperialistic. It is the development of markets and the extension of the principles of American democracy.

He repeated the Pacific will become and remain industrial and economic sphere of world development and, in strongest blast against Washington, cited this as reason they were guilty of treason and sabotage in not adequately supporting the Pacific while hammering Germany. It is the extension of ideals, not imperialism, that America wants. The lifting of people by the billions from a mere subsistence level to the accomplishment of an economic system which will represent the greatest purchasing power in world history. The power of an idea is the greatest power in the world. No force can defeat it.

He expressed the view that nothing in Europe has approached the terrific power of carrier strikes. They strike like a bolt of lightning. They go in fast. They pinpoint their targets and take their losses. However, they can only strike for two or three days and then they must retire to reform, refuel and rearm. That is their weakness. When the Japanese know a carrier strike is going to hit Luzon they pull all their planes back to Formosa – a matter of four to six hours – and wait out the strikes, then return. He said he feels many of the Jap planes reported destroyed on the ground are dummies, of which the Japs have about 400 and which they have used again and again as decoys. However, he believes that the Jap's back is broken in the air. That's a guess. Hardly anyone agrees with him, but he is prepared to stand on the guess.

The men in the Pacific feel that they are being ignored. If there is an action story out of the Pacific, the papers on the eastern coast give it three lines. If there is an action story out of Europe, they give it three line headlines. (This was prompted by a comment that the invasion of Anguar [sic] and Peleliu on July 20, just a few days before Patton's breakthrough between St. Lo and Perriere, had been regarded as routine and that we had been startled by the ferocity of the fighting there.) He agreed emphatically and said that that was exactly true and had been true of almost every Pacific operation.

15. (B3/f36)

[November-December 1944]

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC
AJG

Harry Oliver returned [inserted by hand: from Warm Springs (after 3 weeks)]with FDR today and submitted the following confidential memorandum. Henry said he never had seen FDR so "testy" as he has been of late . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"FDR screwed the censor's lid on pretty tight on this trip to Warm Springs. Not that it would have added much to the story, but just in event some of the items leak out in columns, here are five instances about which he prohibited any publication:

"1. Made informal speech to Foundation patients on night of arrival, November 28, [1944], with perhaps 300 persons present. We have always printed this speech in the past. But this time he made what apparently were later regarded as slips. He stuck his neck out on the Pearl Harbor controversy (before the Stimson-Forrestal reports [March 1945] came out) by saying that little did he think, as most people did at the time, that Japan would attack during those six days following his summons back to Washington in December 1941, yet Japan did attack and we have been at war ever since. (Of course this was not very important, but he did imply that some people did think Japan might attack. He probably would not have framed it just that way had he prepared his remarks.)

"2. At the same turkey [Thanksgiving] dinner, Bette Davis was a surprise, and some say, uninvited guest who was plunked down on the President's left at the head table. Bette has a sweety, a Corp[oral Lewis A.] Riley, in the Army at Fort Benning, 40 miles from Warm Springs. The Administrator of the [Georgia Warm Springs] Foundation, without consulting the President, invited Bette over to perform before the patients. The next thing FDR knew she was sitting next to him at dinner, and very much resented by the whole White House staff, according to Hassett. She didn't act.

"3. The President had a tooth pulled during the trip, apparently by a dentist he had never seen before, most likely a villager. [Secretary to President Roosevelt, William D.] Hassett tried to get this story for us (for a box feature), but FDR said a flat "no." He took the position that this was a vacation trip pure and simple and having a tooth pulled is a personal matter just like going to the can.

"4. Bob [St. Louis, MO politician, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Democratic National Committee Chairman, Postmaster General, Robert Emmet]Hannegan paid a visit to the Springs after being told, says Hassett, that he better wait till the President returned to Washington. But thick-skinned Bob came down anyway en route to Florida – and brought four Missouri politicians with him! The four were made to cool their heels in the administration building more than a mile from FDR's cottage, while Hannegan was received. Hassett said to make matters worse Hannegan stayed an hour and 20 minutes longer than the time allotted. In Hassett's words the President had no callers "on the record."

"5. FDR drove his little Ford car, with hand controls, over to Hamilton, Ga., for a visit at the 3,000 acre Blue Spring Farm of wealthy textile mill owner, Carson J. Callaway. Had a long personal chat which FDR regarded as unworthy of note. Calloway is author of a novel 100 7-man corporation plan [Georgia Better

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Farm program] to restore run-down Georgia farm land. We were forbidden to say even that the President went to his farm.

"(FDR didn't receive us once during the trip.)"

XII
Paul Miller's Confidential Files

1945

1. (B3/f37)

Curator's note:

This report can probably be dated early January 1945. Stettinius became Secretary of State in November 1944; the Soviet Union recognized the Polish Lublin Committee (referred to in the text) on January 1, 1945.

The author of the report [JB] was probably Jack L. Bell (1904-1975), political writer for AP, Washington.

- - whp 4f85

SA39

PM (WLB) – Here's summary of major points I can remember on Stettinius off record kfc [conference] – JB.

International Organization – Stettinius says Roosevelt means business, intends to push through Second Security Conference. Predicts that meeting will be held in early spring, says they will have a treaty before Senate "by hot weather." Treaty will wrap up all questions in one package, he said. Against separate submission of any issues. Also against any action by Senate now on foreign policy statement. Thinks that might muddy the waters, provoke unwanted debate before Roosevelt gets a chance to talk turkey with Churchill, Stalin.

Neutrals – Says all Axis shipments from Sweden stopped. Thinks coal and other shipments by Swiss amount to little, hopes that situation will be clarified soon. Generally optimistic about relations with the Neutrals. Hard row, but the hoeing is about over.

SA40

Mexican Conference – He will attend. Tentative date about Feb. 15. Latin American Nations to go over Dumbarton Oaks [Conference from August 21-October 7, 1944], see how they like it, talk about other international affairs, such as postwar trade, etc. Argentina bid for conference, he says, was only attempt to state its case. Says after Mexico City Conference ends, Argentines will be given chance to say their piece at less formal gathering. Indicated no bending to them.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

China – Situation at breaking point only recently was cleared up somewhat. Chiang has been made to understand that he must get along with the Communists. Thinks Chiang will find a way to do it and not lose face (usual Stettinius optimism here). Said, as did Roosevelt in later message, that three times as much now going over Hump by air as ever went up Burma Road.

Italy, Greece – Stettinius inclined to find excuses for British action. Says must remember that can't let the armed folks (mostly Communist, but he didn't say so) take over and set up a government. Nobody knows what the people really think about it, he contends. Says there will be plebescites [sic], he hopes. Urges let Roosevelt iron out all this in kfcs [conferences] with Churchill and Stalin. He leans heavily at almost every point on forthcoming kfc.

SA41

Russia – Surprisingly admits this government not sure, even today, that Russians won'[t] make a deal with Germany. Admits we know little, if anything, of what the Russians are doing in reconquered territory. Doesn't regard them, however, as much a threat to future European peace as some others might.

Poland – Seemed confident, at midnight just before Russians recognized the Lublin Committee, that something could be worked out. Says London Poles were unreasonably stubborn, might easily have settled the whole thing by substituting a couple of members for others in their government. Apparently somewhat impatient that they did not, but expressed belief that something would be worked out.

SA42

New White House Liaison – Says there will be greater cooperation than ever before between State Department and White House. Analyzed, however, this seems to consist of stationing of Department man in White House to copy cables to President and transmit them to State Department. Similar service in Department to keep White House informed. Apparent promise from Roosevelt that he won't talk to ambassadors without Stettinius at least knowing they are in town and what they are going to White House for. Says Roosevelt to be furnished page and a half background on what the ambassador wants to say. Has promise, he says, of more frequent access personally to White House.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Department – Extremely critical, by indirection, of Hull's management of the Department, says all was confusion, now going to have order.

Lend Lease – Not to be agency for post war rehabilitation. But insists US must be ready and willing to step in and do its part.

JB

VH704PEW

2. (B3/f37)

March 5, 1945

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC
AJG

In a three-hour session with Admiral King (during which he downed six beers), last night, a group of us obtained a great deal of information – or opinion – about a great many things.

Some of the high points:

1. King says we have had "hypothetical talks" with the Russians as to Japan. In other words, our military people and theirs have talked about what Russia might do, or what we might do, given certain sets of factors in the Pacific that might involve Japan against Russia. King still isn't certain, however, what help, if any, the Russians eventually may provide. He says we still don't know what they are doing or what they are going to do.

2. The Pacific war is now in an intermediate stage. The big operations against the China coast or Japan proper might now be ready, or already under way, had the war been over in Europe as had been expected when Pacific war plans were made many months and up to a year ago. I got the impression the Navy has more Navy planes and ships than it can use right now, and that it will busy itself, along with the Army and the Marines, on a number of operations such as that on Iwo Jima necessary to close in on Japan. There may be a China-coast landing.

3. King, who I believe was opposed to our Philippines campaign, now says: (1) It's too late to go in on Formosa – we have given the Japs too much time to concentrate strength there. (2) We should get our troops out of the Philippines and let the Filipinos mop up.

(You may recall that King was opposed to the Italian campaign, and he seems to have been opposed to that in the Philippines for much the same reason – he feels the campaign was based on political decisions, not military, and that it could have been avoided and the end of the war speeded by concentrating our strength farther up the line.)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

4. The British have much of their fleet along the east coast of Australia now, but they have no supply train. They must depend upon us for supplies and King feels it is not economical for us to supply them. He says despite our big shipping tonnages, we are short of ships for supply. The British have begun to realize this, he says, and it has not been decided how much they will ultimately want from us. He still is of the belief that they should run their own show in the Pacific, to a large extent, re-taking the former British possessions which are outstanding, pretty much on their own. Time will tell how much support this view has here.

5. King, who has not too much use for General [William Joseph "Wild Bill"] Donovan [wartime head of the Office of Strategic Services (OSS)] anyway, has less use for the Donovan plan for a coordinated intelligence service which the Chicago Tribune dug up recently. He opposes it partly on the same basis that he opposes a single department of war. He says too much power should not be given any man other than the President. He thinks this argument will be used in Congress against both plans.

6. King says we will have to "be concerned" about the Russians for a long while. He says Stalin can be depended upon to keep his word, once we get him to give it – which King says is seldom. King says there is no telling, though, about Stalin's successor and his successor's successor.

7. Stalin will not get far away from Russia for the same good reason as formerly, he is afraid to go too far away for fear somebody else might take over in his absence. He certainly won't go to San Francisco. King says Stalin actually gives all the answers at conferences such as that at Yalta. He will have his foreign minister seated on one side and a general on the other side. They will whisper something to him occasionally, but Stalin never asks them anything. When it comes time for him to give an answer, he will give his decision without conferring with his people in any way. King tells this story about Stalin at another conference – Teheran:

At the first meeting, the Big Three were seated about a large table with their advisors. When they all first sat down, things were a little strained and nobody said anything. President Roosevelt looked inquiringly toward Stalin. Stalin uttered a word or two to his interpreter, who got up and said that he wished Mr. Roosevelt to speak. FDR spoke for probably not more than a minute about the historic significance of the occasion, and so on, deftly passing the ball on to Churchill. Churchill then spoke in much the same vein for six or seven minutes, concluded and looked toward Stalin. Stalin spoke to his interpreter, who got up and said:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Marshal Stalin says these are great sentiments. Marshal Stalin says he fully agrees." The interpreter then drew a deep breath and concluded: "Marshal Stalin says now let's get down to business."

8. King said he didn't know why San Francisco was chosen for the United Nations Conference, adding that all he knew about it was that Secretary of State Stettinius asked King and General Marshall whether there would be any danger of the Japs' [sic] bombing San Francisco. King said Stettinius was told it would not be likely.

9. Asked whether he thought Iwo Jima "worth the cost in casualties," King said that he did, emphatically. He said the Japs have been using Iwo Jima in a way that made it necessary for us to neutralize the island, and that we also would use it for medium bombers and possibly as a base for fighter planes which will accompany B-29's to Japan in the future. Funny thing: King said the air strips on Iwo Jima were not long enough for a B-29 to take off. When I came in this morning I found a story in our report relating that a B-29 landed on Iwo, was repaired and took off again Sunday.

King, after he had indicated that the Pacific war is in a slow-down stage for want of ground troops and service troops now in Europe, was asked how long he thought it would take to get them into the Pacific and ready to fight there after V-E Day. He said his guess would be about four months. He told us there is great apprehension within the Army and Navy High Commands as to how popular opinion may shape up in respect to taking troops out of Europe and moving them to the Pacific. He is afraid there will be a great protest and much propaganda in favor of releasing troops which have served long periods; yet he said, these veterans are the ones who will be most needed in the final effort against Japan. Somebody remarked that one trouble is the Navy and Army try to cover up what is involved and that if they would give out the information now as to the big job that will be involved in shifting forces and materiel, they would have some chance of getting an intelligent – if not a sympathetic – reception from the American people.

There was considerable discussion of this and it finally was suggested that the Combined Chiefs of Staff here name a competent officer who would be available at all times to give accurate, responsible information to reporters. It was pointed out, for instance, that nobody in Navy Public Relations has authority or nerve enough to comment on anything. Some of us spoke up saying that we have to call Admiral King himself to get answers his subordinates should have to answer. It finally was decided to give him a memorandum on the subject which he promised to put into his own words and give to the Combined Chiefs of Staff.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

10. A discussion of the possibility that the Japanese might want to make peace when the war ends in Europe, rather than suffer further destruction, brought the comment from King that experts are not unaware of that possibility and are looking into it. However, he said none of our military plans are taking it into consideration. All the planning that is being done is with the idea that the Japanese will fight it out.

11. In answer to a question, King said that gas would have made it easier for us on Iwo Jima. He said we have a gas that could be dropped from planes, and that it might have been effective. He said, however, that there is no present plan to use gas, because we are "too squeamish" about it. All field commanders have gas at their disposal, however, and they have authority to use it should it be used against them. An order from the President and the Chiefs of Staff would be required for our commanders to initiate the use of gas. King seemed to think it unlikely we ever would take the initiative.

3. (B3/f37)

March 24, 1945

CONFIDENTIAL

KC

AJG

The following is a memorandum from Beale on an off-record conference with General Marshall which I was not able to make:

* * * * * *

PM:

General Marshall's press conference of March 22 apparently was aimed again at the manpower situation. Most of the three hours was devoted to an outline of military positions by Marshall's map experts. Marshall wound it up by telling about his difficulties in raising men – said combat replacements are running 6,000 a month behind Eisenhower's requests.

The high spots:

1. The all-out drive on the Western front – weather permitting – starts March 24. This is the works – not a major offensive but a whole war. There are no objectives except victory. The Russians are ready to go. Marshall said he never asks them exact dates because he doesn't want to be burdened with keeping that secret in this "sieve."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

4. (B3/f37)

PM: Here are highlights of the meeting with Lieut. Gen. Kenney at the home of Mr. Eugene Meyer, March 18 [1945]:

8. Japan's air force, he says, is done for. He put it: "If the emperor wanted to have a celebration Tuesday and ordered all combat planes to fly over his palace, not more than 500 would show up. They have a few more than that but not the pilots to fly them." The quality of their planes has gone up. One new fighter with a 2,000-horsepower radial engine got considerable attention from U.S. factory experts in the Philippines a few weeks ago. But quantity production has gone down fast. "The planes," said Kenney, "are a damnsight [sic] better now than the men they have to fly them."

9. Kenney says the Jap suicide flyers are not all willing suicides. One escaped from his plane and was captured. They got about 35 hits (figure inexact) on American shipping during the Leyte assault but sank relatively few ships because they did not use heavy enough bombs. Kenney said the Japs frequently miscalculate on a major point like this, being rather stupid.

Those at the luncheon which preceded the General's talk included Jim Wright, Buffalo Evening News; Dewey Fleming, Baltimore Sun; Luther Houston, N.Y. Times; Lyle Wilson, U.P.; Alexander F. Jones and Wayne McCoy of The Post; Captain Graham, the General's aide and Mr. Meyer's son-in-law; and Col. Olive or Oliver, also with the General. According to his practice, Meyer then had in about 20 other newsmen for drinks after lunch and it was at that time that Kenney did most of his talking.

5. (B3/f37)

[June 1945]

NY (C.A.J.) (750)

Following exchange, so handled at the request of the State Department after we sought an explanation of how the new world organization would promote news freedom, is being incorporated into a story which will be used by or before Thursday. Sending it in this way for your records and so that you can give it to Ed & Pub if wish.

- - - -

Letter from P.M. to [Archibald] MacLeish [assistant director of the Office of War Information, Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs], "Dear Arch:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"American newspapermen, who are leading the crusade for world freedom of information, will want to know, I am sure, just how it is expected that the proposed new world organization will go about promoting this crusade. The Associated Press would like to carry a statement from you on this subject, now that the Charter has been completed here. I write to you, rather than to the Secretary, because he told me that you have the ball on this subject in the State Department. Many thanks. SY"

Reply form MacLeish:

"The Secretary of State as chairman of the American delegation has stated his belief and the belief of the delegation that "freedom of speech is one of the fundamental freedoms referred to" in the Charter, and "that freedom of speech encompasses freedom of the press, freedom of communication, and freedom of exchange of information."

"It seems logical to assume that the equivalent, in the international world, of domestic freedom of speech is freedom of exchange of information. Certainly it is obvious that without freedom of exchange of information between the peoples of the world the mutual understanding on which the hope of peace depends will not be realized.

"Since the Charter of the United Nations is a constitution and not an operating instrument, it does not spell out in detail the machinery by which its principal purposes are to be attained and its functions performed. This is true of the attainment of the fundamental freedoms as a whole and of the attainment of freedom of exchange of information in particular. The Charter provides for an economic and social council which is to promote respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms. The council, moreover, is directed by the Charter to establish a commission for the promotion of human rights. The economic and social council has the right to delegate to this commission its power to conduct studies, to make reports, to obtain reports from member nations, to call international conferences, and to prepare draft conventions.

"Presumably the commission would employ all these tools and weapons in its attempt to promote freedom of exchange of information. It would, that is to say, study the flow of information in the world and report upon obstacles it found to exist. On its recommendation, the economic and social council could call international conferences if it felt conferences were necessary, and conventions for submission to the member states could be drafted to promote the ends in view.

"Backed by the lively interest of the world, and employed in a field of world-wide concern, weapons of public enlightenment of this character could prove effective. Moreover, the commission could count on the support which technological advance sometimes gives to moral purpose. The rapid development of the means of communication will make it difficult for any nation to insulate its people from the free flow of ideas.

"The make-up of the commission is not prescribed by the Charter. Presumably it would be small. And in all likelihood its members would be persons associated with the struggle, in their several countries, for human dignity and the realization of the liberties of man.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"One general observation should be made about the Charter of the United Nations in this connection. The provisions of the Charter of the United Nations have far more weight than the terms of any resolution. Resolutions in the field of freedom of speech and freedom of exchange of information are necessarily limited to the pronouncement of general hopes and aspirations and purposes. The charter of the United Nations is not so limited. It states a broad objective and provides the social instruments by which that objective is attained."

UN (PM)

X216PPW JUNE 25 (UN)

6. (B3/f37)

August 7, 1945

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC
AJG

General Marshall called an off-record conference this morning. The bait was the promise of a discussion of the atom bomb, first announced yesterday. The real reason for calling was to argue the Army's position that it needs all 7,000,000 men to continue the war and can't release any coal miners, or farmers – although it has released railroaders.

There were no new reasons, 'though one good quote: "If I know war, the figures (as to number needed) are correct."

So, to the bait; the atom bomb.

General Marshall gave these details:

The bomb dropped on Hiroshima was so big that only a B-29 could be used. The actual weight of the detonating material was around 25 pounds. But the machinery for setting it off, the housing and so-on bring up the weight. This was a lot bigger than the bomb used in the Desert experiment that was heard 180 miles around last month.

We can make even bigger ones – and are.

Big trouble is in picking targets. Marshall thinks reconnaissance will show Hiroshima literally shot to hell. Said the reason we still hadn't anything definite from the Japs today was that – "as in the case of the famous Galveston flood" – it simply hadn't been possible for anyone to get into the area, a very big area, which he confidently believed had been burned and blown off the face of the Earth. For hours, he said, after an atomic bomb blast the area would be so charged that an automobile running into it would "melt under you."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Hiroshima bomb was dropped from between 30,000 and 40,000 feet and detonated at 2,000 feet. About 50 seconds elapsed between the time of release from the B-29 and the time of detonation. Thus, the B-29 had that much time to get away from there. It did. There'll be Distinguished Service Crosses for the pilot and crew.

A "terrible problem and responsibility" is the selecting of targets. The Japs have placed prisoners of war camps near all their vital points. It was not believed they had any at Hiroshima. Moreover, although Hiroshima had a big civilian population and they would have desired to avoid that, it also was an area heavily populated at a distance that would be within sight and sound of the blast and flames. They wanted it to be seen and heard and felt by as many survivors as possible.

Reason for releasing the bomb at 2,000 feet is that it has a wider destructive area. Even booby trap bombs are set into the earth upon springs, so that they leap into the air and explode above ground, thus wreaking their destruction horizontally. So in the case of the atom bomb.

Is the manufacturing secret held exclusively by U.S. and Britain? "I can't talk about that. That's for the Higher Level." (By which he meant to say that if the Russians are told, or have been told, it's not the Military but the White House.)

Are we set to drop another bomb? Another will be dropped tomorrow (Wednesday) night.

Marshall thinks the Germans were well along with the atom bomb, in a Norway location, when the Allies learned of it. "We went in and bombed the place, killing a lot of their scientists because we knew where they were."

Good story:

Major General [Leslie Richard] Groves, who headed one section of the atomic bombs project, came in to see Marshall some time ago.

Marshall was very busy figuring and writing and didn't look up for some little while. Then Groves handed him a one-page memorandum telling how – by spending $100,000,000 more than the $2,000,000,000 already appropriated – the production of the bombs could probably be trebled.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Marshall said he hesitated only a moment. He thought, Gosh, we've already committed Two Billions. Here's another request for a whole One Hundred Million Dollars more. But, he reflected, having sunk that much, if it was true production could be trebled by spending relatively a little more – Well, OK.

As General Groves started to leave, Marshall started laughing and yelled after him:

"Know what I was doing while you were waiting to get me to Okay spending that Hundred Million Dollars more? I was making out a check to the Burpee Seed Co. for $3.45."

Better story:

Last night on the Washington news desk, I hear, somebody cracked: "I'll bet [Kent Cooper, AP Executive Director] KC is figuring out a way to apply the atomic principle to Wirephoto, or sumpin."

PM

7. (B3/f37)

August 9, 1945

CONFIDENTIAL

Mr. Kent Cooper
Executive Director
New York City

Dear Mr. Cooper:

Tony Vaccaro tells a number of stories about his experiences at Potsdam, the best being these:

1. Roy Porter of NBC got out a Potsdam broadcast, picked up by us and front-paged everywhere, saying some of the most important people at the Potsdam conference had departed suddenly for an unannounced destination. There was all sorts of speculation here in the press and radio, most of the speculators thinking it meant our military people had gone to Moscow to confer with the Russians on the strategy with the Japs.

The truth is it was just some of the Secret Service agents flying to Switzerland to buy watches that they could bring back and sell at $600 a throw in Berlin! Some of them brought back thousands of dollars made on such transactions.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

2. You may recall that Drew Pearson and others reported that the reason Stalin was absent from the conference for two days was that the Russians had such a big party celebrating Atlee's win over Churchill that Stalin knocked himself out on Vodka. Stalin really was ill. He's in poor health. As for his feelings about Churchill:

The truth, Truman told Tony, is that the Russians – from Stalin on down – were "just sick" when they heard Churchill had been licked. Truman said that for all their wide variances of views on many things, Stalin and Churchill had developed a personal relationship that was very close and that Stalin was a very disappointed man when Churchill went down. That's the sentimental side. There is a practical side, too:
The Russians want to be the Socialist-Labor movement in Europe; they don't want the British stealing any of their particular show in the ideological lining up of European nationals now taking place.

Sincerely yours,

8. (B3/f37)

8/20 – 45
[Handwritten at top]

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

Admiral of the Fleet Ernest J. King, with a tear in his eye and six beers in his tummy, stood at the door of Phelps Adams' house at midnight last night and said: "I guess this is the last of our meetings, and I can't tell you how much they meant to me. Well, let's don't say it's the last – let's have at least one more get-together. I think I'll be around at least three months, maybe six, before somebody else takes over."

Thus wound up what, for me, have been the best "off-record" meetings of the war.

All of us – Ben McKelway, Barney Nover, Mark Childs, Ray Swing, Ernest Lindley, Bert Andrews, Phelps Adams, Jim Wright, Dewey Fleming, Dick Wilson and myself – patted him on the back as he started for his car and assured him we never would forget his meetings with us, and that we would plan a good party very soon.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - -

Following are the highlights of what Admiral King told us in a four-hour session:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

SURRENDER NEGOTIATIONS

It will be a week or ten days before the final surrender arrangements can be made. These are just discussions at Manila. President Truman has let it be known that he wants the surrender signed aboard the battleship Missouri. Whether MacArthur will do what the Commander in Chief wants remains to be seen. MacArthur, as Supreme Commander, will sign first for all those fighting against Japan. Admiral Nimitz will sign for the United States, Admiral Frazer for Britain, and representatives of Moscow and Chungking are yet to be named.

Presumably, some officer will be named to take MacArthur's Manila responsibilities when MacArthur moves on to Japan, since MacArthur "can't wear too many hats at once, or can he?"

We'll prepare for anything when we go in to occupy Japan. Our troops will go in with full battle equipment at probably a half dozen different points. Our big ships will lie well off shore, for maximum safety, and besides, careful advance mine-sweeping light craft will make reconnaissance voyages just prior to the landings.

JAPANESE WAR

We had planned and were ready to fight the Japanese another year. Our strategy called for a landing by approximately a quarter of a million men on southern Kyushu November 1. On March 1, 1946, we were to have staged another landing in the Tokyo plain.

After the Japanese gave notice of surrender, Admiral King and one of his right hand men, Admiral Edwards, were having a smoke and Admiral Edwards said:

"We were all set to carry on the war like clock work. Now that it's ended, we don't know the first thing about what to do."

JAP FEELERS

By "magic" – meaning the breaking of the Japanese code so that we could understand their radio messages – we knew all about Tokyo's efforts to get peace. Early in July a Tokyo message instructed the Japanese ambassador at Moscow to arrange for Prince Konoye to visit Stalin. The Japanese ambassador messaged back that there wasn't any use to try to get the Russians to try to mediate the war. Thereupon he was bawled out by Tokyo and told to try to see Molotov. To make a long story short, Molotov kept putting him off. Finally, a few days after the atomic bomb, a message was picked up in which the Jap ambassador at Moscow exultantly advised Tokyo that he had a date with Molotov. Of course, as everyone knows now, that was when Molotov gave him his walking papers.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In other words, the Russians never had anything to do with the Japs except to snub them in their efforts to get the Russians to mediate.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN

Asked how Truman got along at Potsdam, Admiral King, who is not a demonstrative fellow, banged his beer glass down on the table and ejaculated "Tops!" The first day at Potsdam Truman, who was presiding, had three or four proposals on the table before anyone else could get a word in. These included plans for the overall direction of the policy of the various occupation forces in Germany and also a proposal for a Council of Foreign Ministers.

THE ATOMIC BOMB

King said he never heard of anything in his life that he so much wanted to forget. He said he just couldn't evaluate its potentialities in warfare. That it may completely change everything, both from the point of view of the Army and the Navy, he is not prepared to say; but he obviously thinks that's possible.

THE PEARL HARBOR DISASTER

Admiral King says he hopes there will be a court martial of General Short and Admiral Kimmel. He says he believes Admiral Kimmel was guilty of "an error in judgment," but that he is not guilty of anything under military law. King obviously feels much of the blame rests upon Roosevelt, since he insists they did not have the information at Pearl Harbor that was available in Washington. In other words, I believe King supports the Republican view that had the White House urgently alerted Short and Kimmel on what was going on, they would have taken precautionary measures.

THE RUSSIANS

King is one of those who feels the Russians constitute the only real threat to the United States and future world peace. He is opposed to giving them anything in the military line. For example, with the British, he wants all the German submarines sunk rather than have any of them turned over to the Russians. He does not believe they were told anything about the atomic bomb beyond that we were going to introduce a new explosive. So far as he is concerned, he hopes they never learn anything about it.

9. (B3/f37)

August 22, 1945

1530

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

CONFIDENTIAL

Mr. Kent Cooper
Executive Director
New York City

Dear Mr. Cooper:

I saw President Truman for about twenty minutes today. He was very cordial and talked about a lot of things before he got around to asking me the subject of my visit. I told him I had two things I wanted to discuss: (1) The matter of the statement in the World's Press News of London that American officials discriminated in favor of American newspapermen here; the other, the matter of a world free press – a subject with which I knew he was familiar, starting with his conversation with you at Chicago during the Democratic National Convention.

As to the first, Mr. Truman immediately said all newspapermen have equal access to news, so far as he is concerned, in Washington. He commented that any number of foreign newspapermen show up at all of his regular news conferences. I asked him if I could quote him and he agreed. I then suggested that he hoped American newspapermen would reciprocally receive the same privileges elsewhere throughout the world. He agreed to that quotation also, and we so reported in a little story today.

In discussing the second, and important point of my visit, I asked him if he felt confident the Russians would make good on permitting American newspapermen freely to report in the Balkans and other Russian-occupied areas. He said, although not too positively, he did believe they would make good. I then said "Why don't you do something that I believe would push the whole thing along?"

1. Declare that all vanquished nations must give their people a free press as we know it in the U. S. A.

2. Declare that any nation which requires help in reestablishing its importance, as a condition, guarantee a free press as we know it.

3. Leave to the Press the missionary work involved in other countries.

He said he just couldn't. He said that Mr. Roosevelt's policy had been that to which he now adheres; namely, that we shall not interfere in the domestic affairs of any of these countries – we will stay with them and help then get on their feet and get a government we can recognize. Then, regardless of what government, provided it represents popular will, they may establish, we will keep hands off.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Moreover, he admitted that he felt if he raises such an issue now it would immediately bring difficulties. It was obvious that he meant Russian difficulties. He insists, though, that he got on all right with Stalin at Potsdam and he insists also that he has emphasized and reemphasized to the Russians that our agreements with them constitute, as he puts it, "a two-way street."

Mr. Truman said further on this subject: "Molotov sat right here where you are sitting when he came complaining about the United Nations Conference at San Francisco. Molotov asked me if we were going to live up to the agreements made there. I said to Molotov: 'Are you going to live up to the agreements you made at Yalta? This agreeing business is no one-way street.'"

Because our policy is what it is does not mean that there is no hope for what you want to do. Others here are working, and they will have Truman's benediction along two lines:

1. International agreements clarifying communications problems.

2. International agreements, perhaps tied in with the communications matter, in the field of freedom of information.

Then, too, it still is not beyond the realm of possibility that communications and information may be covered one way or another in the peace treaties. The Council of Foreign Ministers meets at London next month; it will deal, among other things, with plans for the peace treaties.

My next step will be to see the Secretary of State, when there is favorable time, and discuss with him what may be done in fields of communications and information on which the State Department actually has worked. Byrnes is getting ready to go to London now.

Sincerely yours,

XIII
Paul Miller's Confidential Files

1946

1. (B3/f37)

March 4, 1946

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC
AJG

Averell Harriman [Ambassador to the Soviet Union from 23 October 1943 to 24 January 1946] has returned from Russia with even greater concern about Russia than he expressed when he first voiced his disillusionment in an off-the-record session at San Francisco in May 1945.

Here are high lights of opinion he expressed at a confidential session with several of us here:

Russia has embarked upon a course of unilateral action and is interested in UNO principally as a means of furthering its own ends.

Russia constitutes a greater threat to the democratic way of life today than Hitler did at the start of his aggressions.

The Russian program follows the Hitler pattern of going as far as possible without actually getting into war, for the moment.

The Russians regard everything we stand for as in direct and total conflict with their own practices, life and aims.

The United States must be ready for any eventuality.

We should offer Russia the six billion dollar loan requested, but we should hedge it with so many political and economic conditions that it would be impossible for Russia to accept.

Russia is so backward industrially that, regardless of what the scientists say, it cannot develop an atomic bomb for five or ten years.

The United States Government should (as it now is beginning to do) stop holding out the facts of Russian aggression; should protest publicly, and be prepared to back up protests, against every act – such as the continued maintenance of Red troops in Manchuria and Iran, and the threats through the puppet, Tito.

The United States Government should immediately begin an intensive effort within our own borders to round up communists who are working against the United States. (He did not name any names).

The United States should bear down against Russia now, because, while Russia is maintaining and strengthening its armed forces, it still is in no shape for a major war. But Russia will be, if given time and allowed to go ahead at the expense of the democracies as Russia is doing today.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Harriman says he does not propose to make all his views public now, and that he may not do so at all. For the moment, he believes he has the ear of both Truman and [Secretary of State (3 July 1945 to 21 January 1947) James Francis] Byrnes. He thinks he can be most effective by attempting to work with the Government. Besides, he – like those at the top here in Washington – is in doubt how strong a policy the country at large would stand for. He has some trips scheduled, on which he hopes to be able to form an opinion as to the temper of public thinking on the Russian question.

-2-

- - - - - - -

To put the foregoing in some balance: When Harriman came back here to make a speech for Roosevelt in October 1944, he was almost as pro-Russian as Joe Davies still is. When I talked with him then, along with some of the same people who have now met with him here again, he was scornful of any suggestion that the United States should make a few demands of its own. He insisted that all we needed to do was "cooperate" to "get along with the Russians."

Harriman's disillusionment stems from the Yalta Conference, where, as is now clear, Roosevelt was taken in. Harriman says that within two weeks after the Yalta Conference, the Russians were utterly ignoring solemn commitments made there on matters pertaining to access to certain information, and handling of displaced persons and prisoners.

PM

Cold War Journalist: Paul Miller from Truman to Carter, 1945-1979

1. 1945

   a. Directed AP staff at UN Organization Conference in San Francisco (April 25-June 26)

   b. (B3/f42)
   San Francisco U.N. Conference Clippings & Photographs

   c. (B3/f42)
   "Assignment San Francisco"
   (PHOTOS: A. Vandenberg, A. Gromyko, et al.)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

From five world capitals, Associated Press diplomatic news reporters converged on San Francisco on April 25 to bring to the world news of the momentous United Nations security conference.
During the convention session, Jack Bell, Washington's political news editor and head of the Senate staff, saw a messenger go down the aisle to Secretary Stettinius. Next to the Secretary was Senator Connally, vice chairman of the American delegation, and chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations committee. Stettinius and Connally conversed briefly, and then both left.

Bell ran downstairs, meeting Connally at the door. Of course, he knows Connally intimately. They talked for several minutes in the street. Bell dashed to AP's convention bureau in the Veteran's building, where AGM Miller from Washington was in charge, and Washington News editor W. L. Beale on the desk.

Bell said he had been told the Germans had surrendered unconditionally, and an announcement was expected momentarily. He pounded out a bulletin. Miller and Beale considered it. Here was a story from one of AP's greatest reporters, from the next to the top man in the American delegation. (p. 4).

High on the [United Nations] conference agenda was the matter of free interchange of news among nations—a subject to which KC has devoted much time and interest in the belief that it is one of the keys to a lasting world peace. (PHOTO, upper left, p. 5).
Before the [United Nations] conference opened, newsmen ran into difficulties with state department employees who tried unsuccessfully to put a gag on members of the American delegation.

Next day, Bell and Paul Miller obtained from Homer Byington of the state department assurances that there would be no further efforts to bar reporters from the fifth floor of the Fairmont [Hotel] and no requirement that reporters make engagements with the delegates, through state department press officers, as also had been discussed. (pp. 5, 30).

d. (B3/f42)

The New York Times Clippings on U.N. Conference
April 25-June 27,1945

1. April 25, 1945

46 NATIONS READY
TO ORGANIZE PEACE
ONLY POLES ABSENT

Stettinius Arriving for Opening
Today, Sets Keynote for Forming World Agency

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

DETERMINED MOOD NOTED

Conference ‘Must Not Fail’
This Time, He Says—Decision
On Poland Up to Stalin

2. April 25, 1945

MOLOTOFF ARRIVES,
SILENT, AT PARLEY

With Harriman, Who Meets
Him and Gromyko, He Avoids
Official Hotel

PHOTO:
A RUSSIAN DELEGATE ARRIVES FOR MEETING
Caption:
Foreign Commissar Vyacheslaff M. Molotoff tipping his hat to W. Averell Harriman, United States Ambassador to Moscow, who was waiting for him at the airport at San Francisco. Associated Press Wirephoto

3. April 25, 1945

TRUMAN WILL OPEN THE PARLEY TODAY

4. April 25, 1945

STETTINIUS FIXES
PARLEY STAFF JOBS

Allocation of Responsibility
Among Our Delegates at San Francisco Announced

5. April 26, 1945

JUSTICE PUT FIRST

We Will Bow Only to That ‘Power’ the President
Tells Delegates

ASKS A TRUE PEACE

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Above Personal Interest
—Stettinius, Warren
Welcome Visitors

[Texts of President Truman's and other addresses, Page 4.]

6. April 26, 1945

TRUMAN'S APPEAL
OPENS CONFERENCE

7. April 26, 1945

TEXTS of ADDRESSES at OPENING OF UNITED NATIONS
CONFERENCE in SAN FRANCISCO
President Truman
Secretary Stettinius
Governor Warren
Mayor Lapham

8.

PHOTO:
THE PRESIDENT SPEAKS TO THE CONFERENCE
Caption:
Mr. Truman at the White House broadcasting his message to the delegates assembled at San Francisco Associated Press Wirephoto

9. April 26, 1945

EGYPTIANS SEEK LARGER COUNCILS

They Argue That Interests of Smaller Nations Would Be Better Protected

10. April 26, 1945

WORLD DELEGATES
FOR LABOR MEET

Conference Opens at Oakland
With 5 Nations Represented —Group Strife Mars Start

JURISTS ARRIVE

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

WITH COURT PLAN

Their Proposal for Reconstitution of The Hague Court Seems Favored by Conference

11. April 27, 1945

Molotoff Says Russia Is Willing To Amend Dumbarton Oaks Plan

By Russell Porter

Special to The New York Times.

12. April 27, 1945

Speeches of Stettinius, Molotoff, Eden And Soong Before the United Nations Conference

PHOTO:
FOREIGN MINISTERS OF SOUTHERN NATIONS MEET
Caption:
Juan Jose Serrato (left) of Uruguay greeting Ezequiel Padilla of Mexico at the opening session of the United Nations Security Conference at San Francisco yesterday. Associated Press Wirephoto

13. April 27, 1945

MOLOTOFF OBJECTS

He Opposes Stettinius as Permanent Chairman Demands There Be 4

BUT PREDICTS AMITY

And Says Polish Issue Can Be Settled—Stettinius, Eden Speak

14. April 27, 1945

Transcript Of Molotoff Interview

Million Parley Stamps Sold on First Day of Issue

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

15. April 27, 1945

GOOD FAITH PLEDGED
AT PARLEY OPENING

Spokesmen for 4 Sponsoring Powers Heard Before an Audience of 3,000

16. April 27, 1945

‘LITTLE PEOPLE’ PUT HOPES IN PARLEY

Many of Them Are Skeptical,
However, That Conference Will Succeed in Halting Wars

BOOTBLACK IS OPTIMISTIC

Porter Sums Up General Feeling by Saying, ‘I Don’t Know
What to Think About It’

17. April 28, 1945

MOLOTOFF CENTER OF FLOOR GROUPS

More Delegates Seek Out Soviet Commissar Than Any Other Seated in Orchestra

SMALL NATIONS TELL VIEWS

Belgian and Brazilian Leaders
Stress That Size Is Not Sole Factor in Security

By JOHN H. CRIDER
Special to The New York Times.

18. April 28, 1945

Parley Sessions
Opened to Press

19. April 28, 1945

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

RUSSIAN ISSUES OUT

Plea for 4 Chairmen Won but Stettinius Will Head
Vital Committees

EQUALITY CALLED AIM

Heads of 14 Delegations
Are Named as members of Executive Group

By JAMES B. RESTON

20. April 28, 1945

FRENCH POSITION
IS STILL IN DOUBT

It Still Seems Likely She Will Join Great Powers Instead of Championing the Small

21. April 28, 1945

BIG ISSUES UNITE
CROWN DELEGATES

But Britain and Dominions Are Not Operating Their Six
Votes as a Group

22. April 28, 1945

MOLOTOFF IN PLEA
FOR AUTONOMIES

Commissar Tells Status of White Russia and Ukraine,
Says Envoys Are Not Chosen
By LAWRENCE E. DAVIES
Special to The New York Times.

23. April 29, 1945

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

RUSSIANS DEMAND
IMMEDIATE SEATING
OF TWO REPUBLICS

Latin-Americans Then Insist
That Argentina Be Admitted —Settlement Is Likely

PEACE TALK STIRS PARLEY

Small Countries Find the Big 4
Striving to Speed Actions
Before V-E Day Comes

By JAMES B. RESTON
Special to The New York Times.

24. April 29, 1945

For World Peace
The Nations Gather

25. April 29, 1945

CONFERENCE MOVES TOWARD ITS REAL PROBLEMS

Russians, Having Shown Their Hand,
May Cooperate From Now On

By JAMES B. RESTON

26. April 29, 1945

BIRTH OF NEW LEAGUE
UNLIKE 1919 PROCEDURE

Then War Was Over and Issues Fixed
Whereas Now War Continues and Peace Terms Are Unknown

PROSPECTS CONSIDERED GOOD

By EDWIN L. JAMES

27. April 30, 1945

BIG POWERS SCAN

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

4 OAKS CHANGES
PROPOSED BY U.S.

Revising of Charter by Later
Parley and Wider Scope for Assembly Are Emphasized

LEAGUE FUNCTIONS KEPT

Soviet-Latin Trade on Bids to Argentina and Lublin
Reported Sought

By JAMES B. RESTON
Special to The New York Times.

28. April 30, 1945

WILSON FORGOTTEN
AT SAN FRANCISCO

Masaryk of Czechoslovakia Is
First to Mention Our World War I President

By EDWIN L. JAMES
Special to The New York Times.

29. April 30, 1945

MASS FOR PARLEY
ATTENDED BY 10,000

‘World Is Waiting for Gestures of Unselfishness’ Throng at Auditorium Is Told

30. April 30, 1945

WORLD COURT PLAN
LOOMS AS CERTAIN

Deep-Seated Differences Are Lacking Among Delegates on General Judicial Aim

By LAWRENCE E. DAVIES
Special to The New York Times.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

31. May 1, 1945

PRAVDA IS HOPEFUL
PARLEY ENDS ROWS

Says Problems Facing Delegates Are 'Not Insurmountable,' Attacks Pessimists

32. May 1, 1945

Molotoff Appeals to the Press
In Fight to Aid 'Lublin Poles'

He Puts United States 'On Spot' by Asking if Argentina Changed to Democracy After Verbal Blast by Roosevelt

By LAWRENCE E. DAVIES
Special to The New York Times.

33. May 1, 1945

ROOSEVELT CALLED
'SPIRIT OF PARLEY'

Chinese Paper Says Success Is Assured if Every Delegate Remembers Late President

34. May 1, 1945

MOLOTOFF'S MOVE
DISRUPTS SESSION

Most of Time Consumed by His Demand to Delay Argentina Bid and Latin Opposition

LUBLIN HIT AS PARALLEL

Support for Russia Dwindles To 4 Votes in Tense Drama of the Final Count

35. May 1, 1945

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PARLEY, 31-4, VOTES
TO SEAT ARGENTINA;
MOLOTOFF BEATEN

Fight on Proposal Carried to Open Floor After Its Adoption in Two Committees

POLISH EXCLUSION STANDS

Russian Links Issues in Asking
Delay on Latin Nation—White
Russia and Ukraine In

By JAMES B. RESTON
Special to The New York Times.

36. May 1, 1945

LONDON POLES SEND
MESSAGE TO PARLEY

Exiled Government Asks for Amendments to Dumbarton
Oaks Proposals

BROAD 'SECURITY' SOUGHT

Also at San Francisco, Krzycki, Slav Congress Head, Tells of Polish Labor Bid

By JOHN H. CRIDER
Special to The New York Times.

37. May 2, 1945

BIG 3 CHAIRMEN
SEATED TOGETHER

Their Appearance at the First Night Plenary Session Stirs
Throng of Spectators

38. May 2, 1945

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PRESS BAN LIFTED
FOR U.S. DELEGATES

39. May 2, 1945

POLISH ISSUE CLOUD
CASTS SHADOW AFAR

Delegates at Conference Weigh Molotoff's Fight for Warsaw
Group and Its Implications

By EDWIN L. JAMES
Special to The New York Times.

40. May 2. 1945

New Peace Era Visioned

Receptive Spirit to Soviet Views Suggested
Lest She Withdraw From Building Peace

By ARTHUR KROCK
Special to The New York Times.

41. May 2, 1945

SMUTS EULOGIZES
WILSON AT PARLEY

South Africa's Elder Statesman
Says lessons Since 1919
Will Help Us Now

42. May 2, 1945

VETERAN HEAD ASKS
PARLEY 'POKER' END

43. May 2, 1945

MOLOTOFF EASES
PARLEY TENSION;
NEW MOVES BEGUN

Russian Says Country Will Cooperate in World Plan

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Despite Argentina issue

4 COMMISSIONS SET UP

They Will Deal With Council,
Assembly, Court and Some General Problems

By JAMES B. RESTON
Special to The New York Times.

44. May 2, 1945

SMALLER NATIONS
RECEIVE KEY POSTS

Belgium, South Africa, Norway and Venezuela Are to Head
Four Major Commissions

By RUSSELL PORTER
Special to The New York Times.

45. May 2, 1945

FIVE POWERS WEIGH
TRUSTEE PROJECTS

British and Americans Are Said to Differ on Programs for Administering Base Areas

By JOHN H. CRIDER
Special to The New York Times.

46. May 3, 1945

HINTS FRANCE ASKS
MAJOR-POWER ROLE

Bidault Tells Press That Since World Parley Is On, All Nations
Are Now Its Sponsors

47. May 3, 1945

CONFERENCE TALKS
STRESS UNITY PLEA

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Ministers of Latin-American Countries, Norway, Yugoslavia and Syria Voice Hopes

PHOTO:
BIG THREE LEADERS IN HAPPY MOOD AT SAN FRANCISCO
Caption:
Foreign Commissar Vyacheslaff Molotoff, Secretary of State Edward R. Stettinius Jr. and Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden during Tuesday's session of the United Nations Conference. Associated Press Wirephoto

48. May 5, 1945

RUSSIANS DEMAND
RIGHT TO MAINTAIN
PRESENT ALLIANCES

Molotoff Asks Time to Weigh Vandenberg Idea and Compromise on Bilateral Pacts

OTHERS PLANS ACCEPTED

Big Four Agree on Joint Program for Liberalizing Proposals of Dumbarton Oaks

By JAMES B. RESTON
Special to The New York Times.

49. May 6, 1945
(New York Times Magazine)

San Francisco: Battlefield for Peace

There 46 nations are trying to find something better than an enemy to unite and hold them.

By ANNE O'HARE McCORMICK

50. May 6, 1945

UNCIO Progress

Despite Polish Issue

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

e. (B3/f39)
Editor & Publisher
for
June 2, 1945

"Miller, AP, Optimistic On World Free Press"
By Paul Miller, Assistant General Manager, Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO, May 31—(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)—Here's one man's appraisal of the status of the American crusade for world freedom of information . . . .

51. June 24, 1945

Charter for Peace

UNCIO Ends its Task

53. June 26, 1945

Historic Plenary Session
Approves World Charter

Opera House Throng Cheers Rising Vote of Delegate Chiefs of Fifty United Nations—Signing Follows Today

By LAWRENCE E. DAVIES
Special to The New York Times.

54. June 27, 1945

TRUMAN CLOSES UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE
WITH PLEA TO TRANSLATE CHARTER INTO DEEDS;
B-29'S KEEP UP ASSAULT ON HONSHU PLANTS

PHOTO:
PRESIDENT WITNESSES SIGNING OF SECURITY PACT
Caption:
Mr. Truman looking on as Secretary of State Stettinius affixes his name to the document

Nation After Nation Sees Era
Of Peace in Signing Charter

By LAWRENCE E. DAVIES
Special to The New York Times.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

TRUMAN WILL HAND
CHARTER TO SENATE

President Will Speak Before
Chamber Monday—Plans for Ratification Pushed

By C. P. TRUSSELL
Special to The New York Times.

55. (B3/f37)
*****

(June 1945)

NY (C.A.J.) (750)

Following exchange, so handled at the request of the State Department after we sought an explanation of how the new world organization would promote news freedom, is being incorporated into a story which will be used by or before Thursday. Sending it in this way for your records and so that you can give it to Ed & Pub if wish.

- - - -

Letter from P.M. to [Archibald] MacLeish [assistant director of the Office of War Information, Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs], "Dear Arch: "American newspapermen, who are leading the crusade for world freedom of information, will want to know, I am sure, just how it is expected that the proposed new world organization will go about promoting this crusade. The Associated Press would like to carry a statement from you on this subject, now that the Charter has been completed here. I write to you, rather than to the Secretary, because he told me that you have the ball on this subject in the State Department. Many thanks. SY"

Reply form MacLeish:

"The Secretary of State as chairman of the American delegation has stated his belief and the belief of the delegation that "freedom of speech is one of the fundamental freedoms referred to" in the Charter, and "that freedom of speech encompasses freedom of the press, freedom of communication, and freedom of exchange of information" . . . .

56. (B3/f37)

August 7, 1945

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC
AJG

General Marshall called an off-record conference this morning. The bait was the promise of a discussion of the atom bomb, first announced yesterday. The real reason for calling was to argue the Army's position that it needs all 7,000,000 men to continue the war and can't release any coal miners, or farmers – although it has released railroaders.

There were no new reasons, 'though one good quote: "If I know war, the figures (as to number needed) are correct."

So, to the bait; the atom bomb.

General Marshall gave these details:

The bomb dropped on Hiroshima was so big that only a B-29 could be used. The actual weight of the detonating material was around 25 pounds. But the machinery for setting it off, the housing and so-on bring up the weight. This was a lot bigger than the bomb used in the Desert experiment that was heard 180 miles around last month.

We can make even bigger ones – and are.

Big trouble is in picking targets. Marshall thinks reconnaissance will show Hiroshima literally shot to hell. Said the reason we still hadn't anything definite from the Japs today was that – "as in the case of the famous Galveston flood" – it simply hadn't been possible for anyone to get into the area, a very big area, which he confidently believed had been burned and blown off the face of the Earth. For hours, he said, after an atomic bomb blast the area would be so charged that an automobile running into it would "melt under you."

The Hiroshima bomb was dropped from between 30,000 and 40,000 feet and detonated at 2,000 feet. About 50 seconds elapsed between the time of release from the B-29 and the time of detonation. Thus, the B-29 had that much time to get away from there. It did. There'll be Distinguished Service Crosses for the pilot and crew.

A "terrible problem and responsibility" is the selecting of targets. The Japs have placed prisoners of war camps near all their vital points. It was not believed they had any at Hiroshima. Moreover, although Hiroshima had a big civilian population and they would have desired to avoid that, it also was an area heavily populated at a distance that would be within sight and sound of the blast and flames. They wanted it to be seen and heard and felt by as many survivors as possible.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Reason for releasing the bomb at 2,000 feet is that it has a wider destructive area. Even booby trap bombs are set into the earth upon springs, so that they leap into the air and explode above ground, thus wreaking their destruction horizontally. So in the case of the atom bomb.

Is the manufacturing secret held exclusively by U.S. and Britain? “I can’t talk about that. That’s for the Higher Level.” (By which he meant to say that if the Russians are told, or have been told, it’s not the Military but the White House.)

Are we set to drop another bomb? Another will be dropped tomorrow (Wednesday) night.

Marshall thinks the Germans were well along with the atom bomb, in a Norway location, when the Allies learned of it. “We went in and bombed the place, killing a lot of their scientists because we knew where they were.”

Good story:

Major General Groves, who headed one section of the atomic bombs project, came in to see Marshall some time ago.

Marshall was very busy figuring and writing and didn’t look up for some little while. Then Groves handed him a one-page memorandum telling how – by spending $100,000,000 more than the $2,000,000,000 already appropriated – the production of the bombs could probably be trebled.

Marshall said he hesitated only a moment. He thought, Gosh, we’ve already committed Two Billions. Here’s another request for a whole One Hundred Million Dollars more. But, he reflected, having sunk that much, if it was true production could be trebled by spending relatively a little more – Well, OK.

As General Groves started to leave, Marshall started laughing and yelled after him:

“Know what I was doing while you were waiting to get me to Okay spending that Hundred Million Dollars more? I was making out a check to the Burpee Seed Co. for $3.45.”

Better story:

Last night on the Washington news desk, I hear, somebody cracked: “I’ll bet [Kent Cooper, AP Executive Director] KC is figuring out a way to apply the atomic principle to Wirephoto, or ‘sumpin.”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PM

57. (B3/f37)

August 9, 1945

CONFIDENTIAL

Mr. Kent Cooper
Executive Director
New York City

Dear Mr. Cooper:

Tony Vaccaro tells a number of stories about his experiences at Potsdam, the best being these:

1. Roy Porter of NBC got out a Potsdam broadcast, picked up by us and front-paged everywhere, saying some of the most important people at the Potsdam conference had departed suddenly for an unannounced destination. There was all sorts of speculation here in the press and radio, most of the speculators thinking it meant our military people had gone to Moscow to confer with the Russians on the strategy with the Japs.

The truth is it was just some of the Secret Service agents flying to Switzerland to buy watches that they could bring back and sell at $600 a throw in Berlin! Some of them brought back thousands of dollars made on such transactions.

2. You may recall that Drew Pearson and others reported that the reason Stalin was absent from the conference for two days was that the Russians had such a big party celebrating Atlee's win over Churchill that Stalin knocked himself out on Vodka. Stalin really was ill. He's in poor health. As for his feelings about Churchill:

The truth, Truman told Tony, is that the Russians – from Stalin on down – were "just sick" when they heard Churchill had been licked. Truman said that for all their wide variances of views on many things, Stalin and Churchill had developed a personal relationship that was very close and that Stalin was a very disappointed man when Churchill went down. That's the sentimental side. There is a practical side, too:
The Russians want to be the Socialist-Labor movement in Europe; they don't want the British stealing any of their particular show in the ideological lining up of European nationals now taking place.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Sincerely yours,

58. (B3/f37)

8/20 – 45
(Handwritten at top)

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

Admiral of the Fleet Ernest J. King, with a tear in his eye and six beers in his tummy, stood at the door of Phelps Adams' house at midnight last night and said: "I guess this is the last of our meetings, and I can't tell you how much they meant to me. Well, let's don't say it's the last – let's have at least one more get-together. I think I'll be around at least three months, maybe six, before somebody else takes over."

Thus wound up what, for me, have been the best "off-record" meetings of the war.

All of us – Ben McKelway, Barney Nover, Mark Childs, Ray Swing, Ernest Lindley, Bert Andrews, Phelps Adams, Jim Wright, Dewey Fleming, Dick Wilson and myself – patted him on the back as he started for his car and assured him we never would forget his meetings with us, and that we would plan a good party very soon.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - -

Following are the highlights of what Admiral King told us in a four-hour session:

SURRENDER NEGOTIATIONS

It will be a week or ten days before the final surrender arrangements are can be made. These are just discussions at Manila. President Truman has let it be known that he wants the surrender signed aboard the battleship Missouri. Whether MacArthur will do what the Commander in Chief wants remains to be seen. MacArthur, as Supreme Commander, will sign first for all those fighting against Japan. Admiral Nimitz will sign for the United States, Admiral Frazer for Britain, and representatives of Moscow and Chungking are yet to be named.

Presumably, some officer will be named to take MacArthur's Manila responsibilities when MacArthur moves on to Japan, since MacArthur can't wear too many hats at once, or can he?

We'll prepare for anything when we go in to occupy Japan. Our troops will go in with full battle equipment at probably a half dozen different points. Our big ships will lie well off shore, for maximum safety, and besides, careful advance mine-sweeping light craft will make reconnaissance voyages just prior to the landings.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

JAPANESE WAR

We had planned and were ready to fight the Japanese another year. Our strategy called for a landing by approximately a quarter of a million men on southern Kyushu November 1. On March 1, 1946, we were to have staged another landing in the Tokyo plain.

After the Japanese gave notice of surrender, Admiral King and one of his right hand men, Admiral Edwards, were having a smoke and Admiral Edwards said: "We were all set to carry on the war like clock work [sic]. Now that it's ended, we don't know the first thing about what to do."

JAP FEELERS

By "magic" – meaning the breaking of the Japanese code so that we could understand their radio messages – we knew all about Tokyo's efforts to get peace. Early in July a Tokyo message instructed the Japanese ambassador at Moscow to arrange for Prince Konoye to visit Stalin. The Japanese ambassador messaged back that there wasn't any use to try to get the Russians to try to mediate the war. Thereupon he was bawled out by Tokyo and told to try to see Molotov. To make a long story short, Molotov kept putting him off. Finally, a few days after the atomic bomb, a message was picked up in which the Jap ambassador at Moscow exultantly advised Tokyo that he had a date with Molotov. Of course, as everyone knows now, that was when Molotov gave him his walking papers.

In other words, the Russians never had anything to do with the Japs except to snub them in their efforts to get the Russians to mediate.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN

Asked how Truman got along at Potsdam, Admiral King, who is not a demonstrative fellow, banged his beer glass down on the table and ejaculated "Tops!" The first day at Potsdam Truman, who was presiding, had three or four proposals on the table before anyone else could get a word in. These included plans for the overall direction of the policy of the various occupation forces in Germany and also a proposal for a Council of Foreign Ministers.

THE ATOMIC BOMB

King said he never heard of anything in his life that he so much wanted to forget. He said he just couldn't evaluate its potentialities in warfare. That it may completely change everything, both from the point of view of the Army and the Navy, he is not prepared to say; but he obviously thinks that's possible.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

THE PEARL HARBOR DISASTER

Admiral King says he hopes there will be a court martial of General Short and Admiral Kimmel. He says he believes Admiral Kimmel was guilty of "an error in judgment," but that he is not guilty of anything under military law. King obviously feels much of the blame rests upon Roosevelt, since he insists they did not have the information at Pearl Harbor that was available in Washington. In other words, I believe King supports the Republican view that had the White House urgently alerted Short and Kimmel on what was going on, they would have taken precautionary measures.

THE RUSSIANS

King is one of those who feels [sic] the Russians constitute the only real threat to the United States and future world peace. He is opposed to giving them anything in the military line. For example, with the British, he wants all the German submarines sunk rather than have any of them turned over to the Russians. He does not believe they were told anything about the atomic bomb beyond that we were going to introduce a new explosive. So far as he is concerned, he hopes they never learn anything about it.

59. (B3/f37)

August 22, 1945

CONFIDENTIAL

Mr. Kent Cooper
Executive Director
New York City

Dear Mr. Cooper:

I saw President Truman for about twenty minutes today. He was very cordial and talked about a lot of things before he got around to asking me the subject of my visit. I told him I had two things I wanted to discuss: (1) The matter of the statement in the World's Press News of London that American officials discriminated in favor of American newspapermen here; the other, the matter of a world free press – a subject with which I knew he was familiar, starting with his conversation with you at Chicago during the Democratic National Convention.

As to the first, Mr. Truman immediately said all newspapermen have equal access to news, so far as he is concerned, in Washington. He commented that any number of foreign newspapermen show up at all of his regular news conferences. I asked him if I could quote him and he agreed. I then suggested that he hoped American newspapermen would reciprocally receive the same privileges elsewhere throughout the world. He agreed to that quotation also, and we so reported in a little story today.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In discussing the second, and important point of my visit, I asked him if he felt confident the Russians would make good on permitting American newspapermen freely to report in the Balkans and other Russian-occupied areas. He said, although not too positively, he did believe they would make good. I then said "Why don't you do something that I believe would push the whole thing along?"

1. Declare that all vanquished nations must give their people a free press as we know it in the U. S. A.

2. Declare that any nation which requires help in reestablishing its importance, as a condition, guarantee a free press as we know it.

3. Leave to the Press the missionary work involved in other countries.

He said he just couldn't. He said that Mr. Roosevelt's policy had been that to which he now adheres; namely, that we shall not interfere in the domestic affairs of any of these countries – we will stay with them and help then get on their feet and get a government we can recognize. Then, regardless of what government, provided it represents popular will, they may establish, we will keep hands off.

Moreover, he admitted that he felt if he raises such an issue now it would immediately bring difficulties. It was obvious that he meant Russian difficulties. He insists, though, that he got on all right with Stalin at Potsdam and he insists also that

He has emphasized and reemphasized to the Russians that our agreements with them constitute, as he puts it, "a two-way street."

Mr. Truman said further on this subject: "Molotov sat right here where you are sitting when he came complaining about the United Nations Conference at San Francisco. Molotov asked me if we were going to live up to the agreements made there. I said to Molotov: 'Are you going to live up to the agreements you made at Yalta? This agreeing business is no one-way street.'"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Because our policy is what it is does not mean that there is no hope for what you want to do. Others here are working, and they will have Truman's benediction along two lines:

1. International agreements clarifying communications problems.

2. International agreements, perhaps tied in with the communications matter, in the field of freedom of information.

Then, too, it still is not beyond the realm of possibility that communications and information may be covered one way or another in the peace treaties. The Council of Foreign Ministers meets at London next month; it will deal, among other things, with plans for the peace treaties.

My next step will be to see the Secretary of State, when there is favorable time, and discuss with him what may be done in fields of communications and information on which the State Department actually has worked. Byrnes is getting ready to go to London now.

Sincerely yours,

f. (B3/f39)

Evening Star
Washington, D.C.
August 23, 1945 (p. 2)

"Truman and Byrnes Reaffirm Attitude on Free Press for World"

. . . Mr. Byrnes said he regarded the Potsdam declaration that the Big Three had no doubt that Allied correspondents would be able to move and report freely throughout Eastern Europe as a definite commitment . . . .

Mr. Truman's views were expressed to Paul Miller, assistant general manager of the Associated Press . . . .

. . . Mr. Byrnes said he has no doubt that Russia will live up to the commitments which he said Premier Stalin made at Berlin to allow reporters to move freely and write without censorship throughout Soviet-dominated Eastern Europe . . . .

g. (B3/f39)

Editor & Publisher
for
August 25, 1945

"Truman Wants Equal Access for Newsmen"
(The following was written especially for Editor & Publisher,

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

by Paul Miller, assistant general manager of the Associated Press, and head of its Washington Bureau).

h. First Round the World Pan American Globester Flight (September 28-October 4)

2. 1949

a. (B3/f56)
*****
Washington Post
May 23, 1949

Rochester Editor
U.S. Delegate to World Meeting

Paul Miller, Rochester (N.Y.) editor, was named yesterday to represent the American Society of Newspaper Editors at the first convention of the International Federation of editors June 14-18 in Amsterdam. He will study whether the society should make permanent its one-year affiliation with the federation.

The federation was formed at Paris last June, aimed at combining working newspapermen of the world to improve journalistic standards and practices and work for "peace and justice."

The ASNE affiliated itself for a year with the federation. Miller, a vice president of the Gannett newspapers, and editor of the Rochester Times-Union, said:

"Frankly, we don't know too much about the possibilities of this international organization. I regard my attendance at the convention as exploratory on behalf of American newspapers. I'm going to reserve opinion until later."

b. (B3/f56)
*****
Washington Evening Star
May 23, 1949

Editors Name Miller
To World Convention

c. (B3/f57)
*****
[Unknown]
[n.d.]

Paul Miller Warns Parley

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Against Curbing of Press

Amsterdam – (AP) – Paul Miller, editor of the Rochester Times-Union and vicepresident of the Gannett Company, yesterday warned against attacks on freedom of the press.

Miller, attending the annual International Conference of Newspaper Publishers in Free Countries as the United States delegate, initiated a resolution aimed at defending the freedom of the press against any attempt at government control in free countries.

He referred specifically to a proposed Dutch government press law on "responsibility of the journalist" which provides for punishment in cases of "false, dishonest or irresponsible writing."

This law, Miller said, would be in direct opposition to the fundamentals of press freedom. He asked the conference to pass a resolution against the proposed statute and against possible similar legislation by other countries.

In this respect, Miller said press freedom also is under attack in Britain. The British delegate said he preferred to see a more general resolution tabled, one that would not refer specifically to Holland. A committee then was named to draft a proposal for presentation today . . . .

d. (B3/f57)
[Unknown]
[n.d.]

Publishers Pass
Miller Resolution
At Meet in Holland

Opposes Governmental Threats to Press
Freedom

Amsterdam – (AP) – The international conference of newspaper publishers resolved yesterday to oppose any threat of government to restrict freedom of the press. The group represents newspaper societies of 12 nations, including the United States.

The resolution, which was adopted unanimously, said the conference opposed "legislative proposals in certain countries which would impede the free flow of news."

It was sponsored by Paul Miller, editor of the Rochester, N. Y., Times-Union, who is representing the American Society of Newspaper Editors. Miller said he was prompted to this action by a proposed Dutch law which would punish journalists for "false, dishonest or irresponsible writing."

The resolution opposed a stated tendency of governments to work in the field of the moral and material interests of the press. It said:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"It is the right of the national newspaper organizations themselves to control the manifold activities of journalism, to maintain the traditional sense of responsibility amongst their members and to defend the moral and material interests of the press."

Countries represented were: Belgium, Denmark, France, Finland, Britain, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, The Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States.

The conference, by a vote of 10-2, decided to support the establishment of an institute of press and information by the United Nations Economic, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

This institute would organize international training of journalists and establish a center of information and documentation on press matters. The British and Italian delegations opposed the measure.

e. (B3/f57)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday Evening, July 2, 1949

Editor Finds Europe
Split on Marshall Plan

Western Europeans are sharply divided in their opinions on the Marshall Plan, the Russians and other aspects of postwar life, Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers and editor of The Times-Union, said today.

Returning to Rochester with Mrs. Miller this morning after a trip to England and the Continent they began June 7, Miller told of greatly divergent views he met in talking with Europeans.

"One will tell you that their recovery is going on apace, that everything is fine and the Marshall Plan is a great help," he said.

"Then another will say that they are living in a fool's paradise and that this is due to the Marshall Plan. Another will say that the Russians will never plan to make war. Still another will oppose this idea."

Attended Amsterdam Convention

Miller packed numerous experiences and broad travel into his trip, which he made primarily as the delegate of the American Society of Newspaper Editors to the first convention of the International Federation of Editors and Publishers in Amsterdam, The Netherlands, June 14-18.

While his detailed report on the results of the convention will be submitted to the ASNE board of directors, he was able to say that the conclave definitely was "one of those things tending to promote better understanding."

Forty editors and publishers, most of them with their wives accompanying them, attended the parley. They learned, Miller said, that they have common problems. In this first convention of its kind, they were able to discuss the problems on an international level.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

One of the common problems, he noted, is increasing costs of operations. He noted that in England and France particularly, and to a lesser degree in Holland, the Scandinavian countries and Belgium, newspapers by necessity are smaller than those in America.

Dutch 'Wonderful Hosts'

Newspaper people met at the convention were hosts to the Millers in both Paris and London.

The Dutch, too, Miller said were "wonderful hosts." He was particularly impressed, he said, with the high regard in which Alan Valentine, president of the University of Rochester on leave as Marshall Plan administrator in The Netherlands, is held in the Dutch capital.

"All spoke highly of him," he said. "He is very popular."

The Millers began their trip by flying from New York to London, where they spent four or five days before flying to Amsterdam, scene of the editors' convention.

Later they flew from Frankfurt-on-Main to Berlin in a coal-carrying American Airlift plane, noting the highly precise schedule on which the airlift is operated and which enables it to carry 8,000 to 9,000 tons of supplies into Berlin daily.

"The schedule, with planes flying from Frankfurt, about three minutes apart," Miller said, "is so precise that if a pilot has to make a pass at the Berlin field without landing on the dot, he turns right around and goes back to Frankfurt because a second landing attempt would interfere with the incoming planes behind him."

Hopelessness in Berlin

Berlin, the Millers found, remains desolate, funereal, full of hopelessness. Recalling that the city was reported to have been 60 per cent destroyed and 90 per cent damaged in the war, they saw little but half-hearted efforts to restore it.

Miller said the blockade and later the railroad strike discouraged bringing materials in, while fears that the Russians will either remain indefinitely or return are discouraging large-scale rehabilitation of shattered buildings and sections of the city.

The Millers were overnight guests of newspaper friends in Berlin before returning to Frankfurt, which they said "is a far different city," with a far different attitude.

Exchange Plan Eyed

They found The Netherlands "in beautiful shape, with green fields and clean cities" but noted that the attitudes of Europeans toward the Russians are governed greatly by the comparatively small distances of Europe. "The average Hollander," Miller pointed out, "is only two hours away from the Russians."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Miller said he brought out of the editors' conference the hope that some day American and European editors can work out an arrangement under which they will exchange men to work on each other's papers for stated periods of time to promote better understanding of common problems.

The Millers arrived in New York yesterday on the Mauretania from Le Havre, France.

f. (B3/f57)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
Sunday, July 3, 1949

Depression Query
Tops in Europe
Reports Miller

Newsman Returns from
3-Week Trip to Britain, Continent

The big question in Europe today is whether the United States is entering a new depression, Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers and editor of The Times-Union, reported yesterday.

Back from a three-week trip to England and Western Continental countries, Miller said that wherever he talked with newspapermen, business and government representatives they want to know what the drop in employment in this country means, and whether it will continue.

On the other hand, the most universal question he confronted – from taxi drivers, clerks, the men on the street and the professional men as well, was: "How can I get to America." An exaggerated idea of America's prosperity persists everywhere, he observed.

Tied to U. S. Economy

The visitor to Europe soon is impressed with the great extent to which the economic fate of those countries and the whole world is tied to America's economy "whether for better or for worse," the newspaperman said. To the anxious inquiries he met about the business conditions here, he explained the views of American business leaders that the current drop in employment is the result of a normal price adjustment period . . . .

g. (B3/f56)

*****

Editor & Publisher
July 23, 1949

Paul Miller Reports
On Amsterdam Parley
1562

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

ROCHESTER, N. Y. – Rising circulations in Britain, a free-for-all circulation scrap in France and the Netherlands, growing pains in Germany, somewhat normal problems in the Scandinavian countries and in Belgium. Of course, high production costs generally . . . .

Government Interference

In most of the countries, Mr. Miller believes, government interference is a major problem.

"If the Federation can do anything," he commented in his office at headquarters of the Gannett Newspapers here, "perhaps it can be effective in fighting government controls and tampering on an international level." . . . .

h. (B3/f56)

*****

Pixy

PIX AND SQUIBS OF THOSE WHO MAKE THE D AND C

Vol. V (MID – SUMMER EDITION 1949) No. 6

1. FEG Back On Job; Sends DC Staffers Warm Regards

When Frank Gannett returned to his post as publisher of The Gannett Newspapers after an "amazing" recovery following a stroke suffered 10 months ago, he was greeted by practically every employe [sic] of The Democrat and Chronicle . . . .

2. DC'ers Hear Paul Miller

Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers and editor of the Rochester Times Union was the principal speaker at a DC family meeting in the DC Auditorium, Friday, July 8.

Miller, just returned from the Netherlands, where he attended a meeting of the International Newspaper Proprietors and Editors as a delegate of the American Society of Newspaper Editors and as an observer of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

The Times Union editor reviewed information collected at the conference and expressed personal opinions of economic and political conditions facing Great Britain, France, Belgium, The Netherlands, Germany and other European countries . . . .

i. (B3/f56)

*****

Albany (N.Y.) Times-Union
October 4, 1949

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Free Press Best Bet in Preventing
Socialism in U.S., Kiwanis Club Told

The best hope of the American people against "government-by-gimme" is its free press, declared Paul Miller, Rochester editor, in helping Albany celebrate National Newspaper Week yesterday.

Addressing the Kiwanis club luncheon at the Ten Eyck hotel, Mr. Miller voiced the belief that "the common sense of the people can stop it if aroused soon enough," and that the newspapers of the United States – in contrast to those of Europe – seem to be "waking up in time." . . . .

(2) PHOTOS:

EXECUTIVE HUDDLE – Caught in this informal pose at yesterday's Kiwanis luncheon honoring Newspaper Week are Fred L. Archibald, publisher of The Times-Union; Paul Miller, vice president of Gannett Newspapers, and Gerald Salisbury, managing editor of The Knickerbocker News

Times-Union Staff Photo by Wilder

LUNCHEON GUESTS – As part of the local observance of Newspaper Week, the above representatives of the press were guests at a luncheon yesterday at the Kiwanis club. Left to right are the Rev. Gerald Kirwin, editor of The Evangelist; A. J. MacDonald, publisher of the Knickerbocker News; Henry Leader, of the Associated Press Albany bureau, and George O. Williams, managing editor of The Times-Union.

Times-Union Staff Photo by Wilder

j. (B3/f56)

*****

The Rochester Times-Union
October, 4, 1949

Press Can Halt Socialist Trend, Editor Says

k. (B3/f56)

*

Albany Knickerbocker News
October 5, 1949

American Press Can Stop Socialism,
Gannett Executive Tells Kiwanians

Facts from the American press can stop Socialism in the United States, Paul Miller, vicepresident of the Gannett Newspapers and editor of the Rochester Times-Union, told the Kiwanis Club of Albany yesterday . . . .

PHOTO:
Caption:
Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers and editor of the Rochester Times-Union, addressed the Kiwanis Club of Albany as a feature of Albany's observance of National Newspaper Week. Gene O'Haire, Kiwanis president, listens at left.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

l. (B3/f56)

*

THE OIL CITY
CONFERENCE NEWS

Published in the Interests of the Oil City Conference of the Free Methodist Church of North America

VOLUME 3 NOVEMBER 1949 No. 11

Roberts Wesleyan Dedicates Science Hall

Paul Miller, Leading Newspaper Man Delivers Dedicatory Address

To the union of science with Christianity, Roberts Wesleyan College leaders, students and alumni and their neighbors from North Chili and Rochester, N.Y., dedicated Mersereau Science Building Wednesday, October 12 . . . .

Paul Miller, vice-president of The Gannett Company, editor of the "Rochester Times-Union", [sic] and principal speaker, recalled that Bishop Benjamin T. Roberts, founder of the school, had urged teachers to "labor to show the harmony between science and Christianity – between the discoveries of one and the doctrine of the other."

"If ever there was a time when schools should labor to show the harmony between science and Christianity that time is now", [sic] said Mr. Miller. "Probably many today sincerely doubt that the two can be harmonized. There must be times when all despair – particularly just now when Geiger counters of the civilized world have barely ceased reacting to Russia's first authenticated atomic explosion." . . . .

3. 1950

a. (B3/f64)

*

Brazil Herald

Brazil's Only English Language Daily

Rio de Janeiro, Friday, June 30, 1950

(1.) PAA Stratocruiser Arrives Here Today

Pan American's Huge
New Stratocruiser
Arrives In Rio Today

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The giant 75-passenger Stratocruiser-type Clipper of Pan American World Airways, with a group of outstanding newspaper and magazine publishers and editors of the United States aboard, arrives at Galeao Airport from New York at 9 a. m. today. The flight, a pre-inaugural to the start of regular El Presidente service July 5 between New York and Buenos Aires with stops at Port of Spain, Rio and Montevideo, marks assignment of the world's largest and most luxurious airliner to the Brazilian route . . . .

(2.)

American Navy
Goes Into Action,
Blasts Beachheads

BULLETIN

WASHINGTON (UP) – A United States Army spokesman said Thursday night that the South Korean forces had retaken Kimpo Airfield, to the northwest of Seoul.

By ROBERT MILLER

TOKYO (UP) – United States naval forces were officially reported Thursday night to have attacked several points along the Korean coast where Communist invading forces have established amphibious bridgeheads. A major land battle was reported shaping up just north of the Han River where a reorganized South Korean Army faces the spearhead of the invading North Koreans.

General Douglas MacArthur flew to Taejon, Korea where he conferred with South Korean President Syngman Rhee and made an inspection of the battle area.

General MacArthur, Syngman Rhee and United States Ambassador John J. Muccio were subjected to military and air attacks shortly before their plane took off to return them to Tokyo, but no one was injured. The three dived into an irrigation ditch as Communist planes bombed and strafed the airfield.

Dispatches from southern Korea said that thousands of truckloads of Korean soldiers are pouring northward toward the stabilized Han River Line, to begin a counter-offensive against the Communists . . . .

(3.)

UN Ignores
Red Protest
On Sanctions

LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y. (UP) – The United Nations Thursday was expected to ignore Soviet Russia's note condemning the Security Council's action in authorizing military sanctions against North Korea, informed sources said.

The note was broadcast Wednesday night by the official Soviet news agency Tass, and received at United Nations headquarters Wednesday.

The Kremlin communication calls for no answer, and high United nations officials said no answer is likely to be given, either by Secretary General Trygvie Lie or the Security Council . . . .

(4.)

Brazil Takes Stand With 1566

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Brazil Thursday pledged herself to carry out, "in accordance with her means," Brazil's endorsement of the use of military sanctions against Communist North Korea.

In announcing the alignment of Brazil with the United Nations and the United States, Foreign Minister Raul Fernandes said:

"The Minister of Foreign Relations, with the authority of President Dutra, has determined to instruct the Brazilian delegate to the United Nations to inform the Security Council that the Brazilian government will carry out in accordance with her means, the disposition of Article 49 of the San Francisco Charter."

The foreign minister did not intimate what measures Brazil would take as a military contribution.

(5.)

SIX SUSPECTED REDS FOUND GUILTY BY COURTS

WASHINGTON (UP) – Three Hollywood writers were convicted Thursday of contempt of congress for refusing to say whether they had ever been communists.

Two of them – Albert Malz and Alvah Bessie – were sentenced to one year in jail and fined $5,000 each by Federal Judge David A. Pine.

Judge Pine delayed until Friday a decision on whether to allow the third, Samuel Ornitz, to remain free on probation . . . .

b. (B3/f63)

Democrat and Chronicle
July 8, 1950

Peron Denies Muzzling Press,
Says Miller, Back from Flight

A flat denial by Juan Peron that his government is crushing the free Argentine press was reported yesterday by Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, who has returned from a 12,800-mile round trip air journey to South America.

Miller was one of 30 American editors, publishers and radio executives who were guests of Pan American Airways on the inaugural flight of a new luxury run from New York to Buenos Aires.

High point of the week-long journey, during which the group made stopovers in Trinidad, Rio de Janeiro and Montevideo, was a half-hour press conference with the Argentine president. Throughout the meeting the smooth, poised Peron was grilled by the editors on all phases of Western Hemisphere questions, Miller said.

"Peron denied our repeated questions about suppression of the press in his country," Miller declared. "He said again and again that his government is not pursuing any policy against the press. Peron explained, however, that a dollar shortage may have imposed a curtailment of newspaper publishing to some degree."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

To Write Articles

Miller said that he plans to write several articles in the near future which will give his full view on the subject.

The editors also quizzed Peron on his views toward U.S. loans to Latin American nations.

"Peron is definitely against the loans," Miller explained. "He told us that if the U.S. wants to help, it should use the money to buy more South American products. Peron believes that if South American people are given more money they won't work."

At every stop they made on the trip, the editors were feted handsomely at dinners, receptions and luncheons by the various embassies and officials of the countries they visited.

Trippe True Pioneer

In Buenos Aires, they participated in the 100th anniversary of the liberation of Argentina when Juan Trippe, president of the host airline, placed a wreath at the foot of the statue of liberator Jose de San Martin.

Miller described Trippe as a "pioneer in the truest meaning to all Americans." The journey made by the editors in 17 ½ hours flying time, and now a regularly scheduled flight, is another milestone in the history of the development of aerial communications between the U.S. and Latin America, he said.

Trippe was a pioneer when he flew dinky craft between the two continents many years ago. Again he is pioneering with this new, fast strato-cruiser flight. I wouldn't be surprised if he were the first to put jets into commercial service," Miller declared.

c. (B3/f64)

The New York Times
Sunday, July 9, 1950

PRENSA AND NACION
ARE USED BY PERON

Argentine President Cites the Opposition Papers to Show
There Is No Press Curb

By VIRGINIA LEE WARREN
Special to The New York Times.

BUENOS AIRES, July 8 – The Peron regime is putting on an amazing performance these days by which it uses its severest press critics – La Prensa and La Nacion – in a manner that makes them in effect the Government's best friends.

This is through no maneuver on the part of the papers concerned. The only dailies in the capital that ever find the present Government less than perfect, La

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Prensa and La Nacion are as outspoken as ever. Bu they have now become so valuable to the Peron regime, especially in dealing with public opinion in the United States that it is not unreasonable to think the Government would permit one of its enthusiastic supporters to cease publishing before it would let La Prensa or La Nacion close.

When the question of freedom of the press is raised, the regime now proudly points to those two opposition papers as absolute proof that such freedom does exist.

By throwing this fact in the face of questioners the President and other members of his Government are seemingly able to divert attention from the situation of such papers as El Intransigente of Salta, La Nueva Provincia of Bahia Blanca and Democracia of Junin that have been closed for the last six months.

Paper's Stand Well Known

In most cases the stratagem appears to work. For one thing, the papers best known abroad are La Prensa and La Nacion and through their unceasing opposition and measures taken against them by the Government, they have become in the United States a kind of criterion of the Argentine press situation.

For another, when the anti-Argentine Activities Congressional Investigating Committee, after closing papers right and left on one pretext or another, gradually allowed most of them to reopen, only the persons here on the scene were likely to go the trouble of keeping the exact score.

Thus President Juan D. Peron, when asked this week by a group of visiting editors and publishers from the United States about the condition of the press, was able to point to La Prensa and La Nacion as proof that freedom was unrestricted. The President said the only newspapers closed were two Communist publications, La Hora and Orientacion.

A couple of weeks ago, when a visiting newspaper man from Boston questioned him on the same subject President Peron said that "freedom of the press exists; opposition newspapers are published and newsprint is being distributed to all."

When a Chilean newspaper man interviewed the President a month ago and said there were reports in his country of press restrictions , President Peron replied that there had been restrictions but these had been applied "against Communist papers," thus implying no other publications had been affected. The President also pointed with pride to La Prensa and La Nacion for the benefit of the visitor from across the Andes.

Equitable Dealing Assured

When Ramon Antonio Cereijo, Treasury Minister, was in the United States in March he assured reporters that newsprint would be distributed equitably and that either all papers or none would be able to publish.

El Intransigente, an important provincial paper that had frequently spoken out against the Government was closed when its newsprint was embargoed on a charge by the Congressional committee of irregularity in its books. Later an audit showed there was a difference of less than half a pound on a total of 220 tons of newsprint inventoried.

Democracia of Junin was forced to suspend publication through a similar newsprint squeeze.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

d. (B3/f64)

Oregon Journal
Portland, OR
Sunday, July 9, 1950

Argentina, Brazil Support U.S.
Korea Policy, Jackson Reports

By BOB STEIN

Argentine and Brazilian leaders assured a group of touring American newsmen last week their governments will back the stand taken by the United States in Korea, P. L. Jackson, editor and publisher of The Journal, reported on his return to Portland Saturday.

Back from a whirlwind trip along the east coast of South America, Jackson said the group was greeted in Rio de Janeiro by Raul Fernandes, Brazilian foreign minister, who declared, "May you rest assured that in this momentous plight Brazil will meet to the extent of her means the obligations she agreed to on signing the San Francisco charter."

And even in Argentina – which remained neutral during World War II – government officials indicated they approved of the quick action taken by the United States against the Korean Communists, Jackson said . . . .

e. (B3/f64)

HERBERT M. CLARK

JUNCAL 776 – BUENOS AIRES – ARGENTINA
CABLE: H E R C L A R BAIRES – FONE: 32 – 0007

"ANO DEL LIBERTADOR
GENERAL SAN MARTIN" 1950

8 July 1950

Mr Paul Miller
Rochester

Estimado Senor:

Whilst you are still freshly steeped in the wonders of it all, let me make a new pitch at selling you a piece of mail coverage from this end.

The whole idea presupposes space and quality of service. On the second point, I'd rather say that is obvious. Laying a sample on the line would make it all my fault. Still . . . .

The enclosure is, you will note, Number 54 of the 1950 series. I am about half a pice behind schedule, but you of all people will understand why there wasn't quite as much work as usual this week. (And how was the flight north? And, assuming you've caught your breath, was the trip worth it?)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Production is normally steady at two a week, volume ranging from this top down to 250 with, in that case, a feature tagged on in hopes it will make a box.

This piece is, of course, yours to use if you can and whether or not you would like a steady file. For that – does $10 a week seem modest enough?

I'll send other samples if you wish. And for the record, I note that recent items have reported that doctors prescribing scarce drugs will lose their licenses, restrictions against US farm-implement manufacturers, Congressional approval of a Czech blast at the US, Britain and the Vatican, a salary raise dictated by Evita and returning a cut to her, and her boast that Argentine kids say "Peron" before they do "papa" – which Time picked up.

Let me add that it was good having you here – Cass seconding that – and that I shall be looking forward to hearing from you.

Best regards,
Herb Clark (signature)

f. (B3/f64)

Mailer #54 Herbert M Clark – Buenos Aires

Buenos Aires, July 8 (Airmail) – With the Communist threat in the Pacific area increasingly serious, the extent to which Argentina feels committed to share in resisting aggression was being sharply limited here today by both President-General Juan Peron and his official press.

Shifting from earlier promises to honor obligations fully, Peron has again placed national sovereignty above international commitments. Simultaneously, government newspapers are busy serving notice that Argentina will make only a restricted contribution to PanAmerican defense, and then only after receiving further economic assistance from the United States.

Late in June Peron forced congressional ratification of the 1947 Rio de Janeiro hemisphere defense pact [Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty)]. He was among those to support measures taken by the United States and the United Nations in the face of the Korean invasion. Statements designed for international consumption strengthened indications of an intent to honor commitments: Peron reiterated pledges of solidarity to the American Embassy and a group of visiting American newsmen, and Foreign Minister Jesus Paz told a Fourth of July audience of Americans that "Argentina will fulfill its agreements as it always has in the past."

Talking for the home front, however, Peron assured an armed forces group that "Argentina has entered hemisphere unity after proving to the great world powers that she will not accept an order or even tolerate a suggestion jeopardizing national dignity."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The phrase points up the fact that delayed ratification of the Rio de Janeiro pact three years after it was signed came only after the government had pointed out that Argentina undertook no obligations unless two-thirds of the hemisphere voted to act. Even then, officials added, this country would be free to elect its own course and timing.

Peron's statement, coming on the heels of the congressional debate, has jolted western diplomats unable to forget that as recently as last May 1 the president forecast an early war and predicted defeat for the United States and the Western Democracies, lumped under the label of "capitalist powers." Examining the history of Argentina's wartime policy in search of precedents, diplomats are unable to do better than suggest that the most recent close parallel was the agreement to sever relations with the Axis, accepted in 1942 and carried out two years later.

The press campaign emphasizes the rights, rather than the duties, of international pacts. Spearheading, the nationalist and anti-American LA EPOCA argues that "if each country has a duty to prepare for a wartime role, it also has the right to demand help to strengthen its economy." The paper underscores its bid for financial aid by demanding "cessation of the economic pressure which has always menaced every country south of the Rio Grande."

Delving into history in reluctant acceptance of "the new continental defense system designed to prevent evasion," LA EPOCA contends that "America was neutral in the first world war because it was impossible to coerce nations like Argentina" and charges that in the second conflict "Washington used the good neighbor policy to bring sister republics into supporting positions and then to drag them against their will."

-ends-

g. (B3/f64)

July 13, 1950

Mr. Herbert M. Clark
Juncal 776 – 7.o
Buenos Aires, Argentina

Dear Herb:

Thanks much for your nice letter of July 8, which must have come up on the Clipper Friendship to reach here so soon. We have been back a week today and I still haven't completely sorted out all my thought about the trip. Things moved too fast for a country boy. I can say it was a great experience in every way, and I am more appreciative than I can tell you of the hospitality of the Clarks.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I don't know how it is with other papers, but what with the Korean war and all of its overtones and undertones, I know there won't be any interest hereabouts in anything short of a good old-fashioned revolution south of the border. I may be wrong, but that's the way it looks to me. Meantime, there are yelps from the news room that they don't have space enough to print what they would like to print on the emergency at hand, much less do the kind of job they would also like to do on other parts of the world such as the hot spot you cover so effectively. As a matter of fact, I have been trying to get together a few pieces about the Pan American trip, but even with a home town slant, which I have been trying to give them, I don't think they will interest one reader out of 25.

Thinking back over what I have just dictated, it occurs to me that this is discouraging as the devil, probably, but I am sure you can and undoubtedly will put it down to the workings of an insular mind.

Again, it was fine getting to know you and I do hope another trip comes along with another opportunity for a further, and I trust more extensive look at that wonderful area in which you operate.

With very best wishes,

Cordially yours,

h. (B3/f64)

HERBERT M. CLARK

JUNCAL 776 – BUENOS AIRES – ARGENTINA
CABLE: H E R C L A R BAIRES – FONE: 32 – 0007

"ANO DEL LIBERTADOR
GENERAL SAN MARTIN" 1950

8 July 1950

Mr Paul Miller
Rochester

Dear Paul:

It was very good indeed to have your letter of July 13.

Sorry the news wasn't a touch better from my own selfish point of view, but I don't know what else could be expected, given the Korean show on which I guessed so badly. I seem to have believed all that about how we'd produced a beautifully-trained army in South Korea; granted nobody ever told me in so many words that we had also given them weapons, I sort of assumed that a soldier is no better than his bazooka – and was left at the post when it turned out the upper brass hadn't figured that way and the boys had nothing with which to blow the tanks out of their hair. Makes for a longer and harder row to hoe from here in, and

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I don't find the finish near as clear as it would have been had the South Koreans been able to do their own job, with some token assistance by way of moral support.

The enclosure, all things considered, may be of little use to you . . . . except for personal perusal. Use it if you can, though. And remember I'm hereabouts.

It was good to meet you down here. We'll look forward to that repeat visit.

Cass joins me in sending you every good wish.

Sincerely,
Herb Clark (signature)

i. (B3/f64)

Mailer #58 Herbert M Clark – Buenos Aires

Buenos Aires, July 20 (Airmail) – The quality of the friendship Washington succeeded in buying from Argentina with the $125,000,000 credit which the State Department got the Export-Import bank to authorize last May is being remeasured here today by the government press.

The new evaluation sums up to a warning that Washington will lose all its good will here unless it gets that financial assistance into Argentine hands immediately.

Worse, "if Washington does not mend its ways, Western solidarity will be broken and the Reds left free to overrun the world," according to the blunt threat of the ultranationalist and anti-American afternoon paper LA EPOCA.

Setting the tone for the new outburst, the paper headlines the charge that "United States financial policy is incompatible with hemispheric defense."

Obviously feeling that the United States should before now have been scared into line by events in Korea - EPOCA asserts that "the Far Eastern war underscores Washington's need for friends" – the paper bitterly complains that those events "have not changed thinking.

"In our own case," the paper continues, "it was necessary for Minister of Treasury Ramon Cereijo to use all his tact and patience in the face of picayune demands for information in order to obtain the Washington credit of $125,000,000. The United States even required a guarantee of repayment from the Argentine Central Bank, which is unheard-of. And even that small amount is still not available to us.

"That is not the way to implement a 'Good Neighbor' policy . . . or to get us to term Soviet expansion 'imperialist,' as Mister Acheson wishes."

Wrapping up its dire warning, EPOCA concludes that "The United States must restore confidence or risk the despairing dissolution of the democratic countries." EPOCA counts Argentina among those.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

-ends-

j. (B3/f63)

Rochester Times-Union
July 20, 1950

United States Newsmen Trade Views with President Peron in Hour-Long Interview

By PAUL MILLER

I can speak only for myself of the visiting North Americans who sat down at a long table with President Peron of Argentina on Monday, July 3, in the presidential palace at Buenos Aires, but I will confess this:

I went into the meeting hoping to see a dictator at bay under questioning.

I came out of the meeting completely sure of one thing only:

The Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus isn't "the greatest show on earth." That accolade belongs, so far as I am concerned, to President Peron and his sleek blond wife, Eva.

* * *

These outwardly charming and affable people are bearing down upon Argentina under the now well-known claim of correcting wrongs and raising living standards, a pattern of government controls that is all too familiar to those who recall the emergence of the all-powerful state in Europe of the 1930s . . . .

i. (B3/f63)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
July 22, 1950

Flying Down to Rio

South Americans Want Understanding, Appreciation; We've Lots to Learn

This is the last of six articles by Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, on an air trip to South America with a group of U. S. publishers, radio executives and government officials, as guests of Pan American World Airways.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By PAUL MILLER

The South Americans may not have any great liking for us Americans of the North – I don't know and I wouldn't blame them either way – but it's clear they certainly want us to like them.

Everything we saw in our all-too-brief trip, visiting Rio de Janeiro, Montevideo and Buenos Aires, indicated warm-hearted hospitality and a genuine welcome – at least for our group of Americanos shepherded by Pan American World Airways.

We hear a lot of talk, particularly from Washington , of the need for giving this and lending that to our neighbors of the South "to cement hemispheric relations."

My opinion, based not only on this quick look but upon contacts with many fine South Americans in Washington in the 40s, is that they want understanding and intelligent appreciation of their achievements much, much more than they want loans or gifts.

Increased trade with the USA? Certainly. Government loans? Many South American countries will be glad to try to get them as long as they're being handed out. And who can blame them?

*** * ***

Particularly, it seemed to me, in Brazil, there is a feeling that considering Brazil's consistent support of the United States in its overall foreign policy, that Brazil could and should have been counted in on some sort of Marshall Plan.

Certainly there is a wonderment on the part of many a Brazilian at the recent loan to Argentina, its government, often at odds with the United States, even though that loan went largely to enable Argentinians to pay off debts owed United States business concerns.

But by and large the feeling of your admittedly amateur observer is that United States tourists can and will do much more to "cement hemispheric relations" than any loans or gifts that Washington could send down there. This is of course heresy. Our present Washington leaders think they can buy anything with money . . . .

j. (B3/f64)

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
GENERAL OFFICE
50 ROCKEFELLER PLAZA
NEW YORK 20, N. Y.

August 1, 1950.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Paul Miller,
Vice President,
The Gannett Newspapers,
Rochester 4, N. Y.

Dear Paul:

I put aside your series on the South American trip until I could have an opportunity to read the six pieces at one sitting. I have just been able to do this and hasten to write you that I think you did very well.

I could not have treated Madame Peron as objectively because I am convinced she is a dangerous character, partly because she is being used by the Army to perpetuate a dictatorship – at the expense of the people. But being interested in U.S.A. – Argentine amity, I am also glad that you treated her kindly despite citing the "shakedown" tactics.

I like very much your conclusion about South Americans wanting recognition as adults who [have and will] accomplish something.

With best personal regards,

Sincerely,
Frank Starzel (signature)

FRANK STARZEL
GENERAL MANAGER

SL

k. (B3/f64)

Richmond Times-Dispatch
MORNING – SUNDAY – EST. 1850
RICHMOND 11, VIRGINIA

VIRGINIUS DABNEY
EDITOR

August 12, 1950.

Dear Paul:

I greatly enjoyed your swell series on our South American trip, and thank you for sending it to me.

I am filing the ones on Eva and Juan Peron, as they are invaluable for future reference. You certainly did a superlative analysis of that pair of phonies.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I am practically ashamed to send you the little postage stamp article I perpetrated on my return, but felt obligated to do so under the circumstances. I also enclose an editorial on the Perons which you may find in accord with your own sentiments.

Hoping to see you again soon, and with all the best, I am

Sincerely yours,
V (initialed)
Virginius Dabney.

Mr. Paul Miller,
The Times-Union,
Rochester 4,
New York.

l. (B3/f64)

Richmond Times-Dispatch
Richmond, VA
July 16, 1950

Argentina – Bogus Democracy

WE IN THE United States cannot presume to dictate to the peoples of Latin America what forms of government the shall have, but when a spokesman for one of them – specifically Argentina – lays down the claim that its polity is founded on George Mason's immortal Declaration of Rights, we Virginians can scarcely fail to protest. For Argentina, under President Peron, is far from being guided by the exalted concept of civil liberties exemplified in Mason's Virginia Declaration, the document on which the Bill of Rights in our Federal Constitution is based.

FOREIGN MINISTER PAZ, of Argentina, made the extraordinary claim in an address to a gathering of Americans in Buenos Aires on July 4, that Argentina's concepts of liberty are founded on the Virginia Declaration of Rights, as are those of "all the free peoples." The fact is that the people of Argentina are not free. That is true of other Latin-American peoples. It is notably true of Argentina under JUAN PERON.

It would be an exaggeration to say that the Argentines are suffering under a dictatorship as harsh as that of HITLER, MUSSOLINI or STALIN. Such is not the case – at least not yet. However, no one can be sure that the PERONS – and the glamorous MADAME PERON seems to be approximately as potent in the political scales as her husband – won't gradually put a tighter squeeze on the Argentines.

The situation with respect to the press is symptomatic of what is going on. PRESIDENT PERON protests loudly that there is complete freedom to criticize his government, and points to the truly great Argentine newspapers, La Prensa and La Nacion, as evidence of this. Yet these papers have been hampered in various ways, notably in the seizure of their paper supplies, and the sharp mandatory reduction in the number of their pages. They are given only five days' newsprint ration at a time, which keeps them continually on the anxious bench. They have not let up their attacks on PERON, but they realize they are under constant threat.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

While these two internationally famous papers have been allowed thus far to continue their attacks on the government, other opposition organs have been closed. The excuse given for closing them is always unrelated to their criticism of the administration, and is in some way linked to supposed violations of the sanitary code, irregularities in their books, etc. It is almost impossible to ascertain how many papers have thus been silenced. Meanwhile La Prensa and La Nacion are used by the PERONS as "proof" that the Argentine press is free.

Relations between Argentina and the United States have become more friendly of late, and the PERON administration has stopped kicking American businessmen around as it once did. Argentina's prompt adherence to the United Nations condemnation of North Korea was welcome.

Let us not forget, however, that when members of the PERON administration point to the Virginia Declaration of Rights as the foundation of their institutions and as symbolic of their firm belief in liberty, they are being not only absurd but dishonest.

4. 1951

a. (B3a/f71)

Rochester Times-Union
August 1, 1951

British Keep Chins Up, Will Beat Hard Times, Editor Says After Tour

Despite severe economic restrictions, people in England still hold to their traditional chins-up attitude and will emerge from their economic difficulties in time, Paul Miller said today.

Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, just returned with Mrs. Miller from a four-week trip to Europe.

They docked in Montreal yesterday aboard the Canadian liner Empress of France, then flew to Rochester. There was a coincidence involved in the voyage.

"I met with Anthony Eden in his House of Commons office in London," Miller said. "He mentioned that I must have had quite a trip , and then remarked that he was about to make an interesting trip himself.

"I asked him where he was going. Eden said he was bound for Canada aboard the Empress of France. So I told him we'd have plenty of chance to talk later. Which we did."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Eden, deputy leader of Britain's Conservative Party, will make speeches in Denver, San Francisco, Chicago and New York. Miller is hopeful Eden can include Rochester on his agenda.

* * *

THE PUBLISHER represented The Gannett Newspapers at ceremonies in London marking the 100th anniversary of Reuters, British news agency, which he said is "making great strides under its present management in gathering news all over the world in a factual, objective way."

Main purpose of Miller's trip, in addition to participating in the Reuters ceremonies, was to attempt a first-hand study of conditions in Europe. Here are some of his reactions:

"England is better off than she was two years ago, in outward appearance. But people there still are under tight restrictions, Socialist-imposed and otherwise . . . Yet they are cheerful and hopeful and courageous as always. If they can get back toward the free enterprise system and away from the government-run-everything concept, they'll make a comeback.

"Through the cooperation of Eastman Kodak officials here, we visited the big Eastman office building in London and toured the Eastman works at Harrow. I was especially impressed by the employe [sic] services program at Harrow, where they have social centers, game grounds and other recreational facilities.

* * *

"IN FRANCE, the Communists are strong. But many of the French argue that their Reds are not Russian Communists and would not constitute a pro-Soviet force in the event of an open war.

"It was a great privilege for me to talk with Prime Minister Clement Atlee in London, and a tremendous thrill to talk in Paris with Gen. Eisenhower.

"The general talked very frankly regarding the entire rearmament picture at his headquarters and expressed optimism despite obvious difficulties that remain.

"But he is not talking politics with anybody."

Ike unquestionably commands the confidence of more people throughput the British Isles and Western Europe than any other individual.

* * *

"IT SEEMED that everywhere Mrs. Miller and I went, we ran into people who know of Rochester. One was Frank Gentle, the No. 1 British sports promoter, who has visited Rochester and has a married daughter living here."

The Millers visited with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Patterson in Switzerland (Patterson is the new U. S. minister there), and with Perle Mesta, U. S. minister to Luxembourg. Miller and his wife flew to London July 3.

PHOTO:
MILLER

b. (B3a/f71)

*

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rochester Times-Union
Thursday Evening, August 9, 1951, Page 1

Report from Abroad

Ike Avoids Talk Of President Race; Promotes SHAPE

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, has spent a month on a trip to study conditions in Europe. This is the first of four articles on his observations.

By PAUL MILLER

Pressure is building up abroad as at home for a statement from Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower as to whether he is, after all, a Democrat or republican, and what he's going to do about it in either case, looking to the presidential election of 1952.

Right now, Gen. "Ike" is doing his level best to stay out of the Eisenhower-for-President talk, but it's a tough job and it's going to get tougher.

This is the impression an American gets today on a visit to SHAPE (Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe).

There, at a sprawling seven acres of prefabricated housing between Paris and Versailles, Gen. Eisenhower is toiling as supreme commander of the effort to whip together an Allied army good enough to defend Europe. This is job enough. But as everyone knows – at SHAPE as in the USA – Gen. Ike could not be human if he were not keenly aware of the presidential boom back home.

* * *

VISITORS FROM WASHINGTON, including delegations of congressmen and others, are constantly in and out. All would like to know what Ike is thinking about politics.

Cablegrams from Washington newsmen arrive at the public relations office asking Eisenhower's comment on this or that news mention of his name as a possible candidate. One came in while I was there, from Andrew Tully of Scripps-Howard. It asked that Ike say whether he's a Republican or Democrat – good question, too.

Gen. Eisenhower's reaction to all this seems to be to try his darndest to look the other way.

At least that was my impression. He greeted me warmly in his office at 10 a.m., following the staff conference. His desk, flanked by flags, faced across the room toward a fireplace. On opposite sides of the fireplace, separated by a coffee table, were two settees. He motioned me to one of these. We faced each other across the coffee table as we talked . . . . [The remainder of the article is missing from the folder].

c. (B3a/f71)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rochester Times-Union
August 10, 1951

Report From Abroad

America Must See the Job Through, General Ike Tells Visitors to Shape

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, has spent a month on a trip to study conditions in Europe. This is the second of four articles on his observations.

By PAUL MILLER

In a 37-acre tract 15 miles west of Paris is centered whatever hope there is today of building a combined force strong enough to defend Europe.

It is Supreme Headquarters, Allied Powers, Europe (SHAPE).

Supreme Commander Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and his staff are stationed there, having just moved from the old Astoria Hotel near the Arc de Triomphe in Paris where Gen. Ike set up after his appointment in February.

In six months, as reviewed by the Paris Herald Tribune, Eisenhower has:

Picked a staff of Army, Navy and Air Force officers from the 12 Atlantic Pact nations (a visitor may be challenged by a U.S. military policeman, escorted by a French messenger, greeted by a Belgian Navy officer);

Named regional commanders for the Northern, Central and Southern European defense zones, and

Coordinated the planning for the 23-division Atlantic army which SHAPE member governments – Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom and U. S. A. – have promised by the end of this year. There are to be 10 French divisions, 6 U.S., 4 British and 3 Italian. The goal is 50 to 60 divisions (10 to 15 thousand men each) by 1953.

Basis of all this is the North Atlantic Treaty, signed Apr. 4, 1949, under which the North Atlantic Treaty Organization of the 12 participating nations was set up. Each nation agreed that an armed attack against one would be regarded as an attack against all. Eisenhower is trying to transfer this concept from paper to drill field. Russia is reported to have more than 200 divisions in addition to 70 satellite divisions near the West.

* * *

SO MUCH FOR BACKGROUND.

Now – you can get as many arguments on the Champs-Elysees as on Rochester's own Main Street as to whether there has been progress enough – or, indeed, whether there is adequate justification for the whole costly effort.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

There are Frenchmen living almost within sight of the one-story, partly prefabricated buildings now housing SHAPE who will contend:

If Stalin ever planned to attack in Europe, he would have done so a year or two ago. He won't move now at all.

No matter what SHAPE does, Stalin still would be strong enough to overrun Western Europe at will, Or –

The United States is frittering away its own strength and will wind up the loser, through inflation and finally depression, without Stalin's ever having to fire a shot. Or –

France is too far gone from two great wars and too hobbled by political difficulties to do its part in the military buildup; besides, France won't fight.

Yes, you can hear all those arguments, and more, in France – or in England – just as in Upstate New York. As to the fourth point particularly, however, the government of France, for all its weakness and dilly-dallying, is firmly committee to the SHAPE program.

A military parade in Paris a couple of weeks ago seemed impressive and promising, even allowing for the fact it was pure spectacle and not necessarily indicative of any popular will or interest.

A flying visit offers no fair basis for an opinion as to whether France can or will give the full cooperation she has pledged. Certainly, she has been slow and halting to date. Only time will tell.

And, of course, there is another side to it: While we debate whether the French and the others are going to do their part, they watch every move of Congress to see whether America is going to stay or pull out.

* * *

NO ONE IS MORE CONSCIOUS of the doubts, fears and suspicions than Gen. Eisenhower. His is one of the toughest jobs ever handed any man. It is two-fold:

To build a military force, combining men of different lands and tongues, into a confident, unified whole; and at the same time, through the kind of public relations job that few men living could handle as well, inspire confidence and implant determination in the people of Europe themselves.

Meantime, French Communists daily chorus the defeatist arguments of the French doubters or "neutralists." And they charge that America is "occupying" the country, a charge which one could understand as our fine-appearing American boys strolled the streets or drove about on SHAPE missions in Paris.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Eisenhower shrugs off the doubts and questioning of Americans and Europeans alike. To him it is not a question of whether his job CAN be done – he regards it as one that HAS to be done.

"The most important thing for America today is to help Europe get able to defend itself," Eisenhower reiterates to visitors and in speeches.

As he sees it, you can say you don't like the reports of lack of enthusiasm here; you can say it is Europe's job to defend herself; you can say the United States should do nothing until Europe makes a greater contribution of her own; you can say it's too late anyway – you can say all these things, Ike would concede, and more, and then you come back to this:

One way or another, America must see the job through, in her own self interest [sic] if for no other reason.

To him that is all there is to it.

(3) PHOTOS

Captions:

HEADQUARTERS OF SHAPE – 15 miles west of Paris. There's room for hoped-for expansion. Present structures and grounds cover only 7 0f 35 acres turned over to Gen. Eisenhower by French government. Flags of 12 Allied nations lend color.

EVERYTHING'S FINE – At least chiefs of SHAPE'S northern command appear jovial here with Gen. Eisenhower. They are (from left) Lt. Gen. Wilhelm Von Tangen-Hansteen, commander of Allied Army Forces, Norway; Lt. Gen. Ebbe Gioertz, commander Allied Army Forces, Denmark; Gen. Eisenhower; Adm. Sir Patrick Brind, commander-in-chief, Northern Europe, and Maj. Gen. Robert k. Taylor, commander of Allied Air Forces, Northern Europe. (International News Service Photo)

IN GEN. Alfred M. Greunther, shown here at his desk at SHAPE, Eisenhower has one of the great military minds of our time as Chief of Staff.

d. (B3a/f71)

Rochester Times-Union
August 13, 1951

Report from Abroad

Europe's Memory Too Vivid for Talk of Another War

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union has spent a month on a trip to study conditions in Europe. This is the last of four articles on his observations.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By PAUL MILLER

Returning European visitors who, like the writer, become "experts" overnight, are asked perhaps more often than any other question – "Is there as much war talk over there as you hear in the United States?"

Most such "experts" with whom I have had contact reply in the negative. Indeed, I have even heard an American on vacation from his job as correspondent at Moscow say that "war talk" increases the farther one gets from Moscow; meaning there's relatively little of it in the USSR and much of it un the USA.

Reaction to this could be that, for one thing, the great mass of Russians aren't permitted to know what is going on and, for another, that conversation is kept at a minimum by fear of an eavesdropper anyway. But that's Russia.

* * *

AS FOR EUROPE, there is more to it than that, of course. In my opinion, too, there IS "less war talk" in Europe than in the United States.

Accurate or inaccurate, factual or wishful thinking, I saw no public indication of belief or apprehension that war will come this year. That was true whether in London, Luxembourg, Paris or Geneva.

This does not mean that there is any lack of awareness of Russia. Generally, I thought, it meant one of two thongs mainly:

1. A feeling that if Russia had planned to attack Western Europe she would have done so a year or two ago; or

2. A knowledge that they are doing what they feel they can to build up strength and meantime there's nothing much else to be done about it.

There is still one more on which, perhaps a psychologist might more appropriately speculate: In England especially they've "had it" and they know England would catch it heavily again, because of American air bases now situated there and because of other strategic reasons, should the Russians release an air war. The British dread the thought of the night-long poundings, the smoke and flame, the pitch-black streets, the dead and the hurt of the savage bombings experienced from Hitler.

They'd just as soon not talk about it, although they will, pleasantly enough, when Americans press for descriptive details. So they are into a rearmament program they understand is necessary, although it probably means more lean years of rationing and controls, and they hope (a) that the program will be built up in time to deter Russia and (b) that Uncle Sam, to whom they look for leadership, will not do anything impetuous too soon!

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Meantime, they'd rather talk about something other than war, like the British Festival, or the usually warm and pleasant Summer they're enjoying.

* * *

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to sense on this side the keen feeling of confidence in the United States, and reliance on U. S. leadership, militarily speaking, that becomes apparent across the Atlantic.

I confess I found myself wishing, on more than on occasion, that I could feel more of this confidence with regard to our diplomatic leadership.

For example, at a luncheon given by the publishers of London and their wives, at which my Ohio-Republican wife and I were two of only four Americans present, one of the Press Lords declared:

"We thank America for many things, but I want to mention one in particular: You may disagree, but I believe that when President Truman decided to send troops into Korea he prevented a Third World War."

* * *

THERE IS WIDESPREAD BELIEF in the United States that the British are resentful of American aid, however much they needed it, and of American leadership. And in Britain, there are some, at least, who feel Americans no longer admire or respect them.

Now England swarms with American tourists and one inevitably meets many friends and acquaintances over there; that was our experience, and this is a fact:

We did not hear, and we did not hear reported, any indication of animosity or ill-will. On the contrary, the British on all sides were friendly, kind, helpful. Nowhere was there any indication of envy or bitterness in hundreds of contacts. Prime Minister Atlee repeatedly speaks out in appreciation of U. S. aid, as in the following, delivered only the other day:

"An important advance has been to seek to raise the standard of life all over the world, and that could not have been done without the cooperation of America. I hear a good deal of cheap talk about the U. S., but the U. S. has shown immense generosity and very high statesmanship."

The "cheap talk" came from an opposition wing within his own party (led by Aneurin Bevan [sic]) which frequently charges that American policies are leading Britain into excessive exertions and expenditures for armaments, this promoting world-wide inflation and delaying social progress in Britain. Doubtless many share this view, but it is not paraded for visitors.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

So far there is no indication that the Atlee government, for all is preoccupation with politico-social reforms, will yield in any respect.

* * *

AND ON THIS, at least, there is outward unity between Conservatives and Labor. Both say they are determined, whether there is more "war talk" or less, to stick to the current armament program.

As Mr. Atlee said in a speech to which no responsible Conservative too public exception:

"Our rearmament is necessary and vital and we have got to go on with it. When the time comes when we get a reasonableness all around, and not just words but actions, then none of us will hesitate for a moment in turning all our efforts to peace instead if war. Meanwhile, we are faced with a necessity which will inevitably affect our standard of life."

PHOTO:
"The British dread the thought of the night-long poundings, the smoke and flame . . ."

e. (B3a/f71)

*

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
August 19, 1951

A Rochesterian Visits Perle Mesta, and Finds

She Works Hard in Luxembourg – Selling Us to It – and It to Us

By PAUL MILLER
Of The Gannett Newspapers

LUXEMBOURG – If there is any justice, another play will have to be written about Perle Mesta, American Minister at Luxembourg. The current Broadway hit, "Call Me Madam," is all right in its entertaining way, but it doesn't begin to tell the story of this wealthy but unassuming woman who has done more to put tiny Luxembourg on the map than anyone or anything else in years . . . .

5. 1952

a. (B3/f63)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

*

[source unknown]
August 9, 1952

Eva Peron's
Body Borne
To Capitol

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina, Aug. 9 (AP) – The body of Eva Peron was taken through troop-lined streets to the national Capitol today in a solemn military and civilian procession unmatched in Argentina's history . . . .

6. 1953

7. 1954

a. (B3a/f73)

*

Rochester Times-Union
Tuesday, April 20, 1954

AP Elects Two from Midwest

NEW YORK (AP) – Members of The Associated Press re-elected four directors and elected two new ones at the annual AP meeting yesterday.

(Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, is a member of the AP board.) . . . .Four AP staffers participated in a panel discussion at the annual meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel yesterday following an address by Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, to the AP membership.

The four staff men, who answered questions from publishers about foreign affairs, were:

Frank Noel, Pulitzer Prize-winning photographer captured by the Communists in Korea.

Relman Morin, who won a Pulitzer Prize for reporting of the Korean War.

John Hightower, a Pulitzer Prize winner for international reporting.

Thomas Whitney, who spent seven years in Moscow as an AP correspondent.

Moderator of the discussion was Benjamin M. McKelway of the Washington Star, an AP director.

Noel told the AP members that there is a schism between the Chinese Reds and the Russians and he expressed hope that the United States would exploit it. Noel, who was released last year after the Korean truce, said the schism began developing about two years ago.

The Chinese Communists, he said, "want the Russians to get out."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"But instead of getting out," he added, "they are bringing their wives and children in. The Chinese don't like it."

Noel was asked his opinion of "Fifth Amendment Communists" in the United States. His answer was: "I don't care how they dig the Commies up. I think the best way to deal with Commies is at the open end of a .45." A person either is or is not an American, he declared.

Whitney told the gathering that he believes American possession of the H-bomb has confronted Russia with something of a dilemma. He explained it this way: Communist dogma always has held that there will be world revolution entailing conflict; and now the Kremlin faces the proposition that conflict would mean destruction of the Soviet Union.

Hightower, answering a question said he did not know whether Vice President Nixon was speaking for the administration or for himself when he said U.S. troops might have to be sent to Indochina. Either way, he said, Nixon's remarks were in line with the thinking of many Washington officials.

Morin told the gathering that he believes the South Korean army will be developed within a reasonable time to a point where U.S. troops can be withdrawn to a reserve area – possibly outside Korea.

McKelway jibed a so-called "off the record" talks and "news leaks."

His comment, made in opening the discussion session, was in obvious reference to Nixon's "off the record" talk before the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington last week.

b. (B3a/f74)

FEG

I've been invited by Panam to go to Guatemala Nov. 6 returning Nov. 13, and have accepted tentatively.

I had planned to take two weeks of vacation around that time and will, if you have no objection, work it in with this junket.

Maybe Louise and I can loaf down South someplace for a week.

At Guatemala, we'll interview new non-Commy president, etc. etc. and I'll write whatever it is worth.

Paul
10-29

PAUL MILLER

b. Guatemala trip (November 6-14). Miller visited Guatemala after the anti-Communist counterrevolution and wrote a series of first-hand reports.

c. (B3a/f74)

1589

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Times-Union
November 5, 1954

Paul Miller Will Join
Editors in Guatemala Tour

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, will join a group of newspaper publishers and editors from throughout the nation on a flying trip to Guatemala, the country the Communists unsuccessfully attempted to take over last summer.

The group will be guests of Pan American World Airways.

They will leave New York early tomorrow by special plane for Washington, where other members of the party will be picked up, fly to Miami and thence to Guatemala City, arriving there about 8 p.m.

An information and briefing session on the problems of Guatemala and its new democratic government is scheduled for Sunday with Norman Armour, U.S. ambassador to Guatemala.

On Monday, after a tour of Guatemala City, the newspaper executives will be greeted at a reception and press conference by President Castillo Armas at the Presidential Palace. They will study conditions at a Guatemala coffee farm near Antigua Tuesday, remaining there over night.

On Wednesday, they will visit Lake Atitlan, a typical Guatemalan village, and the Indian market at Chichicastenango.

There will be an all-day visit next Friday to the big United Fruit Co. plantation at Tiquisate, and the travelers will return to Guatemala City as guests of the Guatemala Chamber of Commerce and Industry in the Guatemalan Club that night.

The party will return from Guatemala Sunday, Nov. 14.

d. (B3a/f74)

Times-Union
November 15, 1954

Miller Receives
Scroll, Key to Guatemala City

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, received a scroll and the key to Guatemala City at a ceremony for U.S. newsmen who are touring Guatemala.

More than 70 newspaper editors, magazine writers, and radio and television commentators are on the 10-day tour, sponsored by Pan American World Airways, the Guatemalan government and private businesses.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The mayor of Guatemala City, the nation's capital, presented the scrolls and keys.

e. (B3a/f74)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
November 16, 1954

Guatemala
Fetes Miller

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, has been accorded a warm welcome by the mayor of Guatemala City.

At a ceremony for U.S. newsmen touring Guatemala, Miller received a special scroll and the key to Guatemala City. . . .

f. (B3a/f76)

THE TIMETABLE

March 15,	1945	- - -	Arevalo becomes President
May	1946	- - -	First International Communist Convention held in Guatemala City
June	1948	- - -	Consolidation of Communist power under General Confederation of Labor
June 20,	1949	- - -	Arevalo aids Caribbean Legion attack on Dominican Republic
July 18,	1949	- - -	Col. Arana assassinated
November 5,	1950	- - -	Castillo Armas uprising fails
March 15,	1951	- - -	Jacobo Arbenz Guzman assumes Presidency
May 9,	1952	- - -	Agrarian Reform adopted
October 20,	1952	- - -	Russian Free Trade Treaty signed
March 29,	1953	- - -	Government denounces Anti-Communist Revolutionary Plot in Salama
January 19,	1954	- - -	Toriello becomes Foreign Minister

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

March 1,	1954	- - -	Guatemala opposes Hemisphere action against Communism at Caracas Conference
May 18,	1954	- - -	Communist arms delivered to Guatemala
June 2,	1954	- - -	Government charges new plot to overthrow it
June 17,	1954	- - -	Castillo Armas' Liberation Army attacks
June 27,	1954	- - -	Arbenz resigns and takes refuge in Mexican Embassy
July 2,	1954	- - -	Peace pact signed with Liberation Army

g. (B3a/f76)
*****

"The Case of Guatemala"
[14-page narrative of "The Timetable"]

h. (B3a/f77)
*****

United Fruit Company
["White Paper"]
[Background Data on United Fruit Company in Middle America]

i. (B3a/f74)

Times-Union
November 30, 1954

PHOTO
Caption:

NEWSMEN IN PALACE – U.S. newspapermen chat with President Castillo Armas at a palace reception after a press conference. The president speaks English well enough for conversation, but in formal speeches uses Spanish. With him are Paul Miller of The Gannett Newspapers (left) and Virgil Pinkley, publisher of the Los Angeles Mirror.

Behind the News in Guatemala

U.S. Backs Anti-Red Struggle -- And It Looks Like a Winner

By PAUL MILLER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The United States is backing with cash and know-how a sharp-faced little former army colonel, Carlos Castillo Armas, in a do-or-bust struggle against world communism in Guatemala.

It looks to me as if this is one we are going to win.

Visitors see nothing to remind them of the country's recent political troubles. Tourists once numbered 50,000 annually. They dropped to 4,000 in 1953, but now even more than 50,000 are looked for.

Nevertheless, the struggle to keep the door barred on Communism will not be easy. Chased out last June, former President Jacabo Arbenz is holed up under diplomatic protection in Mexico City. He dreams of getting back with his Communist-dominated wrecking crew who almost ruined the little banana-and-coffee country before justice caught up with them.

Arbenz has plenty of fellow plotters, some of them Moscow-trained. They had Guatemala in a vise from 1951 until last summer. Indeed, this Central American beauty spot is the only country ever to escape from behind the Iron Curtain once it had clanged down. Yes, world communism had a foothold only a few hours from the Panama Canal.

* * *

WHY DOES IT LOOK now as if the Commies can be kept from getting back in?

Principally because of President Castillo and his associates. This dead-serious little leader, with his Charley [sic] Chaplin mustache, knows (1) what was wrong with his country that enabled the Reds to get a following in the first place and (2) how Reds work and how to lick 'em.

I was among 70 newspaper representatives from throughout the United States who flew to Guatemala recently. We were guests of Pan-American World Airways. Both the U.S. and Guatemalan governments enthusiastically endorsed and cooperated in the expedition.

Pan-Am regarded it as good promotion for Pan-Am.

The U.S. State Department was ready to try anything that anybody thought might help encourage and buck up the Castillo administration.

* * *

THE GUATEMALANS, their treasury looted by the Arbenz crowd, wanted newspaper help to get tourist dollars started back their way.

We newspapermen accepted the opportunity to see at first hand the situation in Guatemala now, hear at first hand what happened under the Reds and try to figure out right there on the ground what is likely to happen next.

Everybody won – as I hope, will readers of the newspapers who now may follow the reports of our weeklong stay. There were interviews with U.S. Ambassador Norman Armour (one of our best) and his staff, President Castillo and his ministers, Guatemala business and professional leaders and others; and trips by bus to the sensationally beautiful and appealing towns of Antigua and Chichicastenago with a stop at volcano-ringed Lake Atitlan thrown in.

Guatemala Asks Aid

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

GUATAMALA (AP) – Two representatives of President Carlos Castillo Armas' government flew to Washington yesterday to urge the United States to speed up the availability of over six million dollars in economic aid it has earmarked for Guatemala.

* * *

READERS MUST review a few statistics before going further. You must know that Guatemala is the next country south of Mexico, has 3 million population of whom – get this for sure – some 70 per cent are Indians who often seem not to give a darn who runs what, just so they eat, and has a clean, beautiful, inviting capital, Guatemala City, of about 300,000 population.

Guatemala also has age-old problems.

Hordes of dirt-poor, ignorant people who are wide open for Communist propaganda; only a limited middle-income population; and a still not waked-up Big Rich element. (The rich were saved by Castillo and his revolution, yet wouldn't kick in afterward to pay the bill. He had to force them with a one-shot soak-the-rich levy expected to pull about six million dollars).

President Castillo reviewed these and other problems with us when we met with him and his ministers in an afternoon-long session at the National Palace (an all-purpose government headquarters comparable to a U.S. state capital building).

He and all of them emphasized their determination to get prices down and wages up; to colonize thousands of acres of fine state-owned and other available land that for one reason or another isn't even under cultivation and never has been; to work out an adequate tax program to replace the inadequate hodge-poge [sic] now more or less in effect; to build roads and hospitals and schools – in short, to get this little country on the road to progress.

All this will help too, in the continuing fight on communism – a fight, said U.S. Ambassador Armour, which "we cannot lose, no matter what the cost."

* * *

YET, THOUGH we are giving the Castillo government six million dollars, though they and we are out to try anything and everything to build and strengthen it, President Castillo said something all Americans ought to reflect on when he gave his formula for whipping communism. We Americans often tend to think we can do it with dollars, or know-how, or good-will visits, or exchange tours. That's not enough.

"We have," the doughty president said, "learned a lesson we wish to share with the United States.

"For a nation to preserve its freedom, it must be ready at all times to sacrifice the blood of its citizens. For that determination there is no substitute."

Even as one with a son in the U.S. Marines, I had to concede to myself that he was terribly right. So, I believe, did most of the others who heard him that afternoon in the mirrored midst of apparent plenty in the palace of Guatemala.

Tomorrow: Guatemala's program to combat Communism.

j. (B3a/f74)

Times-Union
Wednesday, December 1, 1954
1594

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PHOTO
Caption:

AIMED AT THE YOUNG – When President Arbenz was in power, he had portraits of Stalin, Mao Tse-tung and Malenkov displayed in public schools. His anti-Communist successors put such examples of Communist propaganda on exhibit at the National Palace. The poster says: "Marx, Lenin, Stalin – gods of Arbenism. What happened to our forefathers? What about the fathers of our independence? Strange patriotism of the Communists!"

Behind the News in Guatemala

Castillo Armas Works Hard To See That Reds Stay Out

By PAUL MILLER

This is another on-the-spot article by Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, on Guatemala and of conditions in that Central American hot spot, recently menaced by world communism. Today he tells of the program to prevent the reds form ever again returning to power.

Carlos Castillo Armas had no sooner defeated the Communists and assumed leadership of Guatemala than he began to make this revolution stick.

He was right in the middle of a special anti-Communist speaking campaign when 73 American newspapermen interviewed him during a goodwill trip sponsored by Pan-American World Airways with the blessing of the Guatemalan and U.S. governments.

"What have you done and what are you doing now about Communists in Guatemala?" he was asked. He ticked off his program as follows:

1. The Communist Party is "completely outlawed."
2. Communist-dominated labor unions were relieved of their licenses, this could no longer exist in Guatemala without reorganizing.
3. Prosecutors began tracking down and seeking to bring to trial all those found guilty of Communist crimes during the Red-dominated administration of former President Jacobo Arbenz. Arbenz may be tried for high crimes if Guatemala can ever get him home from Mexico City, to which he fled June 27. This is unlikely.
4. The Castillo Armas government is running an anti-Communist propaganda campaign.

Special attention has been given the unions, where former President Arbenz had great strength.

President Castillo told us:

"Labor unions are now under new leadership. They confine their activities to labor-management relations and defense of the true interests of their numbers. They are pledged to abstain completely from any political acti[v]ities or any other course of action that could be exploited by the Reds."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

MANY AN AMERICAN could study with profit the anti-Commie exhibit in a room perhaps 60 by 40 feet on the street floor of the National Palace. Guatemalans are flocking to see it night and day.

It shows in detail how the Russian-directed goons brought in their propaganda books and leaflets, their lies and pro-Moscow trash, their savage police methods – all right under Uncle Sam's nose almost within the shadow of the Stars and Stripes.

It is 4 ½ hours by air from Guatemala City to Miami by commercial plane, about the same from Guatemala City to the Panama Canal.

In all, there are 40 tons of graphic, blood-chilling evidence of how the Red terror for more than two years warred on men's minds and bodies. There is a mountain of books, magazines, newspapers, movies and other propaganda weapons with which the Communists flooded Guatemala, confiscated by Castillo Armas.

On the walls there are blown-up original photographs of tortured and mutilated bodies of Communist victims. The blood-streaked backs of other victims of merciless beatings at Red hands are pictured.

Copies of newspapers and news dispatches before and after Communist censorship are exhibited. Included are censor-mutilated stories of some U.S. foreign correspondents.

* * *

DISPLAYED ALSO are receipts for Communist "payoffs" to former government officials and exhibits of party membership stamps by which the Reds helped finance their activities on the easy payment plan.

Envelopes containing propaganda material, postmarked Moscow, Warsaw and Prague are shown.

By thus turning the Reds' own propaganda guns against them, Guatemala's new anti-Communist government hopes to warn the people not only of the menace of communism but also of the need for constant vigilance.

President Castillo Armas told the visiting U.S. newsmen that his government aimed to "tell the people of Guatemala and the whole world the truth about the Red terror in this country and the crimes committed against our people."

* * *

THE EXHIBITION demonstrates with cold reality the intensity of the Communist effort to "blitz" Guatemala. This small country, not much larger than Ohio and with a populace still mostly illiterate, nevertheless was a prize target of the Reds.

The Communist conspiracy sought to infiltrate and capture every segment of Guatemala's populace – from the teacher and the government official to the student and the worker.

Guatemala, only country yet to throw off the Communist yoke and survive, wants the rest of the free world to profit from its lessons.

TOMORROW: A newspaperman retires to the quiet of a peaceful Guatemalan village.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

k. (B3a/f74)

Times-Union
December 2, 1954

PHOTO
Caption:

RETIRED BYLINER, Charles Stephenson Smith chats with Paul Miller at Smith's home in Guatemala.

Reporter's Retreat

* * *

He Found Peace for Four Years But Old Life Caught Up with Him

By PAUL MILLER

Near Guatemala's lovely Lake Atitlan, in a tiny Indian village, lives Charles Stephenson Smith.

To newspapermen his byline is associated with the trouble – and glamour – spots of the whole world.

For Charles Stephenson Smith was for many years a famed foreign correspondent. His assignments took him to Rio, Mexico City, New York; to Tokyo, Moscow and Paris. And many more.

Yet, when he came to retire, he thought of the highlands of Guatemala around Lake Atitlan, where he had once visited. Of the volcanic peaks, circling the blue, blue waters. Of the quiet Indian villages roundabout (each named for one of the Apostles) scarcely changed at all in hundreds of years. That was for him!

* * *

HIS OLD LIFE CAUGHT UP with him, after four years of peace, when the revolution broke against the Communists, throwing them out of Guatemala, last summer. He happily helped report the story for The Associated Press.

"Some people think it was a pop-gun revolution," Smith told me when I met him on a visit to Lake Atitlan with American newspapermen touring the country on a goodwill visit.

"There was bad fighting in many places outside of Guatemala City. Some of the young men of our village went away and never will return."

* * *

PEACE HAS RETURNED to Smith's village and to Charles Stephenson Smith.

"The people here are hospitable and friendly. Help is cheap. So is food. The weather is never what you call bad."

Charles Stephenson Smith waved as our bus pulled away from the hotel on Lake Atitlan, then turned and trudged back up the road toward his modest home . . . the man who quit the news centers of the world, and gladly, for the calm of cool mountains and clear waters in Guatemala.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

l. (B3a/f74)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
Wednesday, December 1, 1954

PAUL MILLER, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, recently visited Guatemala in company with some 70 other American newspapermen. In this and succeeding articles, Miller writes of what he saw and learned in that country torn by Communist revolution and a counter-revolution which threw the Red government out of office.

Guatemala Today:

$6 Million Gift Raises Questions

By PAUL MILLER

THE U.S.A. is handing more than 6 million dollars to the new anti-Red government of Guatemala, and here's news for any who think this assures continuing good-will for Uncle Sam:

Many Guatemalans argue as long and as hard about the wisdom of their government's taking the money as we Americans do about giving it away.

The gift is part of our feverish effort to back up President Carlos Castillo Armas. He is the slight-built former Army colonel who led the revolution that threw former president Jacabo Arbenz out of this little country last June. Now, while Arbenz plots in Mexico City, Castillo and his cohorts, with U.S. financial and other aid, are striving to strengthen their own position in every way they know.

It may be that our 6-million-plus handout will buy all or some part of what the Eisenhower administration hopes for – a stronger, more prosperous people and government.

But again, many solid, thinking Guatemalans doubt it. And if that is news to you, I confess that it was something of a shocker also to me on a newspaper good will visit to see how the new Guatemalan government is getting along.

"Why did your government want to give our government the money?" demanded one young Guatemalan professional man. We were at dinner in a strikingly modernistic Guatemala City home – three couples and yours truly, who was included because one of them knew a friend of mine up North.

As the others signaled obvious agreement, he went on:

"You should have loaned Castillo the money. Even a 50-year loan would have been preferable to a gift. What happens now? Here's what we think: We think you will not have respect for Guatemala because you have given us alms, as it were. We will not feel comfortable toward you because we are like beggars taking a handout."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

ONLY A DAY or two previously, President Castillo had told our visiting group of 73 Americans of his appreciation for the needed dollars.

He had explained:

$1,500,000 is to go for technical aid projects.

$1, 425,000 for the Pan-American Highway linking North and South America.

$500,000 to continue construction of the 1,000-bed Roosevelt Hospital, started in 1946 and still but a shell.

$3,200,000 for "miscellaneous projects"; i.e., projects which will be somewhat more at the discretion of the Guatemalan government.

This is peanuts to what the U.S. has thrown around in other parts of the world. Yet even at the height of the Marshall Plan operation, I heard in Britain and France the same sentiments as are expressed now in Guatemala. I heard this from plain people, that is, not from government officials. Governments will take all they can get; always have and always will.

Even so, it was astonishing to me to hear people I had regarded as hard-pressed Guatemalans insist we should not have given them 6 million dollars. Later, after talking with many others from taxi drivers and guides to representatives of American business firms, it became clear that more than pride might have been involved.

* * *

THEY WANT their government to stand up on its own feet and get a loan rather than a gift mainly, I think, as a matter of pride.

But also, they have seen so many "saviour governments" come and go that they will have to be shown before they can quite believe that any government can and will surmount the problems that are basically unchanged today from those confronting any administration at any time in half a century.

"Every government I have ever seen was out to save us from something," explained an attractive young woman. "This one now is saving us from communism. We'll have to see."

And some citizens have two other reservations: They feel that Castillo owed his victory in the revolution chiefly to the Catholic Church and to the Big Rich.

"How," they ask, "can he do all the things he says he is going to do and still keep their backing – which he must have?"

With the Big Rich they are apt, many of them, to couple the United Fruit Co. Just now, it seems to be going more than half-way to negotiate a new agreement with the Castillo government. But right or wrong, and I don't know, they have grievances that date a long way back.

* * *

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH was a great force in overturning the Red-dominated former government last summer. Now some Catholics, though reputedly a minority, are asking that the Catholic Church be given a special legal position among religious groups in Guatemala. Also that lands taken from the church generations ago be somehow returned.

Of these things, President Castillo had told us:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"All religions will be equal under our laws." He made it clear that he has no intention of turning back the once-vast church holdings.

As for the rich, when they wouldn't give him the money to pay debts of the successful anti-Communist revolution, Castillo levied a one-shot tax. It requires payment equal to 3 per cent of property assessed at more than $5,000; 1 per cent of business capital over $5,000; 10 per cent of the average monthly earnings of professional men; $10,000 from every big sugar mill; $1 for each head of cattle from owners with herds of more than 100.

U.S. officials in Guatemala would not discuss such matters nor the unofficial comment on them. However, it appeared that the U.S. reaction to the picture is about as follows:

Loan vs. Gift – Our government may not even have thought of a loan, for all I could learn. But the official position in explanation of a gift seems to be that the U.S. wanted to move the money in as promptly as possible, didn't want to slow up the process by negotiations over details of a loan.

United Fruit Co. – Any big monopoly is bound to be subject to bitter criticism and hard feeling. Possibly the new agreement now being negotiated between the company and the Guatemalan government will be good public relations for United Fruit.

The Big Rich – They haven't learned even yet, apparently, but we hope they will.

So much for a reporter's report. As for an opinion, it is this:

In these times when nothing is very certain, when peace is in the balance everywhere, no one can be sure what is completely right in the fight against Moscow's everlasting effort to take us over. But for all the protestations about the need for haste in Guatemala (and it's the same story every time the U.S. decides to give aid anywhere), the words of that young Guatemala professional man keep coming back.

"Why a gift? Why not a loan, so that we could have our self respect and respect from you too . . ."

I think he is dead right.

TOMORROW: What happens to people when communism takes over a country?

PHOTO
Caption:

PROCESSIONAL – Guatemala's 3,000,000 population includes descendants of the ancient Mayas, speaking their own language and wearing traditional colorful costumes, caring little about the national government. Here, on Catholic church steps in the mountain village of Chichicastenango, are Indians in pagan rites. They go through these rites, on way up steps, before they enter the church.

m. (B3a/f74)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
December 2, 1954

1600

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(2) PHOTOS
Captions:

PROPAGANDA BY TON – Guatemalan citizens survey small mountain of Communist books, magazines, films and other literature on display in National Palace in Guatemala City. Also included are photographs of mutilated victims of the Reds.

HOSTS & VISITORS – During their visit to Antigua, Guatemala, the touring U.S. newsmen were greeted by city and state officials. From left are John Wheeler, president of North American Newspaper Alliance; Mayor Juan Terreaux of Antigua; Col. Guadalupe Lopez, governor of the state of Sacatepéquez; Paul Miller, executive vice president of Gannett Co. Seventy-three newsmen were on the tour.

SECOND OF A SERIES

Guatemala Today

Nation Remembers Red Terror

By PAUL MILLER

WHAT happens to people – just plain people – when the Communists try to get control of a country?

Americans can find out only a few hours south of our southern borders in the little banana-and-coffee country of Guatemala.

The recent short goodwill visit there of 73 American newspapermen did not provide all the picture all the picture for any of us who made the trip. But it gave us enough knowledge of what may happen so that we could go back home and report in general.

The best quick description – based on what we were told, and on statements given to us – is this:

When Communism takes over, it is as if a gang of bullies, savage and greedy, without morals or principle, had taken charge.

The Government comes first in everything. And Communists want the Government to be a government of, by and for the conscienceless clique in charge.

The leaders may use the poor (winning support by promises of free land or whatever else they think it helpful to promise); or they may use the labor unions. Both were used by Red propagandists in Guatemala.

For a time it may appear to the poor, to needy workers and to others that social progress is being made.

But when the ruling gang is strong enough, the poor and needy find themselves worse off than ever. Private business, frightened, becomes afraid to go forward or expand. Inflations sends prices higher for things there is no money to buy, however badly needed.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Meantime, the leaders apparently firmly entrenched and in full control now, begin showing themselves for what they really are.

* * *

IN GUATEMALA, where the government clearly was Communist-dominated though many inside it were not Communists, the bosses rode in specially imported Cadillacs, dressed their wives and lady friends in jewels from Fifth Avenue's best shops, brought in American cigarettes in great quantities and Scotch whiskey likewise.

They lived it up. The government treasury was looted, we were told, time and again.

But by then the opposition, which they thought they had squelched, was growing. People were driven to desperation by the mounting tyranny of which they were victims: Censorship; persons of all kinds and classes imposed on and intimidated so that they were afraid to move in any way that might offend an official; schools loaded with Moscow-inspired Communist propaganda courses.

The bosses tried first to get rid of any men of influence they found among the opposition by threatening, or by bribes. Failing that, there were trumped-up charges and jail. Thereafter came tortures of Middle Ages savagery.

* * *

YES, MUCH of this, we were told, happened in little Guatemala – a country of 3,000,000 not much larger in area than Ohio.

The enemies of the dictatorship fled or were driven out of the country. There they plotted, led by a young army colonel, Carlos Castillo Armas.

(Right now former president Jacobo Arbenz, overthrown by the Castillo revolution last June, is reported plotting in Mexico City on how to get back in.)

Finally, in June of 1954, Castillo had enough smuggled arms and enough friends around him to risk an effort to fight his way back into his country.

The Communist-dominated Arbenz government had the army. But loyalty does not last long once there comes a test between the lovers of freedom and the supporters of a dictatorial regime.

Now it's "President Castillo," not Colonel. He is trying to get the country back on its feet, the first country ever to fight its way out from behind the Iron Curtain once it had been clamped down.

* * *

NO ONE LIVING will ever forget what happened for a few years of terror.

President Castillo never misses an opportunity to drive home his main point:

"Propaganda is all right against communism; it helps. Movies and speeches and books are fine. But that is not enough.

"In the ultimate, to preserve freedom we must be ready and willing to sacrifice the lives of our best citizens. That readiness is what it takes to defeat communism."

One wonders whether, even now, the lesson preached by Carlos Castillo Armas is fully realized in the United States, the No. 1 goal in Moscow's drive for world conquest.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

TOMORROW: Guatemala, a hospitable country for tourists, reciprocates by arranging tours to U.S.A.

n. (B3a/f74)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
December 3, 1954

(2) PHOTOS
Captions:

BARGAIN SESSION – Shopping was among diversions of 73 U.S. newsmen who toured Guatemala. With an assist from Charles S. Smith, left, retired foreign correspondent of Associated Press now residing in Guatemala, Paul Miller, executive vice president of Gannett Co., talks with natives near Lake Atitlan.

GUATEMALAN HANDIWORK – The small Central American country of Guatemala is noted for its handwoven cloth. Indian women spend hours daily dexterously weaving colorful designs into the fabrics. Each village has its own design according to patterns that are handed down from generation to generation.

LAST OF
A SERIES

Guatemala Today:

Comfort, Plus Native Wares Add Up to Tourist Paradise

By PAUL MILLER

People who know I was on that recent goodwill trip of American newspapermen to Guatemala usually ask three questions.

1. Are there any signs of revolution down there now?
2. How about hotels and restaurants – all right?
3. What is there to buy from the natives?

The answer to the first question is that President Carlos Castillo Armas, who came to power in the anti-Communist revolution of last June, definitely has things in hand. I saw no signs of disorder, unrest or unpleasantness of any kind.

As for hotels and restaurants – I saw comfortable, pleasant, even delightful accommodations in the three places visited overnight – Guatemala City, Antigua and Chichicastenango. It happens that I like the local hot dishes. Those who don't can have it American style almost anywhere except completely out-of-the-way spots.

* * *

WHEN IT COMES to things to buy – and not too expensively – here's what the "backward" Indian traders did to me. They loaded me (I believe I bought something at every stop) with:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

2 silver wedding chains at $2 each.

A silver rosary cross at $2.50. (This, I was told by a Guatemalan who grinned at much of my loot, was a good buy.)

Silver earrings at $2.50.

2 Merino wool throw rugs at $7 apiece.

A red, blue and yellow Indian shirt, with brass buttons, that I'll never get up enough nerve to wear outside the house, $10.

Leather and cloth purses, $2.50 each.

1 pink and white dress, size 14, that, happily, fits the girl it was bought for, $12.

These are the main items.

Also purchased were some tablecloths and napkins at $12 a set.

My wife could have bought this stuff for less, no doubt – but I can no more beat down a Guatemalan than I could Maury Forman, Egil Krogh or Gilbert McCurdy; in most cases I paid what they asked. I took solace in observing that the other newspapermen on this trip to spread goodwill and help the Guatemalans advertise their tourist attractions were the same grade-A suckers that I seemed to be!

* * *

THE NEW government is cooperating with hotelmen, shop owners and restaurateurs to bring Guatemala back to the place it once occupied with tourists. U.S. visitors numbered 50,000 before the Red-dominated government of former President Jacobo Arbenz got in and all but ruined this beautiful little banana and coffee country. Some 4,000 tourists went there in 1953.

Guatemala's attraction for tourists lies in a spring-like climate, grandiose mountain scenery and an intriguing Maya Indian civilization dating back 2,000 years or more.

Guatemala's money, the quetzal, is [on] a par with the U.S. dollar, making things easier for the tourist. And prices are low.

Most tourists from North America first see Guatemala City, the capital. Later they motor to ancient Indian settlements, to the great United Fruit Co. establishments or whatever else appeals.

Most tours take in Guatemala City, the haunting ruins of the ancient Spanish capital of Antigua, Chichicastenango with its picturesque native market place, and Lake Atitlan ringed by Indian villages and towering volcanic peaks.

A typical all-expense tour over fair to excellent roads to Antigua, Lake Atitlan and Chichicastenango covers three days and costs $42 a person in parties of four or more.

* * *

GUATEMALA CITY is shining clean. The people are glad to see Yankees – or appear to be. It is good to just stop and rest there, but few Americans do: they want to "see the country and observe conditions."

I met a young man who runs a travel agency. What he was talking up when I was there makes the price of tours from the U.S.A. seem sky-high.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"I'm organizing a tour to Florida," this youthful promoter told me, "– 10 days for $150, counting transportation back and forth and everything."

I inquired whether he had many prospects, even at the price.

"Oh sure," he said. "Lots of people here want to go. They want to see the country up there and observe conditions."

We study them, they study us!

o. (B3a/f74)

Bumblebee
December 9-16, 1954

Wednesday-Men to Join Paul MILLER in Study Of: "Guatemala, Outpost against Communism"

By ERENEST R. TURNER

DICK BARKER'S midweek Munchers will throng the Empire Room on Wednesday, December 15, to discuss with fellow Olympian PAUL MILLER a most timely question, "Guatemala, Outpost against Communism," from which top-ranking Gannett-Man Miller returned only a month ago.

In early November, Paul Miller was one of seventy United States newspapermen who accepted an invitation to be guests of Pan-American World Airways on a trip to Guatemala. This banana-and-coffee country that came from behind the Iron Curtain and kicked out its Moscow-inspired rulers. Now, with the help of tourist-trade U.S. dollars, Guatemala hopes to beat the Communists' influence and rebuild its depleted treasury, increase its agricultural production and multiply its roads, hospitals and schools.

No stranger to the Ad Club platform is Olympian Paul Miller. On February 22, 1951, at a MacMillan-managed meeting of the AD-Venturers, he told the story of "The Associated Press: What It is and How It Operates."

Guatemala is a fascinating and brave little country. Paul Miller's report will be interesting and timely.

p. (B3a/f73)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle [?]
November 21, 1954

(1.) Mendes-France Links Peace to United West

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21 (AP) – French Premier Mendes-France said tonight the Western world must be organized, united and strong "if we want to achieve peaceful coexistence" with Russia.

Mendes-France said he could see no justification for Russian statements that the rearming of Germany would increase the danger of war in Europe.

"I'm quite sure we can achieve peace," he said. "But for that the Western nations must be united and must work together."

He said the greatest danger would exist should the Western nations become dispersed "or even enemies of each other."

The French Premier set forth his views in a wide range of subjects in an appearance on a TV program.

Mendes-France faced a panel of three newsmen, and answered questions in English.

He predicted the Paris agreements between the Western nations and the Saar agreement between West Germany and France will be ratified as they now stand by the national governments of the countries involved.

He noted that the Saar agreement has drawn heavy criticism in West Germany and said, "I can assure you that in my country the agreement has been criticized by people who feel my position was too weak."

"When an international agreement is criticized by both sides, it is a good one," he added.

Mendes-France came here from Washington yesterday after several days of conferences with Secretary of State John Foster Dulles. Tomorrow he is scheduled to make a major foreign policy speech before the United Nations.

PREMIER wins friends on U.S. visit, says Paul Miller, executive vice president of
The Gannett Newspapers, Inc.
Page 3.

(2.) Parisian Charm

Premier Can't Miss On Winning Friends

Premier Hinges Peace to Armed West, Page 1
By PAUL MILLER

Pierre Mendes-France, the French premier, is here to win friends and influence people – American friends and American people.

He can't miss.

He is a bright-eyed, intense, cordial man of medium height and build, speaking halting but understandable English, who attracts on sight.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Starting another hectic round after his whirlwind visit to Canada and Washington, he hurried to New York Saturday night for a stag dinner at which Gardner (Mike) Cowles was host. Cowles publishes Look magazine . . . .

. . . Mendes-France shook hands all around and went to his wife at their hotel before midnight . . . Monday he speaks to the U.N. General Assembly. Tuesday he goes to new York's City Hall and then addresses a Foreign Policy Assn. luncheon . . . A busy man indeed, and to all who joined as Mike Cowles' guests on Saturday night a thoroughly appealing one.

q. (B3a/f73)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Monday, November 22, 1954

Mendes-France Wins Friends in America

[Identical to D&C of November 21, 1954 above]

r. (B3a/f73)

D I N N E R

in honor of

His Excellency PIERRE MENDES-FRANCE

GARDNER COWLES: Host

Saturday, November 20
The Links Club

8. 1955

a. (B4/f1)

*****

Times-Union
February 9, 1955

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Visitor Sees 'Poor' Business with Reds

Japanese who want to do business with Red China got a strong rebuttal from a Tokio [sic] newspaperman visiting here.

The value to be realized from trade with China, argued Masao Tsuda, isn't worth the entanglements Japan would get into.

"Even before the war, trade between Japan and China came to only 10 per cent of the total Japanese foreign commerce – and that included Japan's investments in Manchuria," he contended. Currently, Japanese business and government leaders are calling for large-scale Chinese trade.

"Of course, there might be cheap coal, or cheap iron. But with government control of China's economy, how can we be sure we'd get them? If the Chinese needed something for their five-year plan, or some other plan, we wouldn't get it."

Tsuda, in Rochester to see his 20-year-old daughter, Mieko Tsuda, a first-year student of piano at Eastman School of Music, was interviewed yesterday, during a visit to The Times-Union.

Nine years ago, Tsuda recalled, he had a somewhat ominous introduction to his present job, general manager of Nihon Shinbun Kyokai – the Japanese Newspaper Publishers and Editors Assn.

Then an MP dropped by his home and asked him to come along to Allied headquarters.

"I thought I was going to be purged. I'd been a roving correspondent before and during the war. I was quite sure I was going to prison. They questioned me. Then I was told I'd been nominated general manager of the association."

Looking back over U. S. occupation of his country, Tsuda said he believed General MacArthur's 1951 recall by President Truman was a valuable, if regrettable, lesson in democracy for a surprised Japanese people.

The Japanese revered the chief of Allied Occupation Forces and UN Commander in Korea, said Tsuda.

But to a couple steeped since 1933 in the idea of military supremacy, the recall brought home the democratic tenet that elected civilians run the military, he said. "At first, the people couldn't understand it."

A nation of newspaper readers, Japan has 112 dailies, with a total circulation of 27 million copies, an average of one for every three of the 80 million Japanese.

Japanese reading tastes differ from America's, he says. Besides straight news, popular features are sports (with the accent on baseball and professional wrestling), women's sections and America's comic strips, including – Miss Tsuda reminded her father – "Blondie." However, a "cultural" section, with music and book reviews and special columns, is a daily must with every newspaper . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:
REUNION – Masao Tsuda, newspaperman from Japan

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

visits his daughter, Mieko, a music student in Rochester.

b. (B4/f1)

Rochester Times-Union
Wednesday, February 16, 1955, p. 18

Publishers Oppose Bill
On Tax-Exempt Lists

BUFFALO (AP) – The New York State Publishers Assn. yesterday passed a resolution opposing a bill before the Legislature which would relieve cities of the requirement to publish annually a list of wholly and partially tax-exempt property.

The resolution, approved at the annual meeting of the publishers, said the bill could have an adverse effect on "the people's right to know."

A similar resolution was passed Monday by the New York Associated Dailies convention here.

* * *

FRANK E. (PAPPY) NOEL, Pulitzer Prize winning photographer for the Associated Press, who spent 32 months in a Red prison camp in North Korea, spoke to the publishers last night. During a question and answer period, Noel said he and many others were of the opinion that the United Nations forces in Korea could have cleaned up the entire peninsula at one stage of the fighting, but were restrained by U.S. government officials.

He also said he saw Russian officers in North Korea and believed Russian pilots flew the Russian-built MIG jet fighter planes in combat against American pilots over Korea.

Noel said Korea underlined the need for spelling out to American soldiers the behavior expected of them when taken prisoner by the enemy.

He said the reds, because of their penchant for "converting" prisoners to their side, were unlike any enemy American fighting men had met before. In Korea, he said, many youthful American soldiers were vulnerable to Communist propaganda because they didn't know what Communism was all about.

Noel, commenting on the stories about turncoats in North Korean prison camps, remarked that "a soldier pointing a 12-inch bayonet at you is enough to make any man string along for a while" with his captors.

He said medicine and food were used by the Communists to force cooperation out of U.S. soldiers in the prison camps.

"Sometimes we'd shout Red slogans, or at least pretend to swallow their line, if for no other reason than to get an extra bowl of corn."

* * *

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

JAMES H. OTTOWAY, president of Ottoway Newspapers, Endicott, was installed as president of the publishers association for 1955. Ottoway was advanced from vice president at last summer's meeting to succeed Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Co., Rochester.

Also elected last summer and installed yesterday as vice president of the association was George W. Helm Jr., vice president of Westchester County Publishers Inc., White Plains. James M. Richter of the Buffalo Evening News was reelected secretary-treasurer of the association at last summer's meeting.

At last night's banquet session, Ottoway presented a traveling bag to Miller as an expression of the association's thanks for his services as president during 1954.

c. (B3a/f74)

Newsday
March 28, 1955

Our Soft Underbelly

By Hal Levy

GUATEMALA – Uncle Sam, pre-occupied with muscle-building in Europe and Asia, has neglected his soft underbelly.

Events of the past year – a plot in Nicaragua, a revolution in Guatemala, an assassination in Panama, a "war" in Costa Rica – have helped focus attention on Central America, often called the "Balkans of the Western Hemisphere."

But the strategic and economic importance of Central America – indeed, all of Latin America, from the Rio Grande to the Straits of Magellan – is too often overlooked.

Because of its vulnerability and its proximity (something less than two hours from the U.S. if you accept the course of a jet bomber as the shortest distance between two points), Central America is the tender spot in our hemispheric defense setup – our soft underbelly.

If we leave our southern flank exposed, we might as well unplug our radar equipment in Alaska and build more split-level houses on Long Island instead of letting the Air Force build more interceptor installations.

The problems in Central America differ from the problems in Europe and Asia to be sure. No one has suggested that we try to arm 500,000 Guatemalan Indians or that we move the Seventh Fleet into the Panama Canal. But that doesn't mean that Guatemala is any less important than Germany, or that Panama is any less important than Formosa.

I have just journeyed from Panama to Guatemala, by way of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, flying over jungles and volcanoes one day, eating an oxcart's dust on a back-country road the next. I have talked with many people, from farmers to ambassadors, from a corporal in Panama's Guardia Nacional to Col. Anastasio

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Somoza of Nicaragua, from a bare-footed Guatemalan Indian named Juan to Costa Rica's President Jose Figueres.

I wish more yanquis could make the same trip. Then, perhaps, we'd be less inclined to regard Central America as just a bunch of banana republics.

That, I think, is our trouble. We know too little about our neighbors south of the border – and too often give them the idea that we care even less. Our newspapers are filled with dispatches from London and New Delhi and Moscow and Paris, and from Saigon and Tel Aviv and Ankara and Jakarta. But it takes a volcano or a revolution to get Nicaragua or Guatemala onto the front page.

Secretary of State Dulles has been in and out of Europe and Asia so much in the past two years that he is probably the only man in the world who could eat escargots Parisienne with chopsticks. But as the travelingest secretary in the history of the State Department, Dulles has been in South America only once – for a hemispheric conference in Caracas a year ago – and in Central America not at all.

President Eisenhower sent his brother Milton south two years ago. Dr. Eisenhower, a college president when he's not helping Ike with his homework, spent several weeks in South America and made several recommendations on tariff cuts and other phases of inter-American policy.

"Many people now think of Latin America as not being in the line of attack in the modern world struggle," Dr. Eisenhower said in his report. "But success by the Communists in these nations could quickly change all the maps which the strategists use in calculating the possibilities of the future."

'Good Neighbor' Nixon

Even Dr. Eisenhower skipped Central America, causing a wounded vanity which wasn't salved until last month, when Vice President Nixon barnstormed his way through the area on another of his good will excursions.

Nixon's visits to coffee fincas and banana plantations and his chats with shoeshine boys and presidents did a great deal of good. I was in San Jose, Costa Rica, when he arrived there. Our tarnished "good neighbor" policy seemed to take on new luster as thousands of Costa Ricans cheered lustily when Nixon shouted "Vivan los ticos!" and cheered again – with even greater fervor – when their own President Figueres cried "Vivan los yanquis!"

But it will take more than occasional good will visits to transform the good neighbor policy into the "good partner" program to which President Eisenhower pledged himself several months ago.

The strategic reasons for a hemispheric partnership are obvious enough.

We were lucky in Guatemala – luckier than most of us realized when Col. Carlos Castillo Armas led his "liberation" army into the capital last summer. The Communists came very close to turning Guatemala into a full-fledged Soviet satellite – another East Germany, or another North Korea, but just a little bit south of North America.

Anybody who still thinks that ex-President Jacobo Arbenz Guzman and his collaborators were nothing more than fuzzy-headed fellow travelers, or that they were interested only in agrarian reform, or that Guatemalan communism was "different" from Russian communism ought to see an exhibit which the present government has assembled in the lobby of the National Palace in Guatemala City.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

On display are literally tons of Red propaganda – everything from leaflets on "imperialist warmongering" to a six-volume biography of Stalin and copies of a movie entitled "Bacteriological Warfare in Korea."

Much of this material was imported for use in Guatemala's schools. Some of it is still in its original wrapping – straight from Moscow.

Also on display are examples of the kind of heavy-handed newspaper censorship employed by the Arbenz government in an attempt to keep most Guatemalans from knowing just what is going on.

And, finally, a "chamber of horrors," with photographic evidence of atrocities committed by the Communists.

Many anti-Communists were imprisoned by the Arbenz government. Some were still alive at the time of the liberation. The broken bodies of others were found in mass graves.

Torture and Murder

The survivors told grim tales of sadistic torture – how prisoners who refused to talk were beaten until they could only babble incoherently . . . how others moaned when they were strung up by their thumbs . . . how others moaned when they were kicked in the groin again and again after crumbling to the floor. . . .

The dead men told tales, too. One Guatemalan told me that the bodies of two of his friends had been found after the liberation. One had been savagely beaten. The other's tongue had been cut out.

The U.S. was late – almost too late – in catching on to what was happening in Guatemala. We had one eye on the cold war in Europe and one eye on the hot war in Asia. And a blind spot – Central America.

The Communists didn't take over in Guatemala overnight. They started worming their way in 10 years ago, after the overthrow of Gen. Jorge Ubico's military dictatorship. They moved slowly at first. But the U.S. moved even more slowly.

The Communists moved with great speed after the election of Arbenz in 1950. But we were still too concerned about Red moves in Europe and Asia to worry about the Red push in Central America.

In a 1954 report on "The Intervention of International Communism in Guatemala," the State Department traced the Red push back to June of 1944. But no one in the State Department said anything about the situation, publicly, at least, until October of 1953, when Assistant Secretary of State John Moors Cabot charged in a speech that Guatemala was "openly playing the Communist game."

Sen. Alexander Wiley (R-Wis), then chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, made some speeches on the subject, too, but nobody got excited about the establishment of a Red beachhead in Central America until last May, when we found out that the Communists were importing arms and ammunition from behind the iron curtain.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Luckily, Castillo Armas and his anti-Communist companions were also bust collecting arms and ammunition in nearby Honduras.

The Intervention Bugaboo

The U.S. wasn't alone in underestimating the seriousness of the Guatemalan situation. Indeed, Latin American delegates to last spring's Caracas conference were less aroused by Dulles' speech on the perils of international communism than by Guatemala's charges of "intervention in our internal affairs" by American "imperialists and monopolists."

Intervention, of course, is one of the Communists' favorite scare words. They shout about American intervention in Europe one day, in Asia the next. But a whisper is enough in Central America, for Yankee intervention has long been a Latin American bugaboo.

This suspicion of U.S. motives dates back, perhaps, to the days of William Walker, doctor, lawyer, editor and self-styled man of destiny who led a 58-man expeditionary force into Central America exactly a hundred years ago, proclaimed himself president of Nicaragua, declared war on Honduras and had all of Central America in an uproar by the time he was captured and liquidated by a firing squad in 1860.

The interventionist policy enunciated by Theodore Roosevelt in 1904 in an effort to assure a "civilized society" south of the border was repudiated in 1933 by Franklin D. Roosevelt, whose "good neighbor" policy, actually an extension of the hands-off diplomatic policy which evolved during the Hoover Administration, did much to promote better relations between Latin America and the "colossus of the north."

But intervention is still an ugly word in Central America. That may help explain why the U.S. was so timid about the Guatemalan situation. Dulles didn't even mention Guatemala by name in his Caracas speech a year ago.

Even so, the U.S. was accused of intervention in Guatemala when the blow-up came. We did intervene politically and psychologically during the weeks just before Castillo Armas started fighting his way into the capital. And U.S. Ambassador John E. Peurifoy was the middle man in the negotiations that led to the formation of the present anti-Communist government. Some claim that we gave Castillo Armas material support. Others insist that we gave him nothing more than moral support. But that, at the moment, is beside the point.

A Policy of Neglect

The point is that the U.S. shouldn't have to depend on last-minute intervention of any sort. The Guatemalan crisis probably wouldn't have occurred if we had developed and carried out an effective Latin American policy years ago. Instead, we drifted along with a policy of neglect which made it easy for Communist agitators to sell their bill of goods to Guatemala's Indian peasants and Ladino laborers.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Guatemala's narrow escape helped alert all of Central America to the vicious kind of intervention practiced by the Kremlin. There is more anti-communism and less anti-yanquismo in Central America now than there was a year ago.

But anti-communism is a negative approach to the problem. We can't hope to eliminate the Communist menace in Central America unless we help eliminate the conditions which make the area's soil fertile for communism as well as for coffee and bananas – mass poverty and ignorance and disease, plus varying degrees of economic exploitation and political tyranny.

That, of course, is where our "good partnership" policy comes in. We have done much in recent years to help the 10,000,000 people in Central America. But much remains to be done.

Honduras could become another Guatemala. So could El Salvador. Or Costa Rica or Nicaragua – or Panama.

And we haven't even won the Battle of Guatemala yet.

TOMORROW: Bananas, Coffee and Communism

d. (B4/f1)

*****

MEMORANDUM - - VISIT WITH RANNE IN CALIFORNIA
(March 25 to March 29)

April 5, 1955
(3 1/2 pp.)

I determined to go to see Ranne after learning definitely that his outfit was to be shipped to Japan . . . .

e. (B4/f1)

Times-Union
April 5, 1955

A Son in Uniform: Stop Worrying

Crewcut Youngsters . . . They're Slick and Trim . . . Well-Trained for Life in the World of Today – and Tomorrow

By PAUL MILLER

If you have a young son in the armed forces, and are worrying about him, don't.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Barring a war, God forbid, he is better off than at home for awhile. And certainly he is getting training and discipline that will fit him for many (though not all) aspects of life as not even home and college can do.

I suspected that. Now I feel convinced of it after a visit to my own son at Camp Pendleton, Calif., on the eve of his departure for duty in Japan.

Thousands of other Rochester area parents have, one way or another, made similar visits to this or similar camps. Thousands more assuredly will do likewise, if they can. It is the kind of world we live in and will continue to live in all our lives.

* * *

CAMP PENDLETON, an enormous Marine base, training camp and staging center covers many thousands of acres along and beyond the coast of California south of Long Beach, toward the Mexican border. Our son, Ranne, was sent there last December after boot training at Parris Island, S.C. Scores of other Rochester-area boys have trained there also, preparatory to duty in Japan, Korea, Okinawa . . .

Nearest town to Camp Pendleton is Oceanside, which, I gathered lives off the Marine Corps.

As in all such towns there is good and bad. Some merchants may gouge, but others keep prices fair enough.

The hotel is good and prices reasonable.

Devoted local men and women maintain an active USO. Churches do their best to get hold of the boys, although I observed that relatively few attend either in town or in the white stucco chapels on the base.

*** * ***

WHAT'S ONE parent's most pressing impression after a few days' look at a great Marine Corps training center?

There are many, of course: The hard-muscled, ramrod-backed appearance of the crew-cut youngsters . . . their slick, trim appearance to which they adhere pridefully in and out of the camp . . . the belief in the invincibility of their outfit.

But the No. 1 impression for me was this: There should be, indefinitely, some tour of military service for every lad in the land.

Sure, it interrupts their schooling, delays their start in the workaday world. Sure, it's rough in spots – but they'll be up against rough stuff sooner or later anywhere in life. And, there are exposures to ideas, language and temptations around many a college dormitory or fraternity house (or place of work) to match most anything you'll find in or around a military training camp. Don't you think there aren't.

And one more thing: When and if the Big War does come, who'll have the best chance of survival – the trained soldier or the untrained civilian? Think it over!

*** * ***

MARINE "BOOT" (apprentice) training is calculatedly rough-and-tough.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"They bang you around," a marine said cheerfully.

"When you're fighting a war," he explained, "you want no softie next to you in the line. One such could threaten the fighting morale of a whole outfit. If one broke under stress or fire, another might and so-on.

"The marines weed 'em out fast. The sleep-walkers and bed-wetters are sent home in a hurry. You get rough treatment from the start. Why not? If you can't stand it then, what are you gonna do in a war, for crying out loud?"

* * *

WHAT AMAZES me over and over about young Marines – or youngsters in any branch of the service – is the off-hand nonchalance with which they accept the vicissitudes of service.

"Goodbye, Dad," called the one I saw off for Yokohama. "See you in 14 months." Fourteen months – and he'll still have a year to go on his 3-year enlistment after that!

I felt suddenly very old. This was the baby who used to embarrass his young parents by standing on his head and looking backward through his legs at guest to whom we tried to introduce him – 6 feet tall now and 190 pounds; standing there on the train platform looking a little tolerant and sympathetic toward his old man.

"God bless you, son," was all I could say to the chubby little boy I seemed to see again through the burly, erect Marine before me.

My heart was full, and my eyes too, as I turned away as thousands of other American fathers have done – and will do for as far ahead as we can see.

Marine Spirit . . . and Slang

NOTES jotted down en route home:

Marine slang fascinates me, also Marine spirit.

Almost any sight or scene may be an "action." "Quite an action," one may comment approvingly as two blondes drift by. A sailor is a "swabbie" (from swab the deck, I took it). An army enlistee is a "doggie." "Look at that sloppy doggie," said one of a group of Marines as a (to me) fine appearing army private strolled by. "Marines don't like doggies," the Marine explained in a voice calculatedly loud enough to be heard by the soldier. The soldier grinned condescendingly.

Any trained, equipped Marine outfit is expected to be so finely organized, so completely on the ready that – if emergency comes – it can move out of its base ready for combat in a matter of hours.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Hence, a boy learns that he can't put off until tomorrow what can be done today. He must have his gear, his rifle, all his equipment polished, pressed, oiled or whatever – ready all the time come what may.

A young sentry at an entrance to Camp Pendleton phoned ahead to clear me when I drove up in a borrowed Chevrolet and applied for a visitor's pass. I stood at the sentry's side as he phoned.

"Describe him," instructed the brisk M. P. at the other end of the line. "Well," drawled my M. P., giving me a sidewise glance, "he's a middleaged [sic] gentleman of about 35 or 37."

I had to laugh, as who wouldn't. "So," I said, "if you call '35 or 37' middleaged, how would you describe me if you knew I was 48?"

PHOTO
Caption:
THE MARINES: "Finely organized . . . completely on the ready . . ."

f. (B4/f1)

Times-Union
April 9, 1955

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Universal Military Training: An Argument Against It

Paul Miller in his article on the Marines (Times-Union April 5) apparently was so fascinated by the "ramrodbacked" youngsters, the ever-clean rifles, and the Spartan, chauvinistic philosophy, that he thinks we should have permanent Universal Military Training.

There are some rather more serious matters that Americans would normally want to consider before arriving at such a conclusion. In fact, these matters are so serious that they have kept the militarists from getting their pet wish for some 36 years now.

First and foremost is the question of whether militarism is compatible with the religion that our nation claims to hold. "Thou shalt not kill" says our God and "Love thine enemies" says our Christ. Is God right? Did Jesus know what he was talking about? Many who believe in the Christian way are fully confident that Christian love is stronger and more realistic than any other force including the Russians, the Chinese Communists, and the United States Marines.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Those who don't go quite that far in their faith still think that UMT is bad for democracy. They know that the kind of authoritarian discipline taught is the opposite of what we need for a strong and imaginative republic. They have seen UMT in Germany, Japan and Russia and want none of it here.

* * *

IN THE MILITARY system responsibility is delegated to the few rather than being accepted by the many. Moreover individuals are expected to be unquestionably obedient to their superiors rather than to use their own critical judgment.

This is, of course, essential to an efficient military organization, but is it good training for responsible citizenship in a democracy?

In short, when one looks beyond the snappy uniforms and fascinating slang, perhaps permanent conscription is not so attractive after all.

GLENN S. MALLISON

For the Peace and Service Committee of the Rochester Religious Society of Friends (Quakers).

1198 Mt. Hope Ave.

* * *

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr. Mallison's is an excellent statement of his point of view. Readers who missed Mr. Miller's article may obtain a copy on request to The Times-Union.

g. (B4/f1)

Times-Union
April 6, 1955

Friend of Gannett, He Twice Visited City

Anthony Eden has visited in Rochester twice in the last nine years.

He made a stop on Aug. 27, 1951, while flying from Toronto to New York in The Gannett Newspaper plane.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Eden came to Rochester at the invitation of Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers. He was guest at a luncheon gathering of civic and industrial leaders at the Rochester Club.

* * *

A FRIEND of Frank Gannett, he was introduced by the publisher at the luncheon.

Miller became well acquainted with Eden on shipboard while returning from Europe in July 1951.

On June 29, 1946, the then former foreign minister stopped briefly at Rochester's municipal airport. Again, he was traveling in the Gannett plane en route from Toronto to New York.

On this occasion he exchanged greetings with Gannett, who he said was "my old friend."

PHOTO
Caption:
EDEN – as he looked Aug. 27, 1951, in photo taken at Rochester airport.

h. (B4/f1)

Democrat and Chronicle
April 7, 1955

He Was Here Last in 1951

Eden's Visits Recalled By Gannett Executive

See Stories, Photos, Pages 1, 2

To paraphrase an old bromide, England hasn't lost a father, she has gained a son, as Anthony Eden replaces Winston Churchill as prime minister.

For Churchill's and Eden's relationship has been a father-and-son fondness of deepest mutual respect and affection, Paul Miller, who has known Eden since World War II years, said yesterday.

Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, recalling his personal contacts with Eden, painted an intimate picture of the new prime minister. Eden, who has visited Rochester twice in the last nine years, is also an old friend of Frank Gannett and Douglas C. Townson.

And although "Winnie" has raised his last V-for-victory sign as Britain's prime minister, Eden no doubt will be in touch with him frequently, Miller said.

"They have been a great team. They were together at every conference, every meeting. And if there were times when they were separated, they got together as soon afterwards as possible to compare notes and fill one another in."

Guest at Dinner

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Eden visited in Rochester on June 29, 1946, when he was foreign minister. He stopped off here briefly to exchange greetings with Gannett. The Gannett Newspaper plane flew Eden from Toronto to New York, and Gannett accompanied the statesman to New York.

Again, on Aug. 27, 1951, he flew to Rochester from Toronto in the Gannett plane. And while here that day he was guest of honor at a dinner of approximately 40 civic and industrial leaders in the Rochester Club. Gannett introduced him to the assemblage.

Miller arranged for that 1951 visit to Rochester.

He first met Eden at a dinner given in Washington by Cordell Hull, then Secretary of State. Later, during World War II, he became more closely acquainted with him after Eden had paid several visits to Washington.

Vacation Smile

In 1951 Mr. and Mrs. Miller were in Europe, and after visiting France, Switzerland and Luxembourg, made a date from Paris with Eden to see him at 4 p. m. the following day in his office at London.

When the Millers arrived at the office, Eden said: "Well, you've had quite a trip, haven't you? I'm getting ready for the first real vacation I've had in a long while." He grinned like a schoolboy at the prospects of a holiday.

"Where are you going?" Miller asked.

"To Canada and the United States," replied Eden.

"How?" asked Miller.

"On the Empress of France."

"When are you leaving?" Miller wondered.

"Tomorrow morning," said Eden.

"Well," said Miller, "then there's not much need to waste time talking now. It so happens that we're booked for the same ship. We'll see you on the boat."

Helped in Speeches

A vacation for a British statesman is never completely that, and although Eden looked upon it as a holiday, he had speeches to make in Chicago, Denver, New York and Los Angeles. He and an assistant who accompanied him, Robert Carr, a young member of Parliament, worked on the upcoming speeches, and Miller, at Eden's request, lent a helping hand. He gave Eden the American point of view on various subjects the British diplomat intended to discuss.

Eden relaxed at deck tennis during the crossing. "He was very good, too, Miller recalled. Eden and Carr teamed against Miller and a Scottish officer every afternoon.

Before they left the boat, Miller urged Eden to come to Rochester for a visit. That was when, after completing his speaking tour and vacation, he arrived here in August, 1951.

PHOTO

Caption:

OLD FRIENDS – England's new prime minister, Anthony Eden, right, is shown with Frank Gannett on visit Eden paid to Rochester in 1946. A long-time friend of Gannett's, he came here from Canada in Gannett plane.

i. (B4/f1)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Times-Union
May 25, 1955

PHOTO
Caption:
Vice President Nixon

Nixon Lays It on the Line:

If We Are Strong, We Survive; Show Weakness, We're Done For

By PAUL MILLER

Vice President Richard Nixon, a veteran himself, told us the facts of life last night about the why and wherefore of peacetime military service.

If, he said, the United States had possessed an adequate military establishment in the late '30s there might never have been a World War II.

And, he added, if we hadn't dismantled our mighty military machine at the end of that war, there might never have been a Korea.

The vice president, here to accept a gold award from the Military Chaplains' Association in a ceremony attended by all too few at Eastman Theater, laid it on the line in a fashion some don't like.

Some would rather believe that we should get along with a minimum defense system and rush into preparedness only when we are threatened or actually attacked.

That may have been good enough in the old days – before airplanes, say – though many doubt it was good enough even then.

Certainly it isn't good enough today when the United States has (and Russia probably has) the capability of building and delivering a hydrogen bomb packing more explosive force than all the bombs dropped by all the air forces engaged in the second [sic] World War.

What Mr. Nixon told the Eastman audience last night was this:

1. We can be effective in maintaining world peace only so long as we are militarily strong.

2. The way to assure that strength is to see to it that our young are trained and ready all the time.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

So Mr. Nixon urged some form of Universal Military Service. Lacking that, he hopes we oldsters will do all we can to encourage young men to get into the armed forces and serve, understanding that in so doing they may preserve not only their own lives but the peace of the world in the process.

He conceded, unhappily, that a soldier is a hero in wartime but apt to be regarded as something else again in time of peace.

Let us, then, he urged, make clear to our youth that we appreciate their willingness to serve and honor them for it. Let us do that in every way we can, personally and through organizations set up for the purpose, like the U.S.O.

First, though, a lot of us need to get the blinders off: The blinders that shut out the facts of life which, ignore them though we may, press in on us from every side in today's troubled world.

Realize, Mr. Nixon was saying, that 1955 is as simple as this: If we are strong, we should be able to survive. One big slip to weakness, and we are done for.

May this message get home to millions!

j. (B4/f1)

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT
WASHINGTON

June 14, 1955

Dear Paul:

This is just a note to thank you for sending me the editorial you wrote concerning your six-footer and his current life in the Marines as well as the one about the speech I gave in Rochester recently. I appreciated your thoughtfulness in calling both of them to my attention.

I would like to borrow the last line of the one concerning my speech - - "May this message get home to millions" - - and add it to the one about your son, Ranne. It seems to me that your thoughts would help thousands of our fellow Americans who have sons or daughters in the Armed Forces.

It was good to see you in Rochester and I am looking forward to having a visit with you the next time you are in Washington.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely,

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Dick (signed)
Richard Nixon

Mr. Paul Miller
Executive Vice President
The Gannett Newspapers
Rochester 14, New York

k. (B4/f1)

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF DEFENSE
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

[SEAL]:
DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

June 10, 1955

MANPOWER AND PERSONNEL

Dear Mr. Miller:

Thank you very much for the two articles from the Rochester Times-Union which you sent me following my brief visit to Rochester with the Vice President.

I enjoyed both of the articles you wrote and have taken the liberty of reproducing the magnificent article about your son and his departure for the Far East. I think your article carries more impact in saying the things we feel in the military than any article I have ever read.

Please let me know if and when you come to Washington.

Sincerely yours,
Henry Du Flon (signature)
Henry Du Flon
Deputy Assistant Secretary

Paul Miller
Executive Vice President
Gannett Newspapers
Rochester, New York

l. (B4/f2)

Ogdensburg Journal
Tuesday, September 27, 1955

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Ike Began 'Political Revolution,' Declares Newspaper Leader

President Eisenhower had "begun to work somewhat of a political revolution" in this country and on the international scene and it is a "major tragedy that he had to be stricken" by a heart attack.

So declared Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Newspapers, in talks at Massena and Potsdam yesterday. He inspected the Power and Seaway projects.

However, the newspaperman added, he does not believe that the President is yet out of the picture as far as a second term is concerned. He urged his audiences not to get excited, to wait developments of the next few weeks before attempting to assess the President's future.

Miller said that Eisenhower's "disarming frankness" held the key to the beginnings of the political revolution the Republican President has forged.

"After many bitter years, we seem to be approaching political maturity and sanity which leads to appreciation of the other fellow's point of view."

This has worked a major change in Washington, Miller said. He is most familiar with the nation's capital having served as chief of the Associated Press Bureau there during the war years.

The ability to see that the "other fellow" is not always wrong, that everything is not either black or white, has begun to extend into international affairs, Miller added. He cited the recent exchange of correspondence between the President and Premier Bulganin of Russia as one of the indications of this change in atmosphere.

Pointing out that heart attacks are an almost-common occurrence among businessmen and that many recover from them to resume a full share of daily life, he urged caution in assessing the effects of the President's illness.

Political campaigning no longer requires an "iron man," thanks to television, he continued, and it would be possible for the president to seek another term "without leaving Washington," if he recovers sufficiently.

"It would be a great thing for all of us if President Eisenhower could go forward," he concluded.

Miller recalled for his audience many incidents of meeting with President Truman and other government leaders during his days in Washington.

9. 1956

a. (B4/f12)

Star and Herald
Panama, R. P.
Monday, February 6, 1956

1624

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Show OF Force Planned To Aid Mid-East Calm

US, England, France May Demonstrate Military Power To Area

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5 (AP) – The United States and Britain are considering making a classic "show of force" in the Eastern Mediterranean to dissuade Israeli and Arab states from going to war.

President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Eden are reported to have agreed at their conferences here last week that they simply can not [sic] tolerate an outbreak of war in the Middle East. They are said to have decided to prevent or suppress any such hostilities.

The powerful U. S. 6th fleet, built around two carriers and including cruisers, destroyers and submarines may be put on maneuver in the area as part of the "show of force" plan under study.

British forces on the island of Cyprus and U. S. air units based in the Mediterranean area could also be used in a display of strength.

These and other measures will be discussed in detail at three-power talks beginning here in a few days among U. S, British and French officials. France accepted an Eisenhower-Eden bid to participate and is expected to share their views.

Intensive diplomatic activity to prevent an outbreak of war and provide the basis for a settlement of Arab-Israeli differences is under way, paralleling the military planning.

a. (B4/f5)

Times-Union
March 6, 1956

Latin America Booming, Publisher Tells Rotary

Latin America is opening up great new opportunities for commerce and development in the Western world, a Rochester newspaper executive told a luncheon meeting of the Rotary Club today at the Powers.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Speaking with special reference to Venezuela, which is in the midst of an oil boom, but also mentioning Guatemala and Mexico, Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers said:

"A visit can be deflating to a North American who has any idea that all the growth and progress are taking place up here. It is eye-opening to any visitor. There has been enormous growth and expansion even within a year or two. Returning visitors are scarcely less impressed than those down there for the first time."

The speaker, accompanied by Mrs. Miller, visited Venezuela, Guatemala and Mexico. They were guests of Creole Petroleum Corp. in Venezuela. They had a look not only at Caracas, the capital, but flew more than 2,000 miles on visits to other sections of the country, with particular attention to U.S. oil and industrial interests.

In Guatemala, which Miller visited a year ago after the overthrow of the Communist-dominated government by Carlos Castillo Armas, they were received by Castillo Armas, now president, and visited various Guatemala beauty spots. In Mexico, they talked with newspaper, business and government people, interviewed President Ruiz Cortines and visited the former president, Miguel Alaman [sic].

Miller said:

"There isn't anything like Caracas in this world. A few years ago it was a poor capital, set in a narrow valley about three miles long at an altitude of 3,000 feet. There was no thought that it ever would expand and no place to expand. Well, they are expanding now right up the mountainsides.

"Construction everywhere. New streets and highways. A new civic center costing $300,000,000. A new resort hotel is going up astride a 7,000-foot mountain that will cost $15,000,000."

"Manana" – tomorrow – still gets frequent use, Miller said, but not much in Caracas.

"The only time I saw it there," he said, "was in a flashing electric sign running across the top of a modernistic mercantile building. It read, 'Buy now, pay tomorrow.'"

The Rev. J. Pierce Newell, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, was among the special guests at the weekly Rotary Club luncheon. He is the father of Mrs. Everett Bauman, of Caracas.

b. (B4/f5)

Democrat and Chronicle
March 7, 1956

Gannett Executive Reports
On South American Journey

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Newly-returned from a flying trip to three South American countries during which he visited their heads of state, Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, yesterday described the trip as "eye-opening."

Miller, who has made trips south of the border in the past, flew thousands of miles with Mrs. Miller to Venezuela, Guatemala and Mexico.

Speaking with special reference to Venezuela at a luncheon meeting of the Rotary Club he said there was "construction everywhere." He described new streets and highways, a 300-million-dollar civic center, and a new hotel astride a mountain, all in Caracas, Venezuela.

"Manana" – tomorrow – still gets frequent use, Miller said, but not much in Caracas. Mexico impressed him "very much indeed." While there he interviewed President Ruiz Cortines and visited former president Miguel Aleman.

He had words of praise for President Carlos Castillo Armas of Guatemala, who, he said, "deserves the sympathy and help of the Western world." Armas rose to power with a military junta which overthrew the old administration in 1950 [1954?]. The country has a large illiterate population.

Oil-rich Venezuela by contrast has "no poor labor in the country." Assisted by President Phil Gerner of the Rotary Club, Miller used several large photographs of Caracas business and industrial scenes. The blowups were made by the Eastman Kodak Co. for the purpose with the aid of Frank Teagarden of Kodak public relations.

"About all the State Department usually gets is criticism," Miller observed. "But very often that criticism stems from nothing but ignorance. Our people in Central and South America deserve great credit for the job they are doing."

The Rev. J. Pierce Newell, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, was among the special guests at the weekly Rotary meeting in the Powers Hotel. He is the father of Mrs. Everett Bauman of Caracas, whose husband is a Creole Petroleum Corp. executive at Caracas.

c. (B4/f3)

Rochester Times-Union
Monday, April 23, 1956

'Year for Great Reporting,' Directors of AP Declare

NEW YORK (AP) – Directors of The Associated Press reported today an increasing demand at home and abroad for the "factual, objective and intelligent news reporting" of The AP.

"Your directors are confident the members, staff and management will maintain our reputation for such reporting," the directors said in their annual report.

Referring to the elections at home and tensions and struggles abroad, the directors said, "This is a year for great reporting."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The report was read at the annual meeting of The Associated Press, worldwide news cooperative.

CITES PRINCIPLES

Concerning the election, the directors said, "The public expects from The Associated Press strict adherence to its principals of impartial and fair reporting, playing no favorites, taking no editorial position.

"The Associated Press news report is under the alert and constant scrutiny of members whose political and economic beliefs cover every point of view, but who are united in demanding straight-down-the-middle coverage from The AP," the report said.

The report said election returns compiled by The AP in cooperation with thousands of employes [sic] of member newspaper and radio stations "have come to be accepted as all-but-official, for their accuracy has been demonstrated time and time again."

"The speed of the election report is an AP superiority," the directors said.

The report declared news reporting today must do more than inform the reader of what has occurred in the preceding 12 or 24 hours. It said:

"To meet competition for the public's attention, news presentation must illuminate what has happened, report the trends, periodically step back and take the 'long look' at continuing situations."

POLITICAL TRENDS

In this connection, the report said, The AP has "developed and expanded staff specialization in such areas as politics, foreign affairs, ideologies, military affairs, sports, sociology, religion, economics and agriculture."

The directors said that in recent months those specialists "have reported political trends from 'grass roots,' given meaning to the coverage of the segregation story in the South, gotten first-hand reports on the Middle East crisis from both sides, battled censorship barriers and closely analyzed effects related to the desanctifying of Stalin in Soviet Russia – and told what it's like to fly over the South Pole."

Noting "the quality feature output of The Associated Press, particularly that distributed for Sunday use," the report said:

"The Associated Press is unexcelled producing this type of material for newspapers. It is an expensive and laborious undertaking but it is profitable and exclusive to the membership.

"The financial status of The Associated Press is strong," the directors said.

INCREASE IN COSTS

"Virtually every element of the organization's costs increased in the past year, in common with everything in the country's economy. On top of this, the association necessarily expanded and broadened its operations to meet increasing demands.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"All this was accomplished without calling upon the membership for additional financial support. Increased costs were met by aggressively extending participation, efficient planning, and effecting economies."

The directors observed that growth of AP membership and service subscriptions throughout the world "maintained a healthy pace during 1955."

The directors noted "with regret that another Associated Press correspondent has been imprisoned in an Iron Curtain country. He is Dr. Endre Marton, a Hungarian who was stationed in Budapest. The charge was espionage but no details were disclosed."

At a morning session the membership elected directors and voted upon the application of 17 newspapers for AP membership. Results of the election of directors will not be known until late tonight.

Terms of the following AP directors expired this year:

Robert McLean, Philadelphia Bulletin; Norman Chandler, Los Angeles Times; Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers; Robert B. Choate, Boston Herald; and James M. North Jr., Fort Worth Star Telegram, all representing cities of more than 50,000 population; and Harry F. Byrd Jr., Winchester (Va.) Evening Star, representing cities of less than 50,000.

All were renominated except Chandler. He was ineligible for renomination because of an AP by-law limiting all board members, except the president, to three consecutive terms. McLean is the president.

d. (B4/f6)

- I -

BY PAUL MILLER

Does Rochester need oil wells and a dictator?

The question came to me more than once in Caracas - - the 3,000 foot high capital of oil-rich Venezuela - - as I read the Rochester news briefs my office telegraphed to me daily during a recent tour.

We North Americans have long joked about our Latin neighbors and their reputed love of putting off everything possible to manana - - tomorrow.

Some of them can turn that around on us today. As our daily Rochester news-grams told of more "plans" for the Civic Center and such, the roar of trucks and sounds of construction told a story of progress actually under way in Caracas, which has no modern parallel.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Down there, on the order of the 42-year-old president, General Marcos Perez Jiminez, they have ripped out 400 buildings in the heart of town and are two-thirds of the way toward completion of a kind of Venezuelas Rockefeller Center costing $300,000,000.

This is only part of the story. There are new hotels, new apartment projects, new highways, new schools and college buildings, and new water and sewage systems as President “P. J.” and his government pursue their policy of “sowing the petroleum.” The government receives upward of half a billion dollars yearly from the 18 oil companies doing business in this northernmost of South American countries. Much of the money is going into the building splurge.

In Rochester, and this is said not critically but merely to make the little point, we have been talking about a civic center for 30 years or more. In Caracas, they’ll have started and completed their $300,000,000 Centro Bolivar in one-third that time.

Sure, I know - - Rochester doesn’t have oil wells spewing liquid gold; and we neither have a dictator nor wish one. Yet it’s interesting all the same, isn’t it, to point up the contrast however conditions may differ? Particularly when, as noted, North Americans have held so long to the mistaken idea that it’s the Latinos who specialize in delay.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(Who couldn't forgive Pete Barry or Bob Aex, by the way, if they now and then wish they had only to order a house removed and a street widened to get it done.)

The Creole Petroleum Corp., a subsidiary of Standard Oil of New Jersey, has in Venezuela the biggest U.S. foreign investment anywhere - - about One Billion Dollars. Creole people are close indeed to what's going on in Venezuela. And why not? Creole helps pay for it. Creole directors decided to invite some U.S. publishers and others to come down and get the picture first-hand. The idea was to spread the story of an American company's problems and accomplishments on foreign soil, and also to get some publicity for Venezuela as well.

Mrs. Miller and I recently returned from such a visit. We spent several days in Caracas. Then we flew 2,000 miles in less than a week outside the capital. We ran out of adjectives the first day.

We landed at Maiquetia, airport for Caracas, at dusk - - after a non-stop 8-hour flight from New York.

In the next 20 minutes after leaving Maiquetia, we had our first real introduction to the New Venezuela. The fine modern airports had impressed us. The ride in to the city of Caracas opened our eyes.

It is between 10 and 11 miles from coastal Maiquetia to Caracas. It used to be over an hour, over a road with hundreds of twists and turns. On the new $60,000,000 toll highway we were whipped up from the Caribbean Sea to 3,000-foot-high Caracas in 20 minutes. It's a six-lane highway. Two tunnels, one over a mile long, bore through the Andean foothills. Three of the largest pre-stressed concrete bridges in the world span the deepest valleys. The project was - - and is, for the road is still being extended and improved - - a part of the Venezuelan government's program to "plow the petroleum." They take half a billion dollars a year in taxes from the 18 oil companies, most of them American, operating there, and with reasonable satisfaction, apparently, on both sides.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

What did we think of it, a friend asked on the ride in.

"Fabulous," Mrs. Miller and I replied in unison and laughingly agreed to try henceforth for some new adjectives. We'd applied that one, we recalled, to the airport reception and to the Maiquetia airport itself.

Roaring Venezuela started quietly enough.

Columbus discovered it on his third voyage to the New World in 1498. A year later, a Spanish adventurer, Alonso de Ojeda, sailed farther - - to Lake Maracaibo in Western Venezuela. Indians then, as now, lived in houses built on stilts out over the lake. Hence the adventurers called the area Venezuela - - Little Venice.

- 4 -

Caracas, the capital, was never envisaged as a commercial center; simply as a seat of government and as a retirement home for wealthy farmers. Oil has made it a booming city of over a million inhabitants within two decades - - really less, for the really big development has come only within the last few years.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Traffic and housing problems are enormous. Office buildings as well as homes now are climbing the slopes of surrounding mountains for lack of building space in the crowded narrow valley where the city was born.

Mansions as big as resort hotels dot the mountainsides. The streets are jammed with automobiles, all but a relative few of U.S. make. Prices and wages both are high - - Creole Petroleum Corp. says even its unskilled labor averages $4,400 annually in pay and benefits. Creole, with a billion dollar investment in Venezuela, is the biggest, but 17 other oil companies, mostly U.S., are doing business there under conditions generally similar.

Going off the first tee at a Caracas Country Club, I remarked to my companions at the whim that would lead a man to put a house on a mountain top, pointing to one nearing completion all alone up a height within our view. I suggested that perhaps the lots were cheap up there.

One of my companions set me straight.

"Nothing whomsical [sic] about that," he explained. "It's a prize home site. Any lot within our view, whether on a mountain top or mountain side, is worth a fortune. The man building the particular house you are talking about paid 600,000 bolivares for the lot alone."

That stopped me, for 600,000 bolivares is $180,000!

Like San Francisco, Caracas has a climate that permits hillside building with no worry about icy roads - - they call it perpetual Spring, and I would not dispute the description, for that's all I saw in Caracas. Elsewhere in Venezuela, of course, the weather varies. The whole country lies in the latitude of the torrid zone; altitude is the deciding factor. Coastal areas can be hot and damp. The high Andean passes are chill and wet the year around.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Not everybody is rich or getting that way. In a population of between 4,000,000 and 6,000,000 persons, with illiteracy a nationwide problem, naked poverty is widespread.

The government, although concentrating on Caracas, is making some start also on housing, hospitals, schools and sanitary facilities elsewhere. Caracas, however, is getting the bulk of that portion of the half billion dollars annually form the oil companies. Even in Caracas, thousands on thousands live in squalor -- though, I think, those conditions are scarcely worse than some I have seen in Manhattan above Central Park or in Washington within a few blocks of the Capitol!

The government's Banco Obrero, "Workers Bank," is financing a long-range slum-clearance program. The Bank completed 13 new low-income structures with a total of 1,950 apartments and 52-four story buildings of eight apartments each last year. These were to accommodate 11,800 people from nearby slums which were destroyed.

The valuation the government agents place on a shack is credited by the Bank as a down-payment toward the purchase of an apartment. Rentals, applied to the mortgage, range from $10 to $20 a month.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Throughout all Venezuela some $40,000,000 was estimated spent within the last year for low and middle income housing.

- 7 -

How long before the Venezuela bubble is to burst? Apparently it will be quite a while. Indicated oil reserves seem to assure production equal to today's or greater for 20 years. And estimates are that world requirements for oil will double in that period. Meantime, the Venezuelans are working to diversify in two directions. (1) They are developing other sources of continuing income. (2) They are seeking to enlarge oil sales outside the United States so that they will not be over-dependent upon market here.

e. (B4/f12)

[Source/date unknown]

Washington Scene . . . By George Dixon

A Craving for Votes

CARACAS, March 1 – Gen Marcos Perez Jimenez, who became President of Venezuela without benefit of ballot, is a dictator with a rather uncommon obsession. He is consumed with ambition to be elected.

General Perez Jimenez says he hopes to have a general election by the latter part of next year, and everybody I talked to, all over this fantastically variegated country, seems to believe him.

He has even convinced United States Ambassador Fletcher Warren that he means to risk a free election . . . .

"President Perez Jimenez works day and night at the task of selling himself and his government to the Venezuelans. He is the most public-relations-minded dictator I have seen in my 35 years in the United States Foreign Service, and I've served in Cuba, Bolivia, Nicaragua, Colombia, Paraguay, Hungary, Latvia, and did a stretch as director of the Office of South American Affairs."

If Perez Jimenez goes to the polls there is one thing he'll have in common with many United States "statesmen." The oil lobby won't be against him.

PEREZ JIMENEZ puts on a great show of being frank with the press – and he impresses with his sincerity . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

THIS VENEZUELAN government doesn't fool around. The President doesn't speak enough English to make a direct interview pay off, so I am indebted to Ambassador Warren for the answers to many questions.

I asked about communism. Our envoy broke into a wide grin.

"The United States can take lessons from Venezuela in handling Communists," he said. "Venezuela has no diplomatic relation with the U.S.S.R. or any of the satellites whatsoever.

"Russia had an embassy here. The Venezuelans ordered it closed. The Czechoslovakian Ambassador lodged a protest and they threw him out too."

Venezuela is copying many of our ways, but it differs radically from us in one interesting respect.

Our two most engrossing topics of conversation are the weather and business. But the weather in Venezuela doesn't change enough to speak of, and neither does the political situation. Hence, Venezuela's big conversation pieces are the bolivar and business.

The bolivar is currently worth about 30 cents. But, boy oh boy, you sure can't say that about business!

(Copyright, 1956. King features Syndicate, Inc.)

f. (B4/f5)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Sunday, March 8, 1956

Venezuela Uses Oil Billions

400 Buildings in Caracas Heart Razed to Make Way for Big Center

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice President, the Gannett Newspapers

WE NORTH AMERICANS have long joked about our Latin neighbors and their reputed love of putting off everything possible to tomorrow.

Some of them could turn that around in us today. As Rochester newspapers report more plans for the Civic Center and such, the roar of trucks and sounds of construction tell a story of progress actually under way in Caracas, Venezuela, that has no modern parallel . . . .

g. (B4/f6)

*****

U.S. News & World Report
March 9, 1956

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A NATION THAT OIL IS BUILDING

Venezuela Booms While "Nationalized" Neighbors Lag

For a study in contrasts in a vital industry look at what's happening among U. S. neighbors to the south.
The industry: oil. It's a boon to Venezuela. It's an expensive headache to Mexico, Argentina, Brazil.
All four are producers. In only one is oil in private hands. Only that one has had a flourishing industry through the years.

CARACAS

Developments in Latin America are calling attention in this part of the world to a case history of government vs. private operation of a key industry – oil.

The largest countries in Latin America are Mexico, Brazil and Argentina. But a much smaller country –Venezuela – is outstripping them. Oil is the main reason. Each country has extensive petroleum deposits. Venezuela is the only one of them where the entire industry is operated by private companies . . . .

(2) PHOTOS:
WEALTH FROM OIL FIELDS . . . . . IS TRANSFORMING VENEZUELA'S CAPITAL

Caption:
Throughout the country, more schools, hospitals, roads and industry

PHOTO:
OIL BUYS APARTMENTS TO REPLACE SLUMS

Caption:
All over Venezuela, housing projects are under way

h. (B4/f6)

March 14, 1956

The Honorable Carlos Castillo Armas
President
Republic of Guatemala
The National Palace
Guatemala City, Guatemala, C.A.

Dear Mr. President:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I returned from my recent visit to Guatemala a greater admirer than ever of your beautiful country and with even higher hopes for its continued progress.

Both Mrs. Miller and I greatly enjoyed our visit with you at the National Palace and are indebted to you for your courtesy in having provided us with a car and driver during our stay. It was a wonderful visit in every way and we do hope to come again many times in the years that lie ahead.

I devoutly hope your land program will prove a great success and that developments which will follow your granting of oil concessions will bring a new and even greater prosperity to Guatemala.

With very best personal regards to you and your splendid staff,

Sincerely,

i. (B4/f15)

Suez 103 miles long - - opened Nov. 17, 1869 - - Suez Canal Co., headquartered in Paris - - 99 yr lease which would have ended Nov. 17, 1868 [1968?].

Nasser's decree nationalizing: "In the name of the nation, we hereby declare that the International Suez Canal Co. be nationalized. The company, with its assets and liabilities, will be transferred to the Egyptian State. The present management will be liquidated. Shareholders will be compensated according to closing prices in the stock exchange. The company will be annexed to the Egyptian Ministry of Commerce. The company will have its own budget. All company money in Egypt and abroad will be frozen and banks and individuals forbidden to dispose of this money except with permission from the new Egyptian management. All employees will remain in service and no resignation will be accepted."

British and French, and others, promptly protested that Nasser had no right, that Egypt was bound to present arrangements until mid-November of 1968.

j. (B4/f15)

PHOTO
1956 – 8A

Departure for London – Sept. 18, 1956

k. (B4/f15)

(2) PHOTOS

1638

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1956 – 8B
1956 – 8C

After Meeting with Anthony Eden, 10 Downing St. 9/20/56

l. (B4/f15)
*****

Times-Union
September 21. 1956

(1.)

17 Conferees Agree to Take Suez to U.N.

LONDON (AP) –Experts of 17 of the world's shipping powers agreed to day on the form and timing of an approach to the United Nations to solve the Suez Canal crisis.

They hammered out the accord after the final touches to a plan setting up the "Cooperative Assn. of Suez Canal Users" to protect the rights of the maritime nations in the canal Egypt took over July 26 . . . .

(2.)

Eden Receives Paul Miller At Downing St.

LONDON (AP) – Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Newspapers, was received at 10 Downing St. last night by Prime Minister Eden.

Miller is here on a study of the Suez crisis. He expects to go to Cairo over the weekend, returning to Rochester at the end of next week.

The prime minister and Miller have been friends for some years. The publisher told reporters his visit was merely "a friendly call," adding:

"I was delighted to find Sir Anthony looking exceedingly well, and in good spirits and optimistic as always."

Miller arrived in London Wednesday by plane from New York.

m. (B4/f15)

The Gannett Newspapers

Paul Miller
Executive Vice President

Executive Offices
Rochester 14, N. Y.

Dictated at London, England
September 21, 1956
Transcribed at Rochester
September 24, 1956

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Dear All:

It is 9:23 p.m. Friday night, September 21. I am in the office of John Lloyd, chief of the London AP Bureau. I have my Soundscriber hooked up down here and am doing some dictating. He has gone to his home in the country. He recently bought a beautiful new place an hour's drive out of London. He wants me to join him tomorrow afternoon, but I may not be able to as I want to do some work. If I get through, fine.

Tonight I want to tell you what I have been doing so far, and my plans for the next week.

Tomorrow, as I said above, I want to do some work, if writing can be called work. It will be the first I've done so far. I've buzzed around and have seen a lot of people and have listened to a lot of people. I also have been busy making arrangements to go to Cairo. But I haven't done any writing. Then I want to do some shopping, too.

Sunday morning, then, I expect to go to one of the famous churches here, probably for the nine o'clock service, and then check out of The Dorchester House and head for the airport. My SABENA (Belgian Airlines) plane leaves London airport at noon for Brussels, then on to Cairo with no further stop, I believe, until we reach the capital of Egypt at 12:05 Monday a.m., Cairo time.

I already have arranged, through the Egyptian Embassy here, for an appointment at 10:00 a.m. Monday with the head of the Egyptian Information Service. He has been told that I would like to go down to the Suez Canal and see what all the talking is about on Monday, then return to Cairo, and, if at all possible, see Colonel Nasser, the Dictator of Egypt, and his Foreign Minister on Tuesday. I shall have Wednesday to collect my thoughts and perhaps see a little more of Cairo, leaving there shortly after midnight about 12:10 a.m. (Thursday) on a nonstop flight to London. This flight will be on an American line, TWA, and we are due in London around noon of Thursday. At 4:00 p.m., I am to board a British Overseas Airways plane for New York, arriving there - - as I cabled Mother today - - at 8:00 a.m. Friday, if we are on schedule. That, by the way, is old father's fiftieth birthday. I am hoping Russ can meet me so that I can get home without any more delay than necessary, and I am eager to get back and see everybody; also need a little time in the office before departure for Hartford for our Gannett Conference, in which executives from all the papers and the Central Office will meet, Tuesday.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

As Mother knows, I love London; always rated it ahead of Paris or almost any place else over here. Nothing has happened to change my opinion this trip. From the time I arrived here, mid-morning of last Wednesday, I have had an interesting and even in many respects a thrilling experience or succession of experiences. Last Wednesday was a beautiful day - - the first sunny day they've had in weeks, an airport porter told me - - and I found The Dorchester House a delightful spot. I have a beautiful room. As always, I am chiefly impressed with the bathroom, which is about half as large as my bedroom - - I would like to duplicate it at home.

I couldn't set up my Soundscriber to work on the hotel outlet without a transformer. The hotel electrician wasn't able to scare one up for me. That's why I borrowed John Lloyd's office for the evening.

I have been more or less busy every minute.

On Wednesday afternoon after I had got settled around and had come down for lunch at a French restaurant near The Associated Press building with John Lloyd, I attended a press conference in which the reporters here were told what had happened in the 18-nation Suez Canal users conference that day. There was a lot of waiting and this did not start until after 7:00. Then it dragged on until 9:00. I then remained at the Embassy and talked with some of the members of the American Delegation there, including a Rochester boy, Bill Macomber, until 10:30, when I walked home to the Dorchester from the Embassy and went to bed.

I had sent a cable ahead to Prime Minister Eden asking for an appointment Wednesday or Thursday in his office at 10 Downing Street. On Thursday morning, his secretary called and invited me to come to the Prime Minister's office that afternoon at 5:30. Apparently he sees very few people, because all my friends here at The AP and elsewhere were surprised, apparently, that the meeting had been arranged with such ease.

When I reached 10 Downing Street, which Mother will remember, since she and I were there two or three times when Atlee was Prime Minister back in 1949 and 1951, The AP had sent a photographer along. He took pictures of me standing in front of the door with the #10 showing. I was immediately ushered into a private office and the Prime Minister's private secretary came in to talk with me. He is a handsome young fellow, very personable. Of course this was part of the arrangement - - he wanted to get some line on what I intended to ask

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Eden, or what I had in mind in calling on him, and then give it to Eden before I went in.

Anyway, after a few minutes he excused himself and I was taken into the Cabinet Room which the Prime Minister also uses as an office. It is a long room with windows on three sides, antique furniture and a huge antique fireplace. Eden looked fine, as I said in the story The AP sent home last night and which I suppose was printed in Rochester today. He was a[s] friendly as he could be. He had on a pair of red house slippers and immediately got up and asked me if I wouldn't like to join him in a scotch. He went over and opened a cupboard in one end of the room and mixed two drinks. Then he returned to his place at the center of one side of the Cabinet table and motioned me to sit in the chair nearest him. Well, there was a clock right behind him and I had thought I would stay perhaps ten or fifteen minutes and then be on my way. As it happened, I was with him for an hour or more. We talked about everything and he apparently was just as frank as he could be about the Suez matter and all of his other problems. However, he is so afraid to give an interview to any one individual or organization, and kept saying so apologetically, that there would be no story except a little item on The AP wire about my having visited with him.

He said, "I wanted to see you, Paul. Did you want to see me, interview or no interview?"

Of course I said I certainly did just want to visit with him.

Afterward, I walked several blocks from 10 Downing Street towards taking a taxi to The Associated Press office of John Lloyd. I went with him to his apartment. Mother will remember his friend, Joan Mussell. They are still seeing a lot of each other and the three of us had dinner together at a tiny French restaurant. Wonderful food and a grand evening.

Today, I got up later than I have previously here, and did a great deal of telephoning before going to lunch at the Connaught Hotel (mother will remember this as Charley Kline's favorite) with Carl McCardle. He is a former Philadelphia Bulletin reporter and we knew him when we lived at Wayne. He now is Assistant Secretary of State for information. In other words, he is Secretary Dulles' press officer. He told me a great many interesting stories about his experiences with Dulles and we had a thoroughly enjoyable time. Incidentally, I tried to telephone Charley Kline but was unable to reach him. No one here seems to see him any more. I don't know what the score is. There was no answer at his apartment. He may not even be here.

After lunch I bought a few things. I couldn't have brought better clothes with me if I had planned everything for a month - - and so needed only some handkerchiefs and odd items. Tomorrow morning, early, I will try to pick up one or two little items for Louise, Jean, Tallie and Kenper. I will leave them with the

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

BOAC office at London airport along with the other things I don't need to take to Cairo, and get them when I return to London from Egypt.

Incidentally, people who have just come from Cairo tell me to (1) take the lightest clothes I have and (2) watch the food and drink in Cairo. I am going to take the clothes I brought to London, as two of the suits are quite light, and I certainly will remember to watch my eating while I'm down there. I had a typhoid shot from an American Airlines doctor at Idlewild. He did not have any typhus serum so I did not take a typhus shot. Typhoid is required, but typhus is not, although it is recommended. I hope I don't get typhus!

After shopping this afternoon, I went with the reporters who were covering the Conference to the residence of the American Ambassador here where Secretary Dulles held a final windup press conference. The Ambassador's home was built by Barbara Hutton, but she had it only a few years before she sold it to the American government as an Embassy residence. Some place!

The meeting there with Dulles lasted until 8:30 p.m. when he and the other Americans with him said goodbye and were taken to London airport where the plane was waiting to take them back to Washington. I took a taxi back to the Dorchester and had dinner there. Then I got some notes off the desk in my room of things I wanted to do tonight, picked up my little Soundscriber and here I am.

Well, that about brings you up to date on my activities as I prepare to go on to Egypt. I wouldn't have missed it for anything. It will be of inestimable value to The Gannett Newspapers, not only for what can be produced about this particular situation, here and at Cairo, but also in the years to come. Frank Gannett always contended that the only way to know about something was to go find out personally. I have always believed this too. I believe it more than ever now. It is tough, sometimes, and this trip is no picnic in many ways, but it's really the only way for a newspaper man to do. Somebody from our newspapers should do this sort of thing when possible and practicable. I felt it was best that I do this one myself because of my contacts. That certainly has proved to be the case. The fact that I was able to see Eden and so many others here that I wished to see, and that I apparently have some chance of seeing most of the people I want to see at Cairo, makes all the difference. Of course, that is no reflection on anybody else, as I was able to make the arrangements and contacts through no particular virtues of mine - - the ground work was laid back in the years at Washington. Without the experience down there (where, for example, I met Eden) I never would be able to see and do all the things it has been possible to do with relative ease now. It's really of value beyond any estimation both to me and now, I trust, to The Gannett Newspapers. Well.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I had a perfect flight over form New York to London. I hope the coming three more flights on this trip will be as comfortable in all respects. I never take a long flight but that I have some uneasiness, and I have been quite fortunate, for the most part, through the years.

Please give my very best to all our friends and associates - - and I shall be seeing you on September 28, just a week from today.

Dad (signed)

n. (B4/f15)

Dictated Sunday morning
September 30, 1956

Dear All:

I dictated one letter from London which told you about my experiences up to that time on the junket from which I returned last Friday afternoon at 3:00 p.m. Now I am sitting here in our dressing room, in bathrobe and slippers, feet in the air, dictating a windup report. Maybe some of you will be interested enough to read it all the way through. Louise is packing, as we are to leave in a little while for Hartford, Connecticut. We will have all of our editors and publishers and radio and television station managers in there Monday and Tuesday for our annual meeting. We'll return to Rochester Tuesday afternoon. We will be off again, by the way, next Sunday for New York. We can be reached there at the Ambassador Hotel through Thursday noon, returning here according to present plans in time for me to speak about my trip at a meeting here that evening. Incidentally, I expect to make a speech in Hartford following the dinner Monday night with the Governor of Connecticut and others as guests. I believe; also a television appearance and a couple of other speeches in Albany and Newburgh are on the schedule.

Now back to my trip:

I was up early Sunday morning in London, after having spent Saturday with a friend of mine at his beautiful estate in Surrey, about a 45-minute train ride out of London. I took a walk, completed all my packing, told the hotel I would be checking out around 11:00, and went to the historic old church, St. Martin in the Fields, which was built around 250 years ago. I had to leave the service a little early, because - - for old time's sake - - I wanted to go to the St. James Court Apartments, where Louise and I stayed in 1951, on the way back to my hotel, The Dorchester. The apartments, as you may remember our having told you then, are near Buckingham Palace. There was quite a crowd around the Palace so that we were held up, and when I saw that it was the Sunday parade and changing of the morning guard, I dismissed the cab and got out myself to watch the show with the others.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Then I flagged another taxi and went to St. James Court. I went in to get a postcard to send to Louise and the man on the desk insisted he remembered me and asked about Louise, believe it or not! Anyway, I did get the postcard and got it off to her. Back at the hotel, I cleared out, took a cab for the airport and by shortly after 1:00 o'clock was over the English Channel in perfectly beautiful weather bound for Brussels.

I never leave London without a real twinge. I couldn't tell you why, but it always has had a big hold on me and is more charming now than ever. During the war and for some years thereafter it was terribly hard hit. It was impossible even to buy a good meal as late as 1951. All that is changed now. I think it is about my favorite city.

2

I flew in a British European Airways plane to Brussels, a flight of about an hour and fifty minutes. It was a beautiful flight. We arrived in bright, and indeed, hot sunshine at the big Brussels airport from which Louise and I took off for London after visiting Perle Mesta at Luxembourg, in 1951. There, I changed to a Sabena (Belgian Airlines Plane) for Athens and then on to Cairo. We arrived in Athens, after a perfectly beautiful flight over the Alps and over a number of interesting cities, including Florence, at about 9 p.m. We were on the ground there for half an hour or so and by a little after midnight were over the lights of Cairo. Cairo is a city of about three million and has many good and brightly lighted streets, so that the effect, coming after hours of darkness with no towns or cities of consequence, was startling.

A friend of mine from The Associated Press Cairo Bureau was out to meet me and had arranged for me to be put through customs in a hurry. Thus, in no time at all, we were on the way to my hotel, Egypt's best, The Semarisis [Semiramis?]. The hotel was named for a famed Egyptian queen. There is a movie of that name now. The hotel is right on the Nile, which is a beautiful, wide river cutting right through the heart of Cairo, with a Riverside Drive - - six lanes - - on one side and buildings, many of them new and quite modern, rising all along the river for many miles. I was delighted to find that my nice large room opened up with several doors looking right out down the Nile and Riverside Drive.

Even at the hour we reached the hotel, which was 1:00 a.m., there was a great deal of traffic. And what traffic! Besides cars buzzing all over the place, apparently paying no attention to any sort of traffic signals, there were donkey carts of all kinds, push carts, and just plain assorted Egyptians - - most of them in the long nightgowns and sandals they sport - - weaving in and out through the streets with no attention paid to lights, or anything else. Every morning I thought surely I'd see Egyptians, wagons, horses and donkeys piled up all around the edges of the circle below my window. However, I never saw anything but a dead horse all the time I was in Cairo. This was near the American Embassy - - a taxi had hit the horse.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I'm getting into too much detail. This will go on and on, if I don't shorten it. I will from here on.

The first day in Cairo was spent getting myself organized, arranging for a car and guide to visit the Suez Canal the next day, spending the evening with the publishers of Cairo's biggest newspaper. It was a very pleasant evening, too, and they arranged a date for me (which I never kept, however) with President Nasser for Wednesday. Now about the Canal:

I will not go into details, because I will write about it and will send you all clippings. However, I can only say that it, like everything else that happened to me on this trip, just turned out perfectly. The young Egyptian who went along with me, our driver, the weather - - everything - - was fine. We drove to Ismailia, Canal headquarters, then straight up the road alongside the Canal to Port said for lunch. We returned about 7:30 in the evening. Since I got up at 6:00, it was a long day, but I hardly felt tired all the time I was there; yet

3

I think I kept the most irregular hours on meals and sleep that I can recall. The Egyptians don't know what hours are!

They go to work some time in the morning, maybe 9:00 or maybe noon. Then they have a siesta in early afternoon. However, they are apt to be doing business until all hours of the evening and night, and for many, as for us, dinner is more apt to come at 10:00, 11:00 or 12:00 midnight than earlier.

On Wednesday, I got up expecting to see Nasser and then get packed and leave on a 3:00 a.m. plane the following morning, Thursday, for Rome and London. I was to see Nasser in the evening. However, something came up and they called an emergency cabinet meeting and he was unable to keep the appointment. Around 11:00 o'clock they called me to ask if I could stay over and see him next day, as the cabinet meeting made it impossible that evening. Well, I had seen and done everything else that I had come to Cairo for, and I was by now getting tired and eager to start for home. I just couldn't see putting in another day, as I thought something might come up the next day, too.

So - - 3:00 a.m. found me in a British European Airways plane bound for Rome. We arrived in Rome about 8:00 a.m., on a beautiful, clear, cool morning; spent an hour there. Were off again for London, arriving about 1:30 p.m. I had slept little on the flight from Cairo and was delighted when the British Airways people had someone meet me at the plane and inquire whether I wouldn't like to be sent to a hotel nearby for some rest. I said I sure would! I went to this little old English hotel, converted from a former country place, beautiful with acres of carefully cropped ground, and slept until about 5:30. Then I got up and had tea, which they prepared for me in a little lounge, made some calls to some friends in London, and the BEA car was back again to take me to the airport for the flight home.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

For the first time in my experience, I had reserved a berth on the plane. As it happened, we were a little late getting started, due to fog and rain which blew up that evening (only the second bit of unfavorable weather I saw on my entire trip) and then after getting aloft developed radio trouble. The result was that the pilot decided to land at Shannon, Ireland, to work on the radio. It was announced that dinner, instead of being served on the plane, would be served in an airport restaurant at Shannon. Well, that looked like a good opportunity for me to get some more sleep! I arranged to have my berth made up and as soon as we arrived at Shannon and the other passengers disembarked, I donned my pajamas and climbed into bed. It was as comfortable as anything could be. Of course, I was awakened when the plane was loaded again an hour or so later, but I was just as cozy and comfortable as I could be. After about nine and one half hours we arrived at Gander, Newfoundland. You will recall that Louise and I flew in a plane that stopped at Gander in years past. Anyway, we had a little more radio trouble, so we were there for an hour or so. By then it was 8:30 or 9:00 o'clock London time - - five hours ahead of Rochester time - - so I stayed in bed a little longer, but got up in time to shave and dress before we took off again for New York. By the time we began leveling off for Idlewild airport we were over three hours late and I knew if Louise had come down after me with Russ they must be getting pretty impatient. Sure enough, as we landed I could see Russ Holderman, our chief pilot, standing out on the runway waiting to take a picture of me as I came off the plane. He did, and then told me that Louise and Kenper had come with him and were waiting inside. There was a terrific traffic jam, due to the weather, at Idlewild and we were some time getting away. Even so, by 3:00 p.m. I was back in my office in Rochester. Some traveling, eh - - leaving Cairo at 3:00 a.m. one day and being back in my office at 3:00 p.m. the following day!

What a pleasant surprise when I walked in my office! Remember, it was my fiftieth birthday, Friday, September 28. Mary (my star secretary) had put all the cards and gifts that had come into the office on my desk. And I never received one tenth as many before in my life. It made quite a desk full, so many that we arranged to have a photographer come up and take a picture of me examining them. Mary will send you a print when the pictures are ready.

Since then, I have had a very happy time getting adjusted around here. The nice weather has continued. I didn't even develop a cold as the result of the trip - - still feel just fine. I worked until about midnight at the office on my birthday, Friday, and from 9:00 a.m. Saturday until about 4:30. The result is that I am in pretty good shape and will hope to get the material I want to publish organized and ready to print by the time we return from Hartford on Tuesday. Last night, some very good friends of ours, Louis and Cora Johnson, who live part of the time here and the rest of the time in Florida, gave a dinner party for Louise and me and built it around my birthday. It was beautiful. They had quite a cake, much of which we brought home to the boys as the Johnsons are leaving town today and have no one else to give it to.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Shortly after we arrived home from the party, the telephone rang and there was old Ranne calling up from Miami. He had been at Miami Beach loafing in the sun, having a day off yesterday, and had waited after returning to his base until such time as he thought we probably would be returning home from something or other. He seemed to be in good spirits and it was wonderful to talk with him. I am very proud of what he is doing. I think some of you may know, but in case you don't, here it is: He is taking both typing and shorthand, studying on the side, at Miami. He already is a pretty good typist, but needs to master the touch system. I had urged him to take shorthand because I know how much it would have helped me and everybody else in the newspaper business, or any business, to have learned shorthand. He realizes this, and so he is going after it to try to learn it for himself. I still hope to get down there for a few days after the election, but have done nothing definite about it. It may work out in connection with company matters here, where I can take a couple of men or three and go down there for a few days. If it works out, fine; if it doesn't, that's all right too. But it sure would be great to see the old boy in his new surroundings.

A lot of things have been happening, but I don't believe I have left out very much here. With which I feel you surely will agree after having waded through all of this!

Louise has been packing while I have been dictating the last part of this, and she joins me in sending much love to you all.

Paul (signed)

o. (B4/f15)

PHOTO:
1956 -1 D

MESSRS. ALI AND MOSTAFA AMIN
Publishers of El Akhbar – Cairo's Daily Newspaper

p. (B4/f15)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

September 29, 1956

Messrs. Mostafa and Ali Amin
AL AKHBAR
Cairo, Egypt

Dear Friends:

I never can thank you enough for your hospitality to Mr. Shanke and me when we called on you in your office Monday evening. It was an inspiration to me to discuss with you the progress you have made in Cairo and the way in which you have gone about building your wonderful properties. I particularly enjoyed also the tour through the building; it is something for any newspaperman to admire.

I regret I didn't see the President, but thank you all the same for your efforts in my behalf. I wish it had been possible for me to accept your suggestion that I remain another day. I had an engagement here today that I felt I just had to return for. I hope to get back there again one day.

With appreciation and very best wishes to you both,

Cordially yours,

q. (B4/f15)

AKHBAR EL YOM
SHARIA EL SAHAFA
CAIRO

Cairo, October 3, 1956.

Mr. Paul Miller,
The Gannett Newspapers,
Times Union Bldg.,
Rochester,
NEW YORK

My dear Mr Miller,

Thank you so much for your kind letter. It was a great pleasure to meet you and talk to you in Cairo. We were very much disappointed that you could not remain another day in Cairo to meet the President. He wanted to meet you and I am sure you would have enjoyed talking to him. We certainly hope that you will come again to Cairo.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mostafa Amin is now in New York. He is staying at the SHATHAM Hotel. He arrived Sunday with our star reporter HEIKEL, whom you have met. They are covering the Security Council for us. I hope you will have time to see them.

Thank you again for a very pleasant visit.

Yours sincerely,

Ali Amin (signature)

r. (B4/f15)

October 11, 1956

Mr. Ali Amin
Akhbar El Yom
Sharia El Sahafa
Cairo, Egypt

Dear Mr. Amin:

Your letter reached me in New York where I was attending meetings of The Associated Press. Thanks to the information that Mostafa Amin was in town, I got in touch with him and Mrs. Miller and I went over and had coffee with him before we departed New York for Rochester this morning. He was leaving this afternoon for Cairo so I am sure you will see him before you see this letter. It was a great pleasure to see him again.

As I told you, I wrote a little piece about you two and sent it to The AP in Cairo with the request that someone show it to you and have you initial it if it is all right for me to print it. I wouldn't want to get anything wrong. If you haven't heard from The AP yet, I am sure you will be hearing from them shortly about this. I am eager to get this story back and will either print it in our company magazine or turn it over to Editor & Publisher magazine, or both.

Thanks again for everything.

Cordially,

s. (B4/f15)

With Miller – Suez (for use as and if desired)

IN CONFERENCE

If it's Suez or Ceylon

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Or where Mr. Kruschev's [sic] gone
We must call a conference for that;
We must never own defeat
Or political retreat
We can still call a conference for a chat.

There is nothing better than
A conferential plan
In dealing with attempted cou d'etat [sic];
And the fact that it's too late
To amend affairs of state
Has never stopped a conference so far.

If with heated perorations
From some delegated nations
Aggressively our notions they dare spurn;
To stop Nasser's machinations
Let's invoke United Nations
And let them call a conference in turn.

And if this brings no redress
To the shipping lines distress
And Egypt's ownership is unassailed;
Proceed then with elan [sic]
With the simple wizard plan
CALL A CONFERENCE TO TELL US WHERE WE FAILED.

W. G. S.

- - London (England) Sunday Dispatch.

t. (B4/f15)

Rochester Times-Union
October 2, 1956

Diplomacy of 1850 Called Futile at Suez

Paul Miller Tells Editors Of Cairo Observations

Special to The Times-Union

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

HARTFORD – The Suez Canal crisis is an example of the futility of using the diplomacy of 1850 in the world of 1956, newspaper executives from four states were told last night.

Paul Miller of Rochester, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers and editor and publisher of The Times-Union, told executives of the Gannett organization, gathered in Hartford for a two-day conference, that his first-hand observation of the situation in Egypt convinced him that the traffic going through the Suez Canal is refutation of any idea the Egyptians could not run the canal.

"When you've seen the convoys – each ship a quarter to a half-mile apart – you wonder why the West ever had the idea ships couldn't be kept moving by the sons of the Nile," he said.

"Calling on the British and French troops for possible action in the Suez was an example of 1850 diplomacy," he said. "I think the developments prove we are nearer than we have ever been before to a realization that peaceful negotiations are the answer, not threats of force."

Miller flew to London at the time of the Suez Canal users' London conference Sept. 19 and went on from there to Cairo, to see the situation first-hand. He returned to Rochester Friday.

"There is one overriding fact in this controversy standing out above everything else," he told the newspapermen. "The Egyptians are successfully operating the canal."

Miller predicted the canal controversy will get one of the lengthiest airings ever heard in the United Nations.

EGYPTIAN REACTIONS

He called the dispute the nearest thing to a threat of war since Korea, with any military action probably involving American forces. But he related a few Egyptian reactions to bear out their side of the dispute explaining "we already know the other side."

The Egyptian argument, he said, is that Egypt paid about 60 per cent of the original cost of constructing the canal. The Egyptians claim the Suez Canal Co. was an Egyptian company with international stockholders.

They argue further that by nationalizing the company, they put an end to exploitation which was bringing dividends exceeding 10 per cent to foreign stockholders, and that some of the revenues received by Egypt can be used to improve the canal – to widen and deepen it and possibly make a double track canal out of it.

What happened to Secretary of State Dulles' plan for a virtual boycott of the canal by taking tankers around the Cape of Good Hope?

CITES HIGH COST

That plan, Miller said, is economically impractical right now. It takes about $3,000 a day to keep a large oil tanker at sea, and the route around Cape Hope is about 5,000 miles farther from the Middle East oil refineries than the route through the Suez Canal. Harbor and dock facilities are inadequate.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The trip around the Cape of Good Hope was mostly talk," he observed.

America is somewhat vulnerable in the field of foreign aid in the eyes of the Egyptians, Miller reported.

"They say we are driving them into the arms of the Russians," he said. "They point out with some bitterness that after the war we gave billions to needy countries all over the world, but that we recently backed down on lending Egypt 70 million dollars for the Aswan Dam project.

"The great bulk of our giveaway program of recent years, though not that right after the war, has probably done us as much harm as good, and the whole program ought to be reassessed."

Amplifying his comments of the need for tactful, modern diplomacy, rather than antiquated shows of force, he said the Western world is just beginning to realize how much faith it had pinned on a tiny 103-mile canal between Suez on the Red Sea and Port Said on the Mediterranean.

Instead of weakening Nasser's popularity in Egypt, the rushing of British and French forces through the Mediterranean has increased the dictator's popularity at home, Miller said. Now, he reported, some Egyptians talk as though the Suez problem has been settled, and indicate that Nasser's next major triumph will be the achieving of a solution to the Arab refugee problem and arrangements of a peace with Israel.

"The question," Miller said, "is how are the British and French going to bring their troops back home gracefully?"

PHOTO
Caption:

U.S. NAVY SAILS THROUGH SUEZ – Making passage through the Suez Canal as part of a convoy is the Navy destroyer Compton (left). Newly-recruited pilots from the United States reportedly led the convoy. In the foreground is seen the Egyptian flag. (UP Facsimile)

u. (B4/f15)
*****

The Hartford Courant
October 2, 1956

Gannett Man Talks Here On Suez Canal Crisis

The biggest news on the Suez crisis is that Egypt is successfully operating the canal.

That was the report 150 newspapermen got Monday night from Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett group of papers.

Suez Important to U.S.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Miller, who flew home last weekend from a fact-finding trip to Egypt, spoke at the Hotel Statler. Top executives from 23 papers in the Gannett group are meeting here as guests of the Hartford Times . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

TALK ON SUEZ CRISIS: Paul Miller, center, executive vice-president of the Gannett group of newspapers, addressed local newspaper executives on the Suez Canal crisis at the Statler Hotel Monday. Miller talked with England's Prime Minister Anthony Eden recently on his visit to Europe. Eden and Miller are friends of long standing. John R. Reitemeyer, left, publisher and president of The Courant, and David R. Daniel, right, secretary and publisher of the Hartford Times, are shown with Miller (Courant Photo by Acquaviva).

v. (B4/f15)

Times-Union
October 5, 1956

'Logical, Factual'
Report on Suez

Paul Miller's comments on the Suez Canal crisis (Page One, Times-Union, Oct. 2) seem to me the most logical and factual statements regarding the controversy made to date.

It seems difficult indeed for France and England to outgrow their short pants.

C. GREENE

* * *

I have just finished reading Paul Miller's report on Suez . . . It was refreshing reading . . . I know that country and people well having taught school in Alexandria, Egypt, years ago. Thanks!

HELEN HAMILTON

* * *

It is heartening to read Paul Miller's statement that any resort to force or boycott by France or England in the Suez crisis would be an antiquated and stupid policy, out of keeping with the diplomacy of a more enlightened age.

To give credit where credit is due it might be added here that a similar point of view was recently expressed by the Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov. He said: "These attempts of force are caused by lack of understanding of the spirit of our times and of the renovation of the forms of social life that is in progress throughout the vast expanses of the East."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The world in which we live is not a static one. Unfortunately some peoples [sic] minds are. For this reason we are thankful to you, Mr. Editor for reminding us that we are living in a changing world and that international disputes should not be settled by the effete and antiquated policies of the past.

The Suez problem is now where it should be – in the hands of the United Nations. There is little doubt but that an amicable settlement will be reached, one which will combine the interests of Egypt as a sovereign state and the interests of all other states using the canal.

ROBERT A. MACLEAN

32 West Brook Rd.
Pittsford

v. (B4/f15)
*****

Ogdensburg Journal
October 7, 1956

(1.)

Egypt Can Run Suez Canal Miller Finds On Trip To Waterway

Hartford, Conn. – (GNS) – The Suez Canal crisis is an example of the futility of using the diplomacy of 1850 in the world of 1956, newspaper executives from four states were told Monday night at Hotel Statler.

Paul Miller of Rochester, executive vicepresident of the Gannett newspapers, told executives of that organization, gathered in Hartford for a two-day conference, that his first-hand observations of the situation in Egypt convinced him that the present traffic going through the Suez Canal "is a refutation of any idea the Egyptians couldn't run the canal" . . . .

(2.) Paul Miller, in his talk to the Gannett editors at Hartford, Conn., reported in today's paper, must have opened the eyes of a lot of people when he said that a personal visit to the Suez canal showed that the Egyptians were capable of running the ditch. Heretofore the propaganda has followed an opposite line. Miller is a keen observer and is in the habit of reporting things as he sees them, not using another's eyes. The press and politics, domestic and world, need more of his kind.

PHOTO:
Paul Miller

w. (B4/f15)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rochester Times-Union
October 8, 1956

A Personal Report to You On the Suez Canal Crisis

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of the Times-Union, recently made a 10-day flying trip to London and Cairo to study and report on the Suez crisis. His observations and impressions – written "like a letter home" – are contained in a series of five articles, of which this is the first.

By PAUL MILLER

I left Cairo, Egypt, at 3 a.m. one day, and was back at my desk in The Times-Union building at 3 p.m. the next day.

I know of nothing better than that simple air travel report to point up the fact, so trite but so true, that the world is indeed getting smaller every day with greater and greater transportation speeds and better and better communications facilities.

Moreover, due to America's leadership of the Western world, nothing of significance can happen in any part of the world without affecting every home and family in the United States.

When President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt nationalized the Suez Canal Co. on July 26, and when France and Britain promptly responded by calling up troops, it posed a world crisis.

To Americans who recall other post-war crises the world around, including the Korean fighting of 1950-53, there came immediate thoughts – and correctly so – that the new Suez controversy might again mean still higher taxes, more inflation, and more American boys in uniform.

How It Looks

I made a reporting trip to London and Egypt to learn what I could for the benefit of the Gannett newspapers and our readers about this latest world crisis. It has now taken the following turns:

1 – Conferences are under way at London to work out details of a canal users association which may, among other things, undertake to represent the interests of Western world shippers with Col. Nasser.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

2 – Both Egypt, on the one hand, and England and France on the other, are before the U.N. Security Council in New York for a hearing on their separate charges in the dispute.

(Egypt charges, in brief, that England and France threatened the peace by rushing troops to the Mediterranean after Nasser's nationalization of the canal company.

(England and France charge that Nasser's action was a threat to peace and security. They want to see Egypt compelled to put the canal under some form of international control so that it cannot be closed or opened to ships of any nation at the whim, as they put it, of one man, Col. Nasser.)

3 – The Egyptians, having set up an Egyptian canal authority, are operating the canal successfully on their own.

The position of the United States – at first solidly aligned, apparently, with Britain and France – has been modified. The U.S. now is in a position of some independence, although still urging also that the rights of users be guaranteed through new agreements or international control of some kind.

So much for a brief sum-up of the crisis and how it stands today.

A 'Letter Home'

Now for a somewhat personal report, like a letter to readers' homes, of what this writer did and what he saw.

I had in mind that I'd like to go on to Cairo and see the picture there for myself and for our readers. However, I reached London on the morning of Sept. 19, really expecting to return home after the "users" conference. I suspected that this might not be the best time for a Western visitor along the Nile! Finally, I went to Cairo on assurances of friends in London and at the Egyptian embassy that I would find Cairo more calm and collected than I was. They were right. I did.

I visited with Prime Minister Sir Anthony Eden in London – it was a personal conversation, not an interview; heard our Secretary of State John Foster Dulles twice set forth his views as to what the "users" conference was intended to do and not do, and talked with other delegation members of ours and other countries.

I can sympathize with any individual or group for any confusion over the "users" conference. In my opinion, confusion is inherent in the structure of the organization. However, it may be put in an orderly, logical light at the meetings still going on at London. Egyptians, by the way, call it – among other things – the Canal Users Hunting and Fishing Club, or the Canal Usurers Assn.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Egyptians have made it clear they want nothing to do with the "users."
Both sides are before the Security Council of the United Nations in New York.
British and French troops are still "poised and ready" – as the tacticians like to say.

But there is one over-riding fact standing out above everything else in this controversy that seethes and races from the East River to the Eastern Desert and back again.

That fact is this, in capital letters:

THE EGYPTIANS ARE SUCCESSFULLY OPERATING THE CANAL.

NEXT: A visit to the Suez Canal.

MAP:
VITAL WATERWAY – Map traces Suez Canal route.

x. (B4/f15)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
October 8, 1956

U.S. Election Intrigues Foreigners, Says Miller

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice President of The Gannett Newspapers

Everybody abroad wants to know about Ike.

Foreign government officials, of course, are striving mightily to preserve a position of impartiality. They hasten to say so even as they ask a U.S. visitor for the latest election forecast from America.

A number of foreigners I saw on a quick trip to Britain and Egypt assumed President Eisenhower would be re-elected. Yet they wondered – even as you and I – how he's feeling healthwise now. They asked about this man Nixon who is running on the sane ticket or something, and whether some of the things Stevenson and former President Truman say can possibly be true.

Campaign speeches in the United States get little attention abroad. There are brief reports, however, of major campaign efforts here. There is some general idea in the street that the man named Stevenson and also Mr. Truman, who is well known and well liked overseas, are saying some awful things about the man best known abroad as commander in chief of the Allied war effort in Europe.

Most officials clearly believe that Washington is trying desperately to keep things on an even keel internationally during the election campaign.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Many in England who favored a strong policy toward Egypt's President Nasser in the Suez crisis think the U.S. toned down its own stand, after what seemed to be a bold start, to avoid any criticism in the campaign.

They think, in short, that we ran out on them instead of strongly backing them up when they mobilized troops and talked of using force, if necessary, to wrench the Suez Canal back out of Nasser's sole grasp and put it under international control.

They think we softened up for political reasons.

It is known that President Eisenhower has stated many times, and to Secretary of State Dulles, that political considerations here must have no place in our approach to foreign affairs.

I never missed an opportunity to tell this to our foreign friends and critics.

Probably few believed me. Few of them would work that way. Why, they think, should we?

But they're all interested in Ike.

Paul Miller recently
Made a 10-day flying trip to London and Cairo to find out first-hand about
the Suez crisis.
He has compiled his observations into a series of five articles. Written
"like a letter home," this informative new series
will begin today in The
Times-Union.

y. (B4/f15)

Rochester Times-Union
October 9, 1956

(1.) A Personal Report to You

The One Big Fact: Canal Is Operating

Following is the second in a series of five articles by Paul Miller, editor and publisher of the Times-Union, giving his first-hand observations on the Suez crisis from a recent flying trip to London and Cairo.

By PAUL MILLER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

There is a lot of talk, but one big fact, in the Suez Canal crisis. The big fact is that the Egyptians are successfully operating the canal. The ships are going through.

After President Nasser, in the name of Egypt, took over the Suez Canal Co. July 26, it was widely doubted – most certainly in London, Paris and Washington – that the Egyptians would be able to run it.

A highly skilled, carefully trained pilot is needed aboard each ship that plows through the narrow, 103-mile-long canal linking the Red Sea, through Suez, with the Mediterranean, through Port Said.

It's the high cost of keeping a ship afloat, any ship, that is at the root of the concern of canal users that it operate on a split-second schedule.

One ship aground could lead to a days-long traffic jam that could cost shippers collectively millions of dollars.

Take oil, which in 1955 made up four-fifths of all the northbound cargoes passing through the canal from Suez to Port Said.

The Suez Canal Co. charged a tanker carrying 100,000 barrels of oil $12,000 to use the canal. It costs about $3,000 a day to keep a tanker at sea. Delay of any kind not only is expensive in a specific haul; it may mean loss of other schedules fixed ahead.

That's why canal pilots earn $15,000 and upward a year, in base pay and bonuses. Each ship must have a pilot aboard. He must know every peculiarity in the passage.

The Alternatives

What can nations dependent upon shipping from beyond Suez do to reduce their dependence on the canal?

They can go round the Cape of Good Hope. But look: The distance between London, for example, and the Persian Gulf (Abadan, Iran) via Suez is 6,600 miles; via the Cape it is about 12,000. The extra distance for a round trip would be 10,800 [?] miles.

It is estimated that the cost of a vessel's going through the canal and back again, loaded, would be barely 20 per cent of the extra cost and loss of earnings involved in the extra 30 days or so which such a vessel would need to round the Cape both ways.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The greatest problem which a general use of the route round Africa would create is a shortage of ships. It would take at least 20 per cent more dry cargo space to maintain the present flow of commodities between Western Europe and countries east of Suez – not counting oil.

It is estimated that the petroleum shipments from the Persian Gulf to Western countries as a whole would require 55 per cent more tanker tonnage if they had to be diverted round Africa.

Build bigger tankers? This is planned, but new harbor facilities would be required to care for them around the Cape. Adequate facilities do not exist now.

Build more pipelines to take the place of shipped oil? This has long been under consideration.

Or, to lessen the risks of canal traffic tie-ups, what can be done?

Build a double-track Suez Canal? This, too, has long been discussed. It is a long-range project proclaimed in Cairo today by the Egyptians themselves. Also widening and a general speeding up. For it is estimated that canal traffic may double in a decade.

The Suez Canal Co. was largely British and French owned and controlled. When the company's old pilots walked off the job, soon after the Egyptians made their grab, it was assumed by many that the canal would be a mess of grounded tankers in no time.

The Western nations got up their canal users association idea not only to further their aim of somehow restoring the canal to international control. They also conceived of it as a practical operating agency which was to have its own pilots for the ships of those nations participating.

But not only did the Egyptians put through the ships with but few mishaps. They proudly announced they wanted more and bigger convoys. How were they doing it, and thus astonishing and frustrating the great nations of the West?

With an Egyptian friend as guide, interpreter and companion, I left the Semiramis Hotel on the Nile in Cairo at 7 a.m. to see the Suez Canal. We had a driver who'd been to the canal before, a reasonably comfortable Dodge and a 13-hour schedule.

The schedule took us, first, directly to Ismailia – headquarters of the old Suez Canal Co. and now of the Egyptian canal administration. Ismailia is about halfway on the 103-mile ditch – (over twice as long as the Panama Canal) – between Suez on the Red Sea and Port Said on the Mediterranean.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The canal is under martial law. But with our passes, and despite a few road blocks fashioned (appropriately enough) with oil drums, we made good time up the macadam which borders the canal for its entire length. Occasionally, we saw Egyptian troops training in the desert near what were British camps until John Bull ended occupation of the canal zone and withdrew some 80,000 Tommies last year.

There were few cars. The open road from Cairo to Ismailia had been crowded with stragglers and donkeys and goats that formed a heedless, constant hazard. There were scarcely any on the canal road itself after we left Ismailia. We made good time. The sun was bright and warm. The breeze was cool.

Miles in the distance, then we saw approaching us the beginning of the first of two convoys which would move from Port Said to Suez that day, synchronized for proper passing schedules with two also moving out of Suez toward Said.

It was a nine-ship convoy (they put through 30, 40 and more ships a day) headed by a British tanker.

Half a mile back of the tanker chugged a second vessel, the Bretagne, out of Marseille and bound for Madagascar. She was the first passenger-carrying ship (I learned later) to pass through the canal since Egypt took over July 26. She had civilians and 150 French troops.

The ships seemed to climb up out of the desert in the distance, one by one, a quarter-to-half mile apart, I judged. On they came – Dutch, Russian, Panamanian registry. They were empty tankers, all save the French, bound for cargoes in the oil rich desert beyond Suez.

Dramatic Refutation

It was majestic, dramatic refutation of any idea that the Egyptians couldn't run the canal.

When you've seen the convoys, you wonder why the West thought ships couldn't be kept moving by the sons of the Nile.

An Egyptian officer said to me at Ismailia:

"What made them think we couldn't run this canal? Eighty per cent of the employes [sic] of the old company were Egyptians."

(Right up to the start of the London "users" conference, the association plan had been championed as the answer to an expected traffic jam in the canal. The concept changed after the ships kept right on pounding through though, despite resignation of the European pilots. The theme then became, as the London

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Economist put it, that one man mustn't be left in position to exercise pressure or discrimination while paying lip service to the principle of free passage.)

I pondered the question on up the canal road to Port Said, where a couple of ships already lay in the harbor that afternoon as another convoy began forming for the next movement during the night.

NEXT: The Egyptian side of the dispute.

PHOTO:

EGYPTIAN PILOT – Canal pilot Yousri El Ayoubi, left, guides French ship.

MAP:

ALTERNATE ROUTES – Map shows mileage via Suez, Cape of Good Hope.

(2.) What to Do About Russia?

What can the West do about Russia's influence in the Middle East?

Sir Robert Boothby, distinguished Conservative member of Commons, proposed a "common anti-communism policy" in a speech at London. He said:

"All over the world, the power and influence of the West is declining. Why? Because we are conducting a global struggle against the forces of communism without any common policy.

"For example, there has been no effective Anglo-American cooperation in the Middle East since the war. If we had had a common policy, the Suez crisis would never have arisen."

z. (B4/f15)

Rochester Times-Union
October 11, 1956

(1.) A Personal Report to You

A Look at Suez Crisis From Egyptian Side

This is the third in a series of five articles by Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, giving first-hand observations on the Suez Canal controversy.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By PAUL MILLER

The Egyptians argue that they are right, and the aggrieved party, in the Suez Canal dispute.

The users' side may be briefly and over-simply stated thus:

Most "users" want international control of Suez Canal operations. They don't want, as one said, to be at the mercy of a dictator who could, by closing the canal, "cut off half the oil of Europe" – almost half is shipped via the canal. They say President Nasser of Egypt had no legal right to nationalize the canal. The company was to have passed to Egypt, at the end of a 99-year-old concession, in 1968. They refer to July 26, 1956 as "grab day."

WHAT DO THE EGYPTIANS SAY TO ALL THIS?

"They accuse us of having 'seized' the canal," one official said. "We didn't. We already had it. It is a ditch across Egypt.

"We 'seized' or nationalized the canal COMPANY. It was not an INTERNATIONAL company. It was an EGYPTIAN company. It just had multi-national STOCKHOLDERS. Egypt nationalized this company just as Britain nationalized a lot of things. We announced that we will pay off the former owners and stockholders at the stock price in effect the day before nationalization was proclaimed.

'Pure Exploitation'

QUESTION: But how about the agreement running to 1968?

THE EGYPTIAN ANSWER:

"The company was thinking about 1968, too. They were not putting anything back into the canal that they didn't have to. They followed a policy of pure exploitation. Last year the canal had revenues of 97 million dollars and a gross profit of 45 million dollars. Last year's dividend exceeded 10 per cent.

"They should have been widening and deepening the canal or planning, perhaps, a double track.

"We are going to use some of the profits elsewhere, too, of course, but we have big plans for improving the canal. The more ships that go through, the more money Egypt will make out of it. We want more and more."

QUESTION: How about barring the canal to Israel? At London, it was said that if you could do it with one, you could and might do it with others.

THE EGYPTIAN REPLY:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

We were at war with Israel. Besides, we didn't bar their ships from the canal. We barred them from the approaches to the canal, same as Britain did with its enemies."

WHO'S RIGHT?

The case is getting an airing such as few international controversies in the United Nations.

SOME THINGS SEEM FAIRLY CLEAR:

Great Britain is in a box; France likewise. The U.S.A., for once, has not gone out on any limb too far.

All three may well end up in some sort of compromise with Egypt far removed from the original goals of (1) punishment for Col. Nasser and (2) full international control of the Suez Canal.

It seemed to me that, when Britain and France reacted to Nasser's July 26 nationalization move by mobilizing troops, they moved as if the year were 1856 – not 1956; as if they still could run a gunboat into a colonial harbor somewhere and take over. The U.S. was less bellicose, bit appeared to lend considerable support.

Then Col. Nasser got off one of his wild speeches. French and British nationals frantically cleared out of Egypt. The talk was of war.

NOW WHERE ARE THEY ALL?

Some British and French leaders still speak ominously, but not very convincingly, of force "if all else fails."

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles speaks mostly of time and international unpopularity as the agents that may bring Egypt's 38-year-old dictator to terms.

There is little talk now of even a little war.

The British and French thought rushing troops to the Mediterranean area might help hasten the fall of Nasser at home. Events proved them wrong. Nasser has more support at home than ever.

American Policy

HOW ABOUT U.S. GOVERNMENT POLICY?

There is criticism in some quarters at London and Paris that the U.S. has appeared progressively to soften its position; that every meeting seems to signal some further watering-down of proposals for moves against Nasser.

Maybe so.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

At least it's OUR policy – not one dictated, or at least influenced, as was our war-without-victory policy in Korea, from a foreign capital.

American policy is to seek a settlement based on justice and international law while recognizing that we of course stand for peace, but not at any price.

Many abroad suspect that what, to them, is our "soft" policy toward Egypt is dictated by a Washington desire not to stir up anything anywhere during the election campaign.

This seems to be incorrect. An intimate of Secretary Dulles said the other day:

"President Eisenhower has said to the secretary, not once but many times: Foreign policy is one thing. Politics is something else. We are going to do what we believe is right in foreign affairs, as in others, without any regard to politics."

NEXT: Russia makes hay in the Arab world.

(2.)

British Rib Conferences Poetically

Various conferences aimed at settling the Suez crisis are gently ribbed by the London (England) Sunday Dispatch in the following poem:

IN CONFERENCE

If it's Suez or Ceylon
Or where Mr. Khrushchev's gone
We must call a conference for that;
We must never own defeat
Or political retreat
We can still call a conference for a chat.

There is nothing better than
A conferential plan
In dealing with attempted coup d'etat ;
And the fact that it's too late
To amend affairs of state
Has never stopped a conference so far.

If with heated perorations
From some delegated nations
Aggressively our notions they dare spurn;
To stop Nasser's machinations
Let's invoke United Nations
And let them call a conference in turn.

And if this brings no redress

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

To the shipping lines distress
And Egypt's ownership is unassailed;
Proceed then with elan
With the simple wizard plan
CALL A CONFERENCE TO TELL US WHERE WE FAILED.

aa. (B4/f15)

Rochester Times-Union
October 11, 1956

A Personal Report to You

Cairo Hubbub Reflects Little Of Suez Crisis

This is the fourth in a series of articles on the Suez Canal crisis by Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, based on a personal observation trip to London and Cairo.

By PAUL MILLER

While the Egyptian government frets and stews in the Suez Canal crisis, life in general goes on without apparent strain or major change along the ageless Nile.

There was no sign of animosity toward this visitor. I'd never have known there was a "crisis" on the streets of Cairo.

Many anticipate that the unfavorable publicity Egypt has been getting will frighten investors and keep tourists away. It is clear that it has and can have that effect. It is not so clear how long the effect will continue, barring further incidents.

The Semiramis Hotel, named for a famous queen, has only about half as many tourists as in October a year ago.

AN OLD GUIDE at the pyramids – he said he'd been at it since 1910 – told me business was so bad out there that, to share such tourists as there are among all the guides, he sometimes is assigned to work only one day a week.

I said for want of anything better, "Well maybe it will pick up again next year."

"Next year," he echoed me. "I need a pick up next month."

Out my window at the Semiramis lay a magnificent view of the Nile, the fine riverside drive, brightly lighted, stretching along beside it; numerous modern new buildings rising along the thoroughfares facing toward the river, including the new Shepheard's Hotel.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Traditions vs. 1956

It could have been any great city, except –

Donkey carts wove precariously among a tangle of motor cars. Pedestrians – who must be the world's most heedless, as are the drivers, too – dodged and squirmed, swarms of them, without regard for sign or light, large numbers of men trailing about in the long gowns called balabiya [jalabiya ?], which many still affect. And women in the traditional veiled covering of the Moslem world.

Everywhere 1956 clashes with the traditions of centuries.

The Egyptians swarm to the movies. They particularly like Marilyn Monroe. There were four M.M. movies showing at one time in Cairo.

Most Egyptians I saw smoked American cigarettes. I was told that even Nasser smokes L and M's (the tips for which, by the way, are manufactured by Eastman Kodak Co. at Kingsport, Tenn.).

The first Egyptian I saw preferring local cigarettes was Hussein Aziz, undersecretary for foreign affairs.

"American cigarettes are too strong," he explained. (I had always thought their cigarettes were stronger!)

Women Fight for Rights

The women are battling for equal rights on all fronts, but I gathered they've not scored many sensational successes to date.

They were given the vote this year. Few voted, but that was to be expected.

The liveliest newspaper in Cairo, Al Akhbar (The News), has been championing women's causes. It started a mother's day. It sent out taxis to take women voters to the polls.

Still, it was news when a husband who beat his wife for looking out the window was sentenced to jail. He told her to quit looking, but she kept on.

The brief item, as interpreted to me by an Egyptian friend, reported that the judge said of course there was no law against husbands of the poorer classes hammering on their wives, but this one went too far. He left his wife permanently marked.

*** * ***

THE HOURS they keep in Cairo!

Two Egyptian publishers of a daily newspaper, a Sunday and assorted weekly and monthly magazines, work a schedule like this:

From 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Then Siesta. Return at 5 p.m. or 6 p.m. and stay on the job until 12 midnight.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Somewhat the same way in the government. There is much coffee and there are many delays all morning. They perk up at night.

It had been arranged for me to see President Nasser my last night in Cairo, Wednesday, Sept. 26. A cabinet meeting was called unexpectedly, however, and it ran until midnight. They telephoned and asked me to remain over to see the colonel the following day. I had my airline reservations arranged, and felt I had to come home.

* * *

I DEPARTED CAIRO under a full moon at 3 a.m. Thursday, Sept. 27. I was in London by early afternoon and en route homeward across the Atlantic by 8:30 p.m. I was back in my office by 3 a.m. Friday, Sept. 28.

Again, and finally:

The world is shrinking. Barriers and traditions are tumbling and will continue to do so at an accelerated rate.

Some government leaders all over the world see this clearly. So should we all; so must we all.

NEXT: Russia moves to take advantage of our troubles in Mid-East.

bb. (B4/f15)

Rochester Times-Union
October 12, 1956

A Personal Report to You

Force and Threats No Answer Now To World Crises

Last in a series of five articles by the editor and publisher of The Times-Union, based on a personal observation trip.

By PAUL MILLER

With the West in trouble with the Arab world, the Russians are working night and day to make the most of it. The reds are particularly active in Egypt right now.

Egypt, it seems to Westerners, is playing a dangerous game. Some Egyptians, perhaps even President Gamal Abdel Nasser, sense this, too.

One in an important station said to me:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"You are driving us into the arms of Russia. If the West imposes trade restrictions, where else are we to turn save to the Iron Curtain countries? I for one would never be Communist. If my country turns to communism, I shall be exiled or shot. My whole background has assured for me a place on the list of those who would go. There are many others."

To the rejoinder that many Americans believe it was President Nasser who got Egypt where she may be drawn into the toils of Russia by trying unsuccessfully to play off Russia against America, he cut in:

"You sold arms to Israel. You promised them to us and then backed out on your promise. Nasser had to turn to the Communists to get what we need for our own protection."

Another said:

"You try to balance off things between both Egypt and Israel. You thus get yourself in trouble with both."

An Historic Course

Some time ago, Cliff Carpenter of the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle toured Israel, Egypt and Jordan and returned to write of his observations and experiences there. I asked him, based on his broad experience, to comment on what I was told. He said:

"When good-hearted America follows its historic course of trying to help the underprivileged, and when the underprivileged are in two camps hating each other passionately, then we certainly do get ourselves into a diplomatic pickle.

"Arabs have a tragic history of conquest and subjugation and even of racketeering self-rule. We sympathize with them.

"The Jews have a tragic history of pogroms and global discrimination at the hands of other races. We sympathize with them.

"Both need help and understanding, for actually they have much in common. So, yes, America's policy has been vague; but because of kindness. Egypt, distrustful, wildly nationalistic, is creating and prolonging trouble in the Middle East."

An Egyptian said:

"The United States has made the mistake of UNDER-estimating Egypt. The Russians probably OVER-estimate us."

WHATEVER THE BACKGROUND, and however it may be debated, the orientation of Egypt today, if it is definitely oriented at all, is toward more rather than fewer economic ties with the Russian orbit.

And President Nasser, in the testing time today and for months ahead, may find Soviet intercourse increasingly necessary if his dictator government is to survive.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Yes, it's a happy hunting ground for the Russians – and Moscow is losing no time.

A Fact Dramatized

Yet some good may come of almost anything, including the crisis posed by Egypt's nationalizing of the Suez Canal.

1 It set men and nations to intensified planning for other ways to transport commodities, particularly oil, from the lands lying beyond Suez.

2 More important, in the opinion of many, it dramatized the fact which must be drawn sooner or later on all:

FORCE IS NO LONGER THE ANSWER, OR THE THREAT OF FORCE.

Said the London Observer, in a sober editorial analysis of Britain's own awkward position after troops were called up, threats implied – and nothing happened save that the Egyptians proved they could run the canal and openly defied the West:

"The government's proclaimed purpose has been the establishment of 'international control' of the Suez Canal. It is the right aim, not only for Suez, but also for the next problem, oil itself.

"Unless we can discover how to establish systems of international control, all capital investments in backward areas will continuously be in danger, and the acquisition of atomic power by more and more countries in the next few years will only increase the world's instability.

"if we use political methods likely to earn us majority support in the world today, we may yet save our face, our Suez interests, and the prospects of the next generation as well."

THE DEPENDENCE of our European friends is in a way frightening to an American. They can't move without U.S. support, and, I believe, won't.

No American can come away from Cairo without some such thought as this:

Some how, some way, the United States must get in position again to exercise a healthy influence in the Middle East.

We can have confidence that President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles have this, along with so many other problems, very much in mind. In them repose the hopes of millions, and for them the millions' prayers.

cc. (B4/f15)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
Sunday, October 14, 1956

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(1.) Nations Should Profit from Experience of Suez Crisis

Traveler to Cairo Reports:

What is the Suez Canal crisis all about? Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Newspapers, recently made a 10-day flying trip to London and Cairo to find out. Here, compiled from his daily series Especially for Sunday Democrat and Chronicle readers, is his report.

By PAUL MILLER

SOME good should come from the crisis posed by the nationalizing of the Suez Canal . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

HE STARTED IT ALL – President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt reads about Suez crisis which followed his nationalizing of the canal, in an Arabic newspaper during a trip from Alexandria to Cairo. He had been in Alexandria resting. (AP)

(2.) Rally Cheers Eden
Re-Pledging Guns
If Needed at Suez

Security Council Debates Suez, Page 1A

LLANDUDNO, Wales, Oct. 13 (AP) – Prime Minister Eden told 4,000 cheering Conservatives today Britain refuses to rule out force as a means of settling the Suez dispute with Egypt.

His declaration at a mass rally of party workers here followed this up-to-the-minute report which he said had come to him from Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd in New York:

"A little progress" has been made in secret three-power talks between Lloyd and French Foreign Minister Christian Pineau and Egyptian Foreign Minister Mahmoud Fawzi. But "wide differences of opinion" still divide the two sides, presumably over the measure of international control to be exercised over the canal's operation.

Eden, whose leadership of the Conservative party and thus of the government has been a subject of much speculation in recent months, won a prolonged ovation at the end of his hour-long speech. Members of his Cabinet and party bosses joined the crowd in rising to sing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" as a demonstration of support.

The British leader also dropped a broad hint that a far-reaching new relationship may be in the works to link the British Commonwealth with Western

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Europe in commerce, in defense and politically. One "happy consequence" of the Suez crisis, he said, has been to increase the sense of partnership between the countries of Western Europe.

The Suez crisis has led some senior government officials and Conservative politicians to rediscover Britain's friends in Europe and at the same time to feel that American foreign policy often slows down in an election year even when vital Western interests are at stake.

They have declared privately they draw the political moral that Britain should move closer in its ties to the European continent.

dd. (B4/f15)

*****

The Tulsa Tribune
Wednesday, October 10, 1956

Groping for Suez Solution

The search is now on for a face-saving solution to the Suez.

In the grand debate now under way before the UN Security Council a proposal has been made by Russian Foreign Minister Dmitri Shepilov that an eight-nation committee be set up to negotiate a treaty for the management of the Suez canal. A previous demand by Britain and France that the Security Council endorse the London conference's scheme for internationalizing the canal has again been scornfully rejected by Egyptian Foreign Minister Mahmoud Fawzi.

No one expects the Security Council to approve the internationalizing scheme. For a vote on such matters must be unanimous among the Council members and Russia has already indicated it will veto the London proposal. The reds are not going to give up their present popularity among the aroused Arabs by joining in any scheme that would limit Egypt's sovereignty over the canal . . . .

Paul Miller, vice-president of the Gannett newspapers, returned recently from a trip to Cairo with the remark that the British and French have tried an 1850-model solution. The days have gone when the interest of the East India Co. could be protected by the British navy or the interests of New York banks sustained by landing the U.S. Marines. It may be deplorable that backward countries would tear up solemn agreements (Egypt had agreed to let the Suez Canal Co. operate until 1968), but the cure is no longer swift or simple. Any armed action to seize the canal would drive India and Pakistan out of the British Commonwealth, and the Lord knows what else would happen in the inflamed Moslem world.

Colonel Nasser is in a tight money bind, and ought to be open to compromise. But the British and French claim that under Egyptian control the canal would soon be choked with wrecks now looks silly. Las week end a record number of ships passed between the two seas. Moreover the time to strike is in the heat of anger, for as each day passes without further incidents anger cools. Therefore the British and French contention that if Nasser doesn't accept internationalization they must and will attack him takes on more and more the coloring of a bluff.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A compromise solution that would enable the British and French on the one hand and Nasser on the other to maintain face would be fine. But whatever happens, poor old Uncle Sam will pick himself out of the ditch. The Arabs are furious that we backed the internationalization scheme, and the British and French are sore because our opposition to the use of force caused them to lose what they regarded as the psychological moment for strong retaliation.

Ah well, if all the nations that dislike us for our good-natured, fumbling meddling will feel a bond of kinship among themselves we'll have almost One-World after all.

ee. (B1/f14)

*****

"SUEZ CANAL REPORT"
By
Paul Miller

Foreword

The Suez Canal Crisis brought on by Egypt's nationalizing of the canal company July 26, 1956, was soon superseded by bigger crises.
Now, as this is written, the canal itself is a war-littered mess; months will be required to clear it.
Britain and France are rationing oil and facing a winter of discomforts and restricted travel or worse.
The dictator two major powers and one little one sought to unseat appears stronger with his own people than ever.
World War III has been nearer than we care to think.
The pages following bring together a series which appeared in newspapers of The Gannett Group, and some others, in October of 1956—well after Egypt's canal grab but prior to the attacks by Israel, Britain and France . . . .

ff. (B4/f15)

ALEXANDER M. BEEBEE

December 13, 1956

Dear Paul:

I hasten to thank you for the copy of the "Suez Canal Report" which came to my desk today.

This is a very complex problem and one in which it is important the people understand all the angles in order to prevent unwise pressures developing.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

You have helped greatly to clarify my thinking on this subject, for which I hasten to send you most sincere thanks.

It's another example of the great influence for good which the Gannett Papers provide to the community and to the country.

Sincerely,

Alex (signed)
Alexander M. Beebee
Chairman of the Board

Mr. Paul Miller
Executive Vice-President
Gannett Newspapers
55 Exchange Street
Rochester 14, New York

gg. (B4/f15)

POSTCARD:

Mr. Paul Miller
Executive Vice-Pres.
The Gannett Newspapers
Times-Union Bldg. – Times Square
Rochester 14, N.Y.

Norman, Okla.
Dec. 13, 1956

My dear Paul:

Thank you, Paul for copy of your "Suez Canal Report" in pamphlet form which I have read with genuine interest.

It was 33 years ago that I passed through the canal aboard a Japanese passenger ship on my way home from 2 years in Tokyo.

Cordially,
John Casey

hh. (B4/f15)

The Detroit Free Press DETROIT 31, MICHIGAN

Three Time Pulitzer Prize-Winning Newspaper

1675

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

JOHN S. KNIGHT, PUBLISHER
LEE HILLS, VICE PRESIDENT-EXECUTIVE EDITOR
HENRY C. WEIDLER, BUSINESS MANAGER

December 17, 1956

Mr. Paul Miller
Executive Vice president
The Gannett Newspapers
Rochester, New York

My dear Paul:

That was a fine job of reporting and a concise, illuminating piece of writing you did on "Suez Canal Report."

Congratulations! Merry Christmas,

Sincerely,
Lee (signed)
Lee Hills

Affiliated Ownership: CHICAGO DAILY NEWS * AKRON BEACON JOURNAL * THE MIAMI HERALD * THE CHARLOTTE OBSERVER

10. 1957

a. (B4/f25)

Niagara Falls Gazette
February 4, 1957

[See also Rochester Times-Union, February 1, 1957]

Dulles Stands Out As Second to None Among Recent Secretaries of State

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice-President, Gannett Co., Inc.

I DON'T KNOW whether John Foster Dulles can or will long continue as secretary of state.

Whether he does or not, it is time somebody spoke up to answer some of the criticism of Dulles, much of which came during the campaign when there was so much general mud slinging [sic] that insufficient attention was given to answering that specifically directed at the secretary.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

This piece will deal particularly with two of the main charges against Dulles during the campaign and since:

1. That the professionals in the Department of State are unhappy with the way he runs the place.

2. That he takes too much on himself flitting from conference to conference rather than sending the help.

* * *

TO DISCUSS CRITICISM of the State department today it is necessary to consider some facts.

One is that the secretary of state is an appointee, and often a political appointee, while the department itself is full of men – many of them of high competence – who are professionals.

There never has been a time when many of the professionals, under any secretary, didn't believe and confide to friends that they could run it better than the secretary. Naturally, men skilled in their trade can always pick flaws in the operations of the boss.

So, there are those in the State Department today who will admit that they could do a better job than Dulles, or who believe that Dulles could profit by lending them an ear. Mostly, they are career men who are not close to Dulles. Those who are close to him, and this is human nature, too, are disposed to feel that he is doing a job on which even they might have difficulty improving.

* * *

THIS APPLIES, TOO, to Dulles' traveling.

When the secretary goes abroad, he is No. 1 in any American delegation and all eyes focus on him. Naturally, if somebody else went, that somebody else would be in the limelight. Naturally again, there are those who resent that the secretary has seen fit to play the leading role instead of waiting in Washington for them to report.

You can argue it either way.

Personally, I would rather have a secretary of state willing to go out on the firing line and carry the load himself, deeply as I regret what seems to be a fact, namely, that Dulles has wrecked his health by overwork. If he has, then we should thank him fervently, not criticize. Whatever brought on his problem, it developed while he was giving his best for his country as surely as did the boys in the mountains of Karea [sic], or in the Solomons, or on the beaches at Normandy.

THERE HAS BEEN criticism that Dulles is vacillatory or that certain underlings don't always know what he has in mind.

Dulles doesn't make United States foreign policy. If he is vacillatory, or seems to be, part of it is agreed approach, top level, nothing for which he could or should be expected to take sole credit or blame.

Take the Suez crisis. After Dictator Nasser of Egypt seized the Suez Canal Company on July 26, Britain and France began mobilizing. They will tell you today that they thought they had U.S. support at the time. Certainly they had our sympathetic ear and interest.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

However, even if they were led to believe that their warlike moves had tacit approval here, there was no U. S. commitment to follow them out the window. Our diplomatic representatives, Dulles, included, deserve credit rather than criticism for the fact that they kept us out of direct involvement.

Because U. S. policy was down the middle we were in a position to act for peace when Israel struck Egypt and Britain and France moved their troops into the Canal Zone under the pretext of protecting the canal.

* * *

LET'S GO BACK. We don't necessarily throw a man out of a job because he isn't perfect. Nobody, least of all Dulles, has contended that Dulles is perfect. On balance, though, he is a great secretary of state and certainly superior to many, going back even beyond World War II. Run over the list:

Secretary Hull was a fine man who had lost control of the department, for all practical purposes, by the time he left it in 1944.

Edward R. Stettinius wasn't sufficiently in command even to have access to all the messages President Roosevelt, in effect his own secretary, was exchanging with Allied Powers.

James F. Byrnes, was a sort of interim appointee who had already made his name and fame when he went to the department.

General George C. Marshall, who was secretary only at the insistence of President Truman, likewise already had had his great career.

How many besides Harry Truman and the people who worked for him will contend that Dean Acheson, brilliant and polished as he was, performed outstandingly as secretary of state?

Pair off John Foster Dulles with any one of the men, fine as each of them was in his own way, and Dulles stands second to none.

* * *

CRITICS SPEAK OF DULLES' having "lost control" of the situation in Europe and the Middle East. It's ridiculous. Since when did the United States ever have control?

It is time for general indignation at much of the criticism.

It is beyond time for the expressions of the praise and gratitude Dulles has earned and deserves for a night-and-day effort that has damaged his health and might have killed him.

b. (B4/f25)

COUNTY OF MONROE
VETERANS' INFORMATION BUREAU
NEW YORK STATE VETERANS' SERVICE AGENCY

168 CLINTON AVENUE SOUTH
ROCHESTER 4, NEW YORK
February 11, 1957

DeWAIN F. FELLER
DIRECTOR

TELEPHONE
BAKER 5-9300

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

ARTHUR M. DOUD
ASST. DIRECTOR

Dear Paul:

Were I to obey the impulse to commend you whenever I thought it deserved, my pen would be in hand quite frequently.

Thank you very much for sending me a copy of the Inaugural Ball Program. It has been the source of great pleasure to my family and myself.

I would like to take this occasion also to tell you that I thought your article of February 1, on John Foster Dulles, was terrific. It was a grand tribute to a great man and was expressed at a time when it took courage to do so. I think you are tops.

Sincerely,
[Indecipherable]
DeWain F. Feller

Paul Miller, Executive Vice-President
The Gannett Company
Times Union Building
Times Square
Rochester 14, New York

DFF/s

c. (B7/f3)

*****

Probes and No-Fear Politics

- - - Will 'Liberalism' Last? . . Dulles and His Critics

By PAUL MILLER

Dulles Critics . . . Strangely Quiet

Secretary Dulles appears over the hump in his battle against the savage and often senseless criticism of several weeks.

On Feb. 1, the following appeared in this column:

"It is time for general indignation at much of the criticism of Dulles.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"It is beyond time for the expressions of praise and gratitude that Dulles has earned and which he deserves for a night-and-day effort that has damaged his health and might have killed him."

The critics were strangely quiet after the agreement was worked out, largely by Secretary Dulles for our side, whereby Israel started getting out of the Gaza Strip.

At least two writers who have not always cheered him, James B. Reston of the New York Times and Roscoe Drummond of this and other newspapers, moved over this week.

Reston wrote: For his tireless and promising diplomacy in recent days, Secretary Dulles is entitled to at least one innocent passage down this narrow corridor (Reston's column) to the bottom of the page . . ."

And Drummond: "It deserves to be said that Secretary Dulles contributed the creative proposal that persuaded Prime Minister Ben-Gurion to agree to comply with the U.N. resolution without advance U.N. guarantees."

As this is written, Dulles has flown off to Australia, continuing the grind that for a man of 69 and with his medical history just can not [sic] go on forever. He'll have to quit and let up one of these days. I'll wager it will NOT be under fire.

*** * ***

IF AND WHEN Secretary Dulles does have to step aside, the two best present guesses to succeed him are "Onward Christian" (so-called at last week's Gridiron Dinner) Herter and former SHAPE Commander Alfred Gruenther, now heading the Red Cross.

The Gridiron jingle went as follows:

ONWARD CHRISTIAN HERTER
POUNDING AT THE GATE,
READY TO BE DRAFTED,
SHOULD DULLES ABDICATE.

d. (B4/f25)

*****

Niagara Falls Gazette
May 1, 1957

Gannett President Sees Lasting Tensions in World Lauds Cultural Interchange in Address to Chamber

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

International tension is here to stay.

That's the estimate of a newspaperman who has covered the Washington beat, sat in on the birth of the United Nations and only recently returned from Suez.

Paul Miller, president of the Gannett Co., Inc. and a reporter for 32 years, told an overflow audience in the Hotel Niagara ballroom last night that "we'll have to live with the turmoil in the Arab world and with an aggressive and threatening Soviet, for all our lives and then some."

Mr. Miller spoke at the 39th annual dinner of the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce.

Must Put Out Fires

He forecast an interminable period in which the United States will have to deal with "single aggressions, single threats, single denunciations and single breaches of solemn agreements." It will be the U.S. government's lot "to struggle to put out now a fire here and now one there," he declared.

Ranging informally over the problems of the world, Mr. Miller found U.S. policy effective in keeping a troubled peace.

Lauds Dulles

He described Secretary of State John Foster Dulles as an able diplomat who has been ruining his health in his devotion to the job.

"In my opinion," Mr. Miller said, Mr. Dulles is inferior to none" of the long line of men who have held this backbreaking job.

He went back through the Roosevelt and Truman administrations to compare Mr. Dulles with his predecessors. Secretary Cordell Hull, he said, lost control of the department before he left it. Edward Stettinius rarely saw copies of the messages exchanged by President Roosevelt with foreign heads of state, he continued. James F. Byrnes didn't have enough time in the job to get acclimated, and Gen. George Marshall took the job only as a favor to President Truman.

Dean Acheson, he added, was "brilliant but not effective."

In contrast to these earlier secretaries, Mr. Dulles is operating almost on his own in the field of foreign policy, Mr. Miller declared.

While President Eisenhower gives Mr. Dulles a free hand to the extent that the secretary is often left alone to defend appointments and policies, Presidents Roosevelt and Truman attempted to be their own secretaries of state, Mr. Miller observed.

Visited Suez

The speaker recounted his experiences in Egypt last September where he went to make an on-the-spot survey of the Suez Canal situation. There was no hint of the British, French, Israeli invasion to follow, he said.

He found that the Egyptians felt they could operate the canal without difficulty, while the canal users were forecasting that the 103-mile waterway would soon be a "mess of littered hulks" because of the ineptitude of Egyptian pilots and personnel.

"I'm still wondering what the answer is to a question the canal users were asking then," he said. The question? Where is the Egyptian Canal Authority going to get the pilots to take the big tankers through from Port Said to Suez?

World Travel Urged

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Miller said that in a shrinking world, it is more important than ever for reporters, and anyone else who wants to understand what is going on, to get out and see for themselves.

"Nothing of significance can happen anywhere in the world that doesn't affect us," he declared. As an example, he cited higher gas prices and higher defense budgets in the U. S. as a result of the Suez tieup [sic].

Interchange of students and other such contacts between nations were praised by the Gannett executive.

"The Fulbright fellowships have done good beyond measure," he said. "We ought to applaud any effort in this direction, including the latest one, by the Ford Foundation, for an exchange of students with Poland."

Even a Chamber of Commerce can benefit by getting out and finding out what people think of it, Mr. Miller said. He described a survey conducted by the Rochester chamber to inform itself as to public and group attitudes toward the chamber. Afterward, he said, a number of programs were undertaken to gain better public understanding and appreciation of the chamber's work.

Mr. Miller was introduced by Chamber President Clarence R. Runals . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

GANNETT CO. HEAD WELCOMED HERE – Chamber of Commerce officials last night welcomed Paul Miller, second from right, president of the Gannett Co., Inc. who was in Niagara Falls to address the chamber's 39th annual dinner. Gathered around the chief executive of the company which owns the Niagara Falls Gazette are, from left, Charles A. Clancy, retiring chamber director; Clarence R. Runals, chamber president; Mayor Calvin L. Keller; Joseph Green, also a director, and William A. Boles, dinner chairman. – Gazette Photo.

e. (B4/f25)

Niagara Falls Gazette
May 2, 1957

New Tension Build Up From Red China Trade

Paul Miller, president of Gannett Co., Inc., told the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce at its annual dinner that new international tensions and crises can always be expected. The job, he indicated, is to resolve each within its own small area, to prevent any of them from becoming a cause for war.

One of these crises appears to exist in the stepping up of some western nations' trade with Red China.

For months some of America's allies, including Britain and Japan, have been enlarging their dealings with the Chinese communists, in quiet defiance of an established embargo. Our government is opposed to this trend and will not relax its own ban on Red China trade.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

However, Washington has given official sanction to expanded trade between China and such nations as Britain and Japan. This amounts to accepting an accomplished fact, which would continue even if we withheld sanction.

Why have our allies revived the China trade even though they know it is against the wishes of the United States, the paramount Western power in the Pacific?

As far as Britain and Japan go, the fundamental reason is that they believe they need it. Oriental commerce always has bulked large in the British trade picture, and they have chafed under embargo restrictions. Japan is a growing storehouse of manufactured products desperately seeking markets.

Neither these two lands nor some others see Red China as the menace America does. They feel the Chinese are as eager as they for some kind of "normal" trade and that encouraging it may actually serve to promote more peaceful attitudes in the Peiping government.

There is reason to believe, too, that Britain departed from America's lead in the Far East because we had failed to follow British leadership at the time of the Suez crisis.

But whatever the reasons, a new situation is clearly upon us. More trade between Red China and our allies is building and will continue to build. Evidently all we can do is try to keep it within some bounds which will at least go part way toward safeguarding our strategic interests in the Pacific.

f. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
May 4, 1957

Senator McCarthy: The Man or Times?

By PAUL MILLER

My most intimate recollection of Senator [Joseph] McCarthy [November 14, 1908-May 2, 1957]:

Finding myself seated next to him at a Washington Gridiron Club dinner when he was at the height of his power . . . Marveling that some of the top figures in the government fell over each other coming by to pat the senator on the shoulder and butter him up . . . . Noting that he seemed to take it all in stride, as if homage were his due . . . . Listening to his declaimer of any intention to embarrass the White House, even while he swung low blows at appointments started by Ike himself.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In politics, as in sports, a man may be an idol one day and a lonely, forlorn figure the next. McCarthy, a grandstander always, had it all.

Some of the people who fawned over him a little while ago would not be seen in the same room with him in the months before his death. Others remained loyal throughout, kept expecting a comeback, some form of general public vindication. Some insist it will come even yet.

And the argument will be long continued, whether McCarthy produced the times or the times produced McCarthy . . . .

Old Egyptian Was Right

Of all the misconceptions that turned the Egyptian adventure into a debacle for Britain and France, none is more difficult to understand than their belief that Egypt would not be able to operate the Suez Canal. They thought Egyptian administration would be an early flop and that old experts would be called back in a hurry.

This was recalled anew when our Washington bureau, reporting on the Suez Canal situation as of now, wrote this week that State Department officials concede Dictator Nasser's Egyptian Canal Authority is doing "a very good job" of running the canal.

Even up to a few weeks before Israel's invasion, followed by the ill-conceived jump-off by France and Britain, shipping people and government officials there still expected canal operations somehow to blow up and halt amid a litter of grounded ships.

Mainly, the doubters didn't think Egypt could produce enough pilots. British and French, who long had a corner on this important and lucrative work, struck and went home after Nasser seized the canal company on July 26, 1956. The Egyptians somehow kept going. Instead of collapsing, they were doing a progressively better job up to the time of the invasion.

When I was out there last September, following the Conference of Canal Users at London (where everybody predicted Egyptian failure), an old Egyptian at the Canal Administration headquarters at Ismailia said to me:

"Why DIDN'T they think we could operate the canal? Most of the employes [sic] of the old World company were Egyptians. We've lived around here all our lives."

He's proved right again by latest developments.

g. (B7/f4)

*****

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rochester Times-Union
May 11, 1957

Economy Tide Is Rolling

By PAUL MILLER

Help That Never Came

There have been questions about it, and concern has been expressed, but we only now are getting direct testimony as to the effect of American propaganda broadcasts on the Hungarian people prior to the uprisings against Russian communism.

Endre Marton, former Associated Press correspondent in Hungary, now in the United States, said the other day that the Freedom Fighters were encouraged to expect help that never came and that the U.S. really never had any intention of sending.

He said:

"The broadcasts of the Voice of America and Radio Free Europe, particularly the latter, led the people to "expect something – and nothing happened."

The Voice of America is a part of our government's overseas propaganda effort. Radio Free Europe is not government-run; it is supported by contributions. The argument has been made for it that RFE could, therefore, take a stronger, more positive approach than a government-sponsored propaganda service.

*** * ***

PEOPLE LISTENING IN HUNGARY don't know the difference, Marton said. His testimony will not help the Voice of America with economy-minded congressmen. Nor will it help Radio Free Europe in the fund-raising campaign now going on.

I am among those, and there may be many, who have supported both in the past but who have been reluctantly reassessing the whole foreign propaganda campaign in their own minds of late. It may be time to modify both . . . .

h. (B7/f4)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, May 25, 1957

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

They Still Like Ike
--But What About Budget?

By PAUL MILLER

Aided Don't Like It Either

Here's a switch: The very day Secretary Dulles was before the Senate Foreign Relations committee urging (and with considerable encouragement from the senators) that there be no cuts in his program, an Associated press dispatch from Karachi, Pakistan, reported:

Amjad Ali, Pakistan's finance minister, declared "our economic dependence on the United States has grown beyond expectations. The sooner we get to our feet the better for us and the country."

*** * ***

REMINDED ME of the crusty old captain of the MAURETANIA who more than once told Mrs. Miller and me on an Atlantic crossing 'way back in 1949:

"We British would be better off if we'd never had any of your so-called aid. We'd have worked out our own problems and we'd be coming out on our own now."

I didn't fully agree with him, nor did most of our British friends – but I can see his point better today. And who would have dreamed, back in 1949, that a President of the United States still would be asking for billions more for foreign aid in 1957? It was to have been all over and done with, our foreign friends "put on their feet" and all that, long before now.

Moral: Once a federal spending program is started, scarcely anything short of a major war or depression can stop it.

Far from stopping foreign aid, or even moving to do so, we're getting it better organized and set up for permanent operations now. The new look program presented by Secretary Dulles drew praise. Even Senator Capehart of Indiana, who said he hadn't voted for a foreign aid bill in 10 years, announced he'll vote for this one.

Nevertheless: Foreign aid can, will, and should be cut . . . .

i. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Saturday, June 1, 1957

Holding Downtown Pull
--Visitors Were Impressed

By PAUL MILLER

Getting No Place Fast

Uncle Sam received two big jolts this week in respect to our policy toward China.

First was, of course, the unprecedented mob disorders at our embassy at Taipeh [sic], where we spent millions on millions to bolster up Chiang Kai-shek. This flare-up of anti-American feeling at a bastion that owes its very existence to American dollars and American military aid came as a shock in and out of Washington.

Second, and scarcely less painful because our State Department had advance word, was Britain's scrapping of special controls on trade with Red China.

What now?

Critics of U.S. support of Chiang are certain to be heard in Congress with new vigor.

So will those favoring recognition of Red China, and they appear to be growing in number and influence.

The week's developments almost certainly portend earnest reassessment of our whole policy toward China; and well they should: We're getting no place fast with the course we're following now . . . .

j. (B7/f5)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 20, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Will Sen. Ives Run Again?
It Could Be Ken Keating

By PAUL MILLER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A Skillful Dissent
On Civil Defense

One of the most useful Editorial page contributions in a long while was the detailed letter (Times-Union, Thursday, July 18) in which Kenneth C. Raynor indignantly took apart a Times-Union editorial that found much to criticize in the latest Civil Defense exercise.

Raynor is a former coordinator of CD auxiliary police. He is a member of the Civil Defense Coordinating Committee. It's a serious business to him.

All of us owe a lot to those who give their time, as most of us do not, trying to get some measure of preparation and training for any emergency.

The fact that fault is found with specific phases should not be taken as general criticism. However, I believe that most people, some CD devotees included, sympathize with The Times-Union editorial's criticism of the downtown siren. As handled so far, it IS a menace . . . .

k. (B7/f5)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, August 3, 1957

AS I SEE I

Booming Connecticut --A Hustling Governor

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Epitaph of Carlos Castillo Armas

The United States lost a good friend where we could ill afford to lose one when a traitor's bullet cut down Carlos Castillo Armas in the National Palace of Guatemala.

This sharp-faced little former army colonel, only 44, had proved himself a rock to build on in anti-Communist efforts in Central America.

*** * ***

I SAW HIM FIRST in 1954, shortly after he and a pickup volunteer army overthrew the Red-dominated Guatemalan government of Jacobo Arbenz.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He and his cabinet received American newspapermen in the mirrored palace hall where this week his body lay in state.

One statement stands out now, in light of his assassination. We had been discussing U.S. loans and aid plans designed to help Castillo Armas get his new government going and hinder resurgence of communism there. He said that was fine, but then went on:

"We here have learned a lesson which we wish to share with the United States. For a nation to preserve its freedom, it must be ready at all times to sacrifice the blood of its citizens. For that determination, there is no substitute."

It could be the epitaph of Carlos Castillo Armas . . . .

l. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
October 5, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Convention or Commission: The Best Constitution Idea

By PAUL MILLER

. . . A Yawn at the United Nations

An Associated Press lensman snapped this picture the other day at the United Nations. While Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge yawned, the presidential disarmament envoy, Harold Stassen, concentrated with eyes closed and an aide cupped hand over ear phone. The U.S. group was listening to a Russian speech on disarmament.

The photo was widely reproduced by American newspapers. Editorial comment seemed to break down pretty much as follows:

1. Those who suggested, as did the Wall Street Journal, that the yawn represented the assessment of a good many people today about what goes on in the international forum.

2. Others who merely noted that anybody is entitled to a great, big yawn at a Russian disarmament proposal.

*** * ***

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I HAVE ONE FURTHER THOUGHT:

Ambassador Lodge has been putting up long enough with all the guff that accompanies his job. He is entitled to the reward of another appointment, if he wishes, and a good one.

Lodge, starting as a newspaper reporter in Boston and New York, was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1936, was reelected in 1946 but was defeated by young Jack Kennedy, Democrat, in 1952. He's been U.S. representative to the U.N. since 1953 – capably and tirelessly putting forward the U.S. view in that seemingly endless wrangling along the East River. Yes, he's earned a happier assignment.

There is occasional talk of him for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1960; no likely prospect as of now.

m. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, October 12, 1957

AS I SEE IT

We Can't Laugh Off Sputnik, America Is Running Second

By PAUL MILLER

Something more reassuring than anything heard from official Washington is needed in reply to the beep of Sputnik.

This is no time for panic. Restrained comment is indicated, especially in high places.

But pride and pretense have no place in the sorry picture of America running second. And complacency, or even the appearance thereof, is inexcusable.

*** * ***

AS THIS IS WRITTEN, only Mr. McElroy, the new secretary of defense, has ventured to promise any move for corrective action. And he went little further than to speak of removing bottlenecks in testing and evaluation, and to promise cooperation by all three services.

All can appreciate President Eisenhower's determination to head off hysteria, yet, bless him, it certainly came as no great comfort when he told his news conference that Russia's release of the Sputnik did not raise HIS apprehensions "one iota." It sure raised mine!

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

If we know anything at all as a nation, it is that we are in a race for survival.

*** * ***

THAT BEING TRUE, how can we square some of our Washington comment with this appraisal – printed by The Times-Union on Thursday – from Martin Caidan, author and consultant on U.S. missile and satellite programs:

"The conclusion is inescapable that not only do the Soviets have the dreaded intercontinental ballistic missile, but that their war rocket is accurate . . .

"The United States has never even fired in a test a successful ICBM. The Russians have fired theirs repeatedly."

Well, then, what now?

*** * ***

I BELIEVE THE PEOPLE of this country will be satisfied with nothing less than full official information on why we got behind and what we need to do; then, a crash program to regain the lead in this field.

As a starter, we will have to concede humbly and frankly that the U.S. has been terribly remiss, instead of tending to laugh off or minimize our defeat.

And we will have to make other programs and projects give to put the required dollars and brains back of the missile and satellite drive.

All this can be done without calling Congress back. And without hearings where politics would dominate.

But this much appears certain:

You will hear further calls for a special session and definite development of a Congressional investigation if the White House and Pentagon do not themselves take decisive, determined, reassuring action soon . . . .

n. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, October 19, 1957

AS I SEE IT

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Survival in a Rocket Age
--Have We Enough Stamina?

By PAUL MILLER

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. – I stood on the site of the first permanent English settlement in America on nearby Jamestown Island this week and was troubled by thoughts that must trouble many who come here:

Is there, now, any cause for which we Americans of today would or could go through what the colonists endured?

Indeed, have we the stamina to endure what they suffered, or are we too soft already?

In this difficult area, developed as a great park now and the scene of an appearance by Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip this week, the population of the first colony shrank from 500 to about 60 in one awful winter because of disease, Indians, and starvation.

Yet here – only 12 years later in 1619 – the first representative legislative assembly convened to set a pattern for self-government in America!

* * *

TODAY, WE ARE IN A RACE for survival as a nation.

Can we remain ahead, and thus live in some security, if we continue, as most of us do, to put pleasure and comfort ahead of nearly everything else?

Dorothy Thompson wrote the other day:

"Complacency and love of ease have ever been the death of nations. And they all too patently characterize American society. If the Russians overtake us, it will be because they are not, as a people complacent, and they do not 'take it easy.'"

* * *

WHAT A CONTRAST between life today and that in an early colony.

Today our youngsters, bless 'em, go to school in palaces; get there on rubber tires, have more supervised extra-curricular recreational programs than they (or their parents) can keep up with, get "free" aid for this and that, have to go through a rigamarole [sic] of permits and stuff to hold a job, have thousands of dollars of scholarships available, and on and on.

Of course, most of us wanted it that way. We pay for it.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

But I wondered, all the same, standing there on Jamestown Island, poking about the hallowed ruins of the old church, gazing across the green meadow down over the broad James River.

"Come on and hurry," some one [sic] said then, "or we'll miss the reception for the Queen . . . ."

. . . Soul-Searching in High Places

There may be some complacency, but not where it would hurt, and there is much grave soul-searching in high places at Washington as American scientists continue tracing Sputnik and wonder what next from Moscow.

It may be too many Americans still do not fully comprehend that the blasts which hurtled the little moon [Sputnik. Etymology: Russian, "fellow-traveler"] heavenward also set off a world-wide reaction favorable to the Soviets – peoples remote and not so remote now may conclude that Russia has drawn abreast, if she has not actually gone ahead, of us in the arms race.

This is not because of the capability of Sputnik itself. It is because of the rocketry the Russians had to develop and utilize in the launching.

Two developments this week may or may not indicate the satellite's propaganda value to Russia:

First, Egypt's astonishing move in dispatching some troops to Syria;

Second, Yugoslavia's recognizing of East Germany.

Thus openly contemptuous of the United States and of U.S. aid, they thumbed their noses at Uncle Sam.

*** * ***

THERE STILL IS NO OPEN ADMISSION from our leaders that any radical revision of our defense may be indicated.

Senator William Knowland, campaigning for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in California (where he is hearing directly from the people), comes up with an idea:

He proposes:

"Why not a bipartisan review of the entire American defense effort."

Why not; indeed? If not that, it will be intensely partisan, hence more prolonged. Action I needed now.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I believe public opinion, fanned or not by administration critics, will force greater official attention to the rocket and satellite program in time. May the administration take its lumps and act on its own!

. . . Sputnik, Symington

Speaking of partisanship, the Sputnik uproar was made for Senator Stuart Symington of Missouri – a one-time Rochesterian. He has been crying wolf for years, urging great appropriations for air defense and cuts in other areas.

Senator Symington was secretary of the Air Force under President Truman. He knows Washington. He also knows the Pentagon. I, for one, have often suspected that some of the seemingly inside information of which he has made use came direct from undisclosed sources in the Pentagon.

Be that as it may, "Stu" Symington is the one public personality in either party to come even further to the fore in the wake of Sputnik. A great many things can happen between now and the Democratic convention of 1960. One might be that Symington would be a stronger contender than he was at Chicago a year ago. Here is a sample of what he is saying today, as quoted by Arthur Krock in the New York Times:

"If and when the rocket system which launched Sputnik is used to fire a hydrogen warhead, our whole outmoded defense system built on the basis of tradition instead of progress, falls to pieces at a waste of billions."

o. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, October 26, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Week of Good News --All Around the World

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Notes from a Day at Washington

The administration appears content (though amid many dissents within ranks) to undertake no major defense shakeup to put more emphasis on missiles.

The ruling thinking seems to be that Secretary McElroy, new defense boss, as one of the best propagandists for soap while at Proctor and Gamble, can improve public relations for the Pentagon. And there's always the hope that our scientists may themselves pass a miracle soon.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Others feel a prompt reappraisal and realignment is indicated – Vice President Nixon, for example, of whom the Wall Street Journal reported:

"His (Nixon's) view of the Russian missile developments, while by no means alarmist, is definitely a more serious one than that suggested by the official statements in Washington. By implication at least he suggested there should be some changes in the allocation of funds and efforts of the defense program toward more research and development of new weapons, always with an eye on the government's fiscal integrity."

I believe the public at large holds with Nixon, is distressed at administration failure to react with strong measures (though heartened by Secretary McElroy's more-information policy), still hopes for something in line with Nixon's reported thinking.

Meanwhile, it seems likely that there will be a thorough but private investigation of the entire defense program by the full Armed Services Committee of the Senate.

There are hints, though, that we have hope of some surprise developments on our side before too long that will be encouraging and reassuring to the United States – and bad news to the Soviets.

p. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, November 2, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Reporter's Good Job: Separates Facts and Opinion

By PAUL MILLER

. . . The Robert Frost Rebellion

Robert Frost, the poet, represents at 83 a lone voice for rebellion that a lot of us could heed.

"He is against everything and everybody that want people to rely on somebody else," wrote James B. Reston in the New York Times. "He is against the United Nations. He is against the Welfare State. He is against conformity and easy slogans . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

"His pet project is to band together all men and women who want to stamp out 'togetherness'. The glory of America," he says, "has been its pioneers who celebrated 'separateness' and who were not always seeking protection."

* * *

A GREAT OLD MAN; still one not likely to command much attention in a day when U.S. Army investigators draw some shocking conclusions as to factors that led numbers of our boys captured in Korea to turn up weaklings and worse.

Said a report digested in The New Yorker magazine:

"Collaboration" ran as high as 30 per cent among U.S. prisoners for technical and rather minor collaboration.

More than 13 per cent were guilty of "serious collaboration" – writing disloyal tracts or agreeing to spy or organize for the Communists after the war.

A U.S. Army doctor, Major Anderson, himself a prisoner, asserted:

"Our soldiers' attitude was not what they might do to help themselves, but what could somebody else do to help them."

Major Anderson concluded that the Americans' attitude was the result in part of the shock of being captured, but he added:

It was also, I think, the result of some new failure in childhood and adolescent training of our young men – a new softness."

* * *

I SAY DON'T BLAME the young men. Don't blame the children. It's the kind of world we've been building for them, and for ourselves. We started many years ago, quickened the pace in the depression-ridden 30s, continued even in the post-war prosperity.

Few of our youngsters, bless 'em, have a lick of work to do any time before voting age and often later. They are coddled by schools, by the law and in our homes.

A teacher who really disciplines one may wind up in court. We parents are in and out of the house and in and out of town. We leave 'em up to the school teachers and Sunday school teachers.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

So what can we expect but softness from a generation raised to softness among parents who, ourselves, look more and more to the government for the security Americans used to win (or not) by themselves. The wonder is that so many – the great majority – are so fine, so self-reliant, considering the raising we give them.

* * *

POET FROST WROTE a couplet awhile back:

"Nature within her inmost self decides
"To trouble men with having to take sides."

I for one am going to try to take sides in large measure with Robert Frost. As a starter I am at least going to try to read some early American history to my younger boys still at home – provided I can get 'em away from "Joe Palooka," "Peanuts" and TV.

q. (B7/f7)

*

Rochester Times-Union
November 9, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Public relations Lesson: Tell Truth, Frankly and Fully

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Missile Double-take

The Eisenhower administration clearly did a double-take in the missiles field. Only two weeks ago, top strategy was reported to be:

Sit tight, let the new defense secretary, Mr. McElroy, improve the information and publicity program; and see what comes from the inevitable congressional investigations.

There were those at Washington who did not think this adequate. They wanted a dramatic move by the President after Sputnik I. But they felt they getting scant encouragement before Sputnik II.

There is no way to assess the effect of the Sputniks on the elections, if any. It is apparent, however, that the country at large wanted something more than it was getting from the President himself prior to his Thursday night statement.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The question still not answered fully by the administration, and certain to be raised repeatedly from here on, is: How did Uncle Sam get behind Russia in the first place?

r. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, November 23, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Missiles, Moons, Moscow: The Questions and Answers

By PAUL MILLER

Not since wartime have Americans been beset and bedeviled by more urgent questions and concerns than have flooded in upon us since the Sputniks:

1. Why did we get behind Russia, anyway?

2. Can we catch up?

3. What is the real significance of the Soviet moons?

These are a few.

Beginning with them, this week's column will encompass a series of pertinent questions being raised today – with answers it has been possible to obtain from some in a position to know in science, education, business and government.

Answer to No. 1: We made a calculated decision to concentrate on long-range bombers. The Russians built bombers but they went ahead on long-range missiles, too.

And No. 2. Yes, But what worries some is whether we have the kind of "Buck Rogers" research going in other areas also. Weather, for example. The Russians are working hard there. If they learn to control weather, even over limited areas, the threat could be worse than the missiles.

No. 3. That the Soviets could now probably put The Bomb on Rochester, N.Y. via missile rather than by plane.

*** * ***

SOME OTHER QUESTIONS:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Q. How long before Sputnik did U.S. government agencies know the Russians would be capable of launching a satellite in 1957?

A. Perhaps as much as 15 months before the event which was Oct. 4, 1957.

Why Were We Beaten?

Q. Then how come we didn't move faster, ourselves, in anticipation of the Russian launching?

A. We didn't comprehend the implications or the shock Sputnik would produce in the Free World. Actually, anybody who could read the newspapers, and remember, knew how Russia was progressing. We did not "integrate the totality" of their effort.

Q. Khrushchev says the big bombers might as well be scrapped now. Has Russia done so?

A. No. but she may be producing fewer now.

Q. What's the main reason our radical weapons programs sometimes seem slow?

A. Principally because of our complicated decision-making machinery. It takes years for our military planners to make up their collective minds, more time to negotiate contracts. We took eight years to develop the B52 (heavy bomber); the Russians developed a comparable plane in four.

Q. What can we do to speed up decision-making?

A. We must transfer the development of radical new weapons-planning and development from the military services to an independent civilian-dominated agency. Moreover, we must make it profitable for private companies to work in government radical weapons programs

Q. How can we make it profitable?

A. Perhaps by figuring the return on some base other than cost of production. Most contractors earn only 3 or 4 per cent on government contracts now.

Who Is To Blame?

Q. Is there any hopeful aspect of the Sputniks?

A. Putting up the satellites now may very well be recorded in history as Khrushchev's colossal blunder. He thus awakened and unified our country.

Q. What's the history of our lagging missile program? Who's to blame?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A. We gave Convair a study contract in 1946. Then we cancelled it in 1947. If Convair, interested by then, hadn't gone ahead on its own we'd be worse off even than we are now.

Q. What will the coming congressional investigation of the U.S. missile program probably disclose?

A. First, that we got behind simply because we started late, on a calculated decision. Second, that the U.S. now is making a massive effort in this field. Third, that U.S. programs are effective programs. Fourth, that if we continue to provide the necessary funds, there is no reason the U.S. needs to stay behind.

Q. What's the hope for federal tax reduction?

A. Forget it.

Q. Why all the administration fuss for continued and even expanded U.S. aid to the uncommitted underdeveloped countries?

A. The U.S. is no longer self-sufficient. The underdeveloped countries hold the still undiscovered natural deposits of the world. They have vast potential resources; they will provide vast markets. Somebody is going to develop them; they must not be developed behind the lowering curtain of Soviet communism.

Q. What are some current world danger spots from the U.S. viewpoint?

A. 1. Guatemala – once Communist dominated, now threatened anew.

2. Laos.

3. Indonesia.

Q. What bad effect did the events of Little Rock actually produce in the free and uncommitted nations outside the U.S.?

A. Less than some anticipated. Very little really.

Q. What about space travel?

A. In the next two or three generations, if we work hard enough, we will have the means of visiting other planets.

Q. Can the U.S. beat the Soviets while doing business-as-usual?

A. (By a scientist with a sense of humor). When I am feeling blue and pessimistic, I think the Russians could be ahead of us in everything within five years. When I am on the optimistic side, I think 10 years!

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

What Must We Do?

Q. What must we do to bring the full strength of our Free Enterprise system to bear upon regaining the lead, then remaining ahead?

A. Many things. Here are a few: Give a clear right-of-way to pending missile programs, as now being done. Toughen up our educational system – and ourselves! Whittle down the domestic benefits programs of all kinds in favor of what has to be done to keep our country from falling into a position where she could be blackmailed into surrender by a stronger Russia.

* * *

COMMENT: All this will be hard. If those who should know do know (and how can we afford to doubt them?) nothing comes ahead of the necessity of improving our entire national posture vis a vis the Communist world.

Vice President Nixon said publicly Thursday in Washington:

"We are at war now as surely as in 1942."

Fletcher Knebel, The Times-Union's Washington paragrapher, summed it up thus – with tongue in cheek – this week:

"Oh for the good old days when the Russians were trying to steal our secrets."

* * *

A FINAL NOTE: It seems to me almost providential that Richard Nixon instead of one less able is the vice president at this time.

He is necessarily carrying much of what ordinarily might be the presidential load. He also is supplying some of the direction. For example, he saw – apparently long before most White House advisors – that Sputnik was more than a "glittering bauble," as one White House aide put it a few days after the launching of Sputnik I. Nixon is close to the public. He knew at once that Sputnik had shocked the country and the Western World. He knew the scientific reasons why. And he knew prompt, positive, dramatic action was indicated. He apparently could not get his view across for a while; it clearly is prevailing now.

s. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, December 14, 1957

AS I SEE IT

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

We Could Take a Licking
On NATO Missile Base Plan

By PAUL MILLER

PARIS – The United States goes into the NATO summit conference on Monday with no assurance whatsoever that we may not take a diplomatic licking to top off the other reverses starting with Sputnik I away back there on Oct. 1.

To review: While we still were trying to decide whether we were surprised by the first baby moon, Russia fired off another, and with a dog aboard. Then came President Eisenhower's stroke.

Now as our delegation flies in after a trip given over doubtless to last-minute skull practice among Secretary Dulles and his associates, nobody knows quite what may come next.

This much is granted: The President's decision to come here was a shot in the arm. Our Ike is still No. 1, as he of course should be, among Western leaders.

Known then as the savior of Europe in World War II, he was the first commander-in-chief after NATO was formed and could have won any election in any of the countries represented here. The coming few days will show whether he still is as popular.

And, whether he can win enough of the arguments next week is something else again.

* * *

THE WAY IT LOOKS TODAY, the U.S. will be asking more than we can give in return. Our allies know we are dependent on bases on their soil for defense against Russia's long-range missiles which we cannot now match. Hence, our side is in for rough bargaining.

The United States so far has obtained an agreement on bases with Britain. That's all. Other nations have been resisting. They can see their countries becoming magnets for Russia's own medium range missiles if the U.S. were to be firing missiles from bases on their territory come World War III.

Thus, the bases problem – how all NATO countries are to fit into our missile program – will be among the most difficult.

Other major problems include the need to agree on Russia's renewed propaganda war and to find ways for better coordination of military forces and weapons.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

ACTUALLY, MUCH OF THE PROGRAM the United States will put forth, as well as that of others, already has been under discussion in preliminary committee meetings here.

That's where, for example, we got an indication of the depth of the opposition to our proposal to set up foreign bases and nuclear stockpiles.

The actual meetings next week will, if all goes well from the U.S. point of view, consist largely of ratifying sessions for what already has been under study and discussion.

By the same token, the meetings also could turn into a diplomatic setback for the U.S., sure then to be widely trumpeted as such by the Communists, if little is accomplished and resounding agreement is not reached on, say, our missiles proposal and coordination of military forces and defense budgets by NATO countries.

Indications are that our allies will put a high price on any agreement on missile bases with some such demands as these:

1. That eventually though not right now, a European general be named NATO supreme commander.

2. That the U.S. pay every cent of the cost of the missile sites; also that more NATO weapons be bought form European makers.

There are more. Those give an idea.

. . . Reflections on Transatlantic Flight

If the Eisenhower administration has an adequate program for catching and overhauling Russia in the intercontinental missiles race, it still hasn't been well presented to ease popular doubts and misgivings.

The President's illness interfered with his own speaking program. It had been planned to restore confidence and win back slipping popular support. The fact that Administration speakers appeared to be riding off in all directions did not help.

Vice President Nixon was the first, and for some days the only top Administration figure, to concede the gravity of our situation and urge prompt action.

* * *

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

NIXON HIMSELF GOT THE SHOE on the wrong foot this week. He told reporters:

"Let's get away from our wailing walls and act like Americans. We've got work to do. Let's get on with it like Americans."

Where this misses is that people aren't "wailing" because Russia has a missile that can put an atomic bomb on New York. People are wailing because the administration has been slow and awkward in putting together a convincing response.

Inez Robb, a pretty lady columnist who can swing like Marciano with her typewriter, delivered the most biting rebuttal to the vice president's "wailing wall" remark. She wrote in the New York World Telegram and Sun:

"There's a wailing wall from New York to San Francisco. It is not crowded with cowards or sunshine patriots or quitters, but with honest citizens who are crying aloud for an Administration alert to the present crisis, imbued with a sense of urgency and capable of formulating a program for action.

"In the meantime, about the only thing the average citizen can do is pay his taxes and pray, and among the things he prays for is leadership from Washington and relief from political claptrap."

Nixon, who can take it as well as dish it out, probably enjoyed Miss Robb's rejoinder himself. It should be required reading by some of his associates.

*** * ***

WHILE THE ADMINISTRATION was woefully slow getting up steam, progress has been made on the missiles front despite the tragic and over-publicized dud at Canaveral.

Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy has moved hearteningly with the pressing problems of defense changes (such as providing for even greater dispersal of our retaliatory airpower.) Sputnik I roared and whistled into the heavens just 10 days before McElroy was sworn in. He is starting very fast under the crushing additional burdens now heaped upon his office.

t. (B4/f29)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
December 16, 1957

President Prays for Peace On Eve of Paris Conference

1704

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By PAUL MILLER
President of The Gannett Newspapers

PARIS, Dec. 15 – President Eisenhower prayed for peace today.

He joined perhaps 800 other worshippers at the great gray American Cathedral in special interfaith services for success of the NATO conference.

The President was seated in a pew well forward in left center. He bowed humbly there during prayers, forehead on his arms, his thinning hair accentuated.

Thus he worshipped on the eve of this conclave of Western powers joined for peace through mutual defense in 1949 and faced with critical new threats now.

Temperatures were in the 20s. A raw wind whipped the decorative flags outside. Worshippers kept on their coats at the start. They craned at the President and his party.

Secretary Dulles took part in the Episcopal reading service under flags of NATO countries hanging from the high vaulted ceiling.

The President joined at the close in the century-old hymn concluding: "Whom shall we trust but Thee O Lord? Where rest but on this faithful word? None ever called on Thee in vail; give peace, O God, give peace again."

At least one American recalled Washington on his knees at Valley Forge and Lincoln praying alone in his study, watching Dwight D. Eisenhower this bleak cold Sunday in Paris.

u. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
December 21, 1957, Page 10

AS I SEE IT

On-the-Scene Paris Report: 'We've Got to Win or Else . . .'

By PAUL MILLER

PARIS – I don't know whether it was worth President Eisenhower's risking his health, but the NATO "Summit" conference – so-called because he and other heads of state did attend – must be put down as a success as of now.

The week has shown that the United States is a long way from having lost its influence, but that it takes more work to exercise it. There is more solidarity among North Atlantic Treaty Organization members than many had thought.

That could be one sum-up of the conference.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Another is that it actually won't be possible fully to evaluate its success or failure for months.

Agreement was reached to accept the U.S. offer to send over intermediate range ballistic missiles (IRBM); also, among other things, to encourage new contacts with Russia.

But there is nothing specific on the IRBMs, which we won't have, apparently, for 18 months anyway. The sites and the full program will have to be negotiated, nation by nation. Some may or may not accept them when the time comes – although there is supposed to be some moral obligation involved.

And there is nothing specific on Russia. The West, through various channels, will renew the oft-frustrated efforts to get some political agreement with the Communists.

This much is certain:

We came off better than generally expected by the so-called experts. A week ago here there was widespread doubt that any general missile understanding would be possible.

. . . Biggest Story

THIS PROBABLY WAS THE FIRST international conference where one man's health (President Eisenhower's) was the biggest story of one entire day and the subject of inquiry at every press conference thereafter.

London and Paris newspapers played the story across the top of front pages when Ike excused himself from a dinner and went to bed. Everything else became secondary for hours.

I wondered why he didn't collapse at the opening session Monday. The big circular table (see the picture below) all but smoked under lights trained upon the area for TV and newsreel cameras. Ike fidgeted and perspired while two statesmen, who were down for only perfunctory remarks ahead of him, seized the opportunity and held forth for half an hour. Then he required 20 minutes to deliver his own. It would have been an ordeal for anybody.

He took a nap every day and loafed when he could. But he had a wearing round of it. He attended dinners every night but the one; made the major address of the conference; had uncounted minor meetings with individuals and groups; and motored out to address old friends at Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Finally, he spoke up as the conference was about to close with the suggestion of thirty seconds of silent prayer. Aides and attendants also joined. It was a sobering scene, climaxing the discussions that had gone before.

*** * ***

ALL THE SAME, as Ike began preparing for his report to the nation, due Monday night, it could not be ignored that he still has not been discharged from his doctor's care.

Veteran White House reporters are under constant strain and pressure over the President.

Said one:

"I'm afraid to get more than minutes away from the White House press room any more for fear there might be an emergency and my wire uncovered."

That's life. Newspaper life.

. . . Mr. Dulles' Smile

SECRETARY DULLES WAS ENTITLED to the broad smile he wore as he took off for home by way of a stop in Madrid for a visit with Dictator Franco.

Seldom has an American official gone into a major international conference amid such a storm of criticism.

Had our side emerged without a missile agreement there would have been new demands for his scalp in Washington.

What will the Dulles critics say now?

They'll say for one, that President Eisenhower, not Dulles, carried the conference. In this they will be partly correct, at least. But that would be true in the case of any conference attended by any President and his secretary of state.

There's no question about it – the Europeans don't like Dulles. Why? The answer is as hard to find as the answer to why so many American voters used to say they didn't like Nixon. Perhaps the Europeans will change, too.

David Beetle, editor of the Albany Knickerbocker News, in Paris for his newspaper, interviewed numbers of European reporters. He found few to say a good word for Dulles. And, on the Sunday before the conference opened here, Dulles was greeted by a lead article on a London editorial page (widely circulated in Paris) headed "It's Time to Stand Up to Dulles."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I believe that Europeans, by and large, prefer American Democrats to American Republicans; also that they feel Dulles is more interested in a policy with which the U.S. Senate can go along than one which, if there must be a choice, Europe likes. I recall also that every recent secretary of state has been under fire one way or another – Hull, Stettinius, Byrnes, even General Marshall, and of course Acheson.

. . . A Hagerty Slip

COMPETENT JIM HAGERTY, a New Yorker who was Governor Dewey's trusted aide and now is press secretary to Eisenhower, seldom loses his self-control, even in a job where trying circumstances are the rule rather than the exception.

He blew his top here. What happened was that a Paris Herald Tribune columnist printed a very funny column purporting to be questions and answers at a fanciful Hagerty press conference on Ike's health.

Hagerty called a press conference to term the column "unadulterated rot" and demanded equal front page space for his response.

The Herald Tribune presently is engaged in promoting the columnist for sale to other newspapers. What Hagerty accomplished – as is usually the case in such slips – was to (1) give the columnist material for another column and (2) also give him free publicity in America as every wire service reported the blow-up.

. . . Need to Know

What now?

It mostly depends on us. And we, you and I, mostly depend on the leadership we get from Washington.

Many will hope that, in his report to the nation on Monday, the President will go far beyond merely reviewing the Paris conference.

What Americans need to know is what the Eisenhower administration specifically proposes for the missile race we've got to win or else.

I don't see how any one [sic] can feel satisfied that an adequate program has been laid out for us as of now.

PHOTO:
The NATO conference round table

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

*

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, December 28, 1957, Page 8

1957: It Was year When . . .

1958: May Be Even Better

1957 doesn't look so good in some respects on its way out, but wait a minute – 1957 was the year when:

Russia exposed the superior power of its rocketry as it launched Sputnik I and thereby woke us up to a peril of which we might not otherwise have learned in time. . . .

1957 FOSTERED some reassuring recollections:

While worried by the Sputniks, we recalled that in 1942 we had nothing ready to match the Jap Zero fighter in the Pacific, and before that little to aid the staggered heroes of Britain's sky battle. Yet soon the great U.S. production tide was started; soon our aircraft had established clear superiority; soon our supremacy was apparent. . . .

11. 1958

a. (B4/f31)

Winchester Evening Star
January 2, 1958

H. F. BYRD, JR., EDITOR

As 1958 begins – and as President Eisenhower begins his sixth year as Chief Executive – an appraisal of the assets and liabilities of his Secretary of State seems in order.

John Foster Dulles is high-minded and patriotic. He has served Mr. Eisenhower and our country unselfishly. But every sign indicates he has lost the confidence of our allies and, it appears to us, that he is not looked upon too favorably by a majority of Americans. Yet he continues as the chief architect of our foreign policy.

Mr. Dulles had a distinguished career as a New York lawyer specializing in international law. He long has been a confidant of Governor Dewey, who brought him to the attention of President Eisenhower. The New York Governor previously had appointed Mr. Dulles to the United States Senate to fill a vacancy, but the appointee was unable to keep his seat at the subsequent election. He is a kindly man and a conscientious one. But these qualities alone – or even coupled with his knowledge of world affairs – do not make him an effective Secretary of State.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Of course, he has a tough job and one which singles him out for criticism. But the criticism has reached the point where it is too widespread and too deep-seated to be ignored. Cordell Hull came in for his share, as did James F. Byrnes and General Marshall, and, of course, Dean Acheson. But none except perhaps Mr. Acheson reached the state in which Mr. Dulles now finds himself. Mr. Acheson was mistrusted at home; Mr. Dulles is mistrusted abroad.

The strong anti-Dulles feeling abroad is readily apparent to able and experienced newspapermen who have covered the European scene. For example, Paul Miller, Editor of the Rochester Times-Union, returned from the recent NATO conference to write: "There is no question about it – the Europeans don't like Dulles."

David beetle, Editor of the Albany Knickerbocker News, interviewed numbers of European reporters at the recent Paris conference and found few to say a good word for Mr. Dulles.

Ernie Hill, special correspondent for The Chicago Daily News foreign service, writes from London that "distrust of Secretary of State John Foster Dulles is producing an ugly situation in Britain.

"The distrust is built largely on the belief that Dulles opposes all peaceful negotiations with Russia and is intent upon driving the world into a suicidal war.

"Dulles, some place along the line, has failed to put across to the British his hopes for keeping the peace . . . mostly they consider him a man of war instead of a man of peace.

"Dulles stands for everything warlike and unyielding to the British: Massive retaliation, bluster, brinkmanship, futile negotiations because of rigid, fixed ideas, arrogance and a startling lack of both humanity and humility."

In the Middle East, too, an area President Eisenhower has called the most strategic on earth, Mr. Dulles is distrusted and many of his policies are regarded as paternalistic and muddle-headed.

———————

Of course, we do not believe that an American Secretary of State needs to resign because he doesn't please one or more foreign nations. But we are inclined to the view that a Secretary of State who not only has brought about widespread dissension abroad, but at the same time has failed to stimulate enthusiastic support at home, has become a liability rather than an asset.

A chief reason for hesitating to suggest changing the Secretary of State is the unpredictability as to his successor. But much might be gained by a reshuffling in the Department of State, especially if our present policy of paternalism were scrapped; if a new Secretary would recognize that friendship cannot be bought; if he would regard it as unwise to use our great resources in attempting to influence the internal affairs of other nations.

In other words, America's stock might go up a bit from its present low world-wide state if we had a Secretary of State who would treat our allies as we would like to be treated – with respect and good will, but not with a meddlesome hand.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

_____

John Foster Dulles, in the public mind of many countries, represents a paternalistic, meddlesome, blundering foreign policy. If he were to return to private life, New Year rejoicing could be expected throughout Europe, throughout the Middle East, throughout much of the Pacific. And at home, his resignation might add some hope to a situation which at the moment appears dark.

b. (B7/f8)

*

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, January 4, 1958, Page 8

AS I SEE IT

Why Did We Get Behind, What Are We Going to Do?

By PAUL MILLER

Our national leadership let the old year go out and the new come in still resisting demands for all the facts – no matter how unpleasant – on the missile race.

While we are going to be asked to make more sacrifices for defense – as we should and must – we aren't, as of now, given in one package:

1. An official report on why we got behind Russia and

2. A straightforward recital of what our government proposes we do to catch up and regain the lead.

* * *

SPUTNIK I WENT UP on Oct. 4. Since then, there has been American progress on both defense and diplomatic fronts.

But the picture has been spotty and hard to follow, rather than clear and straight.

The White House has been the source of conflicting assessments. It seemed weeks before there was any official conclusion as to whether we were gravely concerned. Some assumed spokesmen were; some were not.

The President has passed up opportunities to tell the story as he sees it and ask the people for what he believes must be done.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Latest, and perhaps the most regrettable missed opportunity was that of Dec. 23. The President and Secretary of State Dulles appeared on a televised report to the nation on the NATO "summit" conference.

The President spoke effectively but briefly. He did not undertake to chart a course for the future. He spent most of the televised half hour reflecting solemn and silent agreement with Mr. Dulles. Washington widely regards this as the most poorly staged appearance in which Dwight D. Eisenhower has yet been involved.

* * *

REPORTS FROM GETTYSBURG tell of work on forthcoming speeches. None indicates, even now, that there is in prospect the information package the people ought to have, be it good or bad.

And the press secretary is left to comment on the Gaither report, a study of responsible men of our defense position as against Russia's military capabilities. The White House tried to keep it secret. The Washington Post obtained and printed much of it.

The net of the eventual White House comment, still without releasing the report itself to the public, was, in the words of the press secretary, that we aren't weak now.

That isn't the whole point. The whole point is that Russia has taken a lead in one vital area, is forging ahead in others – and what have we to gain by trying to softpedal [sic] here facts very well known to Moscow?

In one case, the secretary of state spoke for the President.

In the other, the press secretary did.

The result is not good.

THE PRESIDENT WAS GREAT at Paris. He appeared strong and alert. The effect was tonic for the United States and for other powers where Eisenhower's prestige remains high. The post-Paris Eisenhower at home has not sustained the picture.

May the President, in his coming State of the Union and budget messages, clearly reassert his leadership. . . .

c. (B7/f8)

*

Rochester Times-Union

1712

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Saturday, January 11, 1958, Page 8

AS I SEE IT

It Was Ike's 'Best' Speech: Covered All, Ducked Nothing

By PAUL MILLER

The best speech President Eisenhower ever made.

The equal of any State of the Union address ever delivered.

There is one appreciative listener's assessment of the President's effort before Congress on Thursday.

Ike covered everything and ducked nothing. He conceded the area of weakness (ballistic missiles) but proposed a catch-up program. To finance this he acknowledged that something will have to give, and he frankly asked that congressmen with pet local projects try, for just this once, to put the national interest first.

And what a contrast with that dismal appearance when some misguided planning put him in the unimpressive position of listening, just a-listening, to Secretary of State Dulles for some 30 televised minutes on the NATO report!

d. (B7/f8)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, January 25, 1958, Page 10

AS I SEE IT

Another Member Drops Out Of the Dictatorship Club

By PAUL MILLER

Things are getting rough for the Dictators Club of Latin America. But nit rough enough.

We haven't seen the end of dictatorships down there, and won't in our time.

But when pompous little Marcos Perez Jimenez of Venezuela went over the hill this week, fleeing Caracas for Ciudad Trujillo, it marked the seeming collapse of the tightest little dictatorship since Juan Peron was overthrown in Argentina.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Peron, himself, had been enjoying the hospitality of Perez Jimenez in Venezuela, for it's quite a little club. And it was not clear whether he, too, would try to end up at Ciudad Trujillo and the understanding greetings of the dictator there, Generalissimo Trujillo of the Dominican Republic.

What now?

Those who have seen the beauty and booming growth of Venezuela in recent years will hope and pray that:

1. A government strong enough to rule will somehow evolve out of the eruption at Caracas.

2. The physical progress prodded along under the dictatorship will not long be interrupted.

* * *

MRS. MILLER AND I WENT DOWN THERE winter before last and were fascinated, along with every other visitor I know.

Think of it:

For many years the Venezuelan government has been receiving upward of half a billion dollars yearly from the 18 oil companies operating in this northernmost of South American countries. That much money goes a long way, even strained through a dictatorship, in a country of only five to six million population.

When I read this week of rifle fire around Centro Bolivar – the new $300,000,000 civic center in Caracas – I recalled the eye-popping development (see accompanying photo) anew.

At the order of Perez Jimenez, they had ripped out no less than 400 buildings in the heart of Caracas to make way for this Venezuelan Rockefeller Center.

Elsewhere, there were luxuriously appointed new hotels, apartment projects on all sides, new highways in every direction, new schools and college buildings.

* * *

THERE WAS ALSO – and may be again – a dictatorship that reached out oppressively in many directions.

Sure, they rationalized it, those who were living high and, for the time, profiting along with it. Order was maintained they said. The government could be trusted to live up to contracts. The stability was needed and probably only a dictatorship could provide it during this period of bursting growth and development.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

All true, perhaps, but man rebels at oppression and regimentation and censorship and all the assorted evils of unrepresentative rule. In time, the lid blows off. And so it did in Caracas this week, splattering gleaming new buildings with human blood in this mountain capital of perpetual spring.

PHOTO:
The eye-popping Caracas $300,000,000 civic center.

* * * Land of Palaces and Shacks

Venezuela, like so many still underdeveloped countries, is a land of sensational contrasts. We noted and marveled at some of them on a 2,000-mile tour:

Lake Maracaibo in Western Venezuela is alive with drills and pumps, its shores teeming, one of the world's great oil sources. Half an hour's flight west are murderous Indians, as wild perhaps as when Spanish adventurers found the lake in 1499, successfully resisting civilization, waylaying any stranger who tries to come their way.

Hotel Tamanaco, its glass walls and modern terraces rising above its swimming pool up a Caracas mountainside, is as smart and modern as any hotel I know. A two-hour flight away, tumbling off a clouded plateau down mist-cloaked cliffs is Angel Falls. It's a dozen times higher than Niagara, yet it was not even known to civilized man until just a few years ago.

A year ago, Creole Petroleum Corp. said even its unskilled labor averaged $4,400 annually in pay and benefits. Yet mere steps from a neat Creole housing development one might find native families living with the pigs and chickens in windowless shacks – and apparently liking it.

Speaking of contrasting poverty and wealth, the rich are truly as rich as Croesus. One standing joke among Americans there is this:

"A Venezuelan is a Texan with money."

Caracas sprawls in a valley. Buildings are climbing out of its crowded limits up the mountainsides that ring the city. There are single family dwellings as big as resort hotels up there, one of the largest occupied by a reputed former Communist now gone conservative.

An automobile dealer paid 600,000 bolivars for mountain-top acreage to build his new home; that's 160,000 U.S. dollars and for the site alone.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

How long will this go on – even given a relatively stable new government?

Apparently the end is not in sight. Indicated oil reserves seem to assure production equal to the present or even greater for 15 to 20 years. And there'll be a demand for oil, no matter how we develop other fuels and sources of power, the scientists say. Indeed, the best estimates are that world oil requirements will double in the next two decades.

Next time we see Caracas the public reminders of Perez Jimenez will be gone, doubtless. Replaced with what? The figure of yet another dictator?

Or will the little group of leaders who took over be able to work out some agreement on which to base and build a less restricted rule? Millions will hope so.

Millions will hope so, yet only time can tell.

Governments have turned a full circle in Venezuela. While this week marked the seeming end of a dictator, it did not necessarily mark the end of dictatorship.

e. (B4/f31)

Binghamton Press
January 25, 1958

Gannett Group
Head Hopeful
On Space Race

Plainfield, N. J. – (AP) – The president of The Gannett Group of Newspapers is optimistic about the United States' chances in what he calls the "race for space" with Russia.

Paul Miller of Rochester, N. Y., reviewed developments since Soviet Russia launched Sputnik I last Oct. 4 in a talk there last night.

Addressing the annual dinner of the Chamber of Commerce of Plainfield, he said:

"We misjudged its (Sputnik's) propaganda value and we reacted slowly but it wasn't the first time we've seemed slow.

"We have come out of it and gone ahead before. We'll do it in this case – indeed, we are already coming back and fast."

Guest of honor at the dinner was Chauncey F. Stout, who retired Jan. 1 as publisher of the Plainfield Courier-News, one of The Gannett Newspapers.

f. (B4/f31)
*****

Elmira Star-Gazette
1716

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

January 25, 1958

U.S. Beating Space Deficit,
Gannett President Declares

PLAINFIELD, N. J. (AP) –The president of the Gannett Newspaper Group is optimistic about the United States' chances in what he calls the "race for space" with Russia. . . .

g. (B4/f31)

*****

Danville [Ill.] Commercial-News
January 25, 1958

Gannett President Optimistic About Space Race Chances

PLAINFIELD, N. J. (AP) – The president of the Gannett Newspaper Group is optimistic about the United States' chances in what he calls the "race for space" with Russia. . . .

h. (B7/f8)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, February 1, 1958, Page 8

AS I SEE IT

Politics and Partisanship - - We Need More, Not Less

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Zarubin's Un-Moscow-Like Comment

One of the most significant news stories since Sputnik I – that's this week's announcement of the agreement for more cultural, technical, educational and sports exchanges between the United States and Soviet Russia.

At least, as we editorial writers say, it's "a step in the right direction."

At best, it's an agreement that could lead toward a general understanding.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

There is a provision for limited radio broadcasts, to be approved in advance by both sides, limited film exchange on the same two-way veto basis, and a large number of other exchanges of teachers, students, artists, technicians, athletes, journalists, and tourists.

(The Washington Bureau of Gannett News Service was asked to make known promptly in appropriate quarters that the Rochester newspapers would be happy to participate in the exchange program for journalists.).

Only a few days prior to the agreement, the U.S. News and World Report printed a breakdown that showed: In 19 top level U.S.-Soviet conferences, 40 agreements have been reached and the Russians have broken all but three.

Even so, there has to be a start some time and there has to be hope that better results may somehow be obtained. The other way lies chaos sure enough. We can take hope, I believe, from this week's agreement. I particularly liked the un-Moscow-like comment of Soviet Ambassador Georgi N. Zarubin after the signing. He said:

"The agreement is my most important achievement as ambassador to the United States."

No, it can' hurt to hope he means it – and keep working to add agreements for exchanges in further areas still.

i. (B4/f31)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
February 4, 1958

Panel Told Russ Excel Only in Satellite Field

The Soviet Union needed a crash program to develop its satellites but its science is not considered as advanced in other fields, Dr. W. Albert Noyes of the University of Rochester, said last night.

Dr. Noyes, acting dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, was one of three panelists who spoke on "Meeting the Soviet Challenge" before the men's clubs of Temple B'rith Kodesh and Third Presbyterian Church in the church.

Rabbi Philip S. Bernstein of B'rith Kodesh counseled individual exemplification of Judaic-Christian principles and extending the "kindlier virtues" in dealing with the uncommitted nations of the world.

Paul Miller, president of The Gannett Newspapers, Inc., said American foreign policy aims at strengthening other nations to resist communism rather than to win favor or gratitude from their people.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Sees NATO Essential

Miller, who attended the December meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in Paris, asserted that despite NATO's failings "if we didn't have it we'd have to organize it."

How to supply sources of power, to maintain health standards and control explosive populations were termed by Dr. Noyes "more vitally important" to the U.S. than catching up in the satellite race.

"The satellites worry me," he declared, "but not as much as these other problems." Had the United States decided to emphasize satellites to the detriment of other projects, it could have launched the first satellite, he asserted.

But science should be permitted to choose its own direction" in a democracy except for a few emergency crash programs, he told the meeting of almost 200.

By maintaining strength in the military, scientific, industrial and diplomatic areas, the United States will continue to command Soviet respect, Dr. Bernstein told the meeting. The cold war will continue, because that is the aim of communism, but the United States and Russia understand and fear each other too much for a "suicidal" war, he asserted.

Advocates More Aid

"More generous" economic [aid] is one continuing need. "The poverty, ignorance, disease in places where two-thirds of the people of the world live must be our concern." The love Americans extend, he said must "not be parochial."

Moreover, self-exemplification that democracy works is our best method of selling the system. "Anyone who discriminates in Rochester against another because of color or religion is putting an effective weapon into the hands of the Communists," he said.

Miller expressed belief that, as happened before, the U.S. will "catch up" to Soviet missile developments. It's a matter of time," he said, pointing out that in World War II the U.S. lagged in developing aircraft to match Japanese Zeros and other enemy equipment.

On the NATO meeting he said that despite early pessimism, agreement in principle was reached with several allies to locate IRBM (intermediate range missile) bases in their homelands. The U.S., he said, must continue to bear the burden of leadership and money in NATO.

j. (B4/f31)

Rochester Times-Union
February 4, 1958

Soviet Know-How 'Was Surprise'

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

That Russia had the knowledge to launch a satellite is not surprising, according to Dr. W. Albert Noyes of the University of Rochester.

That they had the technicians and skilled workers to handle the routine aspects of the project shattered our complacency, he said.

Dr. Noyes was on a three-member panel that addressed the men's clubs of Third Presbyterian Church and Temple B'rith Kodesh after dinner at the Presbyterian church [sic] last night. Paul Miller, president of The Gannett Co., Inc., and Rabbi Philip S. Bernstein of Temple B'rith Kodesh were the other panelists.

Theme for the panel was "How shall we meet the Soviet challenge?"

* * *

"WE HAVE KNOWN for a great many years Russia had good scientists, very original in certain fields," Dr. Noyes said.

"When we find that the Russians have good planes, satellites and weapons, we should not be surprised.

"Satellites are great engineering achievements, there is no question," he said.

But he pointed out that although he is impressed and somewhat concerned over the Russian satellite and its significance, there are other more important problems remaining to be solved by scientists.

He cited three "vitally important problems."

Power: "If we want western Europe to have the standards of living that we have, we must find another source of power for it."

Health: "By merely prolonging life we may create new problems."

Population control: "A world with standing room might not be a very pleasant place in which to live."

* * *

MILLER, speaking on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, said: "As of last December, we had aircraft to carry the bomb to Russia but no long-range guided missiles. We had to have bases for intermediate 1,500-mile-or-so missiles.

"At the Paris meeting we came out ahead, in my opinion. We came out of the meeting with an agreement in principle on missile sites and we made the start of new negotiations with Russia.

"NATO is not as sound as it should be and not as unsound as some critics would have us believe," Miller said.

"If we didn't have it (NATO) we would be trying to organize it.

* * *

Rabbi Bernstein on "Values," declared:

"As I see it, we will for many years to come be confronted by something which will be neither war nor peace. The danger of universal suicide will, in all likelihood, keep the Soviet leadership from such actions as will bring our thermonuclear power down upon them.

"On the other hand, the inner dynamics of the Communist drive for world domination will move them to make trouble wherever they can in order to promote their ends."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He said "we must avoid the danger of authoritarianism, of intolerance, of repression, of which the phenomenon known as McCarthyism was a glaring example.

"The free mind is indispensable to the preservation of the American way of life. . . .

k. (B7/f8)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, February 8, Page 8

Rockefeller and Mahoney: They Might Beat Harriman

By PAUL MILLER

* * * Khrushchev and His Glass

Soviet boss Khrushchev is no alcoholic. He just looks like one.

So says Bob Considine, the International News Service reporter, recently returned from Moscow where he interviewed the Communist leaders. He had an astonishing three-hour session with Khrushchev himself.

"We saw him five times at receptions and parties," Considine said in a public luncheon talk. "He did not drink enough to stagger a mouse.

"The reason for his reputation as a drunk in this country is that when he is photographed at receptions of some kind, he is usually clutching a glass."

Considine also told us:

The Russian jet transport is "the finest plane I ever flew in; 500-600 m.p.h. and as steady as this room (the Hotel DeWitt Clinton)."

There were delegations Moscow-bound from various Communist countries aboard the flight into Moscow. Service was generous. The Communist groups exchanged toasts. Seated together, Considine and his companions, William Randolph Hearst Jr. and Frank Coniff of the Hearst newspapers, quietly had a toast of their own – to the U.S.A.

"Then," said Considine, tongue in cheek, "Coniff proposed a toast to the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM). In the ensuing confusion, the Communist delegation from Cambodia heartily joined in!"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The three newspapermen wrote 10,000 words about the Khrushchev interview. The Russian censors "didn't change a word."

But later when Considine tried to pay the Soviet leader a compliment, the censor moved in. Considine said:

"I wrote a piece saying the Russian top brass were congenial and comfortable – like a pair of old shoes. The censor made it new shoes."

PHOTO:
. . . "not enough to stagger a mouse"

l. (B4/f31)
*

Rochester Times-Union
April 12, 1958

Sen. Kennedy Due At Israel Salute

Sen. John F. Kennedy (D-Mass) will be the principle speaker at a city-wide luncheon meeting to serve as a "Salute to Israel" on the 10th anniversary of the republic's founding, at the Sheraton Ballroom May 12.

Paul Miller, president of The Gannett Newspapers, as chairman of the non-sectarian Rochester Citizens' Committee, made the arrangements for the presence of Sen. Kennedy. . . .

m. (B4/f31)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
April 13, 1958

Mrs. Roosevelt, Sen. Kennedy Set For Israel Talks

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Sen. John F. Kennedy (D. Mass) will appear here at separate observances of the 10th anniversary of the founding of Israel. . . .

n. (B7/f9)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, April 19, 1958, Page 8

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

AS I SEE IT

The President Takes Charge - - He'll Win Defense Fight

By PAUL MILLER

WASHINGTON – It seemed to many who watched him in action that it was a "new Eisenhower" who addressed the American Society of Newspaper Editors this week.

He looked great, spoke briskly and positively and – this is the new or renewed aspect – he personally came out swinging for his defense reorganization program, rather than deputizing someone else.

* * *

IN THE PAST, the President often has seemed to hold himself above the "Battle of Washington." He made it clear this time that he is himself in charge of this particular effort. He vigorously took on the Congress when he reviewed every criticism he's heard from the lawmakers and grimly tagged them variously as nonsense or worse.

The public reaction to the Eisenhower counterattack has delighted the White House. Ike chose this particular forum, the editors' meeting, in an unconcealed bid for newspaper editorial support to help him build a fire under Capitol Hill opponents of his defense program.

* * *

PROSPECT AS OF NOW: That the President will get a substantial part of the legislation he wants even though Congress almost certainly will not give him the whole package.

Meantime, his best line remains: "Billions for defense not on cent for needless waste." The entire country can applaud that. And will.

o. (B4/f32)

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 28, 1958

PERSONAL

1723

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Dear Mr. Miller:

General Persons has shown me the editorial from the April nineteenth issue of the "Rochester Times-Union." Needless to say, I am encouraged by your prediction. Certainly I shall continue to do everything in my power to "win" this fight for modernization of the Defense establishment.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,
Dwight Eisenhower

Mr. Paul Miller
Vice President and Director
Gannett Newspapers
Times-Union Building
Rochester 4, New York

PERSONAL

p. (B7/f10)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, May 3, 1958, Page 8

AS I SEE IT

Foot-Dragging and Vote Fears - - They Block Congress Action

By PAUL MILLER

PHOTO:
Any Boy Can Benefit

Caption:

Note to parents – those who think there's something somehow harmful about military training:

Take a look at the firm, fine face (above) of Maj. Gen. W. C. Westmoreland, commander of the 101st Airborne Division. He performed the Deed of the Week when he bailed out with an aide to test the wind at Ft. Campbell, Ky. He called off a scheduled air jump – after bravely trying it himself.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

There have been leadership incidents of this nature beyond the counting in our armed forces. In both peace and war, in training and in combat.

Any boy can benefit by contact with the training and leadership such men provide.

q. (B4/f32)

Democrat and Chronicle
May 13, 1958

New Mid East Plan Urged by Kennedy At City Israel Fete

PHOTO
Caption:

LISTENER – Mayor Peter Barry, his eyes visible over lectern, appears a rapt listener as Sen. John F. Kennedy addresses group on Israeli anniversary.

Sen. John F. Kennedy yesterday hailed the 10th anniversary of the State of Israel and urged the United States to take the role of leader in efforts to ease Middle East tensions. . . .

Asks Regional Plan

Calling for a "regional approach" to Middle East woes, Kennedy said "a project-by-project, country-by-country pattern of assistance is particularly ill-adapted to the area.

"Unfortunately," the senator remarked, "all these (plans for the Middle East) . . . have so far lacked the active political leadership which can break the paralysis of purpose. Only external Soviet aggression, which is only one danger, and not the most pressing to the Middle East, has been the subject of high level policy planning. . . .

Israel Army Strong

Rabbi Philip S. Bernstein of Temple B'rith Kodesh, long a leader in Zionist affairs, also addressed the luncheon.

After citing Israel's record of technological, agricultural and industrial progress and its role as a haven for millions of refugees, Rabbi Bernstein spoke of the Israeli army. The young nation, beset by hostile neighbors, he declared, had no alternative but to be strong in order to survive.

"The Israel army," he pointed out, "has made it absolutely clear that Jews may no longer be slaughtered with impunity."

Dismissing the record of the Arab states as to their intentions or strength to resist Communist invasion, the rabbi said that "Israel, at far greater cost than may be generally realized, has committed herself to the West and is for all the world to see a bastion of western democracy in a backward area of the earth."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller, publisher of The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union and chairman of the citizens committee, presided. . . .

r. (B4/f32)

Elmira (NY) Star-Gazette
May 13, 1958

You Couldn't Blame HST

PAUL MILLER, a topnotch Washington newspaper man before he became a publisher of the Rochester Times-Union, recalls an interesting anecdote involving Harry Truman and Henry Wallace.

The anecdote was suggested by Mr. Truman's recollection that he HAD given an interview to Arthur Krock after he had denied so doing – and incidentally apologizing for his lapse of memory.

It is recalled that HST said in 1946 that he had read and approved Henry Wallace's "go soft on Russia" speech. A decade later he could recall only that he knew Wallace was going to speak.

Miller remembers the original statement.

"He said," writes Miller, "that Wallace called on him at the White House and offered to read a speech Wallace was to make at Madison Square Garden. Cornered, Truman busied himself with mail while Henry droned on. Later, HST couldn't recall the speech in detail – although some reporters said he at first indicated he'd okayed it.

"Explaining, after later bawling poor Wallace out for saying some of the things Wallace thought he'd cleared, Truman would ask, with a twinkle: How would you like to try to listen to Henry for a solid hour?!"

Mr. Truman's reaction is understandable. Listening to Henry Wallace for an hour – or even for a much shorter time – is an abrasive experience and one to be avoided if possible.

Truman managed it by reading his mail!

s. (B7/f10)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, May 17, 1958, Page 8

AS I SEE IT

How Did it All Happen?
What Can We Do About it?

By PAUL MILLER

1726

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

If our State Department people didn't know the seriousness of anti-American feeling in Peru and Venezuela, why didn't they?

If they did, why was Vice president Richard M. Nixon sent in there?

And if the department can assure no better information, or planning than was shown in South America, should Dick Nixon be sent to Europe on its say-so as now projected this summer?

* * *

DICK AND PAT NIXON more than ever proved themselves good soldiers in their incredible ordeal this week.

But was it worth it? The life of a possible future president, and one with training for the job unsurpassed in our history, was jeopardized by exposure to a horde of despicable, illiterate riffraff whose so-called government of grass-green amateurs wasn't even able to maintain order on the main streets of Caracas.

For what?

Congress, which loves an investigation like nothing else, surely has its work cut out for it here.

With all the people we have running around Latin America on missions beyond the counting, with the , most generously staffed embassies ever, we still didn't have recourse to enough savvy either to assure adequate precautions or – perhaps better – call the whole thing off.

Now what?

The Nixons, thank the Lord, are home – and most of the troops sent into the Caribbean as a precaution by President Eisenhower are back also.

The red-faced diplomats of Peru and Venezuela still are trying to straddle, apparently, between apologizing for the vileness of their low-brow countrymen and muttering against Ike's dispatch of troops.

Vice President Nixon is more than ever a cinch for the 1960 Republican presidential nomination, the team of Pat and Dick more formidable politically than ever before.

* * *

WHAT CAN THE UNITED STATES do to salve the Latin-American sore spots that, raked by Commies, yielded up the foulest outbreaks ever to erupt around high-ranking Americans in presumably friendly foreign lands?

As usual, it will cost us money.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

There will be renewed talk that we have lavished gifts on Europe and the Middle East, neglecting our Latin American neighbors. There will be proposals for stepping up aid to the south.

There already are renewed proposals also, and this type of aid may be one answer I believe, of subsidies to domestic ore producing industries damaged by foreign competition. The idea is to keep our mines running while also maintaining normal imports from foreign sources. Bolivia's tin and Peru's lead and zinc are sharply depressed.

* * *

YOU WILL HEAR MUCH on both the subject of outright aid and that of domestic subsidies.

I hope we also hear a lot about former President Marcos Perez Jiminez [sic] and his henchman, Pedro Estrada (*) former chief of Venezuelan secret police. I especially hope to hear that they will be called upon formally to explain why they should not be sent packing.

Miguel Angel Capriles, who operates newspapers in Venezuela, said Wednesday in discussing the riots in Caracas:

"People (in Venezuela) were incensed at the ease with which a (U.S.) visa was granted to Estrada. Other applicants go through a trying and lengthy process to get one. But Estrada got his in a hurry . . . And Perez Jiminez [sic], whose plunder of the Venezuelan treasury and public mismanagement was the worst in Venezuela's history!"

Former President Perez Jiminez [sic] is living in luxury these days in Miami and New York. Estrada also is in funds. Who let them in here? Why?

Some rocks hurled with savage hatred at the Cadillacs in Caracas flew from youths who cried that they still would be lying in jail – without charge or counsel – had not the government of Perez Jiminez [sic] been thrown out five months ago. And we gave him sanctuary!

*(*Estrada, accused of indescribable crimes against political opponents under Perez Jiminez [sic], is a dark, pleasant, mild-appearing smoothy with a yen forsakes suits and sweets of all kinds. Friends introduced us to him on a visit to Caracas two years ago. Know where we bumped into this strong-man? Astride a soda fountain stool in a U.S. financed super market, a pretty girl on each side, lapping up a milk chocolate!)*

PHOTO:
'. . . a horde of despicable, illiterate riffraff.'

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 19, 1958, Page 8

AS I SEE IT

We Are Through Taking It - - - Better to Accept Risks

By PAUL MILLER

To nations, as to men, there come times when a choice must be made between knuckling under to aggressive power or standing up to it despite all risks.

The United States took its stand, finally, when marines leaped from landing craft, sloshed out of the Mediterranean and took up positions on the beaches of Beirut.

"I am well aware," said President Dwight D. Eisenhower in his historic Tuesday evening address, "that the landing of United States' troops in Lebanon could have some serious consequences. . . .

"We must, however, be prepared to meet the situation, WHATEVER [caps ours] be the consequence."

* * *

THAT LAST WAS the key sentence in the President's declaration.

The United States has ever fought for peace by peaceful means. It has resorted to arms only under extreme provocation.

We rushed to "bring the boys home" after the end of World War II, then had to build up all over again for Korea.

We have never been able to understand national duplicity and deceit, as practiced by Communist nations in respect to Korea and Hungary and all the rest. We have lived up to our agreements, been freshly astonished each time by the lying and cheating of others.

We have been slow to size up or react to a threatening situation, lackadaisical toward warnings.

Big and well off and ourselves amiable and well-intentioned, we have never quite got out of the national habit of crediting most others with like general attributes, or generously trying to share them.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Lately, we have begun to see advocated, and often with too much tolerance, the point of view that anything is better than chancing war. As Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, first lady of Free China, put it in a speech at Ann Arbor, Mich.:

"To some, freedom and the values of human dignity, which we were taught to cherish above all else, have begun to be secondary to biological survival."

* * *

THE PRESIDENT'S SIGNAL for the landings in Lebanon was the signal also that we are through taking it today, as at historic turning points in America's past.

We are standing up for everything that we believe orderly and decent and honorable. We are, once more and however sadly and reluctantly, accepting the risks in the doing.

Idealistic? Yes. But practical too.

Better to take the risks, even at threat to survival, than accept indefinite enmeshment, again as Mme. Chiang put it, "in arguments over means such as relaxation of tension, appeasement and finally slavery – better – than – annihilation, groveling in the hopeless hope that life would be spared. . . ."

PHOTO:
'. . . Whatever the consequence.'

. . . Anthony Eden Was Annoyed

Flashback: Britain's Sir Anthony Eden, a sick man now and out of it, must be finding it difficult these days not to heckle former colleagues with "I told you so . . . ." He believed Gamel Abdul Nasser of Egypt had to be stopped two years ago.

This writer went to see Mr. Eden at No. 10 Downing Street – he was prime minister then – on Sept. 20, 1956.

It was shortly after Nasser's seizure of the Suez Canal and I was going on from London to Cairo. Mr. Eden was annoyed that a friend, even an American newspaperman would recognize "Old Nasser" and Egypt by a reporting trip to Cairo at that time!

He had been through all this before with dictators. We could have stopped Hitler. We could have stopped Mussolini. Now another little dictator was coming along. Once well advanced, there would be no early ending . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Most Americans, this writer among them, believed Sir Anthony wrong in the effort to smash Egypt's Nasser by military might. The ill-conceived effort collapsed under United States' opposition.

I hold the same view still. But few would deny that events seem to have bolstered some of the arguments on which Sir Anthony carried on, and finally fell, beaten and broken.

. . . A Long Road Lies Ahead

Our Washington bureau chief, Paul L. Martin, wrote after the Marine landings that U.S. action had gone far to restore unity among the Western powers. It also was a basis for extraordinary unity of view among opposition politicians in the United States. Both Harry S. Truman, back home in Missouri after a trip to Europe, and Adlai Stevenson, visiting Russia, supported the President's move.

At Washington, many questioned the policy or lack thereof that brought us to another brink and led to sending troops. Few found fault with the action taken under the circumstances. A United States Senate committee now moves to review the entire foreign policy of the United States.

What we are doing militarily now is, at best, an interim move. Even if we prevent further disruption in the Middle East area we are undertaking to pacify, a long road lies head.

u. (B7/f11)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 26, 1958, Page 10

AS I SEE IT

Mahoney, Williams in Running - - - The First GOP Sparks Fly

By PAUL MILLER

The campaign for the Republican nomination for governor picked up speed this week. . . .

. . . An Opportunity, Not a Headache

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Washington is fluttery and apprehensive at the prospect of the visit of Nikita Khrushchev, talking of how to keep the whole unwanted spectacle under wraps, what to say, where to put him and who else to invite.

Our experts speak darkly of the necessity of preventing the Russian from turning his visit into a propaganda spectacle, whatever that is.

Why not be speaking, instead, of turning it into a propaganda spectacle for our side, if a contest is indicated?

The Security Council chamber is limited in size.

So what?

Given full press, newsreel, radio, and television coverage – and there is room for that – the world could be there by proxy.

But the tentative word is that only the first session, one consisting of formalities, will be open even to the press.

"Diplomats," says a news service dispatch, feel that private talks minimize the opportunity for propaganda, they can be limited to the few key leaders whose agreement is essential, and they are much more speedy than formal council discussions."

* * *

WELL, THAT'S WHAT we've been having all these dreary years. That's what we had at the first and only other Summit Conference at Geneva two years ago. That's what we had at the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance meetings at Paris last December.

In formal, closed discussions the participants agree on a general spokesman. Each country usually has its own. The latter meet reporters after the closed sessions and give their account of what has taken place. This results in a reasonably accurate report, though with frequent exceptions.

But what an opportunity the United States could be throwing away if traditional diplomatic procedures are followed on Khrushchev!

*** * ***

WHY NOT A COMPLETE turnabout now? Why not offer him and his delegation red carpet treatment, a tour of the country or as much as he has time for?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Why not make him as available to press and public as he'll permit? How about a spot for him on "Meet the Press" or "Face the Nation" or, for that matter, "Twenty One?"

Why not, in advance, lock up the known New York City firebrands likely to toss a grenade or fore a pistol when Khrushchev's limousine rolls down West Side Drive? Why not exact from leaders of groups, however wronged, pledges of no placards, no demonstrations, in short good manners, while the guest is in the city. (If he should accept invitations outside New York, the same advance preparation at every stop).

* * *

AS FOR THE MEETING ITSELF, if the Security Council chamber is too small, hire a bigger hall, the biggest one to be found, and give the old boy access to all the stage and all the media his heart (for he must have one somewhere) truly desires.

After all, the same chambers and facilities would be available to President Eisenhower and to Ambassador Lodge and to Secretary Dulles.

Khrushchev's visit should be welcomed as an opportunity, not a headache.

Would it were so!

. . . Top Reporting In Series on Russia

The Times-Union will publish next week what I regard as the best reporting job yet by an American visitor to Russia.

It is a series written for the Scripps-Howard newspapers by Walker Stone, Scripps-Howard editor-in-chief.

Stone returned home from Russia only last week. He came home convinced, as he writes:

"Unless we Americans voluntarily go to work, unless we sacrifice some creature comforts and luxuries, unless we return to fundamental values and build a stronger America and more purposeful society, we could very well end up working for them (the Russians)."

Stone's series, starting Monday in The Times-Union, is particularly timely just now as U.S. national policy is tested anew in sharp turns of the Cold War in the Near East and the United Nations.

QUOTE OF THE WEEK:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The Russians are doing a wonderful job as the barbarians in our modern historical drama. But we are far outdoing them in our superlative imitation of Rome. We may lack a few of the refinements or Rome's final decadence, but we do have the two-hour lunch, the three-day weekend and the all-day coffee break. And if you want to, you can buy for $275 a jeweled pill box, with a built in musical alarm that reminds you (but not too harshly) that it's time to take your tranquilizer!" – Charles H. Brower, president, Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborne, Inc.

v. (B4/f33)

SCRIPPS-HOWARD NEWSPAPERS

WALKER STONE
EDITOR IN CHIEF
1013 THIRTEENTH ST. NW.
WASHINGTON 5, D. C.

August 1, 1958

Dear Paul:

It is highly gratifying to see my Russia articles in your paper, and so well promoted and displayed. I naturally expect, and get, good treatment in our papers, even when individual editors might not think the copy worth the space.

But when you and Lee Hills pay me the compliment of using my stuff in your papers, it makes me feel real good. Almost encourages me to get off my own fat [?] and go back to writing back to writing.

I am enclosing a "letter to the editor" in The Rocky Mountain News, written by a guy who has got my number, so far as continuing to live easy is concerned. I doubt that I would try to qualify for running a Commie paper. I'd more likely try running at least as far as the Isle of Pines. I saw a few editors in the USSR, and I know a quality of alertness to danger and sensitivity to direction is required which, at my years, would be hard to learn.

But that I don't intend to eat borscht and bread, unless I have to, he's entirely right. I don't like the stuff. But I have known less, so I know sirloin is not necessary.

Did I ever tell you about the time I lived on burnt beans a week? It was in 1927. Simm and I had just come to Washington. We shared an apartment with Lawton Burton and Beard Wilson, a couple of Okies also enrolled in GW. None of us had a job. One day we counted up our assets. The total was $5.25. We figured the two things we needed to sustain us in the Nation's Capital were home brew, rich in vitamins, and some navy beans, rich in protein. Five dollars was enough to buy a crock and malt and hops and bottles and a capper, to put us in the home brewing operation. Twenty five cents was enough to buy a big sack of navy beans which we could cook up in a big pot.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Beard Wilson took the five bucks and went out to get the brewing equipment and ingredients. Beard was an art student. On his way to the store which sold the brewing stuff we needed, Beard passed an antique shop which had an oil painting in the window. He liked it, and went in to talk about it, and found he could buy it for five dollars, which he did, and brought it back to the apartment.

I took the two bits and went across the street to the grocery, bought a big sack of navy beans, came back and put them on the stove in a big pot filled with water. I took a nap. So did the others, or left the apartment. Anyhow the water boiled away, and the beans burned.

Have you ever eaten scorched beans? Have you ever eaten them where there wasn't anything else to eat? That's what the four of us did for a week. Our only supplement was milk, which we would steal at dawn off the doorsteps in the 1900 block of I Street, including the stoop of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, who was at least in his 70s then and didn't need the milk as much as we did. But for a week we lived on those burnt beans and that milk and the aesthetic lift of Beard's $5 painting. In time some of us found work, and could buy some meat to put in our soup. The point I wish to make is that in those days we had a power of survival, which maybe we don't have now. It was not even an unpleasant experience. Mr. Coolidge was not running any relief stations, and if he had been I don't think we would have applied. It was easier to live on burned beans and milk we could steal.

I started this letter just to thank you for running my articles, and didn't intend to get wound up in this recitation of my life and hard times. But I have enjoyed the re-telling, and I think I'll send a copy of the letter to Lee, believing he might also get a kick out of my story about privation without tribulation.

Cordially,

Red

Walker Stone

Mr. Paul Miller
The Gannett Newspapers
Rochester 14, N.Y.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Rocky Mountain News
[n.d.]

Letters From the People

Set Example

Editor: Walker Stone, Scripps-Howard editor-in-chief, would be more convincing if he would set a good example, say by living in a one-room apartment . . . start to live on bread and potato soup, borscht with cabbage, and never order another steak dinner again.

But Stone will never do that – though he would expect America to do just that. And he will continue to live "soft" – for he has a soft job that pays well . . . but like so many others, preach – with no intention to practice what he preaches.

He would expect millions of Americans to do what the Russians are doing – live more humble and work harder and to forget easy living. But will Stone set an example? It would be more convincing. But he will just continue to live as he is accustomed to live, and so will millions of Americans . . . until it could be that a time will come when we will be forced to live different should the Reds get high in the saddle.

Then I am certain that Walker Stone, if living, will do his damndest [sic] to convince those in power that he would make a good editor-in-chief of any Red paper that might be established in the event that the Russians take over – as they could when too many preach and never practice what they are preachings [sic].

GEORGE GIBBONS HAYES
4452 Raleigh st.

x. (B7/f11)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, August 16, 1958, Page 10

AS I SEE IT

No Need for Wild Spending
- - - Eisenhower proves It

By PAUL MILLER

More and more now, the recession of 1958 is being referred to as past or passing. Many will disagree, but I believe history will note with satisfaction the Eisenhower administration's refusal to be stampeded into huge anti-depression spending schemes. . . .

y. (B4/f33)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

Newport, Rhode Island.
September 5, 1958.

PERSONAL

Dear Mr. Miller:

Just recently I was shown your editorial of August sixteenth regarding my efforts to curb unnecessary and ill-advised anti-recession plans proposed by the Congress. It seems to me that in almost every public statement I have made these last years I have pointed out the dangers of excessive federal spending and that my words have seemingly fallen on deaf ears.

The vetoes that I found necessary will, of course, be the subject of debate during the political campaign. However, I have great faith in the common sense of the American citizen – and I am firmly convinced that all of us must take another long, and responsible look at government spending and at the entire economic picture, including, of course, the wage-price spiral.

With my thanks for your fine piece, and best wishes,

Sincerely,

Dwight Eisenhower

Mr. Paul Miller,
The Gannett Newspapers,
Gannett Newspapers Building,
Rochester, New York.

PERSONAL

z. (B7/f12)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, September 27, 1958, Page 10

A Mission of Goodwill: From Rochester to Rennes

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Au revoir, friends!

Unfortunately, that's pretty much all the French I know. . . .

12. 1959

13. 1960

    a. Trip to Havana, Cuba (February 27-29)

14. 1961

15. 1962

    a. Invited to White House lunch by President John Fitzgerald Kennedy along with other leading newspaper executives (January 23)

    b. Trip to Russia with other United States editors (June 25-July 25). Miller visited the Soviet Union with a dozen other American newspapermen. The 23-day tour was climaxed by an interview with Nikita Khrushchev and a trip to Berlin with one of his closest friends, Walker Stone, editor-in-chief of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers."

    c. Published Russia: 1962 (October)

16. 1963

    a. Luncheon guest of President Lyndon B. Johnson at the White House (December 11)

17. 1964

    a. Miller helped lead local opposition in Rochester [NY] to militant organizer Saul D. Alinsky's work following the Rochester riots of 1964.

    b. Yet Miller also visited the inner city to talk with black leaders of the new FIGHT organization founded with Alinsky's help.

    c. And Miller conceived the idea of a far-ranging series of reports on the positive aspects of racial integration in many communities that won a 1964 Pulitzer Special Citation for Gannett—the first Pulitzer award ever bestowed on a newspaper group or chain.

    d. Attended Inter-American Press Association Convention, Mexico City (October)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

e. Attended the inauguration of President Gustav Diaz Ordaz, Mexico City (December 9)

18. 1965

a. Attended the inauguration and Inaugural Ball of President Lyndon B. Johnson (January 20)

b. Attended the funeral of the Right Honourable Sir Winston Churchill at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, London (January 30)

c. Kent Cooper died. Paul Miller, in London for the funeral of Sir Winston Churchill, returned to New York.

19. 1966

a. Inter-American Press Association Convention, Lima, Peru, San Salvador (October 19-26)

20. 1967

a. Visited with President Lyndon B. Johnson at the White House (January 22)

21. 1968

a. Pan American Inaugural Flight – New York to Moscow passenger service (July 15)

22. 1969

a. Attended Sunday worship services at the White House, at President Nixon's invitation (April 1)

b. Luncheon for Former President Lyndon B. Johnson and Mrs. Johnson, at Cape Kennedy Hilton (July 15)

c. Attended White House dinner with other Associated Press executives (October 12)

23. 1970

a. Member, President's Commission for the Observance of the 25th Anniversary of the United Nations (March)

24. 1971

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

a. (B1/F11)
PHOTO:
In Editorially Speaking (Volume 29, 1971).
Paul Miller (left), on Far Eastern tour before Gannett Group was joined by the six newspapers of Honolulu Star-Bulletin, Inc., is welcomed to Seoul by Bong-Kyun Kim, superintendent general and chief of foreign affairs division, Korean National Police, and Lee, Eun-woo (right), vice president, Donghwa News Agency.

25. 1972

a. In July and August of 1972, Miller and another close friend, Wes Gallagher, president of the Associated Press, visited the Chinese mainland for three weeks with their wives. After both visits to the Communists countries [1962 visit to the Soviet Union], Miller wrote and spoke extensively about what he saw and heard.

b. Miller also took a group of AP executives to China and negotiated an agreement for regular news exchange between AP and the Chinese news agency. For the first time in twenty-two years, an American news agency had a regular news channel with China. Stories penned by Miller during and after his China trip, later became the booklet, China Opens the Door (1972).

26. 1973

a. In January, Miller traveled to Paris with Secretary of State [William Pierce] Rogers for the signing of the Indochina peace treaty.

27. 1974

28. 1975

a. Miller travels widely, usually on Gannett business, but also to a lesser extent for the A.P. His travel by air in 1973 was 125,963 miles, including a Pacific swing toward the end of the year, and in 1974, it totaled 80,816 miles. This year, his second China visit, capped a 28,000 mile Pacific arc tour.

29. 1976

a. In May/June of 1976, he traveled to Taiwan (Republic of China), Hong Kong and Japan, a distance of 22,500 miles.

30. 1977

a. U.S. News and World Report named him one of the five most influential newspaper executives in the United States.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller and the American Presidents, 1943-1979
(Box # 1, 4, 5, 11, 18, 19, 22, 24, 28, 29)

Paul Miller knew all of the American presidents from FDR to Jimmy Carter, often serving as a valued advisor on policy matters, particularly those pertaining to the press. He was especially familiar with Lyndon B. Johnson and Richard M. Nixon. At least ten (10) boxes in the collection offer a wealth of documentary evidence for this subject.

1. 1943 (B3/f34)

February 1943

FORWARD

Or is a Foreward [sic] required in a diary . . . .

I was talking with Colonel Fitzgerald the other day about mutual efforts to improve transmission of news from the North African war zone . . . .

I met the President in the way of all so-so newcomers: Kirke Simpson and I moved up to his desk after a press conference, picked up the convoy of Steve Early and pushed up to Mr. Roosevelt's chair for a handshake and a glad-to-see-you. Mr. Roosevelt was laughing. He said he'd taken [Secretary of the Treasury] Henry Morgenthau for $45 at poker up home over the weekend; that they were playing at Henry's house so that Henry couldn't make the excuse of having to go home. I marveled at the President's apparent good humor and good appearance amid the trials and red-hot criticism of the time.

Outside we saw Mr. Morgenthau awaiting an appointment. He looked as gloomy as the President jokingly wanted to make it appear that Henry should look, being out $45 . . . .

I'd always hated [Secretary of the Interior] Harold Ickes. His ignorant criticism of The Press galled me. He was one of the most horrible of the New Deal's smearers and I never shall forget the utter miserable taste of some of his campaign utterances against men I rated vastly his betters . . . .

General Marshall [5 stars, Army Chief of Staff during WW II, later Secretary of State & Secretary of Defense] I soon came to rate the most astute handler of personal public relations in all Washington. It was not long after Pearl Harbor, certainly months before I came here in June of 1942, that a dozen or so top Washington correspondents and commentators, along with representatives of The AP, UP and INS, received invitations to meet the General in his office . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Later, but not much later, Admiral King [5 stars, Fleet Admiral, Chief of Naval Operations during WW II], hated by many as a martinet and regarded by most as a man whose happiness increased in direct ratio to the distance between himself and the nearest newspaperman, sought through the offices of a close friend, Seeley Bull, to do as well for the much-criticized Navy . . . .

The greatest satisfaction to me in my first months at Washington was the realization that the Staff and I were getting along and that all of us were plugging away at telling the Story of Washington with an enthusiasm and a fidelity that were getting some grand results . . . .

I was surprised to find myself liking Henry Wallace [Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of Commerce, Vice President of the United States] – as a friendly conversationalist, that is to say . . . .

2. 1944

a. (B3/f36)

Washington
August 18, 1944

CONFIDENTIAL

KC
AJG

I am no doctor, but I think President Roosevelt is in very serious condition.

I attended a White House press conference this morning for the first time in months. It was the first time I had seen him since, I believe, May.

Regardless of his doctor's repeated statements, his face is thin and drawn. His eyes look bad. He appears to have more trouble with his enunciation due to his teeth. Even his voice is weak – the reporters had to keep urging him to speak louder.

In short, he looks sick and he looks tired and he lacks fire. He almost looked pitiful.

I came back and checked our biographical matter. We are getting to work at once filling in on the Hawaii trip. We will have a reporter go to Hyde Park when Roosevelt does at all times, regardless.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

b. (B3/f36)

(November-December 1944)

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

KC
AJG

Harry Oliver returned [handwritten: "from Warm Springs (after 3 weeks)] with FDR today and submitted the following confidential memorandum. Henry said he never had seen FDR so "testy" as he has been of late . . . .

"FDR screwed the censor's lid on pretty tight on this trip to Warm Springs. Not that it would have added much to the story, but just in event some of the items leak out in columns, here are five instances about which he prohibited any publication:

"1. Made informal speech to Foundation patients on night of arrival, November 28, [1944], with perhaps 300 persons present. We have always printed this speech in the past. But this time he made what apparently were later regarded as slips. He stuck his neck out on the Pearl Harbor controversy (before the Stimson-Forrestal reports [March 1945] came out) by saying that little did he think, as most people did at the time, that Japan would attack during those six days following his summons back to Washington in December 1941, yet Japan did attack and we have been at war ever since. (Of course this was not very important, but he did imply that some people did think Japan might attack. He probably would not have framed it just that way had he prepared his remarks.)

"2. At the same turkey [Thanksgiving] dinner, Bette Davis was a surprise, and some say, uninvited guest who was plunked down on the President's left at the head table. Bette has a sweety, a Corp[oral Lewis A.] Riley, in the Army at Fort Benning, 40 miles from Warm Springs. The Administrator of the [Georgia Warm Springs] Foundation, without consulting the President, invited Bette over to perform before the patients. The next thing FDR knew she was sitting next to him at dinner, and very much resented by the whole White House staff, according to Hassett. She didn't act.

"3. The President had a tooth pulled during the trip, apparently by a dentist he had never seen before, most likely a villager. [Secretary to President Roosevelt, William D.] Hassett tried to get this story for us (for a box feature), but FDR said a flat "no." He took the position that this was a vacation trip pure and simple and having a tooth pulled is a personal matter just like going to the can.

"4. Bob [St. Louis, MO politician, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Democratic National Committee Chairman, Postmaster General, Robert

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Emmet]Hannegan paid a visit to the Springs after being told, says Hassett, that he better wait till the President returned to Washington. But thick-skinned Bob came down anyway en route to Florida – and brought four Missouri politicians with him! The four were made to cool their heels in the administration building more than a mile from FDR's cottage, while Hannegan was received. Hassett said to make matters worse Hannegan stayed an hour and 20 minutes longer than the time allotted. In Hassett's words the President had no callers "on the record."

"5. FDR drove his little Ford car, with hand controls, over to Hamilton, Ga., for a visit at the 3,000 acre Blue Spring Farm of wealthy textile mill owner, Carson J. Callaway. Had a long personal chat which FDR regarded as unworthy of note. Calloway is author of a novel 100 7-man corporation plan [Georgia Better Farm program] to restore run-down Georgia farm land. We were forbidden to say even that the President went to his farm.

"(FDR didn't receive us once during the trip.)"

3. 1945

a. (B3/f39)

April 15, 1945
PHOTO:
(Handwritten at bottom):
"F.D.R. funeral
Hyde Park
4/15 – 45"

b. (B3/f37)

August 9, 1945

CONFIDENTIAL

Mr. Kent Cooper
Executive Director
New York City

Dear Mr. Cooper:

Tony Vaccaro tells a number of stories about his experiences at Potsdam, the best being these:

1.Roy Porter of NBC got out a Potsdam broadcast, picked up by us and front-paged everywhere, saying some of the most important people at the Potsdam conference had departed suddenly for an unannounced destination. There was all sorts of speculation here in the press and radio, most of the speculators thinking it meant our military people had gone to Moscow to confer with the Russians on the strategy with the Japs.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The truth is it was just some of the Secret Service agents flying to Switzerland to buy watches that they could bring back and sell at $600 a throw in Berlin! Some of them brought back thousands of dollars made on such transactions.

2.You may recall that Drew Pearson and others reported that the reason Stalin was absent from the conference for two days was that the Russians had such a big party celebrating Atlee's win over Churchill that Stalin knocked himself out on Vodka. Stalin really was ill. He's in poor health. As for his feelings about Churchill:

The truth, Truman told Tony, is that the Russians – from Stalin on down – were "just sick" when they heard Churchill had been licked. Truman said that for all their wide variances of views on many things, Stalin and Churchill had developed a personal relationship that was very close and that Stalin was a very disappointed man when Churchill went down. That's the sentimental side. There is a practical side, too:
The Russians want to be the Socialist-Labor movement in Europe; they don't want the British stealing any of their particular show in the ideological lining up of European nationals now taking place.

Sincerely yours,

c. (B3/f37)

August 22, 1945

CONFIDENTIAL

Mr. Kent Cooper
Executive Director
New York City

Dear Mr. Cooper:

I saw President Truman for about twenty minutes today. He was very cordial and talked about a lot of things before he got around to asking me the subject of my visit. I told him I had two things I wanted to discuss: (1) The matter of the statement in the World's Press News of London that American officials discriminated in favor of American newspapermen here; the other, the matter of a world free press – a subject with which I knew he was familiar, starting with his conversation with you at Chicago during the Democratic National Convention.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

As to the first, Mr. Truman immediately said all newspapermen have equal access to news, so far as he is concerned, in Washington. He commented that any number of foreign newspapermen show up at all of his regular news conferences. I asked him if I could quote him and he agreed. I then suggested that he hoped American newspapermen would reciprocally receive the same privileges elsewhere throughout the world. He agreed to that quotation also, and we so reported in a little story today.

In discussing the second, and important point of my visit, I asked him if he felt confident the Russians would make good on permitting American newspapermen freely to report in the Balkans and other Russian-occupied areas. He said, although not too positively, he did believe they would make good. I then said "Why don't you do something that I believe would push the whole thing along?"

1.Declare that all vanquished nations must give their people a free press as we know it in the U. S. A.

2.Declare that any nation which requires help in reestablishing its importance, as a condition, guarantee a free press as we know it.

3.Leave to the Press the missionary work involved in other countries.

He said he just couldn't. He said that Mr. Roosevelt's policy had been that to which he now adheres; namely, that we shall not interfere in the domestic affairs of any of these countries – we will stay with them and help then get on their feet and get a government we can recognize. Then, regardless of what government, provided it represents popular will, they may establish, we will keep hands off.

Moreover, he admitted that he felt if he raises such an issue now it would immediately bring difficulties. It was obvious that he meant Russian difficulties. He insists, though, that he got on all right with Stalin at Potsdam and he insists also that

He has emphasized and reemphasized to the Russians that our agreements with them constitute, as he puts it, "a two-way street."

Mr. Truman said further on this subject: "Molotov sat right here where you are sitting when he came complaining about the United nations Conference at San Francisco. Molotov asked me if we were going to live up to the agreements made there. I said to Molotov: 'Are you going to live up to the agreements you made at Yalta? This agreeing business is no one-way street.'"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Because our policy is what it is does not mean that there is no hope for what you want to do. Others here are working, and they will have Truman's benediction along two lines:

1.International agreements clarifying communications problems.

2.International agreements, perhaps tied in with the communications matter, in the field of freedom of information.

Then, too, it still is not beyond the realm of possibility that communications and information may be covered one way or another in the peace treaties. The Council of Foreign Ministers meets at London next month; it will deal, among other things, with plans for the peace treaties.

My next step will be to see the Secretary of State, when there is favorable time, and discuss with him what may be done in fields of communications and information on which the State Department actually has worked. Byrnes is getting ready to go to London now.

Sincerely yours,

4. 1946

5. 1947

a. (B3/f39)

ASSOCIATED PRESS PHOTO FROM WASHINGTON

CAUTION: USE CREDIT

WHITE HOUSE VISITORS

President Truman poses on the White House steps today (June 26) with a group of press, radio, and movie representatives who discussed with him freedom of expression and communications. In the group are: Front row (L to R) Justin Miller, National Association of Broadcasters; President Truman, and Melton Minton, American Book Publishers Council. Second row (L to R) Donald F. Nelson, Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers; J, Hale Steinman, American Newspaper Publishers Association; William Chenery, National Publishers association; David Howe, American Newspaper Publishers Association; Harry F. West, American Book Publishers Association. Back row (L to R) Paul Miller, Assistant General Manager of the Associated Press; A.D. Willard, Jr., National Association of Broadcasters, and Kenneth Clark, Motion Pictures Association of America.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

ASSOCIATED PRESS PHOTO
WX-[B?]M NEG TO NY
[y?]6/26/47STF-WJS5:46 PED

b. (B3/f53)

Gannetteer
November 1947

Paul Miller:
Hartford's Guest

He came, he saw, he didn't conquer – the golf prize went to a traveling companion by the name of Blanchard.

That was Paul Miller's boxscore on his first get-acquainted visit to Hartford Sept. 24. But even if L. R. Blanchard, Group's general executive editor, won three golf balls in the kicker's tournament, FEG's new executive aide won the hearts of Times men and women.

The party for Miller was arranged by Publisher Francis S. Murphy, who explained to folks in The Times editorial room, as well as key personnel from all departments, present at the dinner, that Gannett had been called [away to] the West Coast and couldn't make the party.

"Miller Day" began with afternoon golf, whereupon some scores were immediately impounded and held top secret. Times Golf Editor Skip Henderson was handed the task of presenting prizes to the winners, with Murphy pulling the lucky scores out of the hat.

Blanchard spoke briefly at the dinner, remarking that The Times was an outstanding proof of FEG's principle that Group papers shall serve the best interests of their own communities.

Introduced by Blanchard, Miller gave an interesting behind-the-scenes picture of Washington and some of the big-wigs in the government, from President Truman down.

6. 1948

a. (B3/f53)

The Bipartisan Human Policy

A talk prepared for delivery by Paul Miller, The Gannett Newspapers, before the Kiwanis Club of Malone, N.Y., Tuesday, June 29, 1948.

. . . I have just returned from Philadelphia and the Republican national convention. I was there merely as a spectator. Now, any national political convention is a great experience and this was no exception. But what stands out to me, looking at it as a good Kiwanian might, was the reiteration there of the aim expressed in Kiwanis Objective Number One" –

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"To give primacy to the human and spiritual rather than to the material values of life."

Kiwanians surely must have noted that Governor Dewey, in his speech of acceptance, hit his high point when he said:

"We have found the means to blow the world, physically, apart. Spiritually, we have yet to find the means to put together the world's broken pieces . . The period that is drawing to a close has been one of scientific achievement. The era that is opening before us must b a period of human and spiritual achievement."

b. (B3/f53)

(Untitled/undated newspaper clipping):

Chatterbox Club Lists
Talk by Paul Miller

Sparking their Tuesday luncheon meeting with an interesting pre-election talk, members of the Chatterbox Club will hear Paul Miller of the Gannett Newspapers speak on "Personalities in the 1948 Presidential Campaign." Guest including husbands of members will attend Mr. Miller's talk which is scheduled for noon and will be followed by a buffet luncheon.

c. (B3/f53)

THE CHATTERBOX CLUB
25 NORTH GOODMAN STREET
ROCHESTER 7, NEW YORK

(Handwritten note):

Oct. 7, 1948

Dear Mr. Miller,

On behalf of the Chatterbox board and all of its members I want to thank you for being so generous as to come and speak to us on Tuesday.

In this election year each of us is vitally interested in the issues at stake and the opinions of the various candidates on these issues.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

We know that it is no mean task for a lone man to speak before a group of women and we only hope that you felt as at ease with us as we did with you.

We hope that at some future date you will be willing to be with us again to enlarge on some of the points brought up in the question period.

Thank you again for a most enjoyable and enlightening time.

Sincerely yours,
Betsey R. Morse
Corresponding Secretary pro tem

7. 1949

a. (B3/f56)

*****

The Rochester Times-Union
Friday, April 22, 1949

Editors Weigh Cause of Errors in 1948 Election Forecast

Washington – (AP) – The American Society of Newspaper Editors today sought to learn from its members "why the press was wrong" in 1948 election forecasts.

Philip H. Parrish of the Morning Oregonian, Portland, and Paul Miller, editor of The Rochester Times-Union, presented answers to the forum meeting of 350 editors at the annual convention.

"The papers almost universally vouched for the polls as scientific," said Parrish, "and so identified with themselves with the polls. We have permitted a feature to pose in the robes of a doctor of science."

Said Miller: "There's nothing wrong as between newspapers and the people that good reporting won't fix."

Other discussion leaders on the election question were N. R. Howard, Cleveland News; Thomas Hanes, Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch, and Richard J. Finnegan, Chicago Sun-Times.

And Harry S. Truman, the man who guessed right, prepared to receive the editors in an off-the-record news conference in the White House Rose Garden. The President's office is too small for the expected crowd.

In the statement he prepared for the meeting, Miller also said:

"Many a newspaper must have had at least one reporter who knew which way the wind was blowing last Fall. Few newspapers made the most of such reporters."

Miller suggested that it is time to drop "ninety other sideshows if necessary" to concentrate on good reporting. That he said is "the one absolutely basic essential to winning public acceptance and holding it."

Many an editorial is narrow and ill-founded because it is based on a poor reporting job," he proceeded. "Newspapers must sell the idea that they aim to be a compendium of responsible views locally –not merely, as so many readers so firmly believe, a vehicle solely for the newspapers' own views." . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

b. (B3/f56)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Saturday, April 23, 1949

Editors Deplore Blunders
In Soul-Searching on Polls

Washington – (UP) – The American Society of Newspaper Editors was told yesterday the U.S. press has taken its most severe criticism in history for wrong guesses on last Fall's Presidential election and has itself to blame.

The post-election criticism and the reason for it were analyzed in a panel discussion on "The Press and the People" at the second session of the ASNE's annual convention . . . .

The soul-searching discussion was aimed at finding out if the daily press is doing a good job of keeping the public informed. Other features on the day's program included off-the-record talks by President Truman, Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson and Defense Secretary Louis Johnson . . . .

PHOTO:
LEAD EDITORS' DISCUSSION

Caption:
Five editors who led a discussion on "The Press and the People" at yesterday's sessions of the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington were, from left, Philip H. Parrish, Portland Oregonian; N. R. Howard, Cleveland News; Richard Finnegan, Chicago Sun-Times; Paul Miller, The Gannett Newspapers, and Tom Hanes, Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch.

8. 1950

a. (B3/f62)

Rochester Times-Union
Tuesday, April 25, 1950

T-U Editor
Elected
AP Director

New York – (AP) – Robert McLean of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, president of the Associated Press, and Norman Chandler of the Los Angeles Times were reelected yesterday as directors of the AP.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

McLean received 7,982 votes and Chandler, 6,673.

The members also chose four new directors.

The new directors and the votes they received were:

Paul Miller, editor and publisher, Rochester (N.Y.) Times-Union, 5,354; Robert B. Choate, Boston Herald, 5,205; James M. North Jr., Fort Worth (Tex.) Star-Telegram, 4,742; and Harry F. Byrd Jr., Winchester (Va.) Star, 4,747.

At the annual luncheon yesterday, 1,400 publishers and editors heard Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower call on the nation's newspapers to keep their news columns free and unbiased.

DEFEND FREEDOM

Eisenhower, president of Columbia University, urged the newspapers to defend "the political and economic freedom of each one of us."

"Only an informed public opinion can win the peace," Eisenhower declared.

The nation looked for peace when the last war ended, he said, but the "shattering of that dream of actual and permanent peace has brought about a confusion that is almost a bewilderment."

This confusion spread, Eisenhower added, because some of the nation's leaders are "shooting from the hip" in eagerness to give answers when facts and interpretations are needed.

Eisenhower paid tribute to the American press for its reporting of World War 2.

He said the upholding the freedom of the press is vital, but that also "we must stand for individual freedom and for those things that are going to preserve the political and economic freedom of each one of us." . . . .

PHOTO:
"MILLER"

b. (B3/f62)

Rochester Times-Union
July 7, 1950

Editor Finds Argentines
Know City's Products

By JACK TUCKER

Rochester is 6,400 air miles from Buenos Aires, but Argentines are virtually as familiar with this city's high-type industrial products as a dealer down in Paducah or up in Bangor.

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union made that clear today.

Miller has just returned from a fast week's trip to South America as guest – with 20 other newspaper publishers, editors and radio executives – of Pan American Airways.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

NEW CLIPPER RUNS

The group flew aboard the clipper Friendship on the inaugural flight of a new luxury run from New York to Buenos Aires. Pan American is cutting flying time to about 25 hours.

Miller, who plans an article or two about his trip, met with President and Mrs. Peron of Argentina and related this pair of incidents:

"Fleur Cowles (editor of Flair Magazine) became intrigued with the spiked pumps that Eva Peron was wearing, and asked who made them.

"Mrs. Peron, who spoke through an interpreter, is a lady of action. She whipped off the pumps and showed Mrs. Cowles first-hand.

"Peron meanwhile insisted, during our meeting with him, that we ask 'tough questions like your President Truman is asked.'

"When the meeting ended, Peron's interpreter protested:

"'But El Presidente still wants to know where those $64 questions are!

FLANKED BY GUARDS

The Perons were flanked by four husky bodyguards of Jess Willard stature.

"They perked right up," Miller laughed, "when Amon Carter (publisher of the Fort Worth, Tex., Star-Telegram) pulled out what looked like a pair of pearl-handled pistols and presented them to Mrs. Peron.

"But international relations calmed down when the 'pistols' turned out to be trick cigaret [sic] lighters."

Miller ran into a number of Rochesterians in Rio De Janeiro, including Donald T. Burrows, Eastman Kodak's representative there, and Sheldon Thomas, first secretary and public affairs officer of the U.S. embassy.

LATINS BACK TRUMAN

Thomas' diplomatic acumen, Miller said, is highly regarded by Brazilians.

The visiting Americans were feted with a strenuous diet of receptions and dinners in Rio, Montevideo and Buenos Aires.

Asked about south-of-the-border reaction to the Korean outbreak, Miller said that South American countries are strongly in back of President Truman's decision to commit U.S. military aid against the Red-supported North Koreans.

Miller was impressed particularly with the old saw that it's a small world, when a man can virtually commute from New York's Idlewild Airport to Buenos Aires in just about one day.

He said that many Americans don't appreciate the "tremendous development" taking place in Latin America and the still latent possibilities there.

Miller paid special tribute to Juan Trippe, head of Pan American, for his farsighted contributions to aviation.

PHOTO
Caption:
AMONG NEWSPAPER executives back in 1753

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

U.S. today after flight to South America are (from left) Paul Miller, Benjamin M. McKelway, publisher of the Washington Star; Amon G. Carter, publisher of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, and Norman Chandler, president of the Los Angeles Times. (AP Photo)

9. 1951

a. (B3a/f71)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Thursday Evening, August 9, 1951, Page 1

Report from Abroad

Ike Avoids Talk Of President Race; Promotes SHAPE

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, has spent a month on a trip to study conditions in Europe. This is the first of four articles on his observations.

By PAUL MILLER

Pressure is building up abroad as at home for a statement from Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower as to whether he is, after all, a Democrat or republican, and what he's going to do about it in either case, looking to the presidential election of 1952.

Right now, Gen. "Ike" is doing his level best to stay out of the Eisenhower-for-President talk, but it's a tough job and it's going to get tougher.

This is the impression an American gets today on a visit to SHAPE (Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe).

There, at a sprawling seven acres of prefabricated housing between Paris and Versailles, Gen. Eisenhower is toiling as supreme commander of the effort to whip together an Allied army good enough to defend Europe. This is job enough. But as everyone knows – at SHAPE as in the USA – Gen. Ike could not be human if he were not keenly aware of the presidential boom back home.

*** * ***

VISITORS FROM WASHINGTON, including delegations of congressmen and others, are constantly in and out. All would like to know what Ike is thinking about politics.

Cablegrams from Washington newsmen arrive at the public relations office asking Eisenhower's comment on this or that news mention of his name as a possible candidate.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

One came in while I was there, from Andrew Tully of Scripps-Howard. It asked that Ike say whether he's a Republican or Democrat – good question, too.

Gen. Eisenhower's reaction to all this seems to be to try his darndest to look the other way.

At least that was my impression. He greeted me warmly in his office at 10 a.m., following the staff conference. His desk, flanked by flags, faced across the room toward a fireplace. On opposite sides of the fireplace, separated by a coffee table, were two settees. He motioned me to one of these. We faced each other across the coffee table as we talked . . . . [The remainder of the article is missing from the folder].

b. (B3a/f71)

Rochester Times-Union
August 10, 1951

Report From Abroad

America Must See the Job Through, General Ike Tells Visitors to Shape

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, has spent a month on a trip to study conditions in Europe. This is the second of four articles on his observations.

By PAUL MILLER

In a 37-acre tract 15 miles west of Paris is centered whatever hope there is today of building a combined force strong enough to defend Europe.

It is Supreme Headquarters, Allied Powers, Europe (SHAPE).

Supreme Commander Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and his staff are stationed there, having just moved from the old Astoria Hotel near the Arc de Triomphe in Paris where Gen. Ike set up after his appointment in February.

In six months, as reviewed by the Paris Herald Tribune, Eisenhower has:

Picked a staff of Army, Navy and Air Force officers from the 12 Atlantic Pact nations (a visitor may be challenged by a U.S. military policeman, escorted by a French messenger, greeted by a Belgian Navy officer);

Named regional commanders for the Northern, Central and Southern European defense zones, and

Coordinated the planning for the 23-division Atlantic army which SHAPE member governments – Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom and U. S. A. – have promised by the end of this year. There are to be 10 French divisions, 6 U.S.,

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

4 British and 3 Italian. The goal is 50 to 60 divisions (10 to 15 thousand men each) by 1953.

Basis of all this is the North Atlantic Treaty, signed Apr. 4, 1949, under which the North Atlantic Treaty Organization of the 12 participating nations was set up. Each nation agreed that an armed attack against one would be regarded as an attack against all. Eisenhower is trying to transfer this concept from paper to drill field. Russia is reported to have more than 200 divisions in addition to 70 satellite divisions near the West.

* * *

SO MUCH FOR BACKGROUND.

Now – you can get as many arguments on the Champs-Elysees as on Rochester's own Main Street as to whether there has been progress enough – or, indeed, whether there is adequate justification for the whole costly effort.

There are Frenchmen living almost within sight of the one-story, partly prefabricated buildings now housing SHAPE who will contend:

If Stalin ever planned to attack in Europe, he would have done so a year or two ago. He won't move now at all.

No matter what SHAPE does, Stalin still would be strong enough to overrun Western Europe at will, Or –

The United States is frittering away its own strength and will wind up the loser, through inflation and finally depression, without Stalin's ever having to fire a shot. Or –

France is too far gone from two great wars and too hobbled by political difficulties to do its part in the military buildup; besides, France won't fight.

Yes, you can hear all those arguments, and more, in France – or in England – just as in Upstate New York. As to the fourth point particularly, however, the government of France, for all its weakness and dilly-dallying, is firmly committee to the SHAPE program.

A military parade in Paris a couple of weeks ago seemed impressive and promising, even allowing for the fact it was pure spectacle and not necessarily indicative of any popular will or interest.

A flying visit offers no fair basis for an opinion as to whether France can or will give the full cooperation she has pledged. Certainly, she has been slow and halting to date. Only time will tell.

And, of course, there is another side to it: While we debate whether the French and the others are going to do their part, they watch every move of Congress to see whether America is going to stay or pull out.

* * *

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

NO ONE IS MORE CONSCIOUS of the doubts, fears and suspicions than Gen. Eisenhower. His is one of the toughest jobs ever handed any man. It is two-fold:

To build a military force, combining men of different lands and tongues, into a confident, unified whole; and at the same time, through the kind of public relations job that few men living could handle as well, inspire confidence and implant determination in the people of Europe themselves.

Meantime, French Communists daily chorus the defeatist arguments of the French doubters or "neutralists." And they charge that America is "occupying" the country, a charge which one could understand as our fine-appearing American boys strolled the streets or drove about on SHAPE missions in Paris.

Eisenhower shrugs off the doubts and questioning of Americans and Europeans alike. To him it is not a question of whether his job CAN be done – he regards it as one that HAS to be done.

"The most important thing for America today is to help Europe get able to defend itself," Eisenhower reiterates to visitors and in speeches.

As he sees it, you can say you don't like the reports of lack of enthusiasm here; you can say it is Europe's job to defend herself; you can say the United States should do nothing until Europe makes a greater contribution of her own; you can say it's too late anyway – you can say all these things, Ike would concede, and more, and then you come back to this:

One way or another, America must see the job through, in her own self interest [sic] if for no other reason.

To him that is all there is to it.

(3) PHOTOS

Captions:

HEADQUARTERS OF SHAPE – 15 miles west of Paris. There's room for hoped-for expansion. Present structures and grounds cover only 7 0f 35 acres turned over to Gen. Eisenhower by French government. Flags of 12 Allied nations lend color.

EVERYTHING'S FINE – At least chiefs of SHAPE'S northern command appear jovial here with Gen. Eisenhower. They are (from left) Lt. Gen. Wilhelm Von Tangen-Hansteen, commander of Allied Army Forces, Norway; Lt. Gen. Ebbe Gioertz, commander Allied Army Forces, Denmark; Gen. Eisenhower; Adm. Sir Patrick Brind, commander-in-chief, Northern Europe, and Maj. Gen. Robert k. Taylor, commander of Allied Air Forces, Northern Europe. (International News Service Photo)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

IN GEN. Alfred M. Greunther, shown here at his desk at SHAPE, Eisenhower has one of the great military minds of our time as Chief of Staff.

10. 1952

a. (B3a/f72)
*****

A Picture Points the Way to Republican Victory

PHOTO:
EISENHOWER AND TAFT: July 11, 1952

The Republicans have a winner if they'll get in there and back him up.

Unless the bulk of them do back him, 1952 could be just a re-run of 1932 and 1936 and 1940 and 1944 and 1948.

It is incredible, the report that there may be trouble raising funds for the campaign here because some of the big money is sore about what happened to Taft.

Yes, incredible.

What happened to Taft was that the Eisenhower people took his steamroller away from him and ran him down with it even as he had hoped to run them down.

The inept Taft organization left a hole in its defenses when it failed to repudiate questioned Southern delegates and when cameramen were barred from the National Committee hearings as if there were something to hide.

Taking the initiative with cries of "Foul" and calls for "Fair Play," the Eisenhower machine started boring through that hole, widened it, exploited it, and rolled on to victory.

Opinion poll after opinion poll had shown Ike the favorite country-wide – North, South, East and West; such indications as an inquiring reporter could get from casual contacts seemingly bore them out here.

Yet, Taft "had the delegates," as the saying goes – or as it went! – and he was set to get the nomination any way. It is true that a week before the convention he had it in the bag. His people blew it at Chicago. It was not a pretty picture. It was a rough convention on both sides. Both exerted every effort known to modern experts in applied psychology, and some of the strong-arm variety as practiced in the state of New York by Gov. Dewey.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

But young campaigners, hustling younger governors, yes more progressive elements, triumphed.

You can say you don't like it because Dewey ran the show – and it is true his organization was a major and a ruthless factor.

You can say Taft, as the effective Republican spokesman for so long, had earned the nomination and that it was due him.

You can say it was a shame that the convention ignored the counsel of General MacArthur and former President Hoover, both of whom favored Taft.

But after you have said all that, you come back to this:

Few unprejudiced observers will seriously contend that Eisenhower did not have more popular support; did not have much the better hope of winning the so-called independent vote, did not, in short, look more like a winner than did Taft, fine and honorable and keen as Bob Taft is . . . .

*** * ***

EVEN IKE'S SEVEREST CRITICS should try now for a little more balanced consideration. It is astonishing to hear some solid citizens question phases of Eisenhower's military career, or his record at Columbia, or whatever else they get hold of to pick at – when, in addition to uncounted other historic distinctions, he has just returned with honor from one of the most demanding diplomatic-administrative-military assignments ever loaded upon a single human in our time.

Think it over.

And Dick Nixon – Senator Richard Nixon of California – the vicepresidential nominee at only 39.

They asked Eisenhower about his choice for vicepresident. Ike's only specification was that his running-mate be a tested, vigorous young man.

Because Ike wants to rebuild the Republican Party with young, new blood – young, new blood has been flowing away from the Republican Party and into the Democratic Party and offshoots. Ike wants to attract them. Ike wants to win . . . .

It is customary in such circumstances for the loser to send a congratulatory telegram to the winner.

This time I was different. Because this time it was Eisenhower. Taft did not have time to get off a telegram. Within minutes after the voting, Dwight D. Eisenhower was pushing through the hysterical crowds that choked the street and the sidewalk and the lobby and the elevators; pushing his way to Bob Taft to shake his hand and seek his support.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

That picture should be hung in every Republican headquarters across the land.

It is a picture, whether hung on a wall or carried in the mind, that points the way to the victory America needs in November.

It is a picture to end all pictures of the 1952 Republican convention at Chicago.

b. (B3a/f72)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Thursday, October 9, 1952

Elks Honor Newspapers For Informed Vote Drive

Tribute was paid to the Informed Voter Campaign of The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union last night by the Rochester Lodge of Elks.

At an open lodge meeting in the Elks clubhouse on Clinton Ave. N., George M. Clancy, exalted ruler of the Rochester Lodge, presented a plaque to Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Company, for the two newspapers' "Read – Think – Vote" campaigns which Clancy said were "important in educating and informing the people."

Accepts Plaque

Miller, in accepting the plaque, introduced Wilbur G. Lewis, informed voter editor of The Democrat and Chronicle, and Carl M. Davidson, informed voter editor of The Times-Union. The ceremony marked the final day of National Newspaper Week.

Citing the many other "get out the vote campaigns," Miller said it was the aim of both newspapers to "get behind these efforts of other groups and do what we can for them to achieve a common goal." In addition, he said, the newspapers were trying to have informed voters and were directing their campaigns to that purpose. He said he hoped between 80 and 85 per cent of the eligible voters would vote this year, compared to 72 per cent in the city in 1948.

John A. Peartree, chairman of the Elks national newspaper week committee and a past exalted ruler, introduced Mayor Samuel B. Dicker, who asked for support in his registration contest with Syracuse, and Joseph P. Flynn who said the "Russians were watching with gleaming eyes the American participation at the polls."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Office Seeks Man

Commenting on the presidential candidates and campaign issues, Paul Martin, chief of The Gannett News Service Washington Bureau, said this year it was a case of "the office seeking the man, especially Stevenson and somewhat true in the case of Eisenhower."

After describing his impressions of the candidates and the party platforms, Martin took up the campaign issues. He said both candidates have shifted for "political expediency" on some issues: Stevenson from modifying the Taft-Hartley Act to outright repeal and Eisenhower from the "full parity" clause of the GOP platform to 100 per cent parity in a speech in the farm belt.

One of the issues, he said, was "good times" and pointed out that in our past history, the voters have never "thrown out the party in power when they think they are enjoying what they call prosperity." But, Martin said, this issue along with inflation, the Korean war, corruption and communism would be submerged by the voters in preference to the question: "Is it time for a change?" Their answers to that question, Martin said, would decide the election.

PHOTO
Caption:

NEWSPAPERS HONORED – George M. Clancy, exalted ruler of Rochester Lodge of Elks, right, presents plaque to The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union for Informed Voter Campaigns. Receiving it for the papers were, from left, Wilbur G. Lewis, informed voter editor of The Democrat and Chronicle; Carl M. Davidson, informed voter editor of The Times-Union; Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Company.

11. 1953

12. 1954

a. (B3a/f73)
*****

The AP World
January [?] 1954

(1.) 'TONY DONE MADE THE GRADE!'
AS NATIONAL PRESS CLUB HEAD

Vaccaro Installed President
At Washington Shindig

WASHINGTON – "Mistuh Tony done made the grade!"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Thus was Tony Vaccaro's installation as National Press Club president wrapped up in fellow-staffer Don Whitehead's story noting country-wide recognition . . . .

NOT all contributors were newsmen.

Included was a letter from President Eisenhower addressing Tony as "Dear Mr. President" and expressing the wistfully fiscal request that Tony let him know if he found a way to "reduce club dues, balance the club deficit and serve bigger and better meals "in the club" at drastically lower prices." There was a letter from former President Truman expressing high regard for Tony and the job he had done during his seven years as White House correspondent. The Eisenhower letter appears at right.

Vice President Richard Nixon (see cover), a top notable among the 700 members and guests present, took an active part in the proceedings. He read a list of suggested pledges to Tony and swore him in.

All in all, it was a big event for Executive Representative Vaccaro, one of the biggest since he entered the service at Nashville in 1929, thence going to Memphis and on to Washington where he has been since 1938.

THE photo shows Tony (2nd from l.) with Vice President Nixon, General Manager Frank Starzel and Paul Miller, now a Gannett Newspapers executive, but at one time Tony's superior as Washington chief of bureau . . . .

(2.)

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

January 12, 1954

Dear Mr. President:

My congratulations on your installation as President of the National Press Club. May your term of office be a most successful one.

Just one word of warning, however. By popular choice, you are now an elected official. That means that your former colleagues will expect you to reduce their club dues, balance the club's deficit, and serve bigger and better meals and refreshments at drastically lower prices.

If you find out how to do it, please let me know. The best of luck to you and the members of your administration.

Sincerely,

Dwight D Eisenhower (signature)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Ernest Vaccaro
The Associated Press
Washington, D. C.

13. 1955

a. (B4/f1)
*****

Times-Union
February 9, 1955

Visitor Sees 'Poor' Business with Reds

Japanese who want to do business with Red China got a strong rebuttal from a Tokio [sic] newspaperman visiting here.

The value to be realized from trade with China, argued Masao Tsuda, isn't worth the entanglements Japan would get into.

"Even before the war, trade between Japan and China came to only 10 per cent of the total Japanese foreign commerce – and that included Japan's investments in Manchuria," he contended. Currently, Japanese business and government leaders are calling for large-scale Chinese trade.

"Of course, there might be cheap coal, or cheap iron. But with government control of China's economy, how can we be sure we'd get them? If the Chinese needed something for their five-year plan, or some other plan, we wouldn't get it."

Tsuda, in Rochester to see his 20-year-old daughter, Mieko Tsuda, a first-year student of piano at Eastman School of Music, was interviewed yesterday, during a visit to The Times-Union.

Nine years ago, Tsuda recalled, he had a somewhat ominous introduction to his present job, general manager of Nihon Shinbun Kyokai – the Japanese Newspaper Publishers and Editors Assn.

Then an MP dropped by his home and asked him to come along to Allied headquarters.

"I thought I was going to be purged. I'd been a roving correspondent before and during the war. I was quite sure I was going to prison. They questioned me. Then I was told I'd been nominated general manager of the association."

Looking back over U. S. occupation of his country, Tsuda said he believed General MacArthur's 1951 recall by President Truman was a valuable, if regrettable, lesson in democracy for a surprised Japanese people.

The Japanese revered the chief of Allied Occupation Forces and UN Commander in Korea, said Tsuda.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

But to a couple steeped since 1933 in the idea of military supremacy, the recall brought home the democratic tenet that elected civilians run the military, he said. “At first, the people couldn’t understand it.”

A nation of newspaper readers, Japan has 112 dailies, with a total circulation of 27 million copies, an average of one for every three of the 80 million Japanese.

Japanese reading tastes differ from America’s, he says. Besides straight news, popular features are sports (with the accent on baseball and professional wrestling), women’s sections and America’s comic strips, including – Miss Tsuda reminded her father – “Blondie.” However, a “cultural” section, with music and book reviews and special columns, is a daily must with every newspaper . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:
REUNION – Masao Tsuda, newspaperman from Japan visits his daughter, Mieko, a music student in Rochester.

b. (B4/f1)
*****

EDITOR & PUBLISHER
April 30, 1955, p. 13

PHOTO:
Caption:

TRADITIONAL TOAST to the President of the United States is acknowledged by General Eisenhower at AP luncheon, under fire of news cameras. At the rostrum, AP President Robert McLean; at President’s right, John S. McKnight. (Photo by James L. Collings.)

AP Meeting
(continued from page 126)

. . . The Board of Directors met Tuesday and re-elected Robert McLean, Philadelphia Bulletin, president. McLean has held that important post since 1938.

Norman Chandler, Los Angeles Times, became first vicepresident and Clarence B. Hanson, Jr., Birmingham News, became second vicepresident.

Lloyd Stratton was re-elected secretary and Robert Booth was re-elected treasurer.

Re-elected to the Executive Committee were Mr. McLean, Mr. [John S.] Knight, Mr. [Benjamin M.] McKelway, Mr. [Paul] Miller, Mr. [Robert D.] Choate and Mr. [Harry F., Jr.] Byrd.

c. (B4/f2)

Ogdensburg Journal

1764

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Tuesday, September 27, 1955

Ike Began 'Political Revolution,' Declares Newspaper Leader

President Eisenhower had "begun to work somewhat of a political revolution" in this country and on the international scene and it is a "major tragedy that he had to be stricken" by a heart attack.

So declared Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Newspapers, in talks at Massena and Potsdam yesterday. He inspected the Power and Seaway projects.

However, the newspaperman added, he does not believe that the President is yet out of the picture as far as a second term is concerned. He urged his audiences not to get excited, to wait developments of the next few weeks before attempting to assess the President's future.

Miller said that Eisenhower's "disarming frankness" held the key to the beginnings of the political revolution the Republican President has forged.

"After many bitter years, we seem to be approaching political maturity and sanity which leads to appreciation of the other fellow's point of view."

This has worked a major change in Washington, Miller said. He is most familiar with the nation's capital having served as chief of the Associated Press Bureau there during the war years.

The ability to see that the "other fellow" is not always wrong, that everything is not either black or white, has begun to extend into international affairs, Miller added. He cited the recent exchange of correspondence between the President and Premier Bulganin of Russia as one of the indications of this change in atmosphere.

Pointing out that heart attacks are an almost-common occurrence among businessmen and that many recover from them to resume a full share of daily life, he urged caution in assessing the effects of the President's illness.

Political campaigning no longer requires an "iron man," thanks to television, he continued, and it would be possible for the president to seek another term "without leaving Washington," if he recovers sufficiently.

"It would be a great thing for all of us if President Eisenhower could go forward," he concluded.

Miller recalled for his audience many incidents of meeting with President Truman and other government leaders during his days in Washington.

d. (B4/f2)

Rochester Times-Union
December 6. 1955

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Will Eisenhower Run Again?

* * *

Washington Opinion Shifts
Fewer Think He Won't

By PAUL MILLER

Everything is secondary in our national capital these days to one question:

"Will he run or won't he?"

– The Farm Problem, Khrushchev's pooping off, East Germany's declaration of separation – everything.

And, while the whole question still is one of sheerest speculation, with absolutely nothing to go on from the man who alone can answer, this much can be reported as fact:

More, many more, who ought to know, feel and say that he will run again than were feeling and saying so yesterday or a week ago.

"Informed" persons, who would have sworn a month ago that the President would definitely announce his withdrawal, now are "not so sure."

Some who were convinced a month ago are saying now that he may decide to run after all.

To a Rochesterian, in Washington for only a brief visit, the change in atmosphere from a month ago is extraordinary.

A few weeks ago those not willing to say either "he is" or "he isn't" were in the majority.

Now opinions are hardening – and they are hardening, in the highest circles, in the opinion that "he may run, at that."

All qualify their predictions with the obvious, that it "depends on what the doctors tell him." This of course is fundamental.

YET MANY GO BEYOND THAT. Many are saying this:

Sure Ike likes his Gettysburg farm and he likes his golf at Burning Tree or whatever.

But – can a man who has been on top of the international heap for years, and more than ever since Geneva – can such a man, being human as Ike certainly is, be content to settle for a steady diet of golf (even in the low 80's) or farming (even with 1955's best equipment and blooded stock) as against the world leadership status that Eisenhower has attained, and deservedly so, as President of the U. S. A.?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The question answers itself, say those who think he will run.

The question raises doubts even for opponents who hope he won't, and say he shouldn't.

Of course, this is just one of the arguments, often called the "human argument."

There are others. Perhaps the most frequently voiced is this:

The President is dedicated to his effort for world peace. He felt he was making some progress in attaining it. Now some of his moves on the foreign policy stage are under attack by Democratic presidential hopefuls and others. The President isn't a man to leave a job unfinished or to run away from a fight. Governor Harriman and Adlai Stevenson could make him mad.

* * *

THAT'S A FAIR PARTIAL PICTURE, yet only partial, as one Rochesterian sees it, based on all one can see and hear in Washington in 1955.

This is not a prediction. It is merely a reporting of some present facts.

PHOTO
Caption:
RECENT PHOTO of the President at his Gettysburg farm.

14. 1956

a. (B4/f5)

The Caracas Daily Journal
January 26, 1956

Newsman Talks
U.S. Politics

Mr. Paul Miller, now in Venezuela as a guest of the Creole Petroleum Corporation, said yesterday that he believed Eisenhower would run again for president.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Miller, a Republican, and Executive Vice President of the Gannett newspapers in the United States, had some very clear ideas on the subject of the coming presidential election campaign now currying force in the country.

His personal guess was that Eisenhower would run "but," he said, "the next few weeks naturally will decide that issue. It will depend principally on the professional opinion of Dr. White, his personal physician."

"Eisenhower," he continued, "has earned high personal prestige not only in his own party but also among the Democrats. He is also well-liked abroad. During his administration he has developed the best executive organization to date in U.S. Government. It would be too bad if he didn't run again.

In remarking on the opposition, he said that Stevenson had the best organization. He still had the organization that was left from the last campaign year and it was evident that he had more universal prestige than either Harriman or Kefauver, the two principal Democratic contenders for the nomination. He also predicted a little more "noise" from Governor Lausche of Ohio.

In the event that Eisenhower didn't run, he said, the Republican Party still had several strong candidates from which to select. The important names on this potential list were Vice President Nixon, Chief Justice Warren, Senator Knowland, Governor Herter of Massachusetts and, though not seriously considered as a candidate, Milton Eisenhower. He also added that if Eisenhower (Ike) were to run again, his running mate would probably still be Nixon.

Nixon, he said, came through the period of Eisenhower's illness with great credit. Although considered by some as immature politically, it was to be taken into account that he is only 43 but has already had ten years in congress, plus the years of his vicepresidency [sic]. He is a vigorous personality and, though he was put – or put himself – on the spot, he came out of those 47 days of Ike's illness with little serious criticism. "He is without doubt, a very controversial figure," he concluded.

Mr. Miller, who is also a director of the Associated Press, is here with his wife, Mrs. Louise Miller. During their seven-day, they will visit oilfield areas in both Eastern and Western Venezuela and the iron mining regions in Bolivar. As an "added attraction," Creole has arranged for them to begin their tour with a sightseeing flight over Angel Falls in the Gran Sabana.

There are 22 papers in the Gannett newspaper chain located in cities in New York, New jersey, Connecticut and Illinois. The home office is in Rochester, N.Y., where the Millers have their residence.

Shortly after the Arbenz overthrow in Guatemala, Mr. Miller made a trip to that country. When he leaves Venezuela, he expects to stay several days there again and then proceed to Mexico, where he will also spend some time.

He declared that Venezuela was receiving excellent publicity in the United States and the fact that he had heard so much about it prompted him to make the visit.

"We were not prepared for what we found," both Mr. and Mrs. Miler declared yesterday.

After a personal visit with the President of the Republic next Sunday, Mr. Miller will continue his trip north.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

b. (B7/f1)

Rochester Times-Union
August 16, 1956

Truman Era Ends; 'One of Boys' Now

By PAUL MILLER
Editor and Publisher of The Times-Union

INTERNATIONAL AMPITHEATER, Chicago – The Truman era in the Democratic party ended officially at 2:20 a.m. Rochester time today.

That was the moment when the former President turned, in public, from would-be dictator to of the boys.

He arrived here to take charge as of old. Adlai Stevenson and company quietly closed him out. Barring a miracle, they had apparently blocked his every move to dump Adlai and put over Averell Harriman, or, failing that, a dark horse.

What has been apparent to others for days finally dawned on Harry.

Almost ignominiously then, it seemed to some, H. S. T. called for a mike in this vast, noisy, brawling hall and ate crow. He ate it before thousands yawning and sweating under the bright lights here, and however many thousands had not yet turned off their TV sets and gone to bed.

Yet it was 2:20 a.m. Rochester time – an hour earlier here – when the familiar, rasping voice poured over the hall from the Truman box above and beyond the Missouri delegation on the floor.

48 HOURS

Only 48 hours earlier, Harry had stridently declaimed that Adlai Stevenson couldn't win if nominated. Twenty-four hours after that he had called a press conference to tone this down. And a few hours after that, another conference to assert that Adlai could win "with the help of an old man from Missouri."

Now, as the convention dragged to a vote on the civil rights platform plank, Harry S. Truman seemed to complete an almost full circle turn.

"More champs than Truman didn't know when to quit." – an editorial, Page 22.

He came out soothingly for the plank favored by the majority, and against so-called stiffening amendments supported by the Harriman-dominated delegation of New York.

TO GET ABOARD

Whereas heretofore he had championed the kind of plank favored by Gov. Harriman, Truman, of all people, now counseled moderation, of all things.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He was still going down the line for Harriman, still reserved about Adlai, but the Truman speaking here was a new harry; a fellow who wanted awfully to get back aboard the wagon somehow, some way.

Never again, probably, would the Democratic party jump when Harry Truman snapped a finger.

An era had ended.

Even the "old man from Missouri" seemed to know it now.

c. (B7/f1)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
August 17, 1956

Ike's Health, Nixon: Adlai Lays It on Line

By PAUL MILLER

CHICAGO – Adlai E. Stevenson has laid it on the line.

Vice President Richard Nixon will be a focal point of violent attack in the coming campaign.

Linked will be the health of President Eisenhower.

The man from Illinois boldly disclosed this campaign concept last night within an hour after the Democratic National Convention nominated him . . . .

Adlai Stevenson, 1956 model, is a long, long way from the reluctant dragon of 1952. He stormed the country in the primaries. Here he triumphed also in the smoke-filled rooms. He's as polished, as gentlemanly, as ingratiating as ever. But there's a toughness and a drive and a determination there today that was absent, or less apparent in 1952.

This is going to be a campaign with a capital "C."

Dick Nixon will be under constant attack. President Eisenhower will be handled differently, but aggressively as well. Both, further health setbacks or no, will have their hands full this time.

Adlai Stevenson is moving out fast.

d. (B7/f1)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
August 19, 1956

Pro, Anti-Nixon Forces Skirmish In Battle of Polls at San Francisco

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice President of The
Gannett Newspapers

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18 – Preconvention skirmishing, such as it was for there's mighty little of it, developed into a battle of polls today. (See details on Page 12A.)

First, Harold Stassen, boosting Gov. Christian Herter, called a press conference to present his "latest nationwide study of voter opinion." It showed, of course, that Richard Nixon WILL be a handicap to President Eisenhower in the campaign.

Next, Sen. Styles Bridges, immediately following Stassen before the same reporters in the same hall – the Knob Room at the Fairmount Hotel – handed out leaflets reporting a different poll. It showed, of course, that Richard Nixon will be NO handicap to President Eisenhower in the campaign.

The delegates could take their choice . . . .

I VISITED FORMER President Hoover this morning. He looked well and spry in the usual blue double-breasted suit, seated at his desk in the presidential suite at the Mark Hopkins. The desk was covered by letters and telegrams. He's still digging out of the greetings received on his 82nd birthday Aug. 10. "Guess I must have received 25,000," he said smilingly.

Hoover addresses the convention Tuesday night. Otherwise, he's taking no apparent part. Doesn't even expect to go out there on opening night, Monday. He asked to be remembered to his old friend Frank Gannett and other friends in Rochester. I said I'd relay his greetings by wire. Here it is . . . .

e. (B7/f1)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
August 22, 1957

Stassen's Efforts: What of Effects?

By PAUL MILLER
Editor and Publisher, The Times-Union

SAN FRANCISCO – [Harold] Stassen's dump-Nixon drive has had some effect on delegates at the Republican National Convention.

1. It caused a conscious, if largely casual, appraisal of other possible candidates.

2. It raised among some top party pros a nagging question: "What if Stassen SHOULD turn out to be right?"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

As for the first, delegates had an opportunity to get a good look at Sen. William F. Knowland of California. As temporary chairman, he ran the convention until the permanent chairman, Joe Martin, took over.

They have also seen much of Goodwin (Goodie) Knight, popular governor of California. He tried mightily to keep the California delegation from endorsing Nixon for renomination . . . .

Many delegates appeared to believe they'd made a new discovery in Sen. Knowland, who took over from his friend and sponsor, the late Sen. Robert A. Taft, as Republican leader of the Senate. Whatever the future may hold, Knowland clearly improved his party position here.

After looking them all over, if random comment is any gauge, the conventioners more or less contentedly came back to where they started – with Dick Nixon for vice president . . . .

KNIGHT'S OPPOSITON

The apparent enmity between Gov. Knight and Vice President Nixon becomes somewhat more understandable out here. Knight has strong union labor support in California. Organized labor leaders here oppose Nixon.

There are personal animosities, including professional jealousies, perhaps. But the division of labor loyalties adds up to the major element in Knight's continuing anti-Nixonism.

In the lighthearted banter of this lighthearted convention, a new story makes the rounds daily. The latest:

"A Truman-Stassen third party is being formed," one delegate tells another. "Their slogan is 'We mess up everybody.'"

f. (B7/f1)

Rochester Times-Union
August 25, 1956

The Plight of Harold and Harry

Stassen: Frisco's HST

By PAUL MILLER
Editor and Publisher,
The Times-Union

SAN FRANCISCO – Harold E. Stassen wound up as the Harry S. Truman of San Francisco.

The parallels are equally pointed, equally perplexing – and almost equally painful.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In Chicago, Truman rode the wrong horse, Gov. Harriman, until it was too late to get off gracefully.

Stassen, though himself a veteran of 25 years in politics, let himself in for approximately the same general fate in San Francisco, fighting Vice President Richard Nixon.

DEAL OF DOING

From here on, it will take a deal of doing for Stassen to regain anywhere near the party standing he's enjoyed nationally since 1940 when, billed as the "boy governor" of Minnesota, he keynoted the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia and was Wendell Willkie's floor manager.

Since then, Stassen has had his ups and downs. But he always managed to regain an earnest, if small, group who boosted him for anything and everything, with the White House clearly their ultimate goal.

Now look:

1. – For all his protestations of acting for the party's good, he's pure poison to just about everybody close to Richard Nixon – with, for the moment at least, the very considerable exception of President Ike.

2. – In striving to clamber back aboard the party train, he almost won as many hoots and "how now" smiles in convention corridors as sincere welcomes for his pains. He was spared boos when he addressed the convention. The leadership had passed the word to delegations please not to greet him impolitely.

The President told a press conference that he had no other thought than that Stassen would return to the official family as White House disarmament assistant.

Later, Stassen himself said that he would be back on the job Monday morning. He took a leave to carry on his fight to nominate somebody other than Nixon for Vice President.

"I owe Mr. Nixon all-out support from this point," Stassen blandly said.

Yet, like Truman, who will be quoted throughout the campaign on his Chicago statement that "Adlai Stevenson can't win," Stassen will be quoted by Democratic campaigners on his oft-repeated prediction that Nixon will cost the ticket "millions of votes."

Some anti-Stassen republican leaders fear that a Republican defeat in November, or even a close squeak, would open the door for an "I told you so" from Harold Stassen.

Most, however, grew stronger for Nixon during Stassen's attack than they were before.

And it was clear that rank and file delegates, having looked over the crop of possibilities to replace Nixon, turned to him with confidence that he is, as President Eisenhower said, as good a man as they could pick for the vice presidency.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

So Harold Stassen's solo uprising, his calm but insistent urging that Nixon be replaced, finally produced this situation:

Nixon is back, stronger than ever.

Stassen is out in left field; nobody knows quite where.

Some say of Stassen, "he MEANT well . . ." but political leaders shun a loser like the plague and "he meant well" is seldom an acceptable excuse for one who bolts the organizational fold for an excursion of his own.

g. (B7/f1)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Monday Evening, August 27, 1956

WE SUPPORT IKE

GOP Stronger After Frisco

*** * * * * ***

Ike Shows Surprising Vigor, Nixon Wins New Friends

By PAUL MILLER
Editor and Publisher of The Times-Union

After two weeks of the sound and fury of the two national conventions, the 1956 American political prospect is just what it was before:

President Eisenhower will be reelected unless he suffers another illness.

Actually, the republicans may be in a more favorable position now than before Chicago and San Francisco. There are two main reasons:

1. Eisenhower appears stronger physically and more vigorous than his most fervent well-wishers had dared hope.

2. Richard Nixon came out of the Cow palace with more friends and supporters than he took in.

THE DEMOCRATS NOMINATED the ticket most republican leaders expected. It is a good one. But Adlai Stevenson and Estes Kefauver, without some now unforeseen break, would have to do the impossible to beat Ike.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Readers saw the pictures of the President in the newspapers, and perhaps on TV. Neither did justice to his unexpectedly radiant and ruddy appearance up close in the flesh at San Francisco.

Nor could this have been a surface impression only. What Ike went through at Frisco could have knocked out almost any reader of these reflections!

To wit:

Within 48 hours, Ike submitted himself to tumultuous welcomes, parades, handshaking, dozens of conferences including the climactic meeting with Harold Stassen, the first presidential press conference ever conducted "live" on TV, more parades, more handshaking, the acceptance speech, and a train ride to his holiday at Pebble Beach.

He was up next day at 7:30 a.m. and banging out golf balls at 9 a.m.

Again: What reader of this report could take on that schedule, with or without a heart condition?

* * *

NOW, ABOUT NIXON. He could not have come out of the convention any better if the party high command had planned it that way.

Harold Stassen's attack strengthened Dick Nixon. Stassen knocked out only himself.

I heard many delegates , who had not seen or known much of Nixon intimately prior to the convention, praise him after his speech at San Francisco. They expressed wonderment that they'd heard so much against him before they got there. They asked themselves what was back of the anti-Nixon talk. (Read the explanation of the attacks on Nixon, by C. Lynn Fox, on Page 18 today.)

Governor Christian Herter of Massachusetts was Stassen's No. 1 candidate to dump Nixon. Herter is a great public servant. Yet it was clear – off the respective performances of Herter and Nixon in the Cow Palace – that Nixon would be a more vigorous, a more attractive and a more persuasive campaigner than Herter could ever be. This was common comment out there.

Putting the spotlight on Nixon led to a careful examination by many of the substance behind the Nixon criticism of which we have heard so much.

After sorting it out, delegates clearly came to the conclusion that the main thing against him seemed to be that he's a hard-hitting campaigner such as the

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Republicans have not been able to boast in years. No wonder his opponents don't like him. He has grown in public esteem. That grow will continue.

Adlai Stevenson and Estes Kefauver will run an exhaustive campaign. Stevenson showed at Chicago that he is a much more able politician than in 1952 – and he was good then. It will not be enough, however, against the greatest public personality since FDR at his best; that's Ike.

* * *

NOTES ON THE DEMOCRATS: In young Sen. Jack Kennedy of Massachusetts, the Democrats have a new political star of national appeal. He may well reach the top in time. Many hope so. Some republicans are happy that he is not the Democratic vice presidential nominee right now – they think he'd have attracted more votes than Estes Kefauver . . . Young Sen. Gore of Tennessee is another democrat certain to be heard from further . . . .

The Rochester Times-Union will, of course, support Eisenhower and Nixon. They are more able, more experienced and more needed now even than they were in '52.

The nation, however, is fortunate indeed that Adlai Stevenson is again the Democratic nominee.

h. (B4/f15)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
October 8, 1956

U.S. Election Intrigues Foreigners, Says Miller

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice President of The Gannett Newspapers

Everybody abroad wants to know about Ike.

Foreign government officials, of course, are striving mightily to preserve a position of impartiality. They hasten to say so even as they ask a U.S. visitor for the latest election forecast from America.

A number of foreigners I saw on a quick trip to Britain and Egypt assumed President Eisenhower would be re-elected. Yet they wondered – even as you and I – how he's feeling healthwise now. They asked about this man Nixon who is running on the sane ticket or something, and whether some of the things Stevenson and former President Truman say can possibly be true.

Campaign speeches in the United States get little attention abroad. There are brief reports, however, of major campaign efforts here. There is some general idea in the street that the man named Stevenson and also Mr. Truman, who is well known and well liked overseas, are saying some awful things about the man best known abroad as commander in chief of the Allied war effort in Europe.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Most officials clearly believe that Washington is trying desperately to keep things on an even keel internationally during the election campaign.

Many in England who favored a strong policy toward Egypt's President Nasser in the Suez crisis think the U.S. toned down its own stand, after what seemed to be a bold start, to avoid any criticism in the campaign.

They think, in short, that we ran out on them instead of strongly backing them up when they mobilized troops and talked of using force, if necessary, to wrench the Suez Canal back out of Nasser's sole grasp and put it under international control.

They think we softened up for political reasons.

It is known that President Eisenhower has stated many times, and to Secretary of State Dulles, that political considerations here must have no place in our approach to foreign affairs.

I never missed an opportunity to tell this to our foreign friends and critics.

Probably few believed me. Few of them would work that way. Why, they think, should we?

But they're all interested in Ike.

Paul Miller recently
Made a 10-day flying trip
to London and Cairo to find out first-hand about
the Suez crisis.
He has compiled his observations into a series
of five articles. Written
"like a letter home," this informative new series
will begin today in The
Times-Union.

i. (B4/f23)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
Sunday, October 7, 1956

Letters to the Editor on . . . .
Why They Still Like Ike . . . . or Favor Adlai

She Likes Dick

Anybody but an optimistic Eisenhower would be scared to his death by the declarations such as those given out in the newspapers by Justin Wroe Nixon, Dean Margaret Habein and Sol Linowitz.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

And what have they, specifically, against Dick Nixon?

I have never heard a criticism of him as presiding officer in the Senate. And he was credited with efficiency and modesty in his pinch-hitting when President Eisenhower was ill.

Thursday evening on TV, his answers to questions from newsmen all over the country were frank, fearless and confident.

Does Dr. (Justin) Nixon want to see a Democratic Congress with its most important committees again headed by veteran states-righters and Negroe-wrongers? Just now they are trying to prove that integration in the District of Columbia is unworkable and a failure.

RUTH L. GREENE

Pittsford

He Likes Adlai

MAY I express the views of an independent voter on one issue in this election. For years I have cast my vote for president, primarily on the issue of foreign policy. On that issue more than upon any other has it depended whether we would have enough order in the world for us to carry on satisfactorily our domestic life.

I voted for Dewey in ’48 and for Eisenhower in ’52 on this issue, believing that it was important for the Republicans to become responsible for our bipartisan foreign policy.

But now our foreign policy needs serious overhauling. The new developments in Russian policy alone call for it. What is called a “peace” is, to a considerable degree, chaos in a temporary equilibrium. The internal workings of the State Department where Scott McLeod, Senator McCarthy’s friend has a dominant position; our attitudes toward Germany, Japan and the neutral nations; our contacts with the Iron Curtain countries and China; and above all, the aims of our policy – all need candid and thorough re-appraisal.

In spite of the President’s fine character, the Eisenhower administration, if re-elected, cannot do this. It will be weakened in influence by the President’s ineligibility for re-election. It will be limited in maneuvering by the party’s powerful right wing which will not face the century we are living in. It will be tied to the personality and methods of Secretary Dulles who tries to handle everything himself.

No commission can do this re-appraising. Only a President can do it who is elected by all the people, and who will use the powers of his high office as Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson did, to appeal to the minds and hearts of our people for advance all along the line.

It is because I believe that Gov. Stevenson understands that this job needs to be done and is able and willing to do it, that I am for him.

JUSTIN WROE NIXON

93 Beverly St.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Democrat and Chronicle
October 8, 1956

Letters to the Editor
'Adlai Is Not in Ike's League'

EDITOR'S NOTE: Every letter must be signed with full name and address of the writer. In cases involving danger of severe personal hardship or questions of professional ethics, signatures may be withheld at our discretion. Space limitations may require editing of those letters which are printed; brevity by writers will be a guarantee of least possible editing.

IT beats me how a wonderful man, Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon, can get so much bum information as he makes clear HE has got in his letter in Sunday's Democrat and Chronicle.

For example, he repeats that Scott McLeod has a "dominant position" in the State Department. This is not true. McLeod did a pretty good job in a very tough spot, but to say he is in a "dominant position" is to misrepresent.

* * *

THEN DR. NIXON is critical of Secretary Dulles for doing so much work himself. This can be argued either way, of course, and my guess is that those who yack about Dulles doing too much are, by and large, the same ones who say Eisenhower is a part-time president. They can't win.

Yet what a contrast from years past when the State Department wasn't even permitted to function. Secretary Stettinius once told me, in 1945, with the glee of a schoolboy, that President Roosevelt had decided henceforth to let his Secretary of State see "most" of the messages he, FDR, was exchanging with foreign powers! I take it that sort of operation suited Dr. Nixon.

Much of the remainder of his letter is the 1956 Democratic party line. It has been debated and debated and more of the same is to come.

Yet I must comment on Dr. Nixon's comparing Stevenson and Eisenhower.

Stevenson was a fine man in various secondary appointive jobs in Washington during and after the war. He became a good governor of Illinois. He means well.

* * *

BUT – the irresponsible charges and impossible promises Stevenson has got off in 1956 should have disqualified him in the minds of all of us as a candidate for president.

Stevenson is going to have more to apologize for, after he takes his licking on Nov. 6, than any campaigner for major public office since Tom Dewey in 1950.

Moreover, Stevenson personally is of course not in the same league with Ike. Perhaps few ever seriously contended he was, but it is a matter of opinion and Dr. Nixon is entitled to his.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

One expects expressions like Dr. Nixon's from those who don't know or who have an axe to grind. A man who has to be in the public eye as much as Dr. Nixon ought to know the facts. I find it disappointing.

PAUL MILLER

5455 Clover St.
Pittsford

k. (B4/f23)

ROCHESTER SAVINGS BANK

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK

THOMAS H. HAWKS
PRESIDENT

October 9, 1956

Mr. Paul Miller
The Gannett Company
Times Square
Rochester 14, N. Y.

Dear Paul:

There have been many interesting and informative editorials and letters to the Editor appearing in the Democrat and Chronicle and the Times Union during the past several weeks. This, we all agree, is a very healthy thing, and I certainly hope they will continue throughout the balance of the campaign.

This letter is merely to tell you that I think one of the most outstanding letters was your reply in yesterday's Democrat to Dr. Nixon's letter which appeared on Sunday. True to your form it was a fine job, and I commend you.

Most sincerely,
Tom (signed)

THH/b

l. (B4/f23)

BAUSCH & LOMB OPTICAL CO.
ROCHESTER 2, NEW YORK

M. H. EISENHART
HONORARY CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

October 10, 1956

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Paul Miller
Gannett Co., Inc.
55 Exchange Street
Rochester 14, New York

Dear Paul:

I am simply astounded at the attitude with regard to this election on the part of men like Justin Nixon. I have read his comments and reasons for voting for Stevenson and I do want to tell you how pleased I was to read your reply. I think you did a fine job.

How some of our so-called intellectuals, and particularly a minister, can even consider voting for Stevenson in contrast to President Eisenhower is beyond my imagination.

Keep up the good work!

Most sincerely,
Herb (signed)

MHE H

m. (B4/f23)

THE SENATE
STATE OF NEW YORK
ALBANY

GEORGE T. MANNING
52nd DISTRICT
CHAIRMAN
COMMITTEE ON EXCISE

October 10, 1956

Mr. Paul Miller
Managing Editor
Rochester Times Union
Rochester, New York

Dear Paul:

The "amens" that were surely sounded by thousands of Rochesterians after reading your letter to Dr. Nixon must still be reverberating!

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Your reply was a masterpiece and bespoke eloquently many thoughts a lot of us have had and hesitated to voice because we were loath to tangle with the "cloth."

Nice work on a job that badly needed doing.

Sincerely,
George (signed)
George T. Manning

GTM:VM

n. (B4/f23)

Democrat and Chronicle
October 10, 1956

Letters to the Editor
Dr. Nixon Replies; Is Replied to!

EDITOR'S NOTE: Every letter must be signed with full name and address of the writer. In cases involving danger of severe personal hardship or questions of professional ethics, signatures may be withheld at our discretion. Space limitations may require editing of those letters which are printed; brevity by writers will be a guarantee of least possible editing.

I APPRECIATE the compliment when my friend Paul Miller, publisher of The Democrat and Chronicle, replies personally to my letter of Oct. 7 on the campaign. It is like seeing your opponents send in their first team when their goal is threatened.

The points Paul raises I must discuss very briefly. He accuses me of following the "Democrat party line." I suppose he is thinking of my reference to the Republican party's "powerful right wing which will not face the century we are living in." Let me say that if he will read Donovan's "Eisenhower: The Inside Story," he will find that the President himself has been worried about conditions within his party that grow out of the power of the conservative elements in it. At one time he even considered whether he should organize a new party.

* * *

MY REFERENCE to Secretary Dulles was no reflection on either his character or his intentions. I wrote a letter to the papers in his behalf when he ran against Senator Lehman. My point is now that he has become so identified with our policy as it is, that he can hardly reappraise himself.

Paul's main charge against me is that I have operated on the basis of "bum information." Let us see how "bum" it is, as tested by my reference to Scott McLeod's "dominant" position in the State Department which Paul says I "misrepresent."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I hold no brief for "dominant." "Highly influential" will do as well. Scott McLeod is of course a symbol of the influence of Senator McCarthy, the baleful effects of whose activities, as Senator Cain recently discovered, continue on after McCarthy has lost his personal prestige.

We had a devastating revelation of these effects on the State Department in the letter published on January 17, 1954, signed by five former ambassadors and career officials of the department, Norman Armour, Joseph Grew, R. W. Bliss, William Phillips and G. H. Shaw.

In its summary of the letter the New York Times said, "Attack seen aimed at Senator McCarthy and department security officer S. McLeod. Letter charges a foreign service officer reporting honestly may later find loyalty and integrity challenged." In my experience abroad last year (1955) I found confirmation of what these former State Department officials had said. Can we wonder that many of our able young people hesitate to seek employment in the department?

* * *

NO, AFTER rereading my letter in the light of Paul Miller's criticism I do not find anything substantial in it I want to withdraw. It is based on what I believe is adequate information. Nor do I have any "ax to grind" beyond seeing my country have a foreign policy that will help bring order in the world – a desire which goes back to experiences in France during the first World War.

I know that others will estimate both issues and candidates differently. And our political campaigns are such as to make the stoutest American heart quail. However, this is our American way, and after viewing some other ways, I am for ours.

But it is the business of independents to see to it that the big issues are not lost sight of in the political hassle. That is why I have lifted out the issue of foreign policy. I believe that a serious re-appraisal of our foreign policy is due, if we are to avoid the calamity of another great war.

With malice toward none and charity for all.

JUSTIN WROE NIXON

93 Beverly St.

o. (B4/f23)

PHOTO:

1956-6 C
Justin W. Nixon & PM at "Dear Sir" dinner, Hotel Sheraton, Nov. 29, 1956

p. (B4/f23)

*

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
October 11, 1956

Letters to Editor: Political Pot Comes to a Boil

1783

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Attention Letter Writers!

THIS page is happily engulfed in letters to the editor. We like them. We hope they keep coming. For the people are really speaking up.

But as in past election seasons, we now find it necessary to remind writers that there is no place for the wordy and long letter. We will edit all letters to a reasonable length consistent with our space, preserving as best we can the writer's main points. We confidently expect only agreement with this technique, for it is the only way to achieve fairness for all writers. And needless to say, brevity at the source will make editing unnecessary!

(1.) It is extremely difficult for me to understand how an outstanding Christian gentleman, scholar and statesman like Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon can enlist under the banner of Adlai Stevenson and sing and march to "Onward Christian Soldiers" beside Talmadge, Eastland and thousands of other Southern demagogues, reactionaries, rabble-rousers, hate-mongers, city bosses and racketeers.

Indeed, it puzzles me to understand how any ordinary Christian can support Stevenson so long as he cheerfully accepts and solicits such support in his campaign to become the President of the United States . . . .

C.T. LUNSFORD, M.D.
574 Clarissa St.

(2.) The Language?

I am confident that Paul Miller, in his recent rejoinder to Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon, did not intend to show any disrespect to him, because in calling him "a wonderful man' Mr. Miller obviously meant to register his own sincere agreement with the high estimate in which Dr. Nixon is held by our community.

Nevertheless, it seems to me that Mr. Miller did unwittingly use in several instances "the language of disrespect" which detracted from the force of his letter as a whole, employing such phrases as "bum information," "to misrepresent," "those who yack about Dulles," and "much of the remainder of his letter is the 1956 Democrat party line."

Surely, Dr. Nixon, who has been widely known as a political independent, never as a follower of any party line, and who habitually makes a conscientious effort to inform himself before he speaks on any subject, deserves better treatment than the above phrases connote. Mr. Miller's letter could have been written hurriedly and under the strain of political emotion – a strain which most of us probably have to undergo whenever we prepare to exercise our right of suffrage.

Seldom are we for any one candidate 100% and zero percent for his opponent. The rivals may rate, in our judgment, more like 60% to 40% or even as closely as 51% to 49% -- but when we cast our ballot, we must vote 100% for the one and zero percent for the other and in order to make this necessarily distorted judgment, we have to call in the help of our emotions.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Perhaps a man who has to be in the public eye as much as Mr. Miller, may want to consider – not necessarily the logical content of his recent letter, but at least some of its disparaging connotations.

DAVID RHYS WILLIAMS
69 Highland Ave.

Editor's Note: Mr. Miller has been out of the city and out of reach for consultation. Therefore this is our own comment, not his. We think the Miller letter assailed Dr. Nixon's political thinking, not his person. And it is our own belief that when a cleric deals in politics he cannot expect to be protected by his cloth.

(3.) Ike Dedicated

On an evening news broadcast of Oct. 5, I heard Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon quoted as saying he was not only in favor of the policies professed by Mr. Stevenson, but that he did not want to see Mr. Richard Nixon become President.

What right has Dr. Nixon to assume that President Eisenhower is not going to live? As a religious leader doesn't Dr. Nixon believe in a higher power in the matter of life and death?

If Dr. Nixon voted for President Eisenhower in 1952 why doesn't he support him now . . . .

The great majority of the people of our country and around the world know that President Eisenhower has dedicated his entire life to his country in war and in peace, always with an abiding faith in God . . . .

MRS. E. B. BROWN
57 Calumet St.

(4.) 'Ike Has Character'

Astonishment and dismay filled my heart after reading Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon's article in Sunday's Democrat and Chronicle.

As a church leader in this community one would naturally expect Dr. Nixon's endorsement of President Eisenhower because of his integrity, his active support and attendance at church services, his firm belief in prayer and open avowal of its use in governmental deliberations, his devotion to his family – in contrast to Mr. Stevenson's divorce – and his above board dealings and truthfulness. Any person with such a character and religious background deserves and should have the active support of all church people, whether Catholic, Jewish or Protestant.

One cannot build a golden age with men of lead . . . .

EDITH A. HAGLUND
9 Cypress St.

(5.) For Dr. Nixon

The opinions of Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon are well respected in Rochester as elsewhere. Evidence of this is in letters appearing in this column. One such letter comes from the very heart and head of The Democrat and Chronicle itself, Paul Miller (Oct. 8), in reaction to Prof. Nixon's published decision to support Adlai Stevenson for president (Oct. 7).

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

That Mr. Miller's response appeared so quickly is testimony enough to his respect, even if he had not called Dr. Nixon "a wonderful man."

Like many Rochesterians I not only appreciate Dr. Nixon's thinking, I seek it out. Hence, I am grateful for his considerate move in making his decision public. All who know Dr. Nixon know that he does not make decisions easily. He has gained our respect because of his own deep respect of evidence and his ability to weigh it carefully.

Mr. Miller claims that Dr. Nixon has been subjected to "much bum information." Yet, there is only one fact in Dr. Nixon's letter which he attempts to refute – Scott McLeod's position in the State Department.

Dr. Nixon's letter emphasizes "the issue of foreign policy." The three major objections he has to the Eisenhower administration in that regard are left untouched by Mr. Miller.

Though Mr. Miller admits that Dr. Nixon is entitled to his own opinion he ends his reply with the view that Dr. Nixon's opinion could only be expected from "those who have an axe to grind," and that he is disappointed that Dr. Nixon doesn't know the facts.

The clear implication is that if one knows the facts he is led to one clear-cut irrefutable decision. Only prejudice leads us to such decisions. A rational weighing of evidence demands an appreciation of at least two sides of an argument: a rational decision is invariably a compromise.

I am sure that if Dr. Nixon's full argument were known we would see that his decision has been hard earned – arrived at not through ignorance of the facts but careful evaluation of their import.

Those of us who consider our vote as "independent" are in great need of the rational thinking which Dr. Nixon represents whether we finally agree with him or not. There will be "wonderful men" voting both ways on Nov. 6. To make a decision surely does not mean ignorance of the facts!

J. A. SANDERS

191 Highland Parkway

q. (B4/f23)

(2) PHOTOS:

1956-6 A
PM and Vice President Richard M. Nixon, Rochester, N.Y., Oct. 17, 1956

1956-6 B
[PM, Richard Nixon and 2 unidentified men]

r. (B4/f23)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

*

Rochester Times-Union
November 30, 1956

(1.)

Political Analyst Hails Writers of Letters to Editor

By BILL RINGLE

Some of Rochester's best-read political writers – authors of the 100 top letters to the editor – were told last night that they may be providing the leadership for tackling some of the country's biggest problems . . . .

(3) PHOTOS
Captions:

DINNER HUDDLE – Prof. Arthur J. May (left) of University of Rochester history department talks with Fred I. Parrish, chairman, Monroe County Republican Committee, at Times-Union-Democrat and Chronicle dinner for letter writers.

LETTER WRITERS – Among writers of letters to the editor honored last night were (from left) D. Lincoln Canfield, chairman, UR foreign language department; Ralph A. Raimi, UR instructor; Glyndon G. Van Deusen, UR history chairman.

DINNER SPEECH – Samuel Lubell addresses letter writers. At head table are (from left) John C. Hadley, editor, Times-Union editorial page; Vincent S. Jones, executive editor, Gannett Newspapers; Don U. Bridge, general manager, The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle; Paul Miller, executive vice president, The Gannett Co.; Lubell; Mrs. Frank Gannett; L. R. Blanchard, editor, The Democrat and Chronicle; Clifford E. Carpenter, editor, Democrat and Chronicle editorial page. The dinner was held last night at Sheraton.

(2.)

Pen Pushers 'Want to Know'

Full-time political analyst Samuel Lubell fielded a few hot questions from those part-time political commentators – writers of letters to the editor – at last night "Dear Sir" dinner. Here are some:

From Dr. Arthur Roberts, University of Rochester physics professor: "Was there any genuine public understanding of the issues Democratic presidential candidate Adlai E. Stevenson raised in regard to the hydrogen tests?"

Lubell: "Most people reacted very coldly to the proposal. It seemed to them a proposal to disarm when it was no time to disarm . . ."

George W. Cooke, attorney and former Democratic candidate for Congress: "At the present time, the moderates hold sway in our political life. They're between the two poles of conservative and liberal . Which way do you think the two parties will go?"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Lubell: "I don't believe you can elect anything but a moderate president in this country. If the Democrats run an extremist, a Republican will be elected every time they do. President Eisenhower mirrors what the public wants. People distrust the extremists in both parties and they want someone who is down the middle of the road."

Ralph A. Raimi, University of Rochester mathematics instructor: "If a man's running for president and wants to be elected, would you say it was to his advantage to clarify or muddle the issues?"

Lubell: "One fellow's clarity is another fellow's muddle. All politicians clarify with one hand and muddle with the other. I think election campaigns are like one great pinball machine. When you're campaigning and you hit the issues right, like the bumpers on the pinball machine, all the lights go on . . . if your campaign is off, it's like tilting the machine and all of your lights are out and when you hit the bumpers nothing happens."

Thomas J. O'Brien, Rochester Institute of Technology instructor: "What effect do letters to the editor have on voters?"

Lubell: I don't think that reading letters to the editor has any particular effect on the voters, anymore than reading about the campaigns do. As I said, I believe people react emotionally to political campaigns – they take what they agree with and reject what they don't."

Mrs. Donald Yorkey, housewife – "With a Republican president and a Democratic majority in Congress, don't you think that they will throw out party politics for the common good. Or do you think there will be obstacles raised in Congress to slow up the President's program with an eye on the next elections?"

Lubell: "There will be fighting party politicians all the time. But remember you win votes by doing the right thing for the country. What's most important to their (the politicians') point of view is who gets the credit for doing the right thing . . . The real danger is not politics, but might be in the attitude that everything is going along well at home economically, so why worry about things abroad? . . . Anyway, we have no choice but to deal through the political machinery that we have."

James M. Spinning, the bearded retired Rochester schools superintendent: "How long will we continue to have the (Senate) filibuster in this country? Just round it off in centuries."

Lubell: "I'm a little more optimistic. But you do need a political realignment. I think if you look at the period 1876 to 1896, you get a clue. Then all presidential candidates had beards. In 1896 there were the first beardless candidates. That represented a realignment of political thought – the first really new crop of voters with a new outlook in the ascendancy after the Civil War. I look for a comparable realignment, the rise of a whole new generation of voters not bound by old attitudes, about 1964. Then, you should see the filibuster go out."

Dr. David E. Hath, post-doctoral fellow of the UR's atomic energy project: "Do you think, as Dr. George Gallup suggests, that political campaigns should be modified and replaced by a few studio broadcasts?"

Lubell: "I think all those suggestions are kind of pointless. People campaign the way they want to. I think the American people want a show with their campaign . . . All I know is that if they had political campaigns on at certain fixed times, I would like to buy time on any competing programs. They'd really be popular."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

s. (B4/f23)
*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
November 30, 1956

(1.)

Intelligent Opinion Vital, Lubell Tells 100 Letter Writers

By PAT BRASLEY

Because neither political party can meet the problems which now face the country, the need is great for intelligent public opinion, an election pollster and columnist declared here last night.

Samuel Lubell told about 100 writers of outstanding letters on the recent election campaign to the editors of The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union that neither party is giving the United States the leadership it needs . . . .

(2.)

Dinner Fetes 'Dear Editor' Letter Writers

By RICHARDSON GALE

Congratulated, entertained and informed last night were about 100 writers of letters to the editors of the Rochester Gannett newspapers during the 1956 presidential campaign . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

WRITERS THREE – Mrs. Donald Adams, 74 Roxborough Rd., left, and Mrs. Joseph B. Taylor, 58 Dale Rd. Brighton, were among writers of "Letters to the Editor" during election campaign honored at dinner given by Democrat and Chronicle and Times-Union. Samuel Lubell, pollster, autographs "certificates."

t. (B4/f23)
*****

Editor & Publisher
December 8, 1956

'The Pungent Pen'

Letter Writers Dined By Gannett Editors

1789

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Rochester newspaper executives greeted writers of letters to the editor Nov. 29 at a "Dear Sir" dinner given by the Rochester Times-Union and the Democrat and Chronicle, both Gannett Newspapers.

Nearly 100 persons who had written letters on political subjects during the presidential campaign were guests. Pollster Sam Lubell was speaker, calling for even greater expression of "intelligent public opinion."

Republicans and Democrats alike attended the dinner, believed to be one of the first of its kind in the nation. Guests were selected solely on the basis of the quality of their letters, not viewpoints.

Hailed by Governor

Greetings were read from Governor Harriman, from White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty and from Leonard Hall and Paul Butler chairmen of Republican and Democratic national committees . . . .

Special Responsibility

One reason for the staging of the dinner was cited by Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of Gannett Newspapers, and editor-publisher of the Times-Union, who told the diners:

"Since the Times-Union and the Democrat and Chronicle are the only daily newspapers of general circulation in the Rochester area, we believe we have a greater responsibility than might otherwise be the case to stimulate the freest possible public discussion of public matters and provide the forum in our newspapers."

Noting the high readership of letters, Mr. Miller reported that there were more and better letters this year than in any prior presidential campaign . . . .

Lapel Description

At the start of the program, each letter writer had received a "diploma" from the "College of Political Knowledge" as a "Practitioner of the Pungent Pen." The document was signed by the two Rochester editorial page editors . . . .

15. 1957

a. (B4/f24)

(1.)

In honor of
The President of the United States and Mrs. Eisenhower
and
The Vice President of the United States and Mrs. Nixon

The Inaugural Committee
requests the pleasure of the company of
Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller
at the

Inaugural Ball
Monday evening the twenty-first of January
1790

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

One thousand nine hundred and fifty-seven
at nine o'clock
Washington, District of Columbia

(2.)

In honor of
The Governors of the States
and
Special Distinguished Guests

The Inaugural Committee 1957
requests the pleasure of your company
at a Reception
Sunday afternoon the twentieth of January from three-thirty until six o'clock
at The Statler
in the City of Washington

(3.)

The honor of your presence is requested at the ceremonies attending the Inauguration of the President and Vice President of the United States
January twenty-first
Nineteen hundred fifty-seven

(4.)

(2) PHOTOS:

1957 4a
1957 4b

Mrs. Walter Cronkite, Mr. Miller, Mrs. Miller & Mrs. Gannett
Inaugural Ball
Park Sheraton, Washington, D. C.
January 21, 1957

b.

(B4/f25)

Niagara Falls Gazette
February 4, 1957

[See also Rochester Times-Union, February 1, 1957]

Dulles Stands Out As Second to None
Among Recent Secretaries of State

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice-President, Gannett Co., Inc.

I DON'T KNOW whether John Foster Dulles can or will long continue as secretary of state.

Whether he does or not, it is time somebody spoke up to answer some of the criticism of Dulles, much of which came during the campaign when there was so much general mud slinging [sic] that insufficient attention was given to answering that specifically directed at the secretary.

This piece will deal particularly with two of the main charges against Dulles during the campaign and since:

1. That the professionals in the Department of State are unhappy with the way he runs the place.

2. That he takes too much on himself flitting from conference to conference rather than sending the help.

* * *

TO DISCUSS CRITICISM of the State department today it is necessary to consider some facts.

One is that the secretary of state is an appointee, and often a political appointee, while the department itself is full of men – many of them of high competence – who are professionals.

There never has been a time when many of the professionals, under any secretary, didn't believe and confide to friends that they could run it better than the secretary. Naturally, men skilled in their trade can always pick flaws in the operations of the boss.

So, there are those in the State Department today who will admit that they could do a better job than Dulles, or who believe that Dulles could profit by lending them an ear. Mostly, they are career men who are not close to Dulles. Those who are close to him, and this is human nature, too, are disposed to feel that he is doing a job on which even they might have difficulty improving.

* * *

THIS APPLIES, TOO, to Dulles' traveling.
When the secretary goes abroad, he is No. 1 in any American delegation and all eyes focus on him. Naturally, if somebody else went, that somebody else would be in the limelight. Naturally again, there are those who resent that the secretary has seen fit to play the leading role instead of waiting in Washington for them to report.

You can argue it either way.

Personally, I would rather have a secretary of state willing to go out on the firing line and carry the load himself, deeply as I regret what seems to be a fact, namely, that Dulles has wrecked his health by overwork. If he has, then we should thank him fervently, not criticize. Whatever brought on his problem, it developed while he was giving his best for his country as surely as did the boys in the mountains of Karea [sic], or in the Solomons, or on the beaches at Normandy.

THERE HAS BEEN criticism that Dulles is vacillatory or that certain underlings don't always know what he has in mind.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Dulles doesn't make United States foreign policy. If he is vacillatory, or seems to be, part of it is agreed approach, top level, nothing for which he could or should be expected to take sole credit or blame.

Take the Suez crisis. After Dictator Nasser of Egypt seized the Suez Canal Company on July 26, Britain and France began mobilizing. They will tell you today that they thought they had U.S. support at the time. Certainly they had our sympathetic ear and interest.

However, even if they were led to believe that their warlike moves had tacit approval here, there was no U. S. commitment to follow them out the window. Our diplomatic representatives, Dulles, included, deserve credit rather than criticism for the fact that they kept us out of direct involvement.

Because U. S. policy was down the middle we were in a position to act for peace when Israel struck Egypt and Britain and France moved their troops into the Canal Zone under the pretext of protecting the canal.

* * *

LET'S GO BACK. We don't necessarily throw a man out of a job because he isn't perfect. Nobody, least of all Dulles, has contended that Dulles is perfect. On balance, though, he is a great secretary of state and certainly superior to many, going back even beyond World War II. Run over the list:

Secretary Hull was a fine man who had lost control of the department, for all practical purposes, by the time he left it in 1944.

Edward R. Stettinius wasn't sufficiently in command even to have access to all the messages President Roosevelt, in effect his own secretary, was exchanging with Allied Powers.

James F. Byrnes, was a sort of interim appointee who had already made his name and fame when he went to the department.

General George C. Marshall, who was secretary only at the insistence of President Truman, likewise already had had his great career.

How many besides Harry Truman and the people who worked for him will contend that Dean Acheson, brilliant and polished as he was, performed outstandingly as secretary of state?

Pair off John Foster Dulles with any one of the men, fine as each of them was in his own way, and Dulles stands second to none.

* * *

CRITICS SPEAK OF DULLES' having "lost control" of the situation in Europe and the Middle East. It's ridiculous. Since when did the United States ever have control?

It is time for general indignation at much of the criticism.

It is beyond time for the expressions of the praise and gratitude Dulles has earned and deserves for a night-and-day effort that has damaged his health and might have killed him.

c. (B4/f25)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

VETERANS' INFORMATION BUREAU
NEW YORK STATE VETERANS' SERVICE AGENCY

168 CLINTON AVENUE SOUTH
ROCHESTER 4, NEW YORK
February 11, 1957

DeWAIN F. FELLER
DIRECTOR

TELEPHONE
BAKER 5-9300

ARTHUR M. DOUD
ASST. DIRECTOR

Dear Paul:

Were I to obey the impulse to commend you whenever I thought it deserved, my pen would be in hand quite frequently.

Thank you very much for sending me a copy of the Inaugural Ball Program. It has been the source of great pleasure to my family and myself.

I would like to take this occasion also to tell you that I thought your article of February 1, on John Foster Dulles, was terrific. It was a grand tribute to a great man and was expressed at a time when it took courage to do so. I think you are tops.

Sincerely,
[Indecipherable]
DeWain F. Feller

Paul Miller, Executive Vice-President
The Gannett Company
Times Union Building
Times Square
Rochester 14, New York

DFF/s

d. (B7/f1)

Rochester Times-Union
Friday, February 8, 1957

Words Won't Lick Inflation Danger

Eisenhower's Look-Alike Policy

1794

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

- - No Hope for Cut in Spending

By PAUL MILLER

The economic policies of the Eisenhower administration look more and more like those of Truman and Roosevelt.

The President's talk in his press conference this week of some sort of controls to combat inflation just about closed whatever gaps remained. It was an old record scratching away again.

It is clear that growing numbers of Republicans, and Eisenhower Democrats as well, are a little less bewitched – and increasingly bothered and bewildered – to misquote the popular song of some years back.

I get this not only in conservative Upstate New York but in not-so-conservative other parts of the country as well.

Many who voted for more stability and an end to at least some of the gimme programs now feel cut adrift by what they have seen, heard, felt and paid for. Many who still hold loyally to some hope were shaken anew when President Eisenhower declared, discussing his $71.8 billion budget: —

"As long as the American people demand and, in my opinion, deserve the kind of services that this budget provides, we have got to spend this kind of money."

So saying, he invited Congress to cut the budget – but offered no suggestions himself.

Congressmen, with the exception of a very few, will inevitably add to bigger spending every year. They all have their local and regional pets and projects. They will holler for economy, but economy somewhere outside their own districts.

* * *

IF NO REAL LEADERSHIP for economies is to come from the President of the United States, who was elected in part by those who believed he would try to put an end to wasteful spending, then there very likely will be no effective leadership at all.

Senator Byrd of Virginia will do the best he can, but that won't be enough. He already has pointed out – and former President Hoover has echoed him – that the federal government is going to collect and spend even more, much more, than Eisenhower's budget sets forth. Substantial items such as the Social Security, unemployment, and highway trust funds do not show in the budget.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The unhappy truth seems to be that the administration is talking economy and anti-inflation while practicing something else.

The President has asked both business and labor to cooperate in holding the line. But he proposes no relief from the swollen and ever-swelling federal payrolls and programs which, as Senator Byrd says, constitute "a major factor" in the inflation that is as great a threat to the United States as is Moscow in its way.

Only [Treasury] Secretary [George Magoffin] Humphrey speaks up. And he offers no specific proposals for cutting the spending.

*** * ***

WHY CAN'T SOMETHING BE DONE?

Apparently nothing will be done as long as whatever party is in power thinks spending is popular.

The purchasing power of the dollar has declined 2 cents in 12 months. I hear a lot of talk about the danger that continued big government spending will mean – still more inflation and still more decline. But such talk doesn't come from quarters where the bulk of the votes are. Most people still sold on the idea that we can somehow get something for nothing from the government.

Even Congressman Ken Keating, representing one of the surest Republican districts anywhere, is quoted as saying that "big spending is here to stay."

We need dramatic and determined leadership at the highest level, supported powerfully all up and down the line, to make any effective cut.

With President Eisenhower offering no such leadership, nothing will be done by this administration barring a change that only great popular demand could bring.

*** * ***

You don't like all this?

Neither do I, but facts are facts.

e. (B4/f25)

(1.) Feb. 8, 1957

Dear Mr. Miller:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Your editorial on Eisenhower policies most welcome, albeit a bit slow in coming. As a Republican in arms I share your alarm. Unfortunately for us we were carried away by the Gop [sic] banner and Ike's "nice guy" properties.

Secretly I believe that both of us should have voted for the intellectual Mr. Stevenson despite the fact that he was and is a Democrat. We need thinkers to-day and whether they are "nice guys" or not. As a fellow who can smile easily, get in a reference to the Lord in the right place hardly qualifies are [sic] beloved Ike to assume the responsibilities to which we unwittingly elected him. I trust that your criticisms of Administration policies will continue whenever warranted.

In closing may I be permitted to remark that your editorials on the local special election were hardly worthy of you – much too wishy-washy. Here is an example of sheer stupidity on the part of our county leader as well as an indication that for tossing the taxpayer's [sic] money out the window the republicans can now give the Democrats "lessons".

I am enclosing an editorial from a small town newspaper that in my opinion does the job on the situation that you should be doing.

Thanks again for your Friday editorial.

F H McGhee (signature)

Francis H. Mc Ghee

Right to publish acknowledged . . if so desired . . . initials only please.

(2.) It's Only Money!

The needless special election foisted upon the county of Monroe and its political subdivisions by a short-sighted and open-handed Republican majority will give the Democrats ammunition that was usually found in the pouches of the GOP.

The cost estimated variously at $12,000. to $15,000. will be charged to the taxpayer. The Republicans in all fairness did not want the election and the Democrats didn't care. Bills were introduced to permit the vacancy to be carried over until next fall but for reasons known only to politicians this money-saver failed to muster the necessary majority. Insiders were "surprised".

More "surprised" than anybody was Fred I. Parrish, Monroe County Republican leader and clerk of the state senate who confidently nominated Gould Hatch for the job. As Mr. Hatch is also an incumbent assemblyman, and quite likely to be elected senator, it re-opens the door for still another special election to fill his post of assemblyman.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

At this writing the only situation that could prevent another special election would be the election of Democrat George Kelly who does not at present hold an elective state post. The traditional Republican tenor of Monroe County precludes such a possibility.

Thus it is quite possible that in the Democratic ammunition box ready for November firing will be not only one special election permitted by the GOP majority but the necessity of a second, chargeable to Fred I. Parrish as an additional $15,000. "Boo-boo".

f. (B4/f25)

Winchester Evening Star
EVENING ESTABLISHED 1896

Daily News-Record
MORNING HARRISONBURG, VIRGINIA

HARRY F. BYRD, JR.
PUBLISHER

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

February 11, 1957 j

Dear Paul:–

Your signed piece in Friday's Times-Union is excellent.

I am sending it on to Father.

I do regret the President is not providing leadership on this vital matter.

With warm regards,

Cordially,

Harry (signed)

Mr. Paul Miller
Vice President
The Gannett Newspapers
Rochester 14, N.Y.

g. (B4/f25)

1957 Eastern Conference
CONTROLLERS INSTIUTE OF AMERICA
May 16-18, 1957 . . . Sheraton Hotel, Rochester, New York

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

SPONSORED BY THE ROCHESTER CONTROL

February 11, 1957

Mr. Paul Miller
Editor and Publisher
Times-Union
Rochester, New York

Dear Paul:

I read your article "Words won't lick Inflation Danger" on the editorial page last Friday with a great deal of interest and agree with your comments.

Over the years I worked at General Motors I had my "finger" in the compiling of quite a few budgets and there were always places where we could recommend further cuts. I am disappointed that the President did not indicate any places where he felt that could be done.

When I was with OPS back in 1951-52 we were asked to throw together a budget on very short notice – once a six-months budget in less than twenty-four hours – and our figures were mere guesses. I can't believe that the Director of the Treasury compiled this one with anything less than extreme care, so why does he not make some recommendations.

I hope you express yourself further on the editorial page on this very vital subject.

Sincerely,

Roy Jordan (signature)
34 Ridgeview Drive
East Rochester, New York

h. (B7/f1)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, February 16, 1957

The Big Squeeze: Inflation and You

By PAUL MILLER

It just could be that people in general are waking up to the ravages of increasing inflation as everybody from housewives to manufacturers finds prices going up and up.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

That has been somewhat indicated by not wholly unrelated events of the past week:

1. The Eisenhower administration still isn't offering any public help, but Senator Byrd and Senator Knowland, one the great Virginia Democrat, the other the California Republican who may one day be president himself, have called for a cut in the 71.8 billion dollar [597.6 billion in 2013] Eisenhower budget.

2. Nationwide surveys indicated that Byrd and Knowland, along with others at Washington, may have been encouraged in their budget-cutting proposals by an avalanche of anti-spending letters from the home folks.

Senator Knowland voiced hope that some 2 billions might be trimmed off the budget. Senator Byrd speaks of 5 billions.

* * *

OF COURSE, BIG AND WASTEFUL SPENDING by government is only one cause contributing to inflation. An economist speaking to a Rochester group the other day made this statement:

"President Eisenhower is the first chief executive of our country in a long time to single out wage and salary increases without productivity increases as a prime factor in U.S. inflation.

"Wages went up 5 per cent in 1956 despite the fact there was no increase in productivity. With the already 'banked up' wage and salary increases still to come in 1957, the inflationary pressures will continue."

He added:

"Price increases still are taking place generally. We are getting both rising industrial and rising farm prices.

"The resumption of inflationary pressures is the largest single problem for 1957."

* * *

AS THIS SPEAKER SAID, President Eisenhower spoke out on wage and price increases, urging both labor and management to hold the line and help avoid further inflation.

That required more political courage than we often see.

However, the factor of government spending is powerful too, and the President still (as this was written) has offered no real leadership in that area.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He just dropped the budget on Congress and suggested that Congress try to cut it.

A specific word from Ike such as the words from Senator Byrd and Senator Knowland commented on at the start of this column could have enormous effect.

If that specific word doesn't come pretty soon – while Congress is debating and considering the budget – no one need expect any major operations downward on the budget. If that word does come, some needed pruning may possibly be done.

* * *

A READER TELEPHONED to ask what reaction was received to the piece printed in this space last week, which made the point that the economic policies of the Eisenhower administration are looking more and more like those of Truman and Roosevelt.

The reaction to that editorial went like this:

1. Some readers wrote or said, "You should blame Congress, not Ike or the administration."

2. Some asked, "What can Ike do alone about the spending?"

3. Others, commending the column, wrote "It was about time somebody told the truth."

* * *

SPEAKING OF READER REACTION, it's been a long time since Rochester's Congressman Ken Keating has been the subject of as much criticism as I have heard in connection with his noisy and (many thought) un-Keating-like speeches against inviting Tito to the U.S.

Keating is increasingly important, and rightly so, in Congress. That is why some of his friends were all the more disappointed by his antics on the Tito matter. They thought he sounded like some other congressmen of far less ability and standing, with whom they don't like to see Keating compared.

On the same general subject: Wonder what Mayor Wagner of New York thinks now about his cold-shouldering of old King Saud?

Of course, it was the round-eyed little princeling who stole the show on Saud's visit here. But the whole thing came off better, one gathers, than even the greatest optimists at Washington had hoped for. We need more such visits, not less.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

i. (B7/f3)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, March 2, 1957

The Big Question: Where Do We Cut Too-High Budget?

By PAUL MILLER

Cut-that-budget talk continues in Washington and elsewhere – but still there's no leadership for such from the White House.

Perhaps the President is practicing a bit of psychology. Perhaps his advisors figure that silence on his part may stir up further anti-budget indignation in Congress where there are some signs of spreading determination to slash the 72.8 billion dollar burden.

Can such determination stand the acid test of application to the congressmen's own local programs? That's the question that will ultimately decide.

And, speaking of that, our own IRONDEQUOIT BAY PROJECT has been taking a shellacking from some critics of big spending. They call it "typical of the kind of pork-barrel project which is running up federal government bills that really should be projects for local financing only."

Said the Wall Street Journal:

"Besides the more grandiose expenditures (in the Public Works authorization bill now shaping up in Congress) are a host of 'little' items. Between $1 million and $2 million of all the taxpayers' money would be spent to widen a channel for the benefit of one thousand people keeping pleasure boats on a New York state bay . . . ."

There is a great deal more to the Irondequoit Bay project than the pleasure of boat owners. Still – let's face it – it IS typical of hundreds which, taken together, add up to enormous spending countrywide.

*** * ***

DAVID LAWRENCE, long a great reporter and interpreter of the Washington scene, pointed out the other day that "there will be no tax relief till the country

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

discovers that the federal government really cannot afford to keep on paying for things the local units of government ought really to be doing for their citizens . . . ."

Lawrence also said:

"Whether President Eisenhower likes it or not, he has to go along with the programs which have been initiated under previous administrations."

There is some evidence that the country IS waking up.

I believe nearly everyone who takes the trouble to think knows WHY the budget is high.

What many would LIKE to know is why no leadership is being given by the White House in trying to cut it down.

* * *

FORTUNE MAGAZINE DUG UP an angle on the President's budget which may come as a surprise to many – especially farmers:

"In fiscal 1958 the U.S. plans to spend less on foreign aid than it does to subsidize tis own farmers. For the farmers, expenditures are expected to run to some $5 billion whereas total foreign aid is budgeted for $4.4 billion."

Farmers often are among outspoken opponents of foreign aid. Their spokesmen also are loud in demands for cuts in government spending. What sometimes happens, in such cases, is that congressmen favoring foreign aid bills trade off votes with congressmen from so-called farm states, and vice versa. Then BOTH programs go through substantially.

j. (B7/f3)

Rochester Times-Union
Friday, March 8, 1957

Probes and No-Fear Politics

- - - Will 'Liberalism' Last? . . Dulles and his Critics

By PAUL MILLER

Are politicians losing their fear of big union leaders?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Have Congressmen accepted what some pollsters and others have long contended? Namely, that starting with Senator Taft's 1950 victory over heavy labor opposition in Ohio, it has been proved that union officials can't deliver the votes of their members.

Putting the questions thus is over-simplifying. It assumes that politics is all-governing. But politics does figure in all Washington considerations. That's the way our system works.

Still, politics aside, there has been increasing evidence that many congressmen are willing to bore in and let the chips fall where they may in all sorts of investigations.

As a matter of fact, too, some unions were themselves taking steps to clean house even before Congress moved in.

It IS true, however, that there's apparently been a change in the Washington atmosphere in this respect.

* * *

Kennedy, Nixon – and 1960

The Republicans – Modern Republicans, that is – appear set to out-Deal the Dealers in the drive to elect Vice President Nixon as president in 1960.

The Democrats – Modern Democrats, that is – are fighting to keep the GOP out of the "liberal" position.

Democratic Senator John Kennedy of Massachusetts predicted this week that Dick Nixon will be the 1960 Republican nominee and "hard to beat." Hence, young Kennedy seemed to urge, the Democrats need to hustle up some giveaways and get ahead again in this contest which nobody minds but us taxpayers.

Kennedy didn't put it quite that way. He said:

"Congressional Democrats must shape a responsible progressive record with deeds that match our words. For it is precisely this gap between rhetoric and the record that casts doubt on the new liberalism of the Republicans."

Kennedy is one of the comers in American politics. He's only 39, smart, personable and wealthy. He'll be very much in the 1960 picture himself, likely for vice president.

* * *

I'M NOT SURE THE COUNTRY isn't ready for a change from the "liberalism" of Roosevelt, Truman and, lately, Eisenhower.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I'm not so sure that a shift of sentiment isn't taking place that could make the 1960 conventions something other than might be expected looking back on the past five or six. "Liberalism" and all that goes with it may not be so popular by then.

Certainly there's some significance in this fact:

Congressmen, due in part to newspaper reporting of Eisenhower administration spending and budget matters, are floundering in a pile of protesting mail from constituents the like of which many never saw before.

The home folks want that 72 billion dollar budget worked over.

The White House finally has been forced to take notice. But as this was written neither President Eisenhower nor his budget director had offered any real hope. The President did tell his press conference that perhaps the rate of government spending could be slowed. He said he knew of no program in the budget which should be abandoned.

* * *

THE WEEK'S DEVELOPMENTS seemed to point up a growing cleavage in Republican party thinking on federal spending: The Eisenhower administration finally talking of some slowing down; Republicans such as Senate Majority Leader Knowland, urging broad economy cuts – and backed, again, by those letters the congressmen are getting from home.

*** * ***

'. . . For Goodness Sake, Shut Up'

It was bound to come – some criticism, that is, for the reference made here last week to the Irondequoit Bay project. I reported that it has been pointed to as an example of the sort of project for which federal money will be spent but which ought to be underwritten locally, if at all.

A lady wrote:

"If you can not [sic] be constructive in civic matters – for goodness sakes shut up."

Both Rochester newspapers support the Irondequoit Bay project and have for years. I have spoken for it and signed petitions. So have others at the newspapers.

Having been taxed millions for other projects all over the U.S.A., the Rochester area is entitled to a little, too, including funds for Irondequoit Bay. But let's not try to pretend it isn't any different than a lot of other projects. It isn't.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

Dulles Critics . . . Strangely Quiet

Secretary Dulles appears over the hump in his battle against the savage and often senseless criticism of several weeks.

On Feb. 1, the following appeared in this column:

"It is time for general indignation at much of the criticism of Dulles.

"It is beyond time for the expressions of praise and gratitude that Dulles has earned and which he deserves for a night-and-day effort that has damaged his health and might have killed him."

The critics were strangely quiet after the agreement was worked out, largely by Secretary Dulles for our side, whereby Israel started getting out of the Gaza Strip.

At least two writers who have not always cheered him, James B. Reston of the New York Times and Roscoe Drummond of this and other newspapers, moved over this week.

Reston wrote: For his tireless and promising diplomacy in recent days, Secretary Dulles is entitled to at least one innocent passage down this narrow corridor (Reston's column) to the bottom of the page . . ."

And Drummond: "It deserves to be said that Secretary Dulles contributed the creative proposal that persuaded Prime Minister Ben-Gurion to agree to comply with the U.N. resolution without advance U.N. guarantees."

As this is written, Dulles has flown off to Australia, continuing the grind that for a man of 69 and with his medical history just can not [sic] go on forever. He'll have to quit and let up one of these days. I'll wager it will NOT be under fire.

*** * ***

IF AND WHEN Secretary Dulles does have to step aside, the two best present guesses to succeed him are "Onward Christian" (so-called at last week's Gridiron Dinner) Herter and former SHAPE Commander Alfred Gruenther, now heading the Red Cross.

The Gridiron jingle went as follows:

ONWARD CHRISTIAN HERTER
POUNDING AT THE GATE,
READY TO BE DRAFTED,
SHOULD DULLES ABDICATE.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

k. (B7/f3)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, March 16, 1957

One Place to Cut -- School Aid Bill

By PAUL MILLER

Marion Folsom, one of all Rochester's favorite Rochesterians, is locked in the sort of Washington fracas he probably dreaded most when he became Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

Here he is, one of the country's best known businessmen, trading punches with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce over the Eisenhower administration's proposed school-building program!

Marion Folsom is a former president of the Rochester Chamber. He has numerous friends in the leadership of the U.S. Chamber, of which he is a former director.

Yet, mild-mannered and self-effacing though he is, Secretary Folsom, as the home folks know, never runs away from a fight. He's far from running away from this one.

*** * ***

WHAT'S IT ALL ABOUT? Briefly, the Eisenhower administration wants 1.3 billion dollars for school construction. It says there's a big schoolroom shortage and federal aid is the answer. The Chamber says there were more classrooms built in the last decade than actually are required, and that federal aid wouldn't be the answer anyway. Folsom accuses the Chamber of "misleading statements." The Chamber retorts hotly. There you are.

Who's right about the actual number of needed classrooms? Loren Pope, the education expert on our Washington bureau staff, tried to find out. He concluded that nobody knows, for certain. Mr. Pope's conclusion has been reached by other more or less disinterested fact-finders.

How's it going to come out? Some of Washington's best guessers think the school building program is doomed.

First, "Federal aid to education" still isn't a generally popular idea (Eisenhower himself opposed it when he was president of Columbia University).

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Second, Congress seems serious about trying to whack the proposed Eisenhower spending some place. This is a fairly safe place to cut, controversy over school aid being what it is.

Note: Even if his bill does lose, as I (and many another of his admirers) have to hope it will, Marion Folsom will remain one of the most highly-regarded men in official Washington.

It IS Eisenhower's Budget

It was largely "politics," but it seems to me that House Democrats were right, at that, when they passed the resolution requesting President Eisenhower to tell 'em how and where to cut his budget.

After all, it is his budget, isn't it?

At least, it was sent to Congress by the President. Of course it is a compilation of recommendations, themselves whittled by the Budget Bureau, of various bureau and department heads.

Congress can cut the budget, and it will – some. But a budget of record proportions, for peacetime, never should have left the White House in the first place. It should have been cut there, and in the Budget Bureau, just as Mr. Truman's budget was cut by Ike's experts after the Eisenhower administration first took office. It wasn't so difficult when the aim was to show up Truman.

The truth is that the Eisenhower administration has shown a reluctance to cut spending in direct proportion to its tenure; the longer the Eisenhower team stays in office, the more some of them seem to act – money-wise – like the Roosevelt and Truman administrations before them.

Every indication is that the people want the budget cut. The test will come when we see popular reaction to some of the cuts that affect special groups. Will they approve budget-cutting in May as they do in March? Ike's advisers apparently think not.

Off and Running for '58

The Republicans are off and running early, 18 months ahead in fact, for new York's 1958 governorship nomination.

President Eisenhower indorsed Leonard Hall of Oyster Bay, lately retired as Republican national chairman – at least Ike seemed to indorse him; but then Ike toned it down at his press conference this week, saying in answer to our Paul Martin's questions that he'd be for Hall should Hall get the nomination.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Newsweek" magazine said to watch Nelson Rockefeller . . . .

l. (B7/f3)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
April 6, 1957

Mayor Peter Barry --A Fine Record

By PAUL MILLER

Last Chance to Cut Spending?

People who ridicule major federal economy proposals (and thereby inferentially support more big federal spending) may not know or may not mind that more and more federal spending means (1) more and more federal control, (2) less and less individual liberty and individual opportunity and (3) socialism of which we already have more than many like.

I wish the millions of well meaning [sic] Americans who think they can have Uncle Sam do more and more for them, and without unhappy results in time, could hear first-hand from some of the countries that already have gone pretty much all the way. Sweden is a good example.

Advocates of continually-increasing federal spending would stoutly deny that the Big Government philosophy can lead here to what has happened under socialism elsewhere.

On the other hand, many Americans believe that such an end is inevitable if government is not cut down; that the United States may have, right now, this year, its last chance to curb free-spending government and turn around.

That's why they are appalled at the spending turn of the Eisenhower administration.

They feel that if this administration can't or won't cut government programs then we may never see another that can or will.

m. (B7/f3)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, April 27, 1957

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Letters Count
In Budget Cuts

By PAUL MILLER

NEW YORK – This is Newspaper Week in New York, or has been. It is a good time to congratulate Times-Union readers who write letters to their public servants on what now appears to be a hopeful prospect:

Your letters, along with those of other newspaper readers the nation over, calling for less government spending, are having a continuing effect.

You began getting results several weeks ago. Now even congressmen and appointed officials, who took you lightly at first, are beginning to pay some heed. The cuts in the federal budget will not be as big as they ought to be, but it is clear that nothing short of a national crisis can prevent some saving.

The high point in the changing scene came when President Eisenhower sent up his letter indicating points at which he thought the budget might be trimmed. This letter was inadequate and was a long time coming, but it was a step in the right direction.

* * *

KEEP ON WRITING your senators and congressmen . . . you have good company.

Here is an interesting example , of which I learned only this week, about what is going on in one community – the little city of Mexico, Mo. Representative citizens got together and formed "The Mexico, Missouri Citizens Committee to Curb Inflation." They purchased a full page advertisement in the Mexico Evening Ledger and printed an open letter to Missouri senators and congressmen which they asked other newspaper readers to tear out and mail. After reviewing government spending policies, their message concluded:

"We believe the time has come when we should be more grateful to our chosen representatives for what they SAVE us than for what they get for us. INFLATION MUST BE CURBED."

That page advertisement, by the way, is being circulated throughout the country.

Sad But true Tax Story

Three news stories struck me particularly here this week, as follows:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1 – The speech by our own Marion Folsom in which he defended the Eisenhower budget and its proposed school building program.

2 – The report of the further rise in living costs – two-tenths of 1 per cent in March, making 12 of the last 13 months in which consumer prices have gone up. As the New York Herald Tribune put it: "The buying power of the dollar is being steadily eroded and the end is not in sight."

It surely isn't. The cost of living went up 3.7 per cent in the last 12 months. It has gone up more than 4 per cent since Eisenhower took office in January, 1953.

3 – Continuing talk about a tax cut in Washington.

We have debated editorially with good friend Marion Folsom over his school building program and will not rehash the arguments here. I will repeat that I find arguments for federal school building programs in 1957 a lot like the past school spending arguments of the New Dealers the Eisenhower administration was going to show up. Senator Harry Byrd of Virginia notes we have had the New Deal and the Fair Deal. Now, says Byrd, we have the Present Deal.

As for the cost of living increases: Government spending contributes to this. Yet the Eisenhower administration still is largely espousing halfway measures or none at all toward the budget.

With all this – more spending programs proposed, only minor budget cuts – it is useless to talk in Congress or anywhere else, about cutting income taxes. Tax cuts under present conditions would only further affect the value of the dollar. It is sad, but it is true.

A New Eisenhower Button

HERE AND THERE: The story in New York is that a company manufacturing campaign novelties is going out bring out a new Eisenhower button. It is to read: "I Like Edgar". . . . It is interesting to a former Washington reporter to read the confessions of FDR's press agent about killing or withholding from distribution, pictures that showed President Roosevelt's true physical condition back in 1944 and 1945. I thought then and I think now that it was wrong and a disservice to the country . . . . One of the points of great and admirable contrast between Roosevelt and Eisenhower is Eisenhower's disarming candor about his health. This is a tribute also to New Yorker Jim Hagerty, Ike's press secretary, who has insisted from the first on giving the public even the most intimate facts about the President's condition.

n. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
1811

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

May 11, 1957

Economy Tide Is Rolling

By PAUL MILLER

Too much and too late. That will be the final verdict of many on President Eisenhower's plans to go to the people next Tuesday with a plea for support of his budget.

The budget of $71.8 billions is too much.

The President's radio-TV plea is too late.

Nearly everybody outside Washington seems agreed that the budget ought to be cut sharply. Letters have deluged Congress. The economy tide is rolling. Let it roll.

As for an appeal to all the letter writers and others, it climaxes a series of stop-and-go developments at the White House that appears beyond explanation.

First, after sending his budget to Congress, the President seemed to invite cuts. Later, under growing public pressure, he had a review made which should have been made before the budget went to Congress.

Then the President wrote a letter offering suggestions as to where cuts might be made. Yet, at about the same time, in his press conferences, he seemed to be trying to defend the budget in its entirety.

And now, after a foreign aid economy proposal, he's going on the air to ask public support of the budget with the argument that it's necessary for national security.

The people love Ike but they are not buying more and more government spending by his administration – particularly when many who voted for him thought they were buying something different.

* * *

DISILLUSIONMENT IS APPARENT on all sides. Take the letter written to the President this week by W.H. Doerfner, a General Motors executive, reading:

"I will no longer support you nor will I support the Republican party as long as it condones your proven unsound monetary policies and your New Deal-inspired international WPA."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Perhaps not many would go all the way with Mr. Doerfner, but there's no question – judged from what we read in our mail and hear otherwise at The Times-Union and other newspapers.

People are fed up. They are showing it locally as well as nationally.

Was there any significance, or is any trend indicated, in the fact that Rochester area communities have voted down three or four major community projects in just the last few days? It could be . . . .

o. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
May 18, 1957

If No Real Economy – What Is Coming?

There Must Be a Start --Will Ike Make It?

By PAUL MILLER

Few can come off anything but second-best in an argument with President Eisenhower over defense spending.

Some tried in Ike's first term when his administration made certain defense cuts. They did not get far.

Now there are senators who would spend even more on defense than Ike's budget proposes – and there are many who would spend less.

There will be compromises, as always. Still it is a good bet that strictly military spending proposals will come through Congress without major cuts.

But –

The big debate over the Eisenhower administration budget does not center around strictly military spending.

It is not unlikely that he White House speech writers picked that angle for the President's first speech last Tuesday night, because they knew as we all do that the President is less vulnerable in military affairs than in others. Again, who wants to take on General Ike over what's needed to preserve our safety in the Atomic Age?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

THE SPEECH DEALT largely with military matters, with brief bows to others. Sandwiched in was a specific – and vigorous plug – for a "four-year emergency program of schoolroom construction at a cost of $325 million a year."

Just as Roosevelt and Truman used to do, the President argued that this school building program is only temporary.

The American public has learned that emergency programs and emergency tax hikes, almost without exception, go on and on.

Besides, Ike wouldn't be President when the school building program came to the end of its four-year term. He would have no control over it.

What would happen, based on past experience, is this:

If the "emergency" program is passed, the experts will find, at the end of the four years, that there still remains and "urgent need" for its continuance.

They will recommend that it be carried on a while. Then the education lobby will lambaste those "benighted champions of false economy" who want to "scuttle the program." Cynical? No, practical. See if you can name one government "temporary" program that hasn't gone something like that.

* * *

NEXT TUESDAY, the president makes the second and last of his reports to the people.

He did not meet the real economy issue in his first talk. Let's hope he will do so next time.

This real issue, disturbing so many, is what caused the seeming turnabout on the part of the Eisenhower administration? What has come over the President himself?

During the first Ike term, a budget of over $70 billion was cut to $65 billion and there was a $7 billion tax cut.

Now we casually are handed a $71.8 billion budget, as if the people would take it for granted that in a period of greatest prosperity they are to go on shelling out for more and more government spending with no official mention whatever of any specific plans for change.

Hard to Accept

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The President recommended no cuts in his speech. He spoke broadly of programs of Congress. He mentioned none specifically that he would like Congress to abandon.

Already, it is being reported that the next federal budget, now being planned, will be even bigger.

If there is to be no real move toward government economy this year, and none next – when is it coming? There has to be a start some time. That's what people are saying. That's what the President seemed to ignore.

At the President's press conference this week, a reporter reminded the President that some Republicans believe he has "moved to the left politically" since 1952. Ike said:

"If anything, I think I have become more conservative."

On the record, this is hard to accept.

*** * ***

FLASHBACK: In 1951, I interviewed General Eisenhower, then NATO commander, at his Paris headquarters about the possibility that he might be the Republican presidential nominee in 1952.

I told him, "A lot of people back home don't know whether you really are a Republican."

He smiled and replied:

"Of course, I'm a Republican – but I'm an open-eyed Republican" . . . .

p. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, May 25, 1957

They Still Like Ike
--But What About Budget?

By PAUL MILLER

The best thing about President Eisenhower's TV budget speeches was Ike himself.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He looked well, spoke strongly – and the country took a good look and relaxed. They still like Ike.

It remains to be seen whether the President sold his budget. There is no doubt that he re-sold himself to many who were beginning to wonder. While still not agreeing with him about his budget, they felt reassured that Ike himself is honestly convinced of the need for all those billions.

* * *

A PERSONAL APPRAISAL of Upstate New York reaction, based on newspaper mail and fairly varied contacts, may be put in two paragraphs:

First speech – A failure.

Second speech – Stronger, more effective. Still not persuasive to the rank and file who are more opposed to foreign aid than anything else in our federal spending.

* * *

FORTUNATELY, I BELIEVE, for all of us the economy advocates in Congress remain strong.

Newspaper readers noted that both Rochester area congressmen, Kenneth B. Keating and Harold C. Ostertag, still believe not only that the budget in general can be cut but that funds for the armed services can be pruned "without" – as Ken Keating put it – "the slightest impairment of our defense potential."

* * *

SENATOR BYRD OF VIRGINIA hasn't given up.

I telephoned him as this was being written. As readers know, Byrd has urged what his critics call a "meat axe" approach to the budget – he'd whack out $6.5 billion. At President Eisenhower's press conference, a reporter asked comment on Byrd's proposed cuts. Ike said with a smile:

"That is going to be quite a trick, if he can do it."

Reaching Senator Byrd at his Capitol office, I asked him how about it. He said, well, he still has hopes for his overall cutting program which embraces the following:

3 billion dollars from domestic-civilian expenditures.

2 billions from foreign aid.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1.5 billions from defense appropriations.

"I'm asking that the budget-supporters go back to the presidential budget of just two years ago and explain to the people why we must spend $9 billions more now," said Senator Byrd, adding:

"The United States is better off and foreign countries are certainly no worse off."

MY OWN PERSONAL PREDICTION: Budget cuts all the way, including defense and foreign aid – but nothing even remotely approaching what Senator Byrd is shooting at.

More's the pity.

A fact that emerges from a recent survey, says NEWSWEEK magazine, is that a reaction has set in – even among Democrats – against the welfare-state philosophy of the 30s and 40s. It adds:

"For example, in predominantly Democratic Arizona (but which went for Mr. Eisenhower in 1952 and 1956) the question – 'Would you vote for the President today? – was usually answered 'No.' But many Arizonians – as well as many others around the country who answered in the negative – allowed that if Adlai Stevenson, Wayne Morse, or G. Mennen Williams (who generally are considered New Dealers) were running against him, they would 'have to go for Ike.'"

q. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, June 22, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Why Do We Make It 'Ike' Instead of Eisenhower?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By PAUL MILLER

An indignant lady reader writes:

"It's disgusting for people to refer to President Eisenhower as 'Ike' and even more so to refer to Mrs. Eisenhower as 'Mamie.' It should be 'President Eisenhower' or at least 'Eisenhower,' even in headlines. And Mrs. Eisenhower never should be headlined 'Mamie.' Undignified. That's what it is. And unbecoming."

Well what do YOU think?

And how'd the informality come up in the first place?

As in all such, the familiar use of first names or nicknames is encouraged and given impetus chiefly from two quarters:

1. Politicians during a campaign use a candidate's given name or nickname as indicating he is, after all, a down-to-earth, human individual, "close to the people." Eisenhower campaign literature played him up as "Ike," although it was not a political nickname for him. He was General Ike long before he was candidate Ike.

2. Headline writers have difficulty enough getting salient facts into small space with few letters. They greet a short name or popular nickname with cheers. Too, their irreverence where the mighty are concerned is traditional (and perhaps scandalous!) . . . .

THERE YOU ARE – and now a further thought about it:

President Eisenhower isn't the first president to be referred to freely by a nickname.

President Coolidge was Cal.

President Roosevelt was FDR.

President Truman was HST or Harry.

And, of course, there was the earlier Roosevelt known as Teddy . . . .

r. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, June 29, 1957
1818

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

AS I SEE IT

The Efficient Walter Wickins: Visitors Study and Take Note

By PAUL MILLER

. . . 'Ike's' OK with the President

It's all right with President Eisenhower if the headline writers call him Ike.

And with the President's lady if she's referred to as Mamie.

The White House was asked about it this week after a lady reader icily called down The Times-Union in particular, and newspapers in general, for their frequent use of nicknames.

"Neither the President nor Mrs. Eisenhower has any objection to being called 'Ike and Mamie,'" came the White House response.

"They regard the nicknames as terms of affection or endearment. As regards newspaper headlines, they are aware of the space problems. They do not mind the shorter names."

* * *

IT WAS RECALLED also that the question came up at a White House press conference in 1953. A reporter asked the President if he objected to the familiarity. He replied:

"Well, no, of course, I don't. All my life I have answered to that nickname, and I realize that individuals have their own ideas of the customs that should be applied to any office such as that one I now hold, and I would say that everybody's sense of the fitness of things and of good taste is the deciding factor.

"So far as I am concerned, it makes not the slightest difference, not the slightest difference."

* * *

OUR OWN OPINION: The nickname is OK, particularly in headlines or editorial comment, but it can be overdone and it certainly can be inappropriate at times.

We'll try to bear that in mind and, to the lady critic, thanks again . . . .

s. (B7/f5)

*

1819

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 6, 1957

AS I SEE IT

War Memorial Rumblings: Is It Time to Start Over?

By PAUL MILLER

. . . History Will Do Better by HST

They are dedicating the Harry S. Truman Memorial Library out in Independence, Mo., today.

Here are some recollections stirred in the mind of a newspaperman who (as a newsman) knew HST:

When tears filled Mr. Truman's eyes and he asked reporters to pray for him after he was sworn in as President on the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

When he came out of his modest apartment his first morning as President, en route to his first day at the White House, saw Associated Press reporter Ernest B. (Tony) Vacarro in the crowd, and called "Come on, Tony, let's go" – taking Tony "to work" with him in the White House limousine.

When he told of a visit by Russia's then Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov, following the United Nation's Organization conference at San Francisco and of their White House conversation:

Molotov asked if the United States were going to live up to the U.N. Charter and Mr. Truman said with an expletive that may have been "Hell!" This is no one-way street.

Is Russia going to live up to it?

When a reporter's expense account came in for approval (I was chief of the Associated Press Washington Bureau) reading something like this:

"$24.50 lost playing poker with Pres. Of U.S."

(I telephoned the reporter that I'd make a deal: I'd OK that item if he'd turn in any winnings that might come his way in future sittings).

THEN MR. TRUMAN CHANGED, not gradually, but pretty rapidly.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

At first he was the almost apologetic successor to a President he idolized and never dreamed of equaling.

Later on he was the cocky White House master who found any criticism increasingly hard to take and whose seeming snap judgments got him into more and more hot spots.

*** * ***

PERSONAL APPRAISAL: History will do better by Harry S. Truman than most contemporary commentators have . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:
RELIC – Mr. Truman shows split White House beam now in Truman Memorial Library.

t. (B7/f5)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 20, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Will Sen. Ives Run Again?
It Could Be Ken Keating

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Backseat for McCahill and Miller

Almost any story about photographs – even one highly personal – must be appropriate in Rochester.

This one concerns a weekend with Charles F. McCahill, former Rochester publisher, now an executive of the Cleveland News and the Plain Dealer.

*** * ***

HE WAS TELLING, even while driving us to his home from the airport, about the Kodak color picture he'd made of the Pope on a Vatican visit a few weeks ago. He was proudly showing it before we'd unpacked.

I had along some prints of pictures made of Vice President Nixon on his visit to Rochester a week ago. I promptly produced them.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Charlie McCahill was polite, but it was clear that he was a bit condescending when he suggested that he'd take his picture and I could bring the Nixon shots to a dinner with some friends.

*** * ***

WE'D SCARCELY ARRIVED and joined three or four other couples when Mr. McCahill said, "Paul, they'd probably like to see our pictures before dinner." As I began opening the photo envelope, another guest, a Clevelander I'd just met, reached for his inside coat pocket.

"That reminds me," he said quietly. I just happen to have a picture with me that you all might like to see."

He passed it around. One look, and Messrs. McCahill and Miller were ready to concede defeat.

The picture exhibited by our friend, taken last spring on the front steps of his Georgia place, showed him and his wife greeting distinguished visitors for lunch – President and Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

u. (B4/f28)

*****

The Washington Post
Wednesday, August 21, 1957

Stitches Saved Sophia's Day
A Sneeze Was Not Her Undoing

By Maxine Cheshire

STATUESQUE Sophia Loren finally met a man who made her "feel small" when introduced to six-footer Sen. Jack Kennedy (D-Mass.) yesterday, but he shook hands and bolted out of camera range before they could get acquainted.

"If that shy young man didn't want his picture taken with me, then why did he come HERE?" she inquired, gesturing toward a mob scene of jostling photographers and leering admirers who jammed the Italian Embassy for a late afternoon reception in her honor. Sen. Kennedy's bashful behavior left her with a puzzled expression on her face, in view of the fact that crowds of other Congressmen had been stepping on each others [sic] toes to have their meeting with the film star recorded by the cameras.

Sophia's first reaction was to pout good-naturedly. "I feel so small," she told Sen. Kennedy's less-reticent and also tall companion, Sen. George Smathers (D-Fla.). But she didn't mean her ego had been deflated. Buckling her knees, she stooped to something like 5 feet and added: "I have to look up to him. All afternoon, I have been looking down at everybody else" . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

SOPHIA even figured, indirectly, at a reception given yesterday by Vice President and Mrs. Richard M. Nixon in their Forest Lane home for friends in the newspaper world. Guests of honor Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller and other newsmen and their wives watched the Nixon's daughter, Tricia open a box containing two Italian dolls sent to her and her sister, Julie, by the film star.

It was part of the tour of the Nixon's new and spacious Wesley Heights home which the Millers and other guests were given. Old friends of the Nixons since the days when Miller was chief of the Washington Bureau, he and Mrs. Miller were in town from Rochester, N. Y., where he's president of the Gannett News Service.

Besides the dolls from Sophia Loren, Tricia Nixon proudly exhibited a litter of 3 small kittens, two days old . . . .

v. (B7/f5)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, August 24, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Reuther Runs the Course: Everything Back to Normal

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Confidence in McClellan

Young Robert F. Kennedy is most in the limelight, but it's Senator McClellan, the Arkansas Democrat, who gives me the feeling that the rackets investigation is in good hands.

I visited the hearing this week in a room of the Senate office Building at Washington. Senator McClellan is chairman of the Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor and Management Field. Kennedy is chief counsel. They're working on labor mostly now. They'll get around to management later.

They sat with other members of the committee behind a long table on a platform backed to the wall at an end of the room. At young Kennedy's side sat his brother, John, the senator.

At a smaller table on the floor below and before their platform this week sat James R. Hoffa of the Teamsters Union and his lawyer, George Fitzgerald.

Reporters and photographers were at tables moved in close about the witnesses. Spectators swamped the chairs that filled the remainder of the high-ceilinged hearing room; standees overflowed around the walls and out the door.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

I HOPE I'M PROVED WRONG, but watching the Kennedy young men, splendid as they are, I couldn't help feeling at times that it was a case of boys trying to do men's work.

Senator McClellan is something else again. The Democrats have many presidential nomination possibilities for 1960. McClellan won't be overlooked as a prospect, if he doesn't stub his toe in the meantime.

* * *

INCIDENTALLY, WHAT YOU HAVE BEEN READING and hearing as to the work of the McClellan Committee is only a beginning.

The big job will come after the hearings. Then the committee must draw its legislative recommendations.

Consideration presumably will be given to, among other things, ways to prevent use of union funds for loans to officers and favors to officers' friends; also to preventing the use of union funds for personal empire building by ambitious union officers.

PHOTO
Caption:

Robert Kennedy, counsel for the rackets committee, confers with Senator John McClellan (right), chairman of the committee.

w. (B7/f5)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, August 31, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Why Can't Republicans Win? It Started with the Budget

By PAUL MILLER

It takes no expert to conclude that there's something wrong some place in the Republican party when –

1. A popular president gets as little from Congress as Mr. Eisenhower has from the 85th.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

2. A special election in Wisconsin provides a shattering Democratic upset for an Eisenhower Republican who'd been generally expected to win.

The Democrats were quick to proclaim that Democrat William Proxmire's Wisconsin victory showed growing disapproval of Republican conduct of foreign affairs, or of the Republican farm program or of so-called tight money.

The Republicans were more inclined to believe that a Republican party split in Wisconsin was mainly to blame.

* * *

WHO'S CORRECT? As usual, no one factor was wholly conclusive. The fact is that Republican party splits are not confined to Wisconsin, although they may be worse there than in many states.

Republicans, like the Democrats, are split all over. The dissenters, however, are for the most part mild dissenters. They don't like a lot of what the party seems to be standing for at Washington. They like even that better than the Dealism, both New and Fair, before Ike, yet not enough to become enthusiastic – indeed, in many cases, not enough to vote.

Reports from Wisconsin say that many conservative Republicans and pro-McCarthy people stayed home on election day.

Whatever the full story, as our Washington bureau chief, Paul Martin pointed out, Eisenhower Republicans have a record of losing elections:

Former Govs. Langlie in Washington, McKay in Oregon, Thornton in Colorado, Peterson in Nebraska; also former Senators Duff in Pennsylvania and Lodge in Massachusetts.

*** * ***

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER, whose own personal popularity goes right on staying high, surely will go down as one of the great exemplars of patience and fortitude.

He doesn't threaten Congress.

He doesn't get mad at the Russians

He doesn't publicly second-guess party leaders over such debacles as that in Wisconsin.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

As he kept on taking a buffeting from Congress, a reporter asked him if he might abandon his "friendly persuasion" method of dealing with Congress in favor of "give 'em hell" a la Harry Truman.

No, he said in good-natured reply, he'd just have to go on doing "what is natural for me."

* * *

IS THAT GOOD ENOUGH? Or is even more vigorous White House leadership indicated in developments since the landslide of November 1956?

The politicos and editorial writers will be busy with that question for a long time.

I believe it goes beyond that. I believe the President's influence began slipping in the uncertain back-and-forth over the shocking budget he sent to Congress. It was out of character with what much of the public thought an Eisenhower budget ought to be.

Later, the White House seemed to turn around and help cut a budget which Eisenhower had defended at first. There seemed to be a swing back toward a somewhat more conservative position.

But the budget battle was the beginning of Republican post-election defections and doubt; the beginning but, I think, not the end.

(2) POLITICAL CARTOONS
Captions:

'Congress Just Isn't Giving Us Much Leadership'

'Lopsided Gunfight'

x. (B7/f6)

*

Rochester Times-Union
September 21, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Politics and Convention: Reapportionment Is Issue

By PAUL MILLER

The Kennedys . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

One more letter, this from a Massachusetts Republican who is a keen observer of politics in general and New England politics in particular; written after a belated reading of the Aug. 24 column in which I reported a brief visit to the Senate Labor Rackets hearing at Washington:

"As to the Kennedys – particularly Robert F. Kennedy, as you say – I do not agree with you (that 'they sometimes look like boys trying to do men's work'). You have to get a bit more of the picture of Bob to realize the terrific job he has done and is doing.

"The youthful appearance, especially that of John, is emphasized when they are together. Both are conscious of this, and possibly as a result both devote a tremendous amount of time and energy to behind-the-scenes spadework.

"Their hard work shows, in my opinion; at the same time their teen-age mannerisms may be causing their elders to discount them.

"And, in this connection, don't forget that what may look to you as 'a case of boys trying to do men's work' may not look that way to those 40 and under, who may constitute a majority of the voters in 1958 1nd 1960."

Touché!

y. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, September 28, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Conference with a Goal: Better Newspapers for You

By PAUL MILLER

Time Will Prove Eisenhower Right

Everybody knows how the Arkansas Affair might have been "better handled."

The second-guessers are having a field day, Gov. Orval Faubus is on a Yell County speaking tour (appropriately); Old Satchmo may go to Russia after all (if asked [he never went]).

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Had he acted earlier, it might have been argued successively that Little Rock authorities were not given time enough to get the situation in hand.

Had he waited much longer, even worse incidents than those pictured in your newspapers might have resulted.

z. (B7/f7)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, November 2, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Reporter's Good Job: Separates Facts and Opinions

By PAUL MILLER

There has been growing criticism of President Eisenhower and this week Paul Martin, chief of our Washington Bureau, took note of it with an investigation and a report to readers that accomplished two things:

1. It rightly pointed out the distinction between questions of whether the President is providing effective leadership (a matter of opinion) and whether he is adequately informed by his associates (which can be answered simply by getting the facts).

2. It refuted the contention of the brother columnists, Stewart and Joseph Alsop, that "there are plenty of reasons for believing that the President now operates on a part-time basis."

Martin accomplished what he did by plain, old-fashioned reporting. He dug into the President's procedures and interviewed the persons involved in the informational pipelines to and from Mr. Eisenhower. Then he reported what he learned and heard (Page 15, Times-Union, Oct. 29). A reader could draw his own conclusions.

*** * ***

THIS READER'S CONCLUSION:

I'd rather have Ike part-time than most of his detractors and opponents full-time, but there really is NO time when a president can be or is completely off-duty.

I do believe the country deserved a prompt statement from the President after Sputnik telling (1) Why the U.S. was beaten and (2) What the White House and Pentagon are doing about it.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Nor is it too late for a public review, reappraisal and statement of future aims. Only the President can effectively make it. He should do so.

aa. (B7/f7)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
November 9, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Public relations Lesson: Tell Truth, Frankly and Fully

By PAUL MILLER

. . . The Man They WON"T Forget

The Democrats now find themselves with about as many potential presidential candidates as New York has possible Republican candidates for governor.

New Jersey's Governor Meyner received a big push in his re-election victory last Tuesday.

Already much in the picture were Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts, Senator Kefauver of Tennessee, Governor Williams of Michigan and Senator Symington of Missouri; plus, and don't write him off, twice-defeated or not, Adlai Stevenson.

None of these is a clear standout. A free-for-all is the 1960 Democratic convention prospect . . . .

*** * ***

AGAINST THE RASH of Democratic presidential hopefuls, Vice President Nixon rates a clear standout in the GOP. He is the best campaigner the Republicans have had in years – a reputation not dimmed by the trouncing Jersey Republicans took this week despite two days of speech-making by Nixon.

Republican politicians the nation over will not soon forget that Nixon had the courage to go in and fight for a Republican candidate few gave much of a chance.

. . . Missile Double-take

The Eisenhower administration clearly did a double-take in the missiles field. Only two weeks ago, top strategy was reported to be:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Sit tight, let the new defense secretary, Mr. McElroy, improve the information and publicity program; and see what comes from the inevitable congressional investigations.

There were those at Washington who did not think this adequate. They wanted a dramatic move by the President after Sputnik I. But they felt they getting scant encouragement before Sputnik II.

There is no way to assess the effect of the Sputniks on the elections, if any. It is apparent, however, that the country at large wanted something more than it was getting from the President himself prior to his Thursday night statement.

The question still not answered fully by the administration, and certain to be raised repeatedly from here on, is: How did Uncle Sam get behind Russia in the first place?

bb. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, November 30, 1957

AS I SEE IT

The Eisenhower Question: Shall he Remain in Office?

By PAUL MILLER

White House denials to the contrary, it seems only logical that President Eisenhower and his intimates would have considered whether he should continue in office and, if so, under what conditions.

If they have not done so, they should have; ordinary prudence would dictate it.

Few presidents have enjoyed the prestige and popularity that are deservedly Eisenhower's. Still, while most Americans undoubtedly hope and pray that the President can serve out his term, they don't want him to attempt it at the possible cost of his health.

And there's more to it than that.

If it is at all likely that the President is to be even partly incapacitated for any length of time, it can only be hoped that he will officially put somebody else in charge for the period.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A more or less headless White House is something that the United States can ill afford at any time, certainly not now.

So, while White House aides may continue to insist there's no discussion there of any change, it's certainly the subject of major speculation elsewhere the world over.

* * *

THREE POSSIBILITIES are generally discussed:

1. The powers of the President would be exercised in fact, though not in name, by the White House staff. This was done during Eisenhower's past illnesses.

2. The President would resign, explaining health would not permit him to continue.

3. The President would continue in office, but would designate the vice president as acting president for the period of convalescence only.

Based on reported comment in Washington and throughout the country, I believe sentiment would favor the President's remaining in office as long as possible but lightening his burdens.

If that does represent popular will, and if the President chooses to follow it, the best bet would seem to be that Vice President Nixon (Possibility No. 3) will be designated.

There was much criticism at the political level and otherwise of Sherman Adams, assistant to the President, in other Eisenhower absences from the White House.

This Adams criticism has not lessened in recent months.

Nixon, contrarily, has grown steadily in stature and public regard – though he still has not silenced all of his critics.

It is generally felt that Nixon was well ahead of the White House in correctly appraising the grave significance of Russia's earth satellites.

* * *

TO CHECK REACTION to the President's illness The Wall Street Journal queried more than 100 industry officials, housewives, shoppers, and others coast-to-coast.

The Journal concluded as follows:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Businessmen are worried by Ike's upset, but expect no serious national complications, economic or political . . . A goodly number of people believe Ike might do well to resign if his health doesn't improve. Few express concern over the prospect of Vice President Nixon's growing voice in administration affairs."

* * *

THE SITUATION CLEARLY CALLS for new looks at Vice President Nixon.

Here is mine:

Dick Nixon has come a long way since 1952. He was probably his party's best political campaigner even then, at 38. Now there's no question about it.

No man could work harder at a job than he has at being vice president. In so doing, he has learned much and matured fast.

He knows that there must be compromises in politics, but he has hardened even so in his own convictions. One example: He is a more outspoken champion of continued large-scale foreign aid even than the President, although some of his closest party friends and supporters do not fully agree with him, including yours truly.

He has enormous energy. On political or on government goodwill tours, he is never too weary to meet and talk with any and all who want to meet and talk with him.

He is articulate. No member of the Eisenhower team can more skillfully discuss administration policy and attitudes whether with critics or friends.

He is a warm and friendly person who tries to like and be liked. And the same for his attractive wife, Pat. Together, they are a pair we are lucky to have on the job for us in Washington and in the world at large, whether or not the future holds still greater tasks for them than those they are, separately and together, discharging now.

* * *

THE WHITE HOUSE HANDLING of the President's illness reports – slow, evasive and incomplete for hours – emphasizes anew the folly of trying to cover up important facts.

Whether in government or business, the best rule for dealing with the public on matters of public interest and concern is this:

Tell the truth, promptly and fully, however distasteful the telling.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The truth will become known eventually in any event.

Doubts and false reports grow from delays and misrepresentations. Then they have to be overtaken. So tell the truth and get it over with – it's the No. 1 rule of good public relations.

*** * ***

ONCE THE LID WAS TAKEN OFF at the White House, information about the President's illness flowed freely; public tension and doubt subsided.

Despite lapses, I often reflect, we scarcely know what White House "secrecy" is today, recalling that of 1944-45.

President Roosevelt was a haggard shell, and looked it, but any suggestion that he was ailing brought cries of reproach, wrath, and indignation from those around him. They suppressed facts, destroyed photos, and fought to maintain the myth to the end, even through his shaky report to Congress after the Yalta Conference.

I sat in the press gallery that February day in 1945 with a copy of the advance text of what was given out as FDR's own Yalta report. Actually, of course, it had been prepared for him. He appeared unable even to read it straight. He made so many mistakes, changes, and husky-voiced interpolations that trained stenographers were required to keep the advanced text corrected as he droned along.

cc. Editor & Publisher
December 7, 1957

Shop Talk at Thirty

By Robert U. Brown

The first few hours following President Eisenhower's recent upset illustrated once again the necessity for immediate release of complete and factual information in such circumstances.

Anything less than that breeds rumors and false reports.

For almost 23 hours the report of the President's "chill" was permitted to stand in the face of questioning and suspicious reporters. When a revised report was released it did not make clear to laymen the exact nature of the illness. There is some indication that even experienced medical men were in doubt as to its meaning. Inept handling of the release and its meaning brought news bulletins ranging from "heart attack" to "mild stroke."

Inexperience on the part of Hagerty's assistants certainly had something to do with the snafu. But in fairness to them, especially Anne Wheaton, it is evident that the press secretary's office was left out on a limb with little help from White House authorities who knew what was going on.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Public Relations

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of the Rochester (N.Y.) Times-Union, wrote Nov. 30 that "doubts and false reports grow from delays and misrepresentations. Then they have to be overtaken. So tell the truth and get it over with – it's the No. 1 rule of good public relations.

"Once the lid was taken off at the White House, information about the President's illness flowed freely; public tension and doubt subsided."

Mr. Miller commented that "despite lapses, we scarcely know what White House secrecy is today, recalling that of 1944-45." He was head of the Washington bureau of the Associated Press in those days and remembers:

"President Roosevelt was a haggard shell, and looked it, but any suggestion that he was ailing brought cries of reproach, wrath, and indignation from those around him. They suppressed facts, destroyed photos, and fought to maintain the myth to the end, even through his shaky report to Congress after the Yalta Conference.

"I sat in the press gallery that February day in 1945 with a copy of the advance text of what was given out as FDR's own Yalta report. Actually, of course, it had been prepared for him. He appeared unable even to read it straight. He made so many mistakes, changes, and husky-voiced interpolations that trained stenographers were required to keep the advance text corrected as he droned along."

dd. (B7/f7)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, December 7, 1957

AS I SEE IT

'The Treatment' for Nixon; It Recalls Truman Contrast

By PAUL MILLER

James B. Reston, writing in the New York Times, reports that Vice President Nixon is getting "The Treatment" in Washington these days.

"The Treatment" may be Washingtonese for many things. In Nixon's particular case, with his role in government continuing to grow, it means:

Being played up to by people who were only casual a few months ago.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Having to voice opinions, take a stand, in groups which have appeared somewhat less eager for his advice and counsel heretofore.

Becoming literally snowed under by social invitations and requests for speeches and autographs, beset at every turn by willing, outstretched hands.

* * *

THE SITUATION RECALLS a contrast, and an impression at the time, in the case of Harry S. Truman.

Just before the death of President Roosevelt on the afternoon of April 12, 1945, I was at a reception given by the late Joseph Farrington, the delegate from Hawaii, in his Washington home.

The Trumans were there, milling with the other guests, when one of the best known and most highly regarded foreign ambassadors in wartime Washington arrived impressively with his attractive wife.

They instantly became the center of attention, circling the room with a perfunctory handshake here and another there.

It was noted that they spent no more time and effort on Harry and Bess Truman than on any other. Then they departed for some other party.

When next I thought about it, was at 2 a.m. of the morning after President Roosevelt's death in Warm Springs, Ga. There had been scarcely time for more than a bite until that late hour. I came out of my Associated Press office in the Washington Star building and hailed a taxi.

Driving out Massachusetts Avenue past the great, still-lighted embassy of the ambassador who'd had no time for the Trumans at the Farrington party, I imagined him reproaching himself in a restless, wakeful night – perhaps with some help from his wife.

"Why didn't I take the opportunity for a more cordial contact with Mr. Truman? But how could I know he was going to become President of the United States almost the very next day!"

The Trumans never forgot those with whom they had been close when he was "just the vice president," helping with the dishes in a modest apartment. They remained the same Harry and Bess to the old friends and were, rightly of course, choosy about the new.

* * *

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

ONLY THE PRESIDENT'S ILLNESS, and that happily light, plus his insistence from the start that the vice president be given greater duties and responsibilities, figure, we can be thankful, in Dick Nixon's increasing prominence.

But the parallel with Truman stands all the same. He's doubtless hearing from new admirers every day where he was conscious only of critics before.

That's life, I guess. It's politics, I know.

. . . Seeing for Yourself

A man who has been a newspaper reporter never quite gets away from wanting to see for himself and then write about what he sees – even if he has to do it between telephones and office talkathons – known as conferences.

Which is by way of saying that there may be a Paris dateline on what appears in this space a week hence.

I hope to get over there for the "summit" meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. It begins on Dec. 16.

There is a bit of nostalgia about this. Last time, I was at NATO headquarters – in 1951 – it was to interview the then commander-in-chief of NATO military forces. I wanted to learn whether it was true, as reported back home, that he really might be thinking of seeking the Republican presidential nomination in 1952!

ee. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, December 14, 1957

AS I SEE IT

We Could Take a Licking On NATO Missile Base Plan

By PAUL MILLER

PARIS – The United States goes into the NATO summit conference on Monday with no assurance whatsoever that we may not take a diplomatic licking to top off the other reverses starting with Sputnik I away back there on Oct. 1.

To review: While we still were trying to decide whether we were surprised by the first baby moon, Russia fired off another, and with a dog aboard. Then came President Eisenhower's stroke.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Now as our delegation flies in after a trip given over doubtless to last-minute skull practice among Secretary Dulles and his associates, nobody knows quite what may come next.

This much is granted: The President's decision to come here was a shot in the arm. Our Ike is still No. 1, as he of course should be, among Western leaders.

Known then as the savior of Europe in World War II, he was the first commander-in-chief after NATO was formed and could have won any election in any of the countries represented here. The coming few days will show whether he still is as popular.

And, whether he can win enough of the arguments next week is something else again.

* * *

THE WAY IT LOOKS TODAY, the U.S. will be asking more than we can give in return. Our allies know we are dependent on bases on their soil for defense against Russia's long-range missiles which we cannot now match. Hence, our side is in for rough bargaining.

The United States so far has obtained an agreement on bases with Britain. That's all. Other nations have been resisting. They can see their countries becoming magnets for Russia's own medium range missiles if the U.S. were to be firing missiles from bases on their territory come World War III.

Thus, the bases problem – how all NATO countries are to fit into our missile program – will be among the most difficult.

Other major problems include the need to agree on Russia's renewed propaganda war and to find ways for better coordination of military forces and weapons.

* * *

ACTUALLY, MUCH OF THE PROGRAM the United States will put forth, as well as that of others, already has been under discussion in preliminary committee meetings here.

That's where, for example, we got an indication of the depth of the opposition to our proposal to set up foreign bases and nuclear stockpiles.

The actual meetings next week will, if all goes well from the U.S. point of view, consist largely of ratifying sessions for what already has been under study and discussion.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By the same token, the meetings also could turn into a diplomatic setback for the U.S., sure then to be widely trumpeted as such by the Communists, if little is accomplished and resounding agreement is not reached on, say, our missiles proposal and coordination of military forces and defense budgets by NATO countries.

Indications are that our allies will put a high price on any agreement on missile bases with some such demands as these:

1. That eventually though not right now, a European general be named NATO supreme commander.

2. That the U.S. pay every cent of the cost of the missile sites; also that more NATO weapons be bought form European makers.

There are more. Those give an idea.

. . . Reflections on Transatlantic Flight

If the Eisenhower administration has an adequate program for catching and overhauling Russia in the intercontinental missiles race, it still hasn't been well presented to ease popular doubts and misgivings.

The President's illness interfered with his own speaking program. It had been planned to restore confidence and win back slipping popular support. The fact that Administration speakers appeared to be riding off in all directions did not help.

Vice President Nixon was the first, and for some days the only top Administration figure, to concede the gravity of our situation and urge prompt action.

* * *

NIXON HIMSELF GOT THE SHOE on the wrong foot this week. He told reporters:

"Let's get away from our wailing walls and act like Americans. We've got work to do. Let's get on with it like Americans."

Where this misses is that people aren't "wailing" because Russia has a missile that can put an atomic bomb on New York. People are wailing because the administration has been slow and awkward in putting together a convincing response.

Inez Robb, a pretty lady columnist who can swing like Marciano with her typewriter, delivered the most biting rebuttal to the vice president's "wailing wall" remark. She wrote in the New York World Telegram and Sun:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"There's a wailing wall from New York to San Francisco. It is not crowded with cowards or sunshine patriots or quitters, but with honest citizens who are crying aloud for an Administration alert to the present crisis, imbued with a sense of urgency and capable of formulating a program for action.

"In the meantime, about the only thing the average citizen can do is pay his taxes and pray, and among the things he prays for is leadership from Washington and relief from political claptrap."

Nixon, who can take it as well as dish it out, probably enjoyed Miss Robb's rejoinder himself. It should be required reading by some of his associates.

* * *

WHILE THE ADMINISTRATION was woefully slow getting up steam, progress has been made on the missiles front despite the tragic and over-publicized dud at Canaveral.

Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy has moved hearteningly with the pressing problems of defense changes (such as providing for even greater dispersal of our retaliatory airpower.) Sputnik I roared and whistled into the heavens just 10 days before McElroy was sworn in. He is starting very fast under the crushing additional burdens now heaped upon his office.

ff. (B4/f29)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
December 16, 1957

President Prays for Peace On Eve of Paris Conference

By PAUL MILLER
President of The Gannett Newspapers

PARIS, Dec. 15 – President Eisenhower prayed for peace today.

He joined perhaps 800 other worshippers at the great gray American Cathedral in special interfaith services for success of the NATO conference.

The President was seated in a pew well forward in left center. He bowed humbly there during prayers, forehead on his arms, his thinning hair accentuated.

Thus he worshipped on the eve of this conclave of Western powers joined for peace through mutual defense in 1949 and faced with critical new threats now.

Temperatures were in the 20s. A raw wind whipped the decorative flags outside. Worshippers kept on their coats at the start. They craned at the President and his party.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Secretary Dulles took part in the Episcopal reading service under flags of NATO countries hanging from the high vaulted ceiling.

The President joined at the close in the century-old hymn concluding: "Whom shall we trust but Thee O Lord? Where rest but on this faithful word? None ever called on Thee in vail; give peace, O God, give peace again."

At least one American recalled Washington on his knees at Valley Forge and Lincoln praying alone in his study, watching Dwight D. Eisenhower this bleak cold Sunday in Paris.

gg. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
December 21, 1957, Page 10

AS I SEE IT

On-the-Scene Paris Report: 'We've Got to Win or Else . . .'

By PAUL MILLER

PARIS – I don't know whether it was worth President Eisenhower's risking his health, but the NATO "Summit" conference – so-called because he and other heads of state did attend – must be put down as a success as of now.

The week has shown that the United States is a long way from having lost its influence, but that it takes more work to exercise it. There is more solidarity among North Atlantic Treaty Organization members than many had thought.

That could be one sum-up of the conference.

Another is that it actually won't be possible fully to evaluate its success or failure for months.

Agreement was reached to accept the U.S. offer to send over intermediate range ballistic missiles (IRBM); also, among other things, to encourage new contacts with Russia.

But there is nothing specific on the IRBMs, which we won't have, apparently, for 18 months anyway. The sites and the full program will have to be negotiated, nation by nation. Some may or may not accept them when the time comes – although there is supposed to be some moral obligation involved.

And there is nothing specific on Russia. The West, through various channels, will renew the oft-frustrated efforts to get some political agreement with the Communists.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

This much is certain:

We came off better than generally expected by the so-called experts. A week ago here there was widespread doubt that any general missile understanding would be possible.

. . . Biggest Story

THIS PROBABLY WAS THE FIRST international conference where one man's health (President Eisenhower's) was the biggest story of one entire day and the subject of inquiry at every press conference thereafter.

London and Paris newspapers played the story across the top of front pages when Ike excused himself from a dinner and went to bed. Everything else became secondary for hours.

I wondered why he didn't collapse at the opening session Monday. The big circular table (see the picture below) all but smoked under lights trained upon the area for TV and newsreel cameras. Ike fidgeted and perspired while two statesmen, who were down for only perfunctory remarks ahead of him, seized the opportunity and held forth for half an hour. Then he required 20 minutes to deliver his own. It would have been an ordeal for anybody.

He took a nap every day and loafed when he could. But he had a wearing round of it. He attended dinners every night but the one; made the major address of the conference; had uncounted minor meetings with individuals and groups; and motored out to address old friends at Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe.

Finally, he spoke up as the conference was about to close with the suggestion of thirty seconds of silent prayer. Aides and attendants also joined. It was a sobering scene, climaxing the discussions that had gone before.

*** * ***

ALL THE SAME, as Ike began preparing for his report to the nation, due Monday night, it could not be ignored that he still has not been discharged from his doctor's care.

Veteran White House reporters are under constant strain and pressure over the President.

Said one:

"I'm afraid to get more than minutes away from the White House press room any more for fear there might be an emergency and my wire uncovered."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

That's life. Newspaper life.

. . . Mr. Dulles' Smile

SECRETARY DULLES WAS ENTITLED to the broad smile he wore as he took off for home by way of a stop in Madrid for a visit with Dictator Franco.

Seldom has an American official gone into a major international conference amid such a storm of criticism.

Had our side emerged without a missile agreement there would have been new demands for his scalp in Washington.

What will the Dulles critics say now?

They'll say for one, that President Eisenhower, not Dulles, carried the conference. In this they will be partly correct, at least. But that would be true in the case of any conference attended by any President and his secretary of state.

There's no question about it – the Europeans don't like Dulles. Why? The answer is as hard to find as the answer to why so many American voters used to say they didn't like Nixon. Perhaps the Europeans will change, too.

David Beetle, editor of the Albany Knickerbocker News, in Paris for his newspaper, interviewed numbers of European reporters. He found few to say a good word for Dulles. And, on the Sunday before the conference opened here, Dulles was greeted by a lead article on a London editorial page (widely circulated in Paris) headed "It's Time to Stand Up to Dulles."

I believe that Europeans, by and large, prefer American Democrats to American Republicans; also that they feel Dulles is more interested in a policy with which the U.S. Senate can go along than one which, if there must be a choice, Europe likes. I recall also that every recent secretary of state has been under fire one way or another – Hull, Stettinius, Byrnes, even General Marshall, and of course Acheson.

. . . A Hagerty Slip

COMPETENT JIM HAGERTY, a New Yorker who was Governor Dewey's trusted aide and now is press secretary to Eisenhower, seldom loses his self-control, even in a job where trying circumstances are the rule rather than the exception.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He blew his top here. What happened was that a Paris Herald Tribune columnist printed a very funny column purporting to be questions and answers at a fanciful Hagerty press conference on Ike's health.

Hagerty called a press conference to term the column "unadulterated rot" and demanded equal front page space for his response.

The Herald Tribune presently is engaged in promoting the columnist for sale to other newspapers. What Hagerty accomplished – as is usually the case in such slips – was to (1) give the columnist material for another column and (2) also give him free publicity in America as every wire service reported the blow-up.

. . . Need to Know

What now?

It mostly depends on us. And we, you and I, mostly depend on the leadership we get from Washington.

Many will hope that, in his report to the nation on Monday, the President will go far beyond merely reviewing the Paris conference.

What Americans need to know is what the Eisenhower administration specifically proposes for the missile race we've got to win or else.

I don't see how any one [sic] can feel satisfied that an adequate program has been laid out for us as of now.

PHOTO:
The NATO conference round table

16. 1958

Paul Miller and Postwar Conservatism

(Box # 1, 3a, 4, 5, 28,)

Paul Miller possessed generally conservative views throughout his life. Significantly, however, he was not a rigid ideologue. As proof of his political flexibility and bipartisanship, Miller was a friend and advisor both to Republican and Democratic presidents; he garnered for Gannett Co., Inc., a cherished Pulitzer Prize for its papers' examination of the positive aspects of racial integration (an extremely sensitive issue at the time); and, he publicly chastised his close personal friend, President Richard M. Nixon, for advocating wage and price controls. Combined with Box #7, i.e., the box containing Miller's editorials from 1955 – 1979 (and not included in this report), there is undoubtedly more than enough material for a solid peer-reviewed journal article (or chapter), and, perhaps, a book. Furthermore, either an article or a monograph would be particularly germane to America's current hyper-polarized political climate.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1. 1932

a. A letter from James Miller to "My dear Paul," written from Claremore, Oklahoma, on January 22, 1932, starkly reveals the effects of the Great Depression on the extended Miller family. Although James chose his words carefully, he nevertheless conveyed in subtle yet poignant language the plight of a rural Oklahoma family struggling to deal both spiritually and financially with their unprecedented economic catastrophe:

First Christian Church
JAMES MILLER, MINISTER
CLAREMORE, OKLAHOHOMA
1 – 22- 32.

My dear Paul:

Your letter and check just came. I called mother after you phoned me last night and told her what you were doing. Both of us are very grateful to you, and want you to know never have we needed help more. The children were happy over it too, though they do not know anything about details, which is best for them.

Now, about your P. S. I can understand just how you feel but I am not feeling toward my brethren as you do. I think had I gone to them and told them the whole story they would have done some thing [sic]. But I had too much pride to do it. Maybe I should but if you and I can fight our troubles through I much prefer to do it that way. I was getting ready to go see Grinstead when you called me. Perhaps I could have got more from Mrs. Brookshire. But, frankly I am glad we could keep our troubles in the family. Perhaps you have been embarrassed by this too much. I hope not. Moreover, I will get going after while [sic]. Times are not going to be as they are now forever. And again. Do you know that we are in better shape than the great majority of people! Many of our ministers don't know where to turn nor what to do during these trying days. Churches can't meet their debts, are not preaching in many places. And once again. Do you know that we are not having any burdens to carry like Christ and the early church had! We dislike to carry our loads but many times they are just what we need. Every apostle suffered martyrdom. Really we don't know what suffering is.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Now then. You will think there is no hope for me.! I still have faith inmy [sic] brethren and mankind generally. Everybody has trouble, disappointments, sorrow and dark days. Some more than others, and all told we have had lots of bright days. God is not dead and He knows all about our circumstances.

Well, here are the children for dinner. They like it here very much. School is not so hard for them, they say. We are getting on very well. I mean getting the meals. Must close now. Will be seeing you before long. Come up when you can.

Conclusion. It's great to have a boy like you. And you will not know until you get in a like position just what a help you have been to me! Love and good luck.

Yours,

Dad.

[Handwritten]:

2 P.M. Just sent your ck. to mother.
Hurry up to see us.

JM

Despite his brave attempt to appear cheerful in the letter, James is clearly distressed at having to send it at all. While hoping Paul is not "embarrassed by this too much," he nevertheless confesses that he has "too much pride" to ask his church "brethren" for help, and states his desire to "keep our troubles in the family." Paul, though, may have reacted with considerable bitterness to the crisis as James also feels the need to reassure his son that "we are not having any burdens to carry like Christ and the early church had," and that "we don't know what suffering is." James then goes on to explain further that "we are in better shape than the great majority of people," and, that while "everybody has trouble, disappointments, sorrow and dark days . . . we have had lots of bright days." Still, the gravity of their situation also forces James almost to plead with Paul to remember that "God is not dead and he knows all about our circumstances." Typically, though, James concludes by expressing his appreciation to Paul for "a boy like you," and urging his son to "come up when you can." James Miller did not have long to wait.

1. 1948

a. (B3/f53)

*****

Saratogian
Saratoga Springs, N.Y.
October 20, 1948

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Gannett Aide
Urges Cut
In Federal Power, Purse"

Niagara Falls (AP) – Paul Miller, executive assistant to Frank Gannett, publisher of the Gannett Newspapers, says there has been "a steadily increasing concentration of power and purse at Washington."

Speaking last night at a meeting of the New York State Circulation Managers' Association, Miller added:

"The war did not do anything to slow it down. We have no particular group or party or individual to blame – just ourselves. That's the way it was.

"No matter what administration is in power at Washington, the people of this country had better get behind a major effort to cut government back down to size and then keep it cut.

"You don't get something for nothing, no matter who in Washington tells you so. And we give up some more of our personal freedom every time we hand over to the national government some authority or responsibility that we ourselves could and ought to assume."

A "sort of voters' revolt" was asked by Miller to "tell our representatives that they can quit playing around with every pressure group and be assured that they'll have some support if they do quit." . . . .

b. (B3/f53)
*****
Observer-Dispatch
Utica, N.Y.
October 20, 1948

"'Cut Down
U.S. Purse'

Then Keep It to Size,
Gannett Aide Urges"

c. (B3/f53)
*****
Daily Press
Utica, N.Y.
October 20, 1948

"Curb Power of Government
Gannett Aide Asks Voters"

2. 1949

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

a. (B3/f56)

*****

The Rochester Times-Union
Friday, April 15, 1949

Editor Sees Need for Understanding

A plea for understanding of "the other fellow" was made by Paul Miller, editor of The Times-Union, in a speech at a luncheon of the Public Utilities Advertising Association in the Sheraton at noon today. His subject was "What Business Can Do to Help the Free Enterprise System."

Representatives from 15 electric and gas companies in New York, Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland attended the luncheon, highlight of a day-long conference.

Miller said:

"The system we know in America, and on which this nation was built, apparently will survive only if many who assail and doubt it become convinced pretty soon that it is, after all, the best in sight anywhere.

"The subject you assigned was 'How Business Can Help Save the Free Enterprise System,' and the word 'help' should be put in capital letters. Business can only help. Voting strength is the determining factor in telling which way our economy shall move.

"What can business in general do to strengthen general belief in our system? Business should tell its own story, in every legitimate way, it can. Business also must try to understand the other fellow's story.

"Nothing in any business operation should be out ahead of human relations. Three out of four persons who work for a living in the United States today, including myself, are employes [sic]. I am an employe [sic] first of the company which operates our newspapers, and also of the public which reads them.

"It seems to me that all of us must strive, and prayerfully, for understanding up and down the line. Somewhere there is a middle ground. Finding that middle ground is a major challenge of our time." . . . .

b. (B3/f56)

*****

Albany (N.Y.) Times-Union
October 4, 1949

Free Press Best Bet in Preventing
Socialism in U.S., Kiwanis Club Told

The best hope of the American people against "government-by-gimme" is its free press, declared Paul Miller, Rochester editor, in helping Albany celebrate National Newspaper Week yesterday.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Addressing the Kiwanis club luncheon at the Ten Eyck hotel, Mr. Miller voiced the belief that "the common sense of the people can stop it if aroused soon enough," and that the newspapers of the United States – in contrast to those of Europe – seem to be "waking up in time." . . . .

(2) PHOTOS:

EXECUTIVE HUDDLE – Caught in this informal pose at yesterday's Kiwanis luncheon honoring Newspaper Week are Fred L. Archibald, publisher of The Times-Union; Paul Miller, vice president of Gannett Newspapers, and Gerald Salisbury, managing editor of The Knickerbocker News

Times-Union Staff Photo by Wilder

LUNCHEON GUESTS – As part of the local observance of Newspaper Week, the above representatives of the press were guests at a luncheon yesterday at the Kiwanis club. Left to right are the Rev. Gerald Kirwin, editor of The Evangelist; A. J. MacDonald, publisher of the Knickerbocker News; Henry Leader, of the Associated Press Albany bureau, and George O. Williams, managing editor of The Times-Union.

Times-Union Staff Photo by Wilder

c. (B3/f56)

*****

The Rochester Times-Union
October, 4, 1949

Press Can Halt Socialist Trend, Editor Says

d. (B3/f56)

*****

Albany Knickerbocker News
October 5, 1949

American Press Can Stop Socialism,
Gannett Executive Tells Kiwanians

Facts from the American press can stop Socialism in the United States, Paul Miller, vicepresident of the Gannett Newspapers and editor of the Rochester Times-Union, told the Kiwanis Club of Albany yesterday . . . .

PHOTO:
Caption:

Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers and editor of the Rochester Times-Union, addressed the Kiwanis Club of Albany as a feature of Albany's observance of National Newspaper Week. Gene O'Haire, Kiwanis president, listens at left.

e. (B3/f56)

*****

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

THE OIL CITY
CONFERENCE NEWS
Published in the Interests of the Oil City Conference of the Free Methodist Church of North America

VOLUME 3 NOVEMBER 1949 No. 11

Roberts Wesleyan Dedicates Science Hall

Paul Miller, Leading Newspaper Man Delivers Dedicatory Address

To the union of science with Christianity, Roberts Wesleyan College leaders, students and alumni and their neighbors from North Chili and Rochester, N.Y., dedicated Mersereau Science Building Wednesday, October 12 . . . .

Paul Miller, vice-president of The Gannett Company, editor of the "Rochester Times-Union", [sic] and principal speaker, recalled that Bishop Benjamin T. Roberts, founder of the school, had urged teachers to "labor to show the harmony between science and Christianity – between the discoveries of one and the doctrine of the other."

"If ever there was a time when schools should labor to show the harmony between science and Christianity that time is now", [sic] said Mr. Miller. "Probably many today sincerely doubt that the two can be harmonized. There must be times when all despair – particularly just now when Geiger counters of the civilized world have barely ceased reacting to Russia's first authenticated atomic explosion." . . . .

3. 1950

a. (B3/f62)

PHOTO:
[source unknown]
January 21, 1950

Newspaper Man Speaks to Junior Chamber of Commerce

Paul Miller, left, Rochester, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, talks with Donald E. Werner, center, Syracuse, president of the State Junior Chamber of Commerce and Leonard E. Friedlander, president of the Albany Chapter, at the state organizations meeting at the Ten Eyck Hotel Saturday night.

Paul Miller Urges Hoover Plan Support

b. (B3/f62)

1849

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Democrat and Chronicle
January 22, 1950

Young Voters
Urged to Take
Role in Politics

Activity at Grass Roots
Stressed by Miller
At Jaycee Dinner

Albany – (GNS) – Young men were urged last night to take an active, vital role in grass roots political activity "In their own interests."

Paul Miller, vicepresident of the Gannett Company, principal speaker at the annual distinguished service award banquet of the New York State Junior Chamber of Commerce, outlined two ways in which the young men could participate to end "political spending, government waste and inefficiency."

1—To work for sound government through a political party of the choice of the individual.

2 – To work through nonpartisan efforts to accomplish the recommendations of the Hoover Commission on government reorganization.

Miller strongly supported the Hoover Commission proposals as a step toward reversing present trends in government.

Rochesterian Wins Award

Distinguished service awards were presented by the State Jaycees, through President Donald E. Werner, to William J. Maxion, vicepresident of Case-Hoyt Corporation, Rochester, an executive at the age of 32; Allen J. Flattery, 35, Syracuse attorney, and Robert E. Walk, General Motors engineer and city alderman of Lockport.

Explaining that the Jaycees will support any number of worthy causes in the community, Miller recalled that nationally the organization is committed to support the Hoover Commission proposal.

"There is nothing more important," he said, "than for each of you to go home and learn about the local political organization setup. Start getting active in the wards and districts so you can make your influence felt where it counts.

Make Active Contribution

"You will soon learn how the community machine works in the party of your choice. You will be able to make an active, grass roots political contribution that every individual must resolve now to make.

"In Rochester we look on the Junior Chamber of Commerce as one of the hardest working and most effective public service agencies."

c. (B3/f63)

Democrat and Chronicle

1850

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

July 8, 1950

Peron Denies Muzzling Press, Says Miller, Back from Flight

A flat denial by Juan Peron that his government is crushing the free Argentine press was reported yesterday by Paul Miller, vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, who has returned from a 12,800-mile round trip air journey to South America.

Miller was one of 30 American editors, publishers and radio executives who were guests of Pan American Airways on the inaugural flight of a new luxury run from New York to Buenos Aires.

High point of the week-long journey, during which the group made stopovers in Trinidad, Rio de Janeiro and Montevideo, was a half-hour press conference with the Argentine president. Throughout the meeting the smooth, poised Peron was grilled by the editors on all phases of Western Hemisphere questions, Miller said.

"Peron denied our repeated questions about suppression of the press in his country," Miller declared. "He said again and again that his government is not pursuing any policy against the press. Peron explained, however, that a dollar shortage may have imposed a curtailment of newspaper publishing to some degree."

To Write Articles

Miller said that he plans to write several articles in the near future which will give his full view on the subject.

The editors also quizzed Peron on his views toward U.S. loans to Latin American nations.

"Peron is definitely against the loans," Miller explained. "He told us that if the U.S. wants to help, it should use the money to buy more South American products. Peron believes that if South American people are given more money they won't work."

At every stop they made on the trip, the editors were feted handsomely at dinners, receptions and luncheons by the various embassies and officials of the countries they visited.

Trippe True Pioneer

In Buenos Aires, they participated in the 100th anniversary of the liberation of Argentina when Juan Trippe, president of the host airline, placed a wreath at the foot of the statue of liberator Jose de San Martin.

Miller described Trippe as a "pioneer in the truest meaning to all Americans." The journey made by the editors in 17 ½ hours flying time, and now a regularly scheduled flight, is another milestone in the history of the development of aerial communications between the U.S. and Latin America, he said.

Trippe was a pioneer when he flew dinky craft between the two continents many years ago. Again he is pioneering with this new, fast strato-cruiser flight. I wouldn't be surprised if he were the first to put jets into commercial service," Miller declared.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

d. (B3/f62)

The Newsmagazine WE
December 25, 1950

"TALK OF THE TOWN"

By Archie LaBounty

Ever since the Brady case there has been a new topic of conversation, very secret at first, but which has now become the talk, not of the town, but of politicians, East avenue, and newspaper circles. Subject of this conversation is Paul Miller, editor of the Times-Union, and a vice president of the Gannett newspapers. When Miller came to town he was hailed as a great newspaperman who was going to do "things" for the Times-Union. And he is a great newspaperman. He knows the game from top to bottom and there is no question but had he tended to his newspaper business there would not be such a wave of criticism sweeping over his broad shoulders and well-set head.

But something has happened to Miller. At least that is what they are saying. By "they" I mean newspaper men on Miller's own staff, mechanical, business and editorial, and on the staff of the Little Old Lady of Main Street, the D&C. Also some politicians are getting in on the pow wow and not a few are saying that Miller is on his way out.

Asked about this newspapermen admit that there is trouble within the inner sanctum of the Times Union. At least two have said that Miller is scheduled to depart for an executive job with the Associated Press. All of which is very confusing in view of the very fine things that were said of him when he first came to Rochester.

Too Much Dutch

There is no question about it, Miller is in Dutch with some very prominent people of the city. He is in Dutch with some of his own staff who, of course, dare not say so under penalty of a kick in the slats. He is in Dutch with Republican politicians for his attempts to usurp the powers of Monroe County's Republican leader. And it is reported that he is in Dutch with Frank Gannett, who announced himself against Dewey in the recent political campaign only to find Miller sitting in the driver's seat with a curt, "Now boss, you don't know what you are talking about. Dewey is our man and the Times Union will support him. Now please go sit on a tack until this campaign is over."

There is another report that Miller is in Dutch with John G. Corey, editor and publisher of WE. That isn't true. The opposite is true. Corey is in Dutch with Miller. Or so it would seem from the following incident that occurred several weeks ago:

Corey was walking down Exchange street from Police Headquarters. In front of the Times Union Building he was hailed by Gannett, who was sitting in his car.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Gannett and Corey passed the time of day and discussed the political situation, which was off the record. Just then Miller came out of the TU Building and strolled over to the car. Gannett was about to introduce his editor to Corey (he didn't know that the two had previously met) when Miller popped up and said:

"Oh yes, we've met. He's the fellow who calls me a s.o.b. every once in a while."

Now that wasn't nice. Corey never called Miller any such name, not even off the record. Why Corey wouldn't dream of calling Miller such a terrible name.

Miller Invites Criticisms

Corey has, however, criticized Miller. He has criticized the TU editor for a number of reasons, most important of which is his seemingly [sic] desire to dictate to political leaders just how they should conduct their affairs. I have never heard of any political leader going to Miller to tell him how to run the TU.

In the very last issue of WE Corey was very critical of Miller. And he had every right to be. Corey is a newspaperman who believes that a newspaperman's first duty is to get the news and print it. A real newspaperman never, never uses the power of the press as a sort of blackjack to force political leaders to do something they don't want to do.

When Corey learned that it was Miller who led the delegation of ministers to Fred Parrish's office to demand the return of Dave Brady to City Hall as commissioner of public safety he could hardly believe it. Miller has a fine reputation as a newspaperman and he has a wealth of experience. He knows the ethical newspaper practice from the unethical newspaper practice. Consequently, it was hard to believe that the new editor of the TU would deliberately take the lead in forcing the wish of a minority group on a political leader who was having enough troubles trying to keep his machine in good working order.

This newsmagazine already has reported how Miller and an unofficial committee of ministers forced Parrish to order Brady's return to City Hall only to have the roof fall on their heads when the Brady bomb exploded. There is no need of repeating it here. But it has been pointed out before and it should be pointed out again that Miller went too far in his duties as an editor. He is his own worst enemy. The criticisms now hitting him from all directions are of his own making. Rochesterians have a habit of giving anybody anything they ask for. Miller asked for criticisms and he is getting them.

A Personal Matter

More important than anything else we've said in this column thus far is the report, from the Times Union, no less, that Miller no longer is in the good graces of his boss – Frank Gannett. Rochesterians know that Gannett allows his editors complete freedom in running his newspapers. But when it comes to the TU, it is an entirely different matter. The TU is Gannett's first love. That was the paper that really got him started in a big way. And he always was the editor until illness caused him to take things a little easy.

Now Corey is a publisher and he is also an editor. If illness lays him low and he employs someone to take his place, most assuredly he is going to expect that new man to run things as he, Corey, wants them run. If Corey had other papers in other towns he wouldn't care what they did, consistent with common decency and good newspaper work, as long as they made money. But his own personal paper, built along the lines he set down after years of hard struggling, would have to be run the way it always had been run under his editorship.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Another thing that is hurting Miller is the new attitude of some of Rochester's more prominent citizens toward him in the last few months. They simply can't see Miller interfering in affairs that are of no concern to him personally. In the case of Miller and his ministers calling on Parrish, the TU editor made it a personal matter.

_____

Close to Blackmail

A good newspaperman or a good editor, if he held the convictions that were Miller's, would have written an editorial calling on Parrish to reinstate Brady in City Hall. That would have made it a matter of public concern. And there could be no criticisms. But to call on Parrish in person with several ministers giving him moral support or any other kind of support was out of bounds. For what Miller and possibly the ministers too, said in effect was, "Put Brady back at his job or else." And in any man's language that is a threat. In fact if it is not blackmail it is mighty close to it.

Al Moss, veteran political writer for the TU, is said to have received an order from Miller – after that meeting with Parrish – to write a story that Brady would return to City Hall. Everybody remembers that story. We here on WE have not questioned Moss about that angle because we don't want to shove him out on a limb. After all Moss is a member of the TU staff. And he is truthful. We don't want him answering questions that would embarrass him with his big boss.

It's too early yet to judge what all this is going to lead to. Maybe Miller will take that AP job if it has been offered. If he does everybody will wish him luck. He isn't a bad guy. The real trouble seems to be that the editorship of the TU went to his noodle and he felt that it entitled him to throw orders around outside of his own sphere.

If only he would throw his weight (on the editorial page of his newspaper) around in such a manner as to erase some of the human misery in Rochester what a guy he would be. Thousands of our underprivileged citizens, most of them aged persons, would cheer him to the echo and in future political campaigns when the TU advised the election of certain individuals they would flock to his banner. As it is now the only banner these unfortunate people have to turn to is WE. That explains why support of political candidates by WE is far more important to men and women running for office than the support of the TU and D&C combined. (For verification see results of last campaign).

4. 1951

a. (B3a/f71)

Irondequoit Press
Irondequoit, Rochester, N.Y., Thursday

1854

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

February 1, 1951

PAUL MILLER PAYS GLOWING TRIBUTE TO LEADERSHIP OF LATE SUPERVISOR

Paul Miller, vice president of the Gannett Newspapers, speaking before a capacity crowd at the 15th annual installation of officers dinner held last Thursday evening at Joe Dozier's, paid a glowing tribute to the leadership of the late Thomas E. Broderick and expressed the hope that the Republican Party would continue to fight for the things that he stood for, namely good government and the interest of the people above all else.

He also gave an interesting talk on current events and stressed the fact that men like Hoover, Marshall, Dulles and Wilson are the steadying influence which is so beneficial to all in the national crisis. Without them there would be no brakes on the "All Out Policy" which had been started by the present administration, Miller declared.

Walter Lauterbach, town supervisor, spoke briefly on town affairs and asked that those present place good government first on their priority list.

Arthur Hart was toastmaster.

PHOTO
Caption:

SHOWN AT 15TH ANNUAL INSTALLATION OF OFFICERS dinner held by the West Side GOP Club last Thursday evening are, from left: Paul Miller, vice president of Gannett Newspapers who was principal speaker; Peace Justice Arthur Hart, toastmaster; Edward Reed, president of the club; and Walter G. Lauterbach, town supervisor.

b. (B3a/F71)

Rochester Times-Union
August 1, 1951

British Keep Chins Up, Will Beat Hard Times, Editor Says After Tour

Despite severe economic restrictions, people in England still hold to their traditional chins-up attitude and will emerge from their economic difficulties in time, Paul Miller said today.

Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, just returned with Mrs. Miller from a four-week trip to Europe.

They docked in Montreal yesterday aboard the Canadian liner Empress of France, then flew to Rochester. There was a coincidence involved in the voyage.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"I met with Anthony Eden in his House of Commons office in London," Miller said. "He mentioned that I must have had quite a trip , and then remarked that he was about to make an interesting trip himself.

"I asked him where he was going. Eden said he was bound for Canada aboard the Empress of France. So I told him we'd have plenty of chance to talk later. Which we did."

Eden, deputy leader of Britain's Conservative Party, will make speeches in Denver, San Francisco, Chicago and New York. Miller is hopeful Eden can include Rochester on his agenda.

* * *

THE PUBLISHER represented The Gannett Newspapers at ceremonies in London marking the 100th anniversary of Reuters, British news agency, which he said is "making great strides under its present management in gathering news all over the world in a factual, objective way."

Main purpose of Miller's trip, in addition to participating in the Reuters ceremonies, was to attempt a first-hand study of conditions in Europe. Here are some of his reactions:

"England is better off than she was two years ago, in outward appearance. But people there still are under tight restrictions, Socialist-imposed and otherwise . . . Yet they are cheerful and hopeful and courageous as always. If they can get back toward the free enterprise system and away from the government-run-everything concept, they'll make a comeback.

"Through the cooperation of Eastman Kodak officials here, we visited the big Eastman office building in London and toured the Eastman works at Harrow. I was especially impressed by the employe [sic] services program at Harrow, where they have social centers, game grounds and other recreational facilities.

* * *

"IN FRANCE, the Communists are strong. But many of the French argue that their Reds are not Russian Communists and would not constitute a pro-Soviet force in the event of an open war.

"It was a great privilege for me to talk with Prime Minister Clement Atlee in London, and a tremendous thrill to talk in Paris with Gen. Eisenhower.

"The general talked very frankly regarding the entire rearmament picture at his headquarters and expressed optimism despite obvious difficulties that remain.

"But he is not talking politics with anybody."

Ike unquestionably commands the confidence of more people throughput the British Isles and Western Europe than any other individual.

* * *

"IT SEEMED that everywhere Mrs. Miller and I went, we ran into people who know of Rochester. One was Frank Gentle, the No. 1 British sports promoter, who has visited Rochester and has a married daughter living here."

The Millers visited with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Patterson in Switzerland (Patterson is the new U. S. minister there), and with Perle Mesta, U. S. minister to Luxembourg. Miller and his wife flew to London July 3.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PHOTO:
MILLER

c. (B3a/f71)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday Evening, August 11, 1951

Report from Abroad

English Socialism To Stay, but Methods Stir Resentment

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, spent a month on a trip to study conditions in Europe. This is the third of four articles on his observations.

By PAUL MILLER

Socialistic programs in Britain appear there to stay, no matter which party wins the next election.

Many Americans like to think that a Conservative triumph would haul Britain about promptly toward some semblance of the competitive free enterprise system that built America.

This is not to be. Winston Churchill can brand nationalization a flop, as he did the other day, and figures indicate that it is. But candid observers talk chiefly of bringing some sense into the swollen bureaucracies and cutting down departmental waste. They voice no hope or expectation that the Conservatives will go much further for a long, long time – if ever. This is not to say that Conservatives approve all that has been done; in my opinion, they realize the impossibility of undoing much of it soon.

For example, there is wide grumbling at administration of the Health Service, under which there is complete medical care from cradle to grave. But the principle is widely accepted and it will be continued one way or another.

The same goes for nationalized coal, transport, utilities, railways, communications . . . Conservatives talk convincingly only of overtaking the nationalization of steel.

In any event, we need not expect that the kind of free enterprise believed in here will prevail in Britain in the foreseeable future. Indeed, it did not, even before the socialists came to power.

Yet, although a continuation of some sort of welfare state appears certain in Britain, the welfare state as administered by the Atlee Government seems under rather general fire. The people down the line appear fed up with the austerity it has carried on. No matter that any other government might have imposed similar restrictions and controls – the resentment is, as always, against the government in power.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The question is whether they are sufficiently fed up to go to the polls in late October, if an election is set for then as now seems possible, and vote the "ins" out. Conservative leaders believe they have a good chance. Labor adherents say they can hold on, barring an extension of the current party split. An American would call it a toss-up.

* * *

THOUSANDS TALK of getting away to start a new life. The chauffer who drove us one or two days; a woman who helped part-time – both would have come back to Rochester with us in a minute, given the opportunity.

A friend of ours from Australia placed a want ad for a couple to work for his family at Adelaide. He received half a hundred replies, although it meant, for the man and wife finally selected, leaving home and friends and relatives, probably never to see them again.

* * *

A TRUSTED FRIEND traveled among towns and villages for a month. I asked him for his impressions. He writes:

"One cannot be in England one day without running into evidences of their political, social and economic reforms. It is indicated in their every-day living and conversation. After a month I am of the opinion that they are tired of it and that an election today would show a majority vote of protest in favor of the Conservatives and removal of the present Labor Party from power. I have talked the length and width of England with shop keepers, busboys, taxi drivers, pub hangers-on, policemen, tenants in private and public houses, bank clerks and factory laborers."

This observer, a keen student, continues:

"The little Englishman is tired of the shortages stemming from government controls – indeed, I believe he is a little bit tired of 'Security,' a security he knows he cannot break through any more than an Indian can break through his caste system.

"He would like to try his wings again, but is prevented by his system. However, I am sure that even if they upset the present government there will be no real change in political philosophy. It will be only a change in degree and methods."

* * *

MY FRIEND had first-hand experience with socialized medicine when his teenage daughter became ill while they were in London, just prior to starting cross-country. Here is his account:

"All medical and dental services and their allied lines have been completely socialized. Each individual registers his choice of doctors and, if the doctor is willing, he accepts the patient on his list and gets so much money per name plus stipulated fees for special services. The doctor must of necessity take patients in turn.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Except in dire emergencies, it is impossible for him to say BEFORE seeing the patient which case is important and which is not. As a result the 'chronic doctor visitors' are filling the books and those who are really ill are often neglected. This is the story reflected over and over by doctors interviewed and by ordinary citizens in the villages.

"The service applies to all residents and even to casual visitors. When

(Please turn to Page 3.)

Ann became ill we called on a woman physician known to friends. She made her call and filled out a slip which Ann was required to sign. For this hotel call, I understood the doctor would receive about $3.50 from the government. She gave us two prescriptions marked 'urgent,' which meant I could get them from the chemist (druggist) on Sunday by calling at his house. These were delivered to me and the bill sent to the government.

"While we were in England, then, we could have been the guest, medically speaking, of the English taxpayer. When we arrived in York, however, and wanted to deal with a physician direct, we obtained all the attention and service we could have expected at home."

(By dealing direct is meant this: An individual may sign that he elects to deal directly. He then gets prompt attention, but he pays twice if he's an Englishman – once by the tax burden for the national service and second in the regular fee he pays to the doctor on the same basis as in the old days.)

* * *

INCIDENTALLY, there are stories galore, doubtless exaggerated, of foreigners who take advantage of the health program. Samples: Belgian women come in droves to have their babies. Sailors get full false teeth while in England, then sell them for cash elsewhere.

Legislation is under way to stop such practices.

* * *

THE HOUSING SITUATION remains critical. An American realtor and friend sums it up thus after a study: Young people defer marriage simply because there are no available places to live.

Some of the things combining to create this situation are:

1. Hard and fast ceiling on rentals, a low ceiling that keeps rents at roughly 50 per cent of their free market value.
2. For a landlord to remove a tenant who pays the rent, he must (a) prove in court that his own family needs the place and (b) find similar quarters for the dispossessed tenant AT NO GREATER COST.
3. Nobody can build without a government permit. These are few and far between. Most people simply give up and don't even try to get one. Those few who do are limited to a cost of $5,400. If and when such houses are built, they could be sold for twice that – except for the required covenant in the permit against resale. So in housing, as in meat, it is cheap but the average Englishman seldom can find it to buy.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

AN OBSERVER who wishes to be fair must consider that only time can tell whether that system, which HAS held down (or concealed) inflation in housing, will be better for the people than that in our own country where inflation has taken place but where houses HAVE been built. At least, Americans have housing, which to most Americans is the important fact of life.

Yet for all of the foregoing, the British remain the champions of basic freedoms, along with America; Britain's post-war reconstruction is extensive if slow by our standards; Britain's people are the same splendid sturdy strain as always; Britain's adherence to the anti-Russian rearmament program and her sense of partnership with the U.S. are firm.

I believe Britain will continue to come back, despite what an American regards as her self-imposed shackles to real progress. She will certainly do so if some of the restraints and restrictions can be broken, whether through a change in national leadership or otherwise.

* * *

MEANTIME, an American who fears his own country has been heading along some of the same paths Britain is treading can wish: That certain of the politicians, liberals, intellectuals and others who are trying to put socialistic controls on the USA could be consigned to England for a reasonable period and compelled to live there under all the controls and restrictions that hobble the British themselves!

PHOTO
Caption:

PRIME MINISTER Clement R. Atlee –
The welfare state as administered by his government "seems under rather general fire."

d. (B3a/f71)

Rochester Times-Union
August 13, 1951

Report from Abroad

Europe's Memory Too Vivid for Talk of Another War

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union has spent a month on a trip to study conditions in Europe. This is the last of four articles on his observations.

By PAUL MILLER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Returning European visitors who, like the writer, become "experts" overnight, are asked perhaps more often than any other question – "Is there as much war talk over there as you hear in the United States?"

Most such "experts" with whom I have had contact reply in the negative. Indeed, I have even heard an American on vacation from his job as correspondent at Moscow say that "war talk" increases the farther one gets from Moscow; meaning there's relatively little of it in the USSR and much of it un the USA.

Reaction to this could be that, for one thing, the great mass of Russians aren't permitted to know what is going on and, for another, that conversation is kept at a minimum by fear of an eavesdropper anyway. But that's Russia.

* * *

AS FOR EUROPE, there is more to it than that, of course. In my opinion, too, there IS "less war talk" in Europe than in the United States.

Accurate or inaccurate, factual or wishful thinking, I saw no public indication of belief or apprehension that war will come this year. That was true whether in London, Luxembourg, Paris or Geneva.

This does not mean that there is any lack of awareness of Russia. Generally, I thought, it meant one of two thongs mainly:

1. A feeling that if Russia had planned to attack Western Europe she would have done so a year or two ago; or

2. A knowledge that they are doing what they feel they can to build up strength and meantime there's nothing much else to be done about it.

There is still one more on which, perhaps a psychologist might more appropriately speculate: In England especially they've "had it" and they know England would catch it heavily again, because of American air bases now situated there and because of other strategic reasons, should the Russians release an air war. The British dread the thought of the night-long poundings, the smoke and flame, the pitch-black streets, the dead and the hurt of the savage bombings experienced from Hitler.

They'd just as soon not talk about it, although they will, pleasantly enough, when Americans press for descriptive details. So they are into a rearmament program they understand is necessary, although it probably means more lean years of rationing and controls, and they hope (a) that the program will be built up in time to deter Russia and (b) that Uncle Sam, to whom they look for leadership, will not do anything impetuous too soon!

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Meantime, they'd rather talk about something other than war, like the British Festival, or the usually warm and pleasant Summer they're enjoying.

* * *

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to sense on this side the keen feeling of confidence in the United States, and reliance on U. S. leadership, militarily speaking, that becomes apparent across the Atlantic.

I confess I found myself wishing, on more than on occasion, that I could feel more of this confidence with regard to our diplomatic leadership.

For example, at a luncheon given by the publishers of London and their wives, at which my Ohio-Republican wife and I were two of only four Americans present, one of the Press Lords declared:

"We thank America for many things, but I want to mention one in particular: You may disagree, but I believe that when President Truman decided to send troops into Korea he prevented a Third World War."

* * *

THERE IS WIDESPREAD BELIEF in the United States that the British are resentful of American aid, however much they needed it, and of American leadership. And in Britain, there are some, at least, who feel Americans no longer admire or respect them.

Now England swarms with American tourists and one inevitably meets many friends and acquaintances over there; that was our experience, and this is a fact:

We did not hear, and we did not hear reported, any indication of animosity or ill-will. On the contrary, the British on all sides were friendly, kind, helpful. Nowhere was there any indication of envy or bitterness in hundreds of contacts. Prime Minister Atlee repeatedly speaks out in appreciation of U. S. aid, as in the following, delivered only the other day:

"An important advance has been to seek to raise the standard of life all over the world, and that could not have been done without the cooperation of America. I hear a good deal of cheap talk about the U. S., but the U. S. has shown immense generosity and very high statesmanship."

The "cheap talk" came from an opposition wing within his own party (led by Aneurin Bevan) which frequently charges that American policies are leading Britain into excessive exertions and expenditures for armaments, this promoting world-wide inflation and delaying social progress in Britain. Doubtless many share this view, but it is not paraded for visitors.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

So far there is no indication that the Atlee government, for all is preoccupation with politico-social reforms, will yield in any respect.

*** * ***

AND ON THIS, at least, there is outward unity between Conservatives and Labor. Both say they are determined, whether there is more "war talk" or less, to stick to the current armament program.

As Mr. Atlee said in a speech to which no responsible Conservative too public exception:

"Our rearmament is necessary and vital and we have got to go on with it. When the time comes when we get a reasonableness all around, and not just words but actions, then none of us will hesitate for a moment in turning all our efforts to peace instead if war. Meanwhile, we are faced with a necessity which will inevitably affect our standard of life."

PHOTO:
"The British dread the thought of the night-long poundings, the smoke and flame . . ."

5. 1952

a. (B3a/f72)
*****

[source unknown]
May 1952

Devotion to Duty
Basic to Masonry
150 in Club Told

Police and firemen often carry out the highest precepts of basic religion and Masonry in their daily work, Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, told 150 members of the Rochester Fire and Police Square Club yesterday morning.

In his talk at the Colony Restaurant, Miller said the idea of "devotion to the highest in whatever work we find ourselves" is basic to Masonry. Members of the Square Club, which was founded a year ago, belong to Masonic organizations.

'Bulwark of Religion'

Miller, a member of Seneca Lodge F&AM and of the Rochester Consistory, called Masonry an enemy of bigotry. He said: "Masonry is no substitute for religion; it was never intended as such. But it is one of the great bulwarks of religion . . ."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Before the club's first annual breakfast, the men entered St. Luke's Episcopal Church to receive Communion from the Rev. Frederick M. Winnie, pastor . . . .

b. (B3a/f72)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Thursday, October 9, 1952

Elks Honor Newspapers For Informed Vote Drive

Tribute was paid to the Informed Voter Campaign of The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union last night by the Rochester Lodge of Elks.

At an open lodge meeting in the Elks clubhouse on Clinton Ave. N., George M. Clancy, exalted ruler of the Rochester Lodge, presented a plaque to Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Company, for the two newspapers' "Read – Think – Vote" campaigns which Clancy said were "important in educating and informing the people."

Accepts Plaque

Miller, in accepting the plaque, introduced Wilbur G. Lewis, informed voter editor of The Democrat and Chronicle, and Carl M. Davidson, informed voter editor of The Times-Union. The ceremony marked the final day of National Newspaper Week.

Citing the many other "get out the vote campaigns," Miller said it was the aim of both newspapers to "get behind these efforts of other groups and do what we can for them to achieve a common goal." In addition, he said, the newspapers were trying to have informed voters and were directing their campaigns to that purpose. He said he hoped between 80 and 85 per cent of the eligible voters would vote this year, compared to 72 per cent in the city in 1948.

John A. Peartree, chairman of the Elks national newspaper week committee and a past exalted ruler, introduced Mayor Samuel B. Dicker, who asked for support in his registration contest with Syracuse, and Joseph P. Flynn who said the "Russians were watching with gleaming eyes the American participation at the polls."

Office Seeks Man

Commenting on the presidential candidates and campaign issues, Paul Martin, chief of The Gannett News Service Washington Bureau, said this year it was a case of "the office seeking the man, especially Stevenson and somewhat true in the case of Eisenhower."

After describing his impressions of the candidates and the party platforms, Martin took up the campaign issues. He said both candidates have shifted for

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"political expediency" on some issues: Stevenson from modifying the Taft-Hartley Act to outright repeal and Eisenhower from the "full parity" clause of the GOP platform to 100 per cent parity in a speech in the farm belt.

One of the issues, he said, was "good times" and pointed out that in our past history, the voters have never "thrown out the party in power when they think they are enjoying what they call prosperity." But, Martin said, this issue along with inflation, the Korean war, corruption and communism would be submerged by the voters in preference to the question: "Is it time for a change?" Their answers to that question, Martin said, would decide the election.

PHOTO
Caption:

NEWSPAPERS HONORED – George M. Clancy, exalted ruler of Rochester Lodge of Elks, right, presents plaque to The Democrat and Chronicle and The Times-Union for Informed Voter Campaigns. Receiving it for the papers were, from left, Wilbur G. Lewis, informed voter editor of The Democrat and Chronicle; Carl M. Davidson, informed voter editor of The Times-Union; Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Company.

6. 1953

a. (3a/f72)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Thursday, October 8, 1953

Press Freedom Held Heritage of Reader

Freedom of the press does not mean freedom for the press, but rather the freedom of the reader to have access to the facts about their servants in public life.

That was the message Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, gave last night to about 150 Elks from 10 Western New York lodges.

Miller, who also is editor and publisher of The Times-Union, spoke at the annual Newspaper week dinner in the Elks Club. During the dinner The Times-Union was presented with the Rochester Elks Newspaper Week Award for public service in journalism. The newspaper won the award for public service in publishing the full report of the Senate Internal Security subcommittee on subversives in government.

Miller said the 50,000-word report is "a shocking and enthralling document which through interlocking testimony traces the Communist infiltration of government from the early 1930s.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"We believe that everyone should read the report so they will not only know what did happen in the Red infiltration of Washington, but will be aware how easily such a situation can happen," he said.

"To join in criticism of such congressional probes is to allow personalities to get in front of you. We are neither attacking nor upholding any individual investigator, but publishing the valid and unanimous report of a nonpartisan Senate subcommittee."

He has never been satisfied that such investigations endanger civil rights or academic freedom, Miller said.

"It has yet to be proved to me," he said, "that anyone called before a senate committee did not have a reason for being there . . . . I wish the public was as concerned about good government as it is about dodgers behind the 5th amendment." Continuance of freedom of the press can help to spread that concern among the public and contribute more to the preservation of our government than we often realize."

A. Vernon Croop, managing editor of The Times-Union, accepted the award plaque on behalf of the newspaper . . . .

b. (B3a/f72)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
October 8, 1953

Times-Union Honored For Report on Reds

Publication and readership promotion by The Times-Union of the 50,000-word official bipartisan Senate report on Communist infiltration into government last night won the Rochester Elks' 1953 Newspaper Week Award for public service in journalism . . . .

7. 1954

a. (B3a/f73)

Gannetteer [?]
January 1954

Dinner Confab Yields New View of McCarthy

PAUL MILLER, executive vicepresident of Gannett Newspapers, Inc., returned from a newsmen's dinner in Washington last month to tell of his conversation there with a tablemate – Sen. Joseph McCarthy. In a byline for the Rochester

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Times-Union, of which he is editor and publisher, Miller gave readers the following objective report on one of America's most controversial figures:

Sen. Joe McCarthy says he is misunderstood as respects his relations with the White House in general and President Eisenhower in particular.

"Every time I drop even a slight critical remark, the headlines say 'McCARTHY BLASTS EISENHOWER.'

"But when I make a complimentary remark, nobody pays any attention."

The senator from Wisconsin so expressed himself when I found myself seated next to him at a Washington dinner the other night.

I had asked him just what were his relations with the White House.

"There's always room for a difference of opinion," he went on, between occasional sips from a bottle of cough medicine. "That's America." He had been trying to shake a cold and cough for 10 days and sent a waiter out to the hotel drugstore for the medicine after sitting down to dinner.)

As for the White House staff in general, and the criticism from some who say they find it "difficult to do business over there," McCarthy commented:

"You hear that in any administration. Everyone wants something. What many a person doesn't know is that when he is going after something at the White House he is just one of 50,000 wanting the same thing. If the White House did it for him, whatever it is, they might have to do it for 50,000 others. Some White House secretary explains this – and the person who is turned down goes away sore. That's all there is to it."

OF PRESIDENT EISENHOWER, McCarthy said:

"He's a great man – and Mrs. Eisenhower is my idea of the ideal President's wife."

A DINNER CONVERSATION with McCarthy is not easy to conduct.

He is besieged by autograph hunters, including on this particular evening, one high government official clearly buttering him up.

McCarthy greets all these with pleasure, as he does those who keep coming by with some such opener as:

"I'm Joe Doakes. I just want to shake your hand."

He smile easily and often, seldom laughs but reacts with a low chuckle that is not much more than a grunt.

When the waiter brought the cough medicine for which McCarthy sent him, and Joe started to unwrap the bottle, some one [sic] across the table jibed:

"Better get it tested before you drink any of it, Joe."

McCarthy grinned and grunted.

b. (B3a/f73)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
Friday, January 15, 1954

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Dewey Rival Predicts
Racing as Vote Issue

Albany – (AP) – Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. said last night that the harness racing scandal would be an issue in the gubernatorial campaign next fall and that the "moral tone of any administration is personally set by the leader of that administration."

The New York Democrat made the comments at a news conference that dealt largely with the prospects of his being a candidate for governor . . . .

After his statement that the moral tone of any administration is set by its leader, Roosevelt was asked:

"Is that a roundabout way of saying that Gov. Dewey might be responsible for the need of a code of ethics here?'

"That's entirely possible," Roosevelt replied.

Another reporter then asked the congressman:

"Are you saying that Gov. Dewey is a man of low moral standards?"

Roosevelt replied:

"I would say: financially no; politically, possibly."

As for himself, Roosevelt reiterated that he was not a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor but would take it if he got it . . . .

He said he was a candidate for re-election to the House and, when pressed about future aspirations, he said he always had believed that the best way to get ahead politically was to do your present job as well as you could and leave it up to the people to promote you, if they wished.

Roosevelt said he still was "technically an official" of Americans for Democratic Action, an organization described by foes as a left-wing faction of the Democratic Party, and by friends as a liberal group.

c. (B3a/f73)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
January 15, 1954

Rep. Roosevelt Shifts
Stand on Niagara Power

Albany – (AP) – Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. made a partial turnabout yesterday and came out for state construction of the Niagara River power project, but he declared he would fight any plan to sell power transmission rights to private enterprise . . . .

Roosevelt made his remarks in a three-way debate over who should develop the river's electrical power potential. His opponents in the discussion at the 33rd annual winter meeting of the New York State Publishers Assn. were John E. Burton, chairman of the State Power Authority, and Rep. William E. Miller.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, presided over the publishers' meeting.

Roosevelt has been mentioned as a likely Democratic candidate for governor next November.

Bill Before Senate

Burton has been the most frequent spokesman for the state's Niagara power plan, under which the state would develop the project and sell the power to private utilities for transmission and sale to consumers . . . .

Roosevelt countered arguments that private enterprise would do the job more cheaply with the assertion that "where private enterprise has a monopoly, it has often shown itself to be either inefficient or greedy.

d. (B3a/f73)

*****

Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union
Friday, January 15, 1954

(1.) (2) PHOTOS
Caption:

AT NEW YORK STATE PUBLISHERS' DINNER – Among speakers and guests who attended the dinner last night highlighting the convention of the New York State Publishers Association convention were, from left, Dean P. Taylor, State Republican Chairman; Walter J. Mahoney, Senate majority Leader; James H. Ottaway, Endicott, vice president of the association; Governor Thomas E. Dewey; Paul Miller, president of the association; the Rev. Clarence B. Gould, Albany, who gave the invocation, and Richard H. Balch, State Democratic Chairman.

NIAGARA DEBATABLE TO ALL – Power possibilities of the Niagara River are enough to get many people talking, but here are three who spoke in debate before the New York State Publishers Association in Albany yesterday. Left to right: John Burton, chairman of the State Power Authority, Repr. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Repr. William E. Miller.

(2.) Soviets' Collapse Already Started, Gilmore Tells Publishers of State

Newsman Speaks
At Convention

Signs of weakness in the Communist regime were pointed out by Eddie Gilmore, Associated Press Correspondent who spent 11 years behind the Iron

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Curtain, in a talk at the convention of the New York State Publishers Association yesterday at the DeWitt Clinton Hotel.

The correspondent, who was unable to leave Russia for many years because of his wife, was featured at the publishers' luncheon yesterday. He returned to America with his wife and two daughters last year, after the Moscow government relented following Stalin's death.

INTERNAL TROUBLES

Gilmore said Russia has many internal troubles, resulting from corruption of public officials, failure to meet production goals and many other difficulties.

"We are overestimating the strength and power of Soviet Russia," he declared, adding:

"The present Malenkov government is a weak one and is trying to consolidate its position and is bluffing in playing for time."

SEES FALL BEGUN

While there are several developments possible in Russia's present situation, Mr. Gilmore said he thinks a "slow collapse of the Communist dynasty is underway," and that "dry rot is setting in at home in Russia."

He cited as signs the defection of Tito, the East German riots and the calling to a halt of the Communist drive in Korea.

GIVES WARNING

Mr. Gilmore added that the Communist government leaders are convinced that the United States is heading for a "terrible economic depression," and when that happens they expect we will have to withdraw our forces from abroad and they can then move in. He warned against talking depression as falling right into "the party line."

Paul Miller of Rochester, Gannett newspapers executive and president of the Publishers' Association presided. He also served as moderator in the public debate arranged at the DeWitt yesterday afternoon on the "Niagara Power Development" . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

SAYS RUSSIA EXPECTS U. S. COLLAPSE – Eddy Gilmore, left, shown with Paul Miller, president of the New York State Publishers Association, told the publishers group yesterday that Russia expected economic chaos and collapse in America. T.U. Staff Photo by Roberta Smith

e. (B3a/f73)

*****

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Knickerbocker News
Albany, N. Y.
January 15, 1954

Dewey Hits Hard at Foes Of State's Niagara Power Plan

Governor Dewey, in a free-swinging speech last night before a meeting of the State Publishers Association in Albany, said his administration planned no hike in state tax rates in the coming year, and assailed opponents of his Niagara power and compulsory automobile insurance programs . . . .

Speaking of young Roosevelt, Mr. Dewey told the publishers later he had been "a little appalled to learn that this afternoon junior had attempted to get in bed with me." He added: "Frankly, gentlemen, that's a fate worse than death. But he did not go all the way, so my virtue is preserved."

The Governor referred to the Roosevelt announcement that he now favors state construction of the Niagara project. Formerly, he had wanted the project built by Army Engineers . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

JUNIOR FELT HIS WRATH – Governor Dewey last night lambasted the stand taken by Repr. Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. on development of Niagara River power and had equally unkind words for a Republican, Repr. William E. Miller, who also is opposed to the Dewey administration plan for the project. The Governor made his attack on the two at a talk before the New York State Publishers Association, conducting its winter convention in the DeWitt Clinton Hotel. Left to right in the photograph at the publishers' dinner are James H. Ottaway, vicepresident of the association; Governor Dewey and Paul Miller, president of the publishers' group.

f. (B3a/f73)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
January 15, 1954

(1.) Sparks Fly in Power Debate

By DAVID H. BEETLE
Times-Union's Own Bureau

ALBANY – TVA, Insull, PSC regulations, utility taxes, electric rates in Canada, St. Lawrence power, and a dozen other issues impinging on the proposed

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

6 billion kilowatt Niagara hydro-electric development got a two-hour airing before the New York State Publishers Association here yesterday.

In speeches, rebuttal, and a question hour, John E. Burton, Ithaca, State Power Authority head, and Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. supported differing brands of state development . . . .

(2.)

Dewey, Roosevelt Hint Fiery Fall

By EMMET N. O'BRIEN
Times-Union's Own Bureau

ALBANY – Publishers of New York State probably have had a preview of the 1954 gubernatorial election.

They heard in separate meetings yesterday the two most likely contenders, Gov. Dewey, who would be seeking a fourth term on the Republican ticket, and Franklin Delano Roosevelt Jr., the New York City congressman, who would be seeking a foothold on the path that led his father to the White House . . . .

g. (B3a/f73)

*****

THE BULLETIN

From the Central News Office, Times-Union Building, Rochester 14, N. Y.
For Executives of The Gannett newspapers and to Be Kept Confidential Within the Organization

January 21, 1954

HAROLD KEENAN

POWER (Oratorical Division)

Much of Niagara's potential power continues to flow unharnessed, but there was no lack of oratory on the subject when the State Publishers convened in Albany.

Anyone who attempted to listen objectively soon discovered that the problem is not nearly as simple as the proponents of federal, state or private development would like the public to believe. The net result was to leave the impression o f a vast jigsaw puzzle, the main outlines beginning to take shape, but with scores of important pieces either lost or deliberately mislaid.

Congressman Miller was outnumbered but (as the sports writers would put it) not outmatched by Junior Roosevelt (sidling toward the state plan), and the alliance of John (The Professor) Burton and Governor Dewey. Charges of misrepresentation were exchanged casually, but most of the ugly talk came from

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Roosevelt and Dewey. If this was a preview of the state campaign we now know it will be fought out on the saloon brawl level.

Junior, despite his good looks (he'd better watch his calories!) and his voice (somewhat dimmed by a bad cold), seemed out of his league when it came to facts, figures and logic. The Governor, who only a year ago (off the record) roundly abused one group of editors for action taken by another, this time was very much on the record (with a stenotypist). He pulled every oratorical trick (change of pace, invective, wrapping himself in the state flag, mandate of the people, following in the footsteps of the great names, etc.) to woo the publishers. Applause at the formal afternoon debate indicated that their sales resistance to even a mild dose of socialism was undented. He was somewhat more conciliatory on the question of compulsory inspection of automobiles, even admitting that he was not sure whether it should be done by a new state bureaucracy or by private garages.

Paul Miller, wielding a firm gavel as president, kept the bitter debate from getting out of bounds. Once when a remark form the floor appeared to be unleashing a cyclone he shifted the gears with a quiet call for "Next question, please".

News coverage by the wire services emphasized the gutter name-calling aspects, glossing over the actual framework of the debate. Quick to protest was Fred Stein, who demanded that AP produce a wrapup for Friday PMs. In the end the Binghamton Press combined it with the sidebars turned out by GNS, but still felt that it was not serving its readers completely. Not until the next day did some reporters tumble to the fact that the Governor's reference to "flannel-mouthed oratory" was directed at a fellow-Republican, Congressman Miller. They found out by asking both the Congressman and the Governor's aides, but not before the Albany Times-Union and the Buffalo Evening news had mistakenly reported that the crack was aimed at F.D.R.Jr. . . . .

VSJ

h. (B3a/f73)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Sunday, March 28, 1954

1,500 Turn Tables, Honor Carl Hallauer At Testimonial Fete

The role was reversed for Carl S. Hallauer last night. An outstanding civic leader whose affability and amiable wit have caused him to be drafted as toastmaster at scores of testimonial dinners for others, found himself guest of 1,500 persons who gathered in his honor at the Sheraton Hotel.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Persons prominent in the business and political life of the nation, state and city attended the dinner, which was sponsored by the Lincoln Republican League.

Chief speaker was Rep. Jacob K. Javits of New York City, member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Javits arraigned Republican congressional foes of certain phases of President Eisenhower's program for the nation, among them Sen. Joseph McCarthy. These men, he held, endanger chances of the Republicans winning congressional elections next fall. (Details, Page 1-A.)

Other speakers, introduced by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett newspapers and toastmaster for the affair, were . . . .

Miller read numerous telegrams from prominent friends of Hallauer who were unable to attend.

Included was a letter from Governor Dewey, who, letting the bygone of the 1952 convention be a bygone, as Miller pointed out, hailed Hallauer as a leader in every good cause and a man who never let creed, race or color stand in the way of his friendships.

Other letters were from former President Herbert Hoover, Vice President Richard M. Nixon [James A.] Farley (who cabled his regrets while enroute to France), Frank Gannett, Spyros Skouros, president of Twentieth Century-Fox; Ralph S. Damon, president of Trans-World Airlines; Leonard W. Hall, chairman of the Republican national Committee; Senator Styles Bridges and Joseph M. Martin Jr., Speaker of the House . . . .

i. (B3a/f73)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Tuesday, April 20, 1954

AP Elects
Two from Midwest

NEW YORK (AP) – Members of The Associated Press re-elected four directors and elected two new ones at the annual AP meeting yesterday.

(Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, is a member of the AP board.) . . . .Four AP staffers participated in a panel discussion at the annual meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel yesterday following an address by Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, to the AP membership.

The four staff men, who answered questions from publishers about foreign affairs, were:

Frank Noel, Pulitzer Prize-winning photographer captured by the Communists in Korea.

Relman Morin, who won a Pulitzer Prize for reporting of the Korean War.

John Hightower, a Pulitzer Prize winner for international reporting.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Thomas Whitney, who spent seven years in Moscow as an AP correspondent.

Moderator of the discussion was Benjamin M. McKelway of the Washington Star, an AP director.

Noel told the AP members that there is a schism between the Chinese Reds and the Russians and he expressed hope that the United States would exploit it. Noel, who was released last year after the Korean truce, said the schism began developing about two years ago.

The Chinese Communists, he said, "want the Russians to get out."

"But instead of getting out," he added, "they are bringing their wives and children in. The Chinese don't like it."

Noel was asked his opinion of "Fifth Amendment Communists" in the United States. His answer was: "I don't care how they dig the Commies up. I think the best way to deal with Commies is at the open end of a .45." A person either is or is not an American, he declared.

Whitney told the gathering that he believes American possession of the H-bomb has confronted Russia with something of a dilemma. He explained it this way: Communist dogma always has held that there will be world revolution entailing conflict; and now the Kremlin faces the proposition that conflict would mean destruction of the Soviet Union.

Hightower, answering a question said he did not know whether Vice President Nixon was speaking for the administration or for himself when he said U.S. troops might have to be sent to Indochina. Either way, he said, Nixon's remarks were in line with the thinking of many Washington officials.

Morin told the gathering that he believes the South Korean army will be developed within a reasonable time to a point where U.S. troops can be withdrawn to a reserve area – possibly outside Korea.

McKelway jibed a so-called "off the record" talks and "news leaks."

His comment, made in opening the discussion session, was in obvious reference to Nixon's "off the record" talk before the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington last week.

j. (B7/f1)

*****

EDITORIAL PAGE of the Rochester Times-Union, Tuesday, April 20, 1954

Columnist First a Preacher

Dr. Norman Vincent Peale – A remarkable American with Tremendous Pulpit Appeal . . .
Easter Sunday Baptism for Sokolsky Children

By PAUL MILLER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Rochester area has some of the finest churches in the nation and some of the great men of religion – Protestant, Jew, Catholic. It is always interesting for a Rochesterian to visit other great churches.

I was particularly eager, being in New York over Easter, to hear in his own pulpit a man I have long admired both as speaker and writer . . . .

8. 1955

a. (B4/f1)
*****

THE SUN
REFLECTS THE LIBERAL VIEW
Vol. XVIII – No. 2
January 13, 1955
10 CENTS
ROCHESTER N.Y.

"Paul Miller has
A large lap"
SEE POLKA ON PAGE 14

Political POLKA
By CURT GERLING

Paul Miller, we trust, has a large lap. This past week the Gannett publisher had to make room for five more. Already crowded with City Hall sycophants, and other politically ambitious, Miller had to squirm a bit to welcome four men and a lady to snuggle against his vest.

The new lap sitters were Bill Foster, John Roche, Earl Arnold, Clayton Handy and Wanda Pietrzak who obligingly voted to ban anything stronger than pop at the new Auditorium . . . .

Although the vote was recorded in the daily press as a split vote of four-to-three and "secret," it actually was five-to-two . . . .

This secret business is not new to Rochester. It's a time-worn device for those lacking the courage to face their friends, the public and reality – a curtain for the cowards. It is hardly suitable procedure for those entrusted with civic and public responsibility.

The disservice that the five commissioners performed can not be counted immediately. The articulate minority that opposed the wet aspects of the vote are hardly those who will attend sporting events, but can be counted for all the free expositions. It will certainly mean at least $100,000 a year loss of revenue. After the first few years this is going to seem bigger than ever. Chances are that the Memorial may become another white elephant like the subway (The Gannett Co. is also for the subway, which makes it one of the largest collectors of white elephants in history. All at Rochester taxpayers' expense.)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It's not only the taxpayer who gets it in the neck but a couple of nice fellows who have been trying to do the impossible for Rochester, viz., Harold Rand "who is expected to make a profit" as memorial manager, and Don Foote who "is expected to make it pay civic dividends." Both the manager and Deputy City Manager are now invited to take the dive with two large anvils tied to their legs.

If we have put Paul Miller on the hook we want to take him off, right here. He was only doing a job for his boss, declaring another dividend to the WCTU that loaned Gannett his first important $50,000. The fact that Miller is serving up the over bled Rochester taxpayer is quite beside the point and of no interest whatsoever to him. Nor is the fact of any consequence to Miller that once again a freedom has been violated by intimidation of those who are slaves to expedience and who would dodge behind the secret ballot.

Miller knows a thousand who would seek to curry favor with his newspapers. We doubt if he secretly holds them in high regard. The religion of his newspapers is the "dry" line and was when he was still in high school. It is apt to be for as long as Miller lives. He did a job for his boss and a job on the taxpayers. It isn't the first time either has happened in Rochester. It required as much skill as it did circulation to put over the minority's view.

Like many of the five who will now sit on his lap Miller has been known to take a drink himself, not as many as some of the "dry-voting" commissioners, but it's unlikely that if you were a guest in his home or elsewhere that he wouldn't offer "to buy" and join you in one or more libations.

It was not necessary for him to compromise his integrity in making the Memorial dry. He declared himself on the issue long ago. He was biased and admitted it editorially. Now that it is over, at least for a few years, his only concern should be how he is going to keep his pants pressed with all his "friends" clamoring for knee space.

Most anyday [sic] he should expect to spread himself a bit. George Rockas, proprietor of the Times Square Tavern opposite the Memorial entrance, is probably just as happy about the situation as Miller's boss Frank Gannett. Rockas will want lap room too.

NOTE: The "ayes" and "nays" on the voting are our own conviction. No member of the Commission violated the agreement of "secrecy" when queried. We add that we believe they voted the way they thought the public wanted them to vote. Our contention is that they voted under a Gannett brain-washing that made a minority opinion seem to them a majority one.

b. (B4/f1)

THE SUN

REFLECTS THE LIBERAL VIEW

Vol. XVIII – No. 2

January 13, 1955

10 CENTS

1877

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

ROCHESTER N.Y.

EDITORIALS

City may run Memorial pop stands

Most of the members of the War Memorial Commission are more than a little embarrassed by the decision they had to make – the one that decreed nothing stronger than soda pop shall be sold at the new civic structure.

They admit that the combination of pressure from the dry Gannett crowd and the refusal of the American Legion to take a forthright stand left them no choice.

However, this is something they will tell you privately but deny in public:

The Commission expects to "get off the hook" of this unpopular decision by having the city take over the War Memorial concessions. Since the law specifically forbids a municipality to sell liquors, this would solve the embarrassing dilemma in which the Committee finds itself.

But, if that does happen, it should not satisfy the public, whose dollars are paying for that building.

Nor would it meet with approval from private purveyors of food and drink to see the city enter into open competition with them.

Besides, what would it do to the GOP philosophy and its hatred for "creeping socialism?"

This may not come to pass. So far it is only in the rumor stage. But at least one member of the commission seems to think it is only a matter of time before the city itself takes over the concessions.

That would not only mark the day when "red ink" starts [to] flow on the Memorial operation, but it would be completely wrong in principle.

c. (B4/f1)

*****

The Gannetteer
January 1955

(3) PHOTOs:

Caption:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

AT GANNETT DINNER in Niagara Falls were Herbert W. Cruickshank, general manager of the Gannett Newspapers; Councilman Calvin L. Keller, who presented the key to the city to Gannett; FEG, president of Gannett Co., Inc. and president of the Niagara Falls Gazette; Mrs. Gannett. BACK ROW – the Rev. Chester C. Beebe, president of the Niagara Falls Religious Fellowship; Harold Reagan, president of the Chamber of Commerce; Paul Miller, executive vice-president of Gannett Co., Inc.; the Rt. Rev. Msgr. P. J. Tronolone, Catholic dean of Niagara County, and frank Tripp, who is chairman of the board of Gannett Co., Inc.

Caption:
GAZETTE EXECUTIVES and civic leaders at Dec. 10 dinner given for Mr. and Mrs. FEG by Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce. In right foreground is Vincent S. Jones, director, Group News and Editorial Office.

Caption:
GROUP EXECUTIVES and Gannett executives got acquainted at this table at C. of C. banquet for Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gannett last month. From foreground (left): Edgar K. Warren, Gazette auditor; Herbert D. Taylor, Group general auditor; Don U. Bridge, general manager, Rochester newspapers; L. R. Blanchard, Group general executive editor; Lynn N. Bitner, Group general business manager; Cyril Williams, Group comptroller, Allan Best, superintendent of Group buildings; (from foreground, right): Kenneth Fillingham, Gazette composing room foreman, with Clifford O. Peterson, Gazette display advertising manager, and Irving H. Fitch, Group advertising director. All were asked to rise when introduced at the dinner.

NIAGARA FALLS DINNER

‘Our Objectives and Aims:’ Text of Gannett Speech

By FRANK GANNETT

THANK YOU for your warm and generous welcome. To receive it is pleasing indeed.

I can understand that you are interested in knowing what sort of man heads the organization which will control your favorite newspaper, the Niagara Falls Gazette. Alanson Deuel gave you a newspaper which you have supported generously for years. I hope we may continue to give you one you will like and support. It is a challenge, but we are going to try to give you an even better paper in the years ahead.

Somehow in reading St. Paul’s letter to the Philippians, I was reminded by a passage in it of our objectives and aims for The Gazette: “And now , brethren, all that rings true, all that commands reverence, and all that makes for right; all that is pure, all that is lovely. All that is gracious in the telling; wherever virtue and merit are found – let this be the argument of your thoughts."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

When Mr. Deuel knew that his days were numbered, he gave much thought to getting his affairs in shape. He was reluctant to give up The Gazette. A number of people wanted to buy the paper, but Mr. Deuel wanted us to have it. He had known me personally for half a century. He knew our ideas about journalism. He was sure that in our hands, The Gazette would remain what it had been under his management – a strong, clean good newspaper, devoted to the interests of the community.

I am proud and happy to have The Gazette added to our Group, now numbering 23 fine newspapers. All are successful and enjoy hearty support in the cities in which they are published.

The deciding factor which caused me to buy the Niagara Falls Gazette was my faith in the future of the paper and the future of Niagara Falls. I am convinced that Niagara Falls is going to grow into a still greater industrial community. It took faith to make this big investment, but I have confidence in the paper and confidence and faith in the community in which it plays such a great part. I hope The Gazette will continue to be a vital factor in the building of the community, become even larger and of even greater importance and influence.

Aside from the additional electric power that will be available for local industries when the necessary legislation is enacted, Niagara Falls will continue to draw great throngs here to see one of the greatest spectacles on our continent.

From a sketch of my life in a booklet which you may already have seen, or will soon have an opportunity to read, you will see that I was a poor boy. My ancestors settled in Massachusetts in 1638. One ancestor I should like to mention particularly. He was my great-great-grandfather, Benjamin Gannett. He married Deborah Sampson who was so fired with patriotic spirit that, disguised as a man, she volunteered to join Washington's army. She was accepted for army duty, entered Army ranks and fought in the campaign around Tarrytown. In one of these battles, she was wounded but lest it be discovered that she was a woman, she probed the wound and extracted the bullet herself. General Washington heard of her great bravery and courage and bestowed on her the highest possible honors. He asked her to come see him which she did.

Early in the Second World War, a Liberty ship was launched near Baltimore. I attended the launching. It was christened the Deborah Sampson, recognizing the part she played in inspiring others to help win the Revolutionary War. This ship is still in commission.

During the Civil War, my father answered Lincoln's call for volunteers. My father was in the 2nd New York Cavalry under General Sheridan, and was with Sheridan when he made his famous ride to Winchester.

My father's health was ruined by exposure and duty in the Army and when he returned to civil life, there was little income. My mother, with four children, had a tough time trying to supply food and clothing for us. I went to work early and soon was self-sustaining.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I HAVE SHOCKED many people by telling them that I have been thankful I was born poor. I never inherited a penny but being poor taught me that I had to work hard and could not afford to waste time.

My father insisted when I undertook a job, that I should finish it. It was customary for me to help in the hoeing of the corn on a farm where we lived. My father said when I started a row of corn, I had to finish that row. That I did, you may be sure, under his watchful eye!

I was ambitious to get an education, encouraged by my mother. She insisted that we move several times, so I would have better schools. As a high school senior, I won a scholarship to Cornell University and was graduated after four years, paying all my expenses at the University. At the time I was graduated in 1898, I had $1,000 in the bank. I made my money mostly by doing newspaper work for newspapers in large cities.

Immediately after my graduation, Cornell's President Schurman was appointed by President McKinley as chairman of the First Commission to study the Philippines. He asked me to be his secretary. This association with President Schurman was an education in itself and this appointment, as his secretary, took me around the world and I visited all the principal countries.

When Judge William Howard Taft succeeded President Schurman as chairman of the Commission to the Philippines, he urged me to be his secretary, but I had decided that I wanted to be a newspaperman. When I was in Paris, I received a cablegram from Mr. Taft offering me a position as his secretary, but I sent him a reply, thanking him for the compliment and regretting that I could not accept. If I had gone with Mr. Taft, I would have had a great experience in public service, including being with him in the White House, but I said no to all of this in order to go ahead with my plans to be a newspaperman.

ONE MORNING early in February 1937, while at breakfast in Miami Beach with my beloved wife, I read a dispatch from Washington saying that Roosevelt had proposed his court-packing bill. I was heartsick when I read this, as were thousands of Americans all over the country. I determined to do what I could to avert such a disaster, so I got a reservation to Washington and on arrival there, immediately went to the office of Senator Borah. He was a great leader in the Senate and had tremendous power and influence. He felt as I did about the Roosevelt proposal. He said, "Frank, you are right. If this idea is carried out, it will destroy our Constitution and our form of government. Make no mistake about that. It is just devastating in its purpose.

He said further, "I wish you would get busy and try to create opinion against this proposal." He said there was enough strength in the Senate to hold off any action for three months or so, but that we would have to get public opinion behind us when the fight was made on this measure. I took it up with the heads of the Bar Association and with prominent lawyers. They too viewed the proposal with grave concern. Many also got busy. Notably active was former Congressman Samuel B. Pettengill of Indiana. It wasn't long before the whole nation was aroused over this destructive proposal of the President.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I conferred frequently with Senator Borah. He said that the forces against this measure were increasing every day. He named various senators who had joined him in his position against it. Every newspaper in the country began to discuss the possibility of this change in the Supreme Court and from all parts of the country we got evidence of the intense feeling against it. Finally the day approached for a vote in the Senate. Borah said that our side needed 13 votes. He pulled out of his pocket a roll of the Senate. A group of Senators assembled and went over the list to see what the possibilities were of getting 13 votes against the measure. One by one we gained strength, but after working all afternoon we still lacked number of votes. But you know the rest of the story. Our efforts and the efforts of those who joined us from all parts of the country finally produced a vote that killed the court-packing bill.

As a result of my work in connection with the court-packing bill, I received suggestions from various parts of the country that I be a candidate for President. When the Republican Convention was held in 1940, there were delegates from many states who wanted me to get the nomination. I have always taken satisfaction in the fact that I had 33 delegates who were for me on the first roll call.

I seldom look back, but occasionally I permit myself to do so. Thus it is that in a most interesting life, I regard this experience in connection with the court-packing bill as a highlight. For that reason, I related it to you in this personal visit here tonight.

IN CONCLUISON, let me urge every one of you to do his part in keeping this a land of opportunity, as it has been for me. That means we must preserve the Constitution, with the freedom and liberties which it guarantees to us. All over the world, Communism is a threat. Communism is only socialism magnified. Communism is big government, where the government manages everybody and everything. We want none of it here in America, but we will have it if our Constitution isn't defended at all times and preserved. Remember that socialism is always the first step toward Communism.

It has been a joy for me to be here tonight and I hope we may get to know each other better and better in the years that lie ahead. Thank you for your warm welcome. I bid you all good-night.

GAZETTE CIRCULATION CONTINUES TO RISE

An Audit Bureau of Circulations report recently received by C. CLIFFORD FROST, circulation manager of the Niagara Falls Gazette, showed The Gazette with an average net paid circulation of 33,451 for the year ending Sept. 30, 1954.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

An increase of 697 in average net paid circulation for the month of November was reported by Frost in The Gazette's first month as a Gannett newspaper.

NIAGARA FALLS DINNER

Newspapers as Effective Mass Media: The Text of Paul Miller's Speech

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice-President, Gannett Newspapers

YOU DON'T BUILD a good newspaper overnight. It develops over many years, just as a person's character develops. In time its readers come to know it for what it is. If it is truly successful, the newspaper is a good neighbor, a good citizen, a trusted confidant.

The Niagara Falls Gazette has succeeded because it is that kind of newspaper.

It is that kind of newspaper because of ALANSON CHASE DEULE and the men he had around him, many of whom are here tonight.

We are happy to have this opportunity, before a civic gathering, to pay tribute to the memory of a man and to the newspaper which is his monument.

In The Gazette, the people of the Falls area have a newspaper which would do credit to very much larger cities. The newspaper world has recognized this for a long time. The Gazette is an interesting, appealing, stimulating product. Its physical plant is one of the most modern and complete anywhere.

You are all proud of it, I know. And we of the Gannett Company are proud of our new association with it.

MR. GANNETT told you some stories about himself. Here's one he didn't tell you:

The other day he was discussing the Niagara Falls Gazette with associates. He related that when he was just out of Cornell, he became secretary to the Chairman of the first U. S. Commission to the Philippines. On his way out he met some young Englishmen in Hong Kong who were on a world tour and going next to the United States. He told them he was from New York State.

"Well then," one said with interest, "you must know all about the great Niagara Falls. We are going there as soon as we can."

Much to his embarrassment, Mr. Gannett had to admit that he'd never been there.

"I thought then," he said in telling the story, "here I have been reared 100 miles or so away and I never have seen Niagara Falls! I determined to go as soon as I returned to the United States. I did. But I never dreamed I would ever own the Niagara Falls Gazette!"

HOWEVER, he must have had other newspapers in mind, even then. Shortly he bought in at the Ithaca Journal. And he formed a lifetime partnership with ERWIN R. DAVENPORT and FRANK TRIPP at Elmira.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

From about 1918 onward ownership began expanding. They had to expand. As they tell it now, there were so many families living off the Elmira property that they couldn't earn enough there in Elmira to feed them all.

Erwin Davenport is living in Florida now. Frank Tripp is chairman of the board of Gannett Co., Inc. He's also a nationally known columnist. Anyway, he's a Niagara Falls-known columnist because his column appears in The Gazette every week. And a second book of his writings has just come off the press.

The book, by the way, is $2.

There now are 23 newspapers, 3 television stations and 4 radio stations in The Gannett Group. Numerically it is the largest organization of its kind in the United States. These properties are mainly in New York State. Then there is a newspaper in New Jersey, one in Connecticut, and a newspaper, radio and TV station in Danville, Ill.

AS ONE newspaper after another was added in the early years, Frank Gannett and his associates concluded that it would be morally wrong as well as poor business to remold them to some general standard. Instead, local management was encouraged to retain and develop the personality of each newspaper – and also of the individuals in local management, themselves. They called it local autonomy.

The principal of local autonomy is nursed along more carefully and stressed more emphatically in The Gannett Group than in any other newspaper organization I know. That's why it's called a Group, not a chain. A chain is characterized by a dictated policy. There is usually a uniformity of practice, appearance and style. The opposite is true in The Gannett Group.

It happens that I don't recall seeing anything in the editorial columns of the Niagara Falls Gazette with which I could disagree very much. I doubt if others at Rochester have. But, no matter; THOMAS J. BERRIGAN is the editor of this newspaper and ROBERT T. HARROLD the general manager. They both live in Niagara Falls; not Rochester.

Niagara Falls is so near, though, and such an inviting spot, that I expect it to become No. 2 on the list of Gannett cities most visited by Rochester executives.

Saratoga Springs has long been No. 1. You wonder why? As many as six executives have been known to head out across the state at about the same season to study the Saratoga situation.

Judging from that, Niagara Falls will require heavy and frequent inspection between about May 11 and July 30 . . . . They tell me those are the Hamburg track dates.

PEOPLE who know of Frank Gannett's strong convictions sometimes ask how he can stand for editorial autonomy in his newspapers – that is, some vigorously expounding a point of view counter to his.

If you wonder, too, let me tell you of an incident in the New York state gubernatorial campaign of 1950.

Mr. Gannett, a Republican, made up his mind that he personally could not support either Republican Dewey or Democrat Lynch. He said so publicly.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

One day The Associated Press carried a story reporting who each of the New York State Gannett newspapers was supporting.

It said that 16 were backing Dewey.

The Rochester newspapers printed the story. So did others in the Group. Some pointed out editorially that it proved that we do adhere to the autonomy principle enunciated by Mr. Gannett himself.

I showed the story to Mr. Gannett. He looked at it long and thoughtfully. Then he said:

"You know, Paul, sometimes I don't know about this autonomy business!"

That was all he ever said about it, to my knowledge.

YES, IT IS assumed that Gannett newspapers will be clean and community-minded and patriotic and fair. From there on, the local management is on its own as to specific editorial problems and issues.

In advertising and circulation and in business practice Gannett newspapers aim to be good neighbors also.

Briefly, and as a general policy, we believe in the lowest feasible advertising and circulation rates. We'd rather get more advertising at a low rate than carry less advertising at a high rate, even if net income were equal. Why? It's better business for us and for our communities. Among other things, low rates mean more advertisers, including little fellows, can use the newspapers regularly, profitably and with adequate space. The overall picture, present and future, is better for newspapers which adhere to this principle, and for the communities they serve.

The same for circulation. Many Sunday newspapers throughout the nation are now 25 cents a copy. Many more are 20 cents. The Gannett Sunday newspapers only recently went from 10 to 15 cents – and while many daily newspapers are selling now at 7 and even 10 cents a copy, every Gannett newspaper is a nickel with one exception.

This is no commitment!

The Gannett management believes, in short, that the newspaper – to keep its place and to give maximum service with reasonable profit – must remain an effective mass medium. We propose to do everything possible to keep it that.

We are interested most of all in home-delivered circulation within productive training areas. Why? Because that's where it usually does the most good for us and for advertisers.

These newspapers are produced for family reading in the home. No advertising is accepted that it is believed might be harmful. Liquor advertising is excluded – it will be excluded here as current commitments expire. A close watch is kept on the comics. Standards of decency are insisted on in advertising and news.

ALL OF WHICH adds up to this: You aren't going to see any radical changes or upheavals in the Niagara Falls Gazette. Anyway, big changes don't always make big improvements.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In Oklahoma, where I was reared, a farm magazine printed a photo of a deserted farmhouse in a desolate, windswept field. It was the picture of decay. The magazine offered a prize for the best 100-word essay on the disastrous effects of land erosion.

The story goes that a bright Indian lad won a prize with this contribution:

"Picture show why white man crazy. Cut down trees. Make too big tepee. Plow hill, water wash. Wind blow soil. Grass gone. Door gone. Window gone. Squaw gone. Whole place gone to heck. No pig. No corn. No pony.

"Indian no plow land. Keep grass. Buffalo eat grass. Indian eat buffalo. Hide make plenty big tepee. Make moccasin. All time eat. Indian no hunt job. No work. No hitchhike. No ask relief. No build dam. No give dam.

"White man heap crazy."

We'd be "heap crazy," believe me, if we contemplated any major changes in the Niagara Falls Gazette.

NOW I HAVE an announcement of special interest to Niagara Falls.

First, a little background.

The majority of the common stock of Gannett Co., Inc., is owned by the Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation, Inc. The Foundation was established by Mr. Gannett in 1935. It has received the stock through periodic gifts by him since.

His goal in setting up the Foundation was (1) provide maximum security for employes [sic], (2) keep the newspapers independent of any outside influence and (3) provide means for the organization to contribute to worthy institutions in the communities where our newspaper are published.

In May of 1952 the Foundation took a great step. It created Frank Gannett Newspaperboy Scholarships, Inc. Through this organization scholarships are awarded each year to a number of carrier boys to attend the college of their choice.

The scholarships carry a $3,000 award payable $375 each semester. The money is provided $2,000 by the Gannett Foundation and $1,000 by the participating newspaper.

There are already 88 boys in colleges throughout the United States, thanks to this plan.

It is a pleasure to announce The Gazette now is a participating newspaper. It has been assigned two scholarships. Thus, in 1955 two Gazette newspaperboys will go to college, each to be provided with $3,000 over a four-year term to help toward the cost of his education.

Our hopes for The Gazette and for Niagara Falls are high. This city has everything. It is growing and developing and improving right along. If the power situation can be worked out – and preferably if private enterprise is given a chance to do this job – then Niagara Falls will go ahead even faster. Yes, the sky is the limit.

Niagara Falls is going places and the Gannett Newspapers are going right along with it!

Before his untimely death, Alanson Deuel told friends:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The one thing I was determined, once I had made up my mind to relinquish control of The Gazette was that it must continue to be the same strong force for community good that I have always tried to make it.

"That's why I decided to sell to Frank Gannett. The Gannett Newspapers are outstanding in public service."

None of us – at Rochester, in the management and staff here – none of us will ever knowingly let Mr. Deuel down.

The Niagara Falls Gazette and the city of Niagara Falls will continue to go forward together. Let no one here ever doubt that they will.

d. (B4/f1)

Rochester Times-Union
Wednesday, February 16, 1955, p. 18

Publishers Oppose Bill
On Tax-Exempt Lists

BUFFALO (AP) – The New York State Publishers Assn. yesterday passed a resolution opposing a bill before the Legislature which would relieve cities of the requirement to publish annually a list of wholly and partially tax-exempt property.

The resolution, approved at the annual meeting of the publishers, said the bill could have an adverse effect on "the people's right to know."

A similar resolution was passed Monday by the New York Associated Dailies convention here.

* * *

FRANK E. (PAPPY) NOEL, Pulitzer Prize winning photographer for the Associated Press, who spent 32 months in a Red prison camp in North Korea, spoke to the publishers last night. During a question and answer period, Noel said he and many others were of the opinion that the United Nations forces in Korea could have cleaned up the entire peninsula at one stage of the fighting, but were restrained by U.S. government officials.

He also said he saw Russian officers in North Korea and believed Russian pilots flew the Russian-built MIG jet fighter planes in combat against American pilots over Korea.

Noel said Korea underlined the need for spelling out to American soldiers the behavior expected of them when taken prisoner by the enemy.

He said the reds, because of their penchant for "converting" prisoners to their side, were unlike any enemy American fighting men had met before. In Korea, he said, many youthful American soldiers were vulnerable to Communist propaganda because they didn't know what Communism was all about.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Noel, commenting on the stories about turncoats in North Korean prison camps, remarked that "a soldier pointing a 12-inch bayonet at you is enough to make any man string along for a while" with his captors.

He said medicine and food were used by the Communists to force cooperation out of U.S. soldiers in the prison camps.

"Sometimes we'd shout Red slogans, or at least pretend to swallow their line, if for no other reason than to get an extra bowl of corn."

* * *

JAMES H. OTTOWAY, president of Ottoway Newspapers, Endicott, was installed as president of the publishers association for 1955. Ottoway was advanced from vice president at last summer's meeting to succeed Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Co., Rochester.

Also elected last summer and installed yesterday as vice president of the association was George W. Helm Jr., vice president of Westchester County Publishers Inc., White Plains. James M. Richter of the Buffalo Evening News was reelected secretary-treasurer of the association at last summer's meeting.

At last night's banquet session, Ottoway presented a traveling bag to Miller as an expression of the association's thanks for his services as president during 1954.

e. (B4/f1)

*

MEMORANDUM - - VISIT WITH RANNE IN CALIFORNIA
(March 25 to March 29)

April 5, 1955
(3 1/2 pp.)

I determined to go to see Ranne after learning definitely that his outfit was to be shipped to Japan . . . .

f. (B4/f1)

Times-Union
April 5, 1955

A Son in Uniform: Stop Worrying

Crewcut Youngsters . . . They're Slick and Trim . . . Well-Trained for Life in the World of Today – and Tomorrow

By PAUL MILLER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

If you have a young son in the armed forces, and are worrying about him, don't.

Barring a war, God forbid, he is better off than at home for awhile. And certainly he is getting training and discipline that will fit him for many (though not all) aspects of life as not even home and college can do.

I suspected that. Now I feel convinced of it after a visit to my own son at Camp Pendleton, Calif., on the eve of his departure for duty in Japan.

Thousands of other Rochester area parents have, one way or another, made similar visits to this or similar camps. Thousands more assuredly will do likewise, if they can. It is the kind of world we live in and will continue to live in all our lives.

* * *

CAMP PENDLETON, an enormous Marine base, training camp and staging center covers many thousands of acres along and beyond the coast of California south of Long Beach, toward the Mexican border. Our son, Ranne, was sent there last December after boot training at Parris Island, S.C. Scores of other Rochester-area boys have trained there also, preparatory to duty in Japan, Korea, Okinawa . . .

Nearest town to Camp Pendleton is Oceanside, which, I gathered lives off the Marine Corps.

As in all such towns there is good and bad. Some merchants may gouge, but others keep prices fair enough.

The hotel is good and prices reasonable.

Devoted local men and women maintain an active USO. Churches do their best to get hold of the boys, although I observed that relatively few attend either in town or in the white stucco chapels on the base.

* * *

WHAT'S ONE parent's most pressing impression after a few days' look at a great Marine Corps training center?

There are many, of course: The hard-muscled, ramrod-backed appearance of the crew-cut youngsters . . . their slick, trim appearance to which they adhere pridefully in and out of the camp . . . the belief in the invincibility of their outfit.

But the No. 1 impression for me was this: There should be, indefinitely, some tour of military service for every lad in the land.

Sure, it interrupts their schooling, delays their start in the workaday world. Sure, it's rough in spots – but they'll be up against rough stuff sooner or later anywhere in life. And, there are exposures to ideas, language and temptations around many a college dormitory or fraternity house (or place of work) to match most anything you'll find in or around a military training camp. Don't you think there aren't.

And one more thing: When and if the Big War does come, who'll have the best chance of survival – the trained soldier or the untrained civilian? Think it over!

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

MARINE "BOOT" (apprentice) training is calculatedly rough-and-tough.

"They bang you around," a marine said cheerfully.

"When you're fighting a war," he explained, "you want no softie next to you in the line. One such could threaten the fighting morale of a whole outfit. If one broke under stress or fire, another might and so-on.

"The marines weed 'em out fast. The sleep-walkers and bed-wetters are sent home in a hurry. You get rough treatment from the start. Why not? If you can't stand it then, what are you gonna do in a war, for crying out loud?"

* * *

WHAT AMAZES me over and over about young Marines – or youngsters in any branch of the service – is the off-hand nonchalance with which they accept the vicissitudes of service.

"Goodbye, Dad," called the one I saw off for Yokohama. "See you in 14 months." Fourteen months – and he'll still have a year to go on his 3-year enlistment after that!

I felt suddenly very old. This was the baby who used to embarrass his young parents by standing on his head and looking backward through his legs at guest to whom we tried to introduce him – 6 feet tall now and 190 pounds; standing there on the train platform looking a little tolerant and sympathetic toward his old man.

"God bless you, son," was all I could say to the chubby little boy I seemed to see again through the burly, erect Marine before me.

My heart was full, and my eyes too, as I turned away as thousands of other American fathers have done – and will do for as far ahead as we can see.

Marine Spirit . . . and Slang

NOTES jotted down en route home:

Marine slang fascinates me, also Marine spirit.

Almost any sight or scene may be an "action." "Quite an action," one may comment approvingly as two blondes drift by. A sailor is a "swabbie" (from swab the deck, I took it). An army enlistee is a "doggie." "Look at that sloppy doggie," said one of a group of Marines as a (to me) fine appearing army private strolled by. "Marines don't like doggies," the Marine explained in a voice calculatedly loud enough to be heard by the soldier. The soldier grinned condescendingly.

Any trained, equipped Marine outfit is expected to be so finely organized, so completely on the ready that – if emergency comes – it can move out of its base ready for combat in a matter of hours.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Hence, a boy learns that he can't put off until tomorrow what can be done today. He must have his gear, his rifle, all his equipment polished, pressed, oiled or whatever – ready all the time come what may.

A young sentry at an entrance to Camp Pendleton phoned ahead to clear me when I drove up in a borrowed Chevrolet and applied for a visitor's pass. I stood at the sentry's side as he phoned.

"Describe him," instructed the brisk M. P. at the other end of the line. "Well," drawled my M. P., giving me a sidewise glance, "he's a middleaged [sic] gentleman of about 35 or 37."

I had to laugh, as who wouldn't. "So," I said, "if you call '35 or 37' middleaged, how would you describe me if you knew I was 48?"

PHOTO
Caption:
THE MARINES: "Finely organized . . . completely on the ready . . ."

g. (B4/f1)

Times-Union
April 9, 1955

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Universal Military Training: An Argument Against It

Paul Miller in his article on the Marines (Times-Union April 5) apparently was so fascinated by the "ramrodbacked" youngsters, the ever-clean rifles, and the Spartan, chauvinistic philosophy, that he thinks we should have permanent Universal Military Training.

There are some rather more serious matters that Americans would normally want to consider before arriving at such a conclusion. In fact, these matters are so serious that they have kept the militarists from getting their pet wish for some 36 years now.

First and foremost is the question of whether militarism is compatible with the religion that our nation claims to hold. "Thou shalt not kill" says our God and "Love thine enemies" says our Christ. Is God right? Did Jesus know what he was talking about? Many who believe in the Christian way are fully confident that Christian love is stronger and more realistic than any other force including the Russians, the Chinese Communists, and the United States Marines.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Those who don't go quite that far in their faith still think that UMT is bad for democracy. They know that the kind of authoritarian discipline taught is the opposite of what we need for a strong and imaginative republic. They have seen UMT in Germany, Japan and Russia and want none of it here.

* * *

IN THE MILITARY system responsibility is delegated to the few rather than being accepted by the many. Moreover individuals are expected to be unquestionably obedient to their superiors rather than to use their own critical judgment.

This is, of course, essential to an efficient military organization, but is it good training for responsible citizenship in a democracy?

In short, when one looks beyond the snappy uniforms and fascinating slang, perhaps permanent conscription is not so attractive after all.

GLENN S. MALLISON

For the Peace and Service Committee of the Rochester Religious Society of Friends (Quakers).

1198 Mt. Hope Ave.

* * *

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr. Mallison's is an excellent statement of his point of view. Readers who missed Mr. Miller's article may obtain a copy on request to The Times-Union.

h. (B4/f1)

The Sun
Rochester, N.Y.
Thursday, May 19, 1955

GOP to ignore bid of Gannett press

By RAY GRAHAM

The "request" on the part of Gannett publisher Paul Miller that representatives of the press be permitted to sit in on caucuses and secret sessions of the Republican Party was received with amusement at first, indignation later.

1892

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

One prominent GOP spokesman labeled the request "ridiculous" and an indication of the "growing arrogance of the Gannett Press."

Others more mild in their views said it would be amusing if it wasn't so ridiculous.

"When the daily newspapers call in their advertisers when they raise their rates, consult their subscribers when the price is advanced, permit the public to select or reject news stories, or public officials to know both the thinking and working of their chain, then, and only then, will we consider permitting the press to sit in on our private conversations," one remarked.

Republican spokesman stressed the fact that running a community is big business, "mighty big business." They see no reason why the complete modus operandi should be subject to review, conjecture or criticism on the part of the press, at least until the thoughts of the political parties are crystalized and a course of action indicated.

One long-time Republican office holder said, "I regard the latter-day crop of political reporters inexperienced and unreliable, with little instinct for the niceties and responsibilities of political writing."

An Old Guarder wrathfully denounced publisher Miller as a "carpet-bagger" not satisfied with running his newspapers but intent on running the city and county as well.

Indications are that Miller's request will not be granted and that he has made the stalwarts of his chosen Party very unhappy indeed.

i. (B4/f1)

Times-Union
May 25, 1955

PHOTO
Caption:
Vice President Nixon

Nixon Lays It on the Line:

If We Are Strong, We Survive; Show Weakness, We're Done For

By PAUL MILLER

Vice President Richard Nixon, a veteran himself, told us the facts of life last night about the why and wherefore of peacetime military service.

If, he said, the United States had possessed an adequate military establishment in the late '30s there might never have been a World War II.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

And, he added, if we hadn't dismantled our mighty military machine at the end of that war, there might never have been a Korea.

The vice president, here to accept a gold award from the Military Chaplains' Association in a ceremony attended by all too few at Eastman Theater, laid it on the line in a fashion some don't like.

Some would rather believe that we should get along with a minimum defense system and rush into preparedness only when we are threatened or actually attacked.

That may have been good enough in the old days – before airplanes, say – though many doubt it was good enough even then.

Certainly it isn't good enough today when the United States has (and Russia probably has) the capability of building and delivering a hydrogen bomb packing more explosive force than all the bombs dropped by all the air forces engaged in the second [sic] World War.

What Mr. Nixon told the Eastman audience last night was this:

1. We can be effective in maintaining world peace only so long as we are militarily strong.

2. The way to assure that strength is to see to it that our young are trained and ready all the time.

So Mr. Nixon urged some form of Universal Military Service. Lacking that, he hopes we oldsters will do all we can to encourage young men to get into the armed forces and serve, understanding that in so doing they may preserve not only their own lives but the peace of the world in the process.

He conceded, unhappily, that a soldier is a hero in wartime but apt to be regarded as something else again in time of peace.

Let us, then, he urged, make clear to our youth that we appreciate their willingness to serve and honor them for it. Let us do that in every way we can, personally and through organizations set up for the purpose, like the U.S.O.

First, though, a lot of us need to get the blinders off: The blinders that shut out the facts of life which, ignore them though we may, press in on us from every side in today's troubled world.

Realize, Mr. Nixon was saying, that 1955 is as simple as this: If we are strong, we should be able to survive. One big slip to weakness, and we are done for.

May this message get home to millions!

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

j. (B4/f1)

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT
WASHINGTON

June 14, 1955

Dear Paul:

This is just a note to thank you for sending me the editorial you wrote concerning your six-footer and his current life in the Marines as well as the one about the speech I gave in Rochester recently. I appreciated your thoughtfulness in calling both of them to my attention.

I would like to borrow the last line of the one concerning my speech - - "May this message get home to millions" - - and add it to the one about your son, Ranne. It seems to me that your thoughts would help thousands of our fellow Americans who have sons or daughters in the Armed Forces.

It was good to see you in Rochester and I am looking forward to having a visit with you the next time you are in Washington.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely,
Dick (signed)
Richard Nixon

Mr. Paul Miller
Executive Vice President
The Gannett Newspapers
Rochester 14, New York

k. (B4/f1)

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF DEFENSE
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

[SEAL]:
DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

June 10, 1955

MANPOWER AND PERSONNEL

Dear Mr. Miller:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Thank you very much for the two articles from the Rochester Times-Union which you sent me following my brief visit to Rochester with the Vice President.

I enjoyed both of the articles you wrote and have taken the liberty of reproducing the magnificent article about your son and his departure for the Far East. I think your article carries more impact in saying the things we feel in the military than any article I have ever read.

Please let me know if and when you come to Washington.

Sincerely yours,
Henry Du Flon (signature)
Henry Du Flon
Deputy Assistant Secretary

Paul Miller
Executive Vice President
Gannett Newspapers
Rochester, New York

l. (B4/f1)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
June 28, 1955

PHOTO
Caption:
HONOR FOR PUBLISHER – Paul Miller, second from right, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, receives trophy, on behalf of Frank Gannett, presented by Assn. of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers. Trophy is conferred by Robert Lueckel, second from left, classified ad manager of the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times. L. R. Blanchard, editor of The Democrat and Chronicle, is third from left, with Anthony T. Powderly, classified ad manager of the D&C at left, and Al Mahar, D&C advertising manager, at extreme right.

Vast Economic Growth
Forecast at Ad Parley

An era of "unprecedented economic opportunity which can be the most prosperous in the history of the North American continent," was forecast yesterday by Harry Gwaltney, assistant advertising manager of the Milwaukee Journal . . . .

Pointing out that classified advertising lineage in 52 test cities has shown a 25 per cent gain in the last five years, Gwaltney said that the next decade will show startling changes in economy and our daily lives.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Leaders – hard-boiled foresighted men – in nearly every great industry in this country and Canada are planning constant long-term expansion. Ten years is a short time, but there may well be more new products, more advancement in automation and electronics, more new materials and more progress in science and medicine than in any decade in our history." . . . .

m. (B4/f1)

*****

Times-Union
June 29, 1955

Police Aides Complete
FBI Refresher Course

Nearly 100 graduates of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's National Academy completed their annual retraining course today at the Sheraton.

Talks by John O. Henderson, U.S. Attorney from Buffalo, and Robert Garland of the Graflex Corp., wound up a series of lectures aimed at briefing police and sheriff's officers on the most modern crime detection methods.

The officers, members of the FBI National Academy Associates, New York Chapter, have been meeting at the Sheraton since Sunday.

*** * ***

AT A BANQUET LAST NIGHT the guest speaker was Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers. He urged continued cooperation between the press and the law . . . .

n. (B4/f1)

Times-Union
Thursday, June 30, 1955

Newspapers and Crime News: Why Print It? Does It Help?

*** * ***

Keeping the Wicked Straight

By PAUL MILLER

This special article by Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, is condensed from an address prepared for the annual banquet meeting of the New York Chapter, FBI National Academy Associates, June 28 at the Sheraton.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Newspapermen are frequently asked, “Why print news of crime? What good does it do?”

The honest answer has to be this: “The good” that publication does, if any, is not always the test of what to print. A newspaper is a mirror of life, or ought to be. As we say often, it is for the public to change conditions, not to blame the mirror.

However, the publication of accurate news of crime and misdeeds does serve a multitude of useful purposes.

For example, publicity can give a measure of protection to the speeder or the evil-doer – it can protect him against exaggeration of his offense.

If all the facts in a case are published, the public obtains a correct understanding of the matter, and is able to draw fair conclusions. If the facts are not published, gossip may exaggerate them.

A Reminder

For the Weak

And then the newspaper also offers frequent reminders that crime does not pay.

As a widely-known Nebraska editor and commentator once said:

“The true portrayal of crime and vice is repellent and preventive in its influence, for the story is always tragedy.

“Realization that the risks outweigh the gains, the certainty of a bad ending, and above all the fear of exposure to the world in the press, operate to keep the weak and the wicked straight . . .

“The police ferret out the criminals, the law authorities prosecute, the courts pronounce the penalties, the prison-keepers carry out the punishment – the overhanging sword of publicity cools that criminal impulse and prevents crime.”

* * *

THERE IS NOT a law enforcement officer who cannot recall instances on which newspapers or newspaper reporters have helped in the cause of law enforcement. Let’s look at a few:

Agents of the FBI have seen the results of the periodic publication of their list of “Ten Most Wanted” criminals. The names, descriptions and often the pictures of the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted" men are published in newspapers across the nation. Many of these criminals have been caught because photographs or descriptions were recognized by store clerks, gas station attendants or others.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

City and state police and sheriffs' offices also have benefitted from the publication of crime news and from cooperation of the press. Often an unexpected break can be traced directly to a news item.

We had such a case in 1950 right here. A Rochester businessman, Charles G. Lennox, was brutally slain by a hitchhiker near Canandaigua. Two days later, and more than 100 miles away, a hotel clerk cashed a Christmas Club check bearing Mr. Lennox's name. The clerk recalled having read of the slaying of a man with the same name. He summoned police. The hitchhike killer was arrested within a few minutes.

There have been countless instances in which newspapers have cooperated in the hunt for a criminal not by publishing information but by withholding. I know of no responsible newspaper which would fail to go along with a reasonable request to withhold some information on the ground that publication would hamper the work of law enforcement officers.

It may be a tiny thing, perhaps the fact that a murderer or holdup man dropped a button or key at the scene of his crime. Or it may be the fact that a kidnapper is negotiating with the parents of his victim.

* * *

IN THE SAME SPIRIT, newspapers across the land have helped to further traffic-law enforcement and traffic safety. There have been volumes of articles explaining the laws, telling what to do to prevent accidents, pointing up hazards of the road, exploring new means of cutting the traffic toll.

The reporting of traffic-accident news, and of traffic arrests, undoubtedly has been a deterrent to reckless and speedy motoring. Take Rochester:

The city police (as if you didn't already know it) started a tough campaign against speeding back in 1951. Since then they have arrested hundreds of heavy-footed motorists annually. And do you know what we have learned at the newspapers?

Many speeders fear the publication of their names even more than they fear paying the fine!

Hardly a week passes that reporters or editors here do not politely turn aside arrested speeders who attempt to cajole, bribe or threaten, to keep their names out of print.

*** * ***

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

NOW A WORD about a matter which does not concern many law enforcement officers directly, but on which you may from time to time have an opportunity to help, if you wish.

There are those who are working constantly to bring more and more secrecy into the conduct of public affairs. It's like a disease. It has spread in and from Washington in recent years with the growth of Big Government by bureaus and boards and departments that reach out to every crossroads. It even infects some local governments.

Although police officers and newspapermen work well together, for the most part, some in other areas of public life want to operate as far as possible from the full glare of publicity that you law enforcement experts know often can be a help. They may mean well, but they are as wrong as can be.

Now here's what I want to tell you about. The American Bar Association has urged for 18 years that newspaper photographers be barred from courtrooms. Some 14 states have made such a ban a part of their state law. Yet with modern equipment, a newspaper photographer can work as quietly and as unobtrusively as a court reporter. This ban then has been outmoded by scientific progress. Moreover, it is, I believe, quite out of character with America.

Lawyers in some states are taking a new look at their anachronistic position. They are sympathetic with that large segment of the press which is urging a review of the barriers to fuller understanding of the courts. Possibly some of you will have an opportunity to look into the matter. I earnestly urge you to do so if you can. More, if you agree with my position, talk it over with your friends of bench and bar. I know how much they respect your judgment.

The Way

To Understanding

I have spoken of our relations almost solely from the press's side of things because that is the side I know about. Nothing is perfect and that applies to relations between you and the press as to everything else. You and we have found over the years, though, that when we have a problem or a difficulty, there is one sure way to get understanding – even if not always agreement; that is, talk things over frankly.

Talk won't solve everything, but it will go a long way. Many times I have seen differences grow and be magnified out of all proportion just because they were covered up. Don't ever cover yours; continue to take your newspapers into your confidence.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Tell them the truth, promptly and fully. It's the No. 1 rule of "Getting Along With the Press."

o. (B4/f1)

*****

The Gannetteer
August 1955

CRIME NEWS

*** * ***

why do we print it?

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice President, Gannett Newspapers

Excerpts from an address prepared for the annual banquet Meeting of the New York Chapter, FBI National Academy Associates, June 28 at Rochester.

Newspapermen are frequently asked, "Why print news of crime? What good does it do?"

The honest answer has to be this: "The good" that publication does, if any, is not always the test of what to print. A newspaper is a mirror of life, or ought to be. As we say often, it is for the public to change conditions, not to blame the mirror . . . .

p. (B4/f2)

*****

The Gannetteer
September 1955

Beans and a Bible Verse

Neighbors' Day at Gannett Farms is always an important occasion for farmers in the Rochester area. There are contests . . . a picnic . . . talks by farm leaders . . . and demonstrations of scientific research and experiments on the rolling acres of Gannett Farms . . . But last month there was something more—

EFFECTS of the mid-August rains ending the Rochester area's lengthy drought provided the chief topic of conversation at the annual Gannett Farms Neighbors' Day Aug. 11 near Rochester.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Afternoon and evening programs, attended by farmers and their families and other guests, consisted of a plowing contest to pick the entrant for a state match, a soil and water management tour, a tour of corn trial plots, general tours of the modern farms, a picnic supper, movies and square dancing. More than 1,500 visitors dined on hots, beans, salads and beverages. Several hundred more farm folk appeared after the meal . . . .

Host was L. B. SKEFFINGTON, agriculture editor of The Democrat and Chronicle. He was congratulated by Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Newspapers, who told of the origin of the gatherings . . . .

SKEFFINGTON gave guests a new sidelight on farming – and newspapers. He said:

"Last year there was considerable interest in our limited experiments with liquid nitrogen . . . .

"We did learn a few things about how to live with a drought. Most of these were discussed in the field today. One thing which paid off, and about which I have been talking for years, was making a lot of grass silage in the spring. We canned grass until it literally ran out of our ears. This was a life-saver, because we began feeding it in June when pastures went to pot.

"I could discuss some of these things for hours, but you hear from me frequently. I do want to give you another item about drought. Last Thursday the temperature was about 97. Hour by hour the corn was rolling tighter and the parched brown color of the fields was becoming more general . . . .

Friday afternoon the weather was just as bad, or worse. I was given the privilege of selecting the Bible verse to appear on the editorial page of The Democrat and Chronicle Saturday morning. The verse from the 35th Chapter and 7th Verse of Isaiah read:

> "'And the parched ground shall become a pool,
> And the thirsty land springs of water.'

"I went home and told my wife it was going to rain, because the Bible verse in The Democrat next morning would say so.

"That evening we had three-tenths of an inch. Saturday we had a full inch. Sunday morning we had two-tenths.

"Someone may say this was coincidence. To me, that is beside the point. It did rain! I think there is a moral or two here:

"First, read your morning Democrat. Second, and above all, never discount the power of faith."

Under a caption, "And the Rains Came," The D&C next day editorialized on Skiff's success as Bible-verse selector.

PHOTO:

ANNUAL NEIGHBORS'

1902

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

DAY AT GANNETT FARMS

Caption:

AT RIGHT: Daniel J. Carey, New York State Commissioner of Agriculture and Markets and principal speaker at Gannett Farms' Neighbors' Day discusses farm and marketing conditions with MRS. FRANK GANNETT and PAUL MILLER (right), Group executive vice president.

q. (B4/f2)

*****

Massena Observer
September 26, 1955

Gannett Vicepresident Arrives To View St. Lawrence Projects; Guest at Luncheon Here Today

Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett newspapers and one of America's leading newspapermen, arrived in Massena this morning for a first hand [sic] view of the St. Lawrence development.

He was accompanied to Massena by Col. Loren Olmstead, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, who is in charge of the Buffalo District under which the seaway is being constructed, and Roger Repp, technical liaison officer, Corps of Engineers.

The men flew to Massena in the Gannett Newspapers plane, and were met at the airport by a delegation headed by Franklin R. Little, Ogdensburg, publisher of the Ogdensburg, Massena and Potsdam newspapers, and partner with the Gannett Company in the Northern New York Publishing Company Inc.

After an aerial tour of the project area in the Lockheed Lodestar plane, the group had lunch in the private dining room at the Village Inn.

This afternoon, Mr. Miller was taken on a tour of the seaway and power project areas by the top engineers who are in charge of the design and direction of the joint projects. He will be a guest of honor at a dinner party at the Potsdam Club this evening.

Mr. Miller will tour the aluminum plant Tuesday morning with the group of U. S. business editors and attend the luncheon at which I. W. Wilson, Alcoa president, will speak. In the afternoon, Mr. Miller and executives of the Northern newspapers will tour the Canadian side as guests of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, and that evening will be at the reception for Governor Averell Harriman at the Dr. William Van Note home, also will attend the dinner at which the Governor will speak. He will fly back to Rochester Wednesday . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

r. (B4/f2)

(3) PHOTOS
Massena/Potsdam, N.Y.—September 1955

s. (B4/f2)
*****

Ogdensburg Journal
Tuesday, September 27, 1955

(1.) Gannett Executive Sees Enormous Area Benefits From Park Program

Park and recreational facilities which are being developed as part of the Seaway and power projects will be "of enormous value to the whole area," Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, declared last night.

Miller spoke at a dinner at the Potsdam Club after touring the projects by air and by land. He was also a guest of honor at a luncheon at the Village Inn in Massena.

The newspaper executive emphasized at both affairs that he felt that the North Country should be given a primary allocation of power so that industry could be developed here.

But after the tour, he said that "the biggest impression I come away with now is that the park and recreational facilities, planned as collateral developments, are wonderful."

Speaking of the industrial development of the North Country, Miller urged that "any of you who have influence with Robert Moses" urge that the area be allocated power.

Assured the power, he said, the area will have an opportunity to go to work to get industry. He warned that competition for plant locations "has never been so heavy," but declared that local initiative could bring such development to the North.

"One thing I would like to see," Miller added, "Is a Thruway running north and south" providing easy and swift access to the north. With power and transportation he foresaw broad development of the country.

He said that support for such development came from many areas outside the North Country which feel it is only just that the site of the projects should be the first to benefit . . . .

Renews Acquaintance

Tonight Miller is to renew an old friendship with Governor Averell Harriman when the Governor is a guest and speaker before the editors at Potsdam. Miller and Harriman traveled together to the United Nations conference in San Francisco 10 years ago when the governor was ambassador to Moscow and Miller was chief of the Washington Bureau of the Associated Press.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

PHOTO
Caption:

INSPECT RIVER PROJECT – Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Newspaper Group, and Col. Loren Olmstead, chief of the Buffalo District, U. S. Army Corps of Engineers, arrived by plane yesterday at Massena to inspect the St. Lawrence projects. The touring group included, left to right, Franklin R. Little, Journal publisher; Thomas F. Airis, resident engineer for the Corps of Engineers; Miller; L. M. Hale, project engineer for the U. S. St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation; William Latham, resident engineer for the State Power Authority, and Col. Olmstead.

(2.)

Ike Began 'Political Revolution,' Declares Newspaper Leader

President Eisenhower had "begun to work somewhat of a political revolution" in this country and on the international scene and it is a "major tragedy that he had to be stricken" by a heart attack.

So declared Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Newspapers, in talks at Massena and Potsdam yesterday. He inspected the Power and Seaway projects.

However, the newspaperman added, he does not believe that the President is yet out of the picture as far as a second term is concerned. He urged his audiences not to get excited, to wait developments of the next few weeks before attempting to assess the President's future.

Miller said that Eisenhower's "disarming frankness" held the key to the beginnings of the political revolution the Republican President has forged.

"After many bitter years, we seem to be approaching political maturity and sanity which leads to appreciation of the other fellow's point of view."

This has worked a major change in Washington, Miller said. He is most familiar with the nation's capital having served as chief of the Associated Press Bureau there during the war years.

The ability to see that the "other fellow" is not always wrong, that everything is not either black or white, has begun to extend into international affairs, Miller added. He cited the recent exchange of correspondence between the President and Premier Bulganin of Russia as one of the indications of this change in atmosphere.

Pointing out that heart attacks are an almost-common occurrence among businessmen and that many recover from them to resume a full share of daily life, he urged caution in assessing the effects of the President's illness.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Political campaigning no longer requires an "iron man," thanks to television, he continued, and it would be possible for the president to seek another term "without leaving Washington," if he recovers sufficiently.

"It would be a great thing for all of us if President Eisenhower could go forward," he concluded.

Miller recalled for his audience many incidents of meeting with President Truman and other government leaders during his days in Washington.

t. (B4/f2)
*****

Massena Observer
September 29, 1955

Gannett Co. Executive Impressed
By Park and Recreational Plans

The park and recreational facilities which will be a part of the St. Lawrence development will be of enormous and immeasurable value to the whole area.

That is the opinion of Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of The Gannett Newspapers, who spent Monday and Tuesday in the area . . . .

(3) PHOTOS

u. (B4/f2)
*****

Times-Union
October 26, 1955

State University Money Woes
Outlined at Grange Convention

Funds totaling more than 250 million dollars are needed to finance presently known "essential needs" of the State University of New York, the chairman of the university's board told 600 delegates to the state convention of the Grange in the Community War Memorial today . . . .

Paul Miller, executive vicepresident of the Gannett Co., today addressed the Grangers on the necessity for harmonious relations between city and rural peoples.

Miller stressed that "the farmer needs the city people to buy his goods, and that city people can't get along without farmers."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"It is apparent that each needs the other, so they ought to have close and harmonious relations. To my mind that is nothing more than being good neighbors and trying to understand the other fellow's problems," he said.

"I do not need to tell you that many city people have heard of the so-called 'farm problem,' do not understand it, and sometimes are confused by the attitudes of politicians and even farmers themselves," Miller declared.

* * *

NOTING that there often is disagreement even among the farmers and farm organizations, he said "Is it any wonder that your city cousins may be confused?'

To remedy this, Miller suggested, "I believe the best thing farm organizations could do for farmers would be to take more of our New York farm thinking to Washington and to your national organizations . . .

"It does seem that we should have more of this search for unity on a fair and sound program at the national level. If we could have this approach, you would have a more favorable legislative reception and it would be much easier to achieve the better public relations you desire."

v. (B4/f2)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
October 27, 1955

Grange Gets Warning
On 'Cheap Food Policy'

By L. B. SKEFFINGTON
Democrat and Chronicle Agriculture Editor

Farmers were warned yesterday that unless their organizations are alert to develop sound improvements to the farm program they are in danger of becoming victims of a national "cheap food policy."

"That is the situation today in England," Roy A. Battles of Cincinnati, assistant to the master of the National Grange, told the State Grange convention in the Community War Memorial.

"There is no reason why we can't have a policy for agriculture that will be fair to farmers and consumers alike. Someone may tell you that it is difficult to work out. Sure it is, but we have national labor policies and we have policies that protect business."

Battles said he could readily endorse remarks to the Grange earlier in the day by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, to the effect that "farmers are best qualified to develop the answers to their problems, and there is need for unity among farm organizations."

"We are working on that now," said Battles. He referred to a recent all-day meeting between executive committees of the National Grange and the American Farm Bureau Federation. "We got together and put a lot of cards on the table," he said. “After we study them over a bit I think we will get together again and explore the way to things on which we may agree.”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

‘Diminishing Minority’

Miller said that rural people, “a diminishing minority of the population, sometimes feel that their city cousins do not understand their problems and are not interested. Some are confused by the attitudes of politicians and by disagreement among farmers themselves.” He said unity and cooperation among farm groups could be as effective in winning legislation and public support at the national level as it had been in New York. “What you need to do is take some of your new York thinking to Washington.”

He told how this idea of unity of action had been put into effect in New York, largely upon the initiative of a Granger, the late H. E. Babcock. He said the latter helped to set up the Conference Board of New York farm Organizations, in which all major groups have representation. “First rule when the board was formed – and today – was that all decisions must be unanimous. None of the member organizations have lost their freedom.”

As opposed to this “New York idea,” Miller quoted from Successful Farming, that at Washington the various organizations present conflicting proposals. “Thus testimony of one organization cancels out the testimony of another organization before a congressional committee.”

‘A Shining Example’

Miller offered “a shining example of what we mean when we talk about being good neighbors,” in the persons of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woodhull of Webster. “The town of Webster had more Grangers than any other community in the country because of them,” he said.

“The Woodhulls have brought more than 800 members into Webster Grange. What we need is [sic] more good neighbors like the Woodhulls in every community.” He mentioned that “Bob Woodhull has worked out his own farm program” and quoted him: “We keep about 2,100 chickens. When the market is good we don’t boost production ’way up. We keep about our average, about what we can handle and market. Some years are lean, but they average out fairly well.”

“Maybe,” said Miller, “if we had more of this Woodhull philosophy we would have less worry about farm surpluses” . . . .

w. (B4/f2)

*****

T-U Photographers Win 3 Awards in AP Contest

Two Times-Union staff photographers, James F. Osborne and Curtis L. Barnes Jr., have won awards in the New York State 1955 Associated Press Newsphoto Contest . . . .

*** * ***

AWARD WINNERS from Gannett papers included Dante O. Tranquille, Utica Observer-Dispatch, third in spot news for smaller papers, and James P. Anderson, Utica Observer-Dispatch, second in sports for smaller papers.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The awards were announced yesterday as a preliminary to today's annual meeting of the State AP Assn. meeting at Syracuse. Principal speaker at a conference luncheon today was Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Co., who talked on "What a Publisher Expects from The Associated Press."

Miller urged the wire service to tell "the story of efforts that are being made by so many communities to push their growth through local improvements and to seek new business and industry."

"One of the best examples of this in New York State," Miller said, "is my own home city of Rochester, which is in the early stages of a great civic development program, including improved streets and traffic conditions, better local governmental facilities and closer cooperation between overlapping city and county governments, along with effort by the Chamber of Commerce to bring in still more industry . . . ."

* * *

MILLER ALSO SAID newspapers "should do even more behind-the-scenes political reporting" because New York State is "a real key state for both parties in the 1956 election."

He urged more interpretation of politics "not only because Gov. Harriman is a possible Democratic presidential nominee, but also because of the Republican situation."

AP's general manager, Frank Starzel, is scheduled to speak at a dinner tonight.

(3) PHOTOS

x. (B4/f2)

*

Democrat and Chronicle
November 1, 1955

AP Set Pace for World Editors' Parley Told

SYRACUSE, Oct. 31, (AP) – Cooperation between publishers of news in the United States has been emulated almost everywhere in the world, an Associated Press executive said tonight.

"The courage and foresight of a small group of publishers more than 60 years ago struck down the fetters of controlled news source and built up an idea that today is almost universally accepted," Frank Starzel, general manager of the Associated Press, told the New York State Associated Press Assn. annual meeting here.

"The Associated Press, as today constituted, was formed in 1894 as a result of a fight. It was a battle against a small group of men who held a virtual monopoly on news from abroad and from the Eastern Seaboard," he said.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The new organization was dedicated to news-gathering through cooperation of publishers – the idea that many collectively could do what few if any could do individually. These publishers were of diverse political faiths and widely differing economic viewpoints, but they could agree on having a news service which would report honestly and factually without taint of bias or prejudice."

This concept of news-gathering prospered and the Associated Press developed into a preeminent service, Starzel said.

"News agencies in other countries at the time and for years later were owned by an individual or group, often not connected with the publishing business," the AP executive continued.

'Buttressed Monopoly'

"The proprietary agency was usually a monopoly in its country, buttressed by monopolistic cartel arrangements with like agencies.

"They had no responsibility for honest reporting. Their interest was primarily and wholly making money," he said.

"The significant development in the news agency field outside the United States in the past 20 years has been the disappearance of the proprietary, nationalistic or government-subsidized agencies, and the development in their place of mutual enterprises owned and controlled by the users of news which have an overwhelming reason for desiring objective and honest reporting for the benefit of readers and listeners.

"The leadership of the small American group in 1894 was indeed the journalistic shot heard around the world" . . . .

9. 1956

a. (B4/f3)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
January 6, 1956

A Big Birthday Party

U.S. Leaders Honor Carl Hallauer

Friends of Carl Hallauer from all over the nation honored the Rochester industrialist, civic leader and political figure at a big birthday party last night.

Some 800 persons turned out in the ballroom of the Hotel Seneca to hear the popular president of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. and Republican State committeeman praised by religious, business and political figures on his 62nd birthday.

Speakers included Fulton Lewis Jr., radio commentator, who read the tribute he paid Hallauer on his nationwide radio hookup last night.

Guests at the banquet were representatives of both major political parties, industries, labor organizations and all the major faiths. Telegrams and letters were read from Vice President Richard Nixon; former President Herbert C. Hoover; Mrs. Robert A. Taft, widow of the Ohio GOP senator whom Hallauer supported in the 1952 presidential convention . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Lewis' news broadcast last included a reference to the dinner and a reminiscence that Hallauer was the only New York State delegate to the 1952 convention to hold out against "the pressure exercised by Dewey" for President Eisenhower's nomination. Hallauer backed Taft to the end despite Dewey's attempt to turn the entire state delegation over to Eisenhower.

"And whether you agree with him or not," Lewis quoted his broadcast tribute, "his actions certainly demonstrate the character of the man" . . . .

At Speakers' Table

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers . . . .

b. (B4/f5)

Times-Union
March 6, 1956

Latin America Booming, Publisher Tells Rotary

Latin America is opening up great new opportunities for commerce and development in the Western world, a Rochester newspaper executive told a luncheon meeting of the Rotary Club today at the Powers.

Speaking with special reference to Venezuela, which is in the midst of an oil boom, but also mentioning Guatemala and Mexico, Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers said:

"A visit can be deflating to a North American who has any idea that all the growth and progress are taking place up here. It is eye-opening to any visitor. There has been enormous growth and expansion even within a year or two. Returning visitors are scarcely less impressed than those down there for the first time."

The speaker, accompanied by Mrs. Miller, visited Venezuela, Guatemala and Mexico. They were guests of Creole Petroleum Corp. in Venezuela. They had a look not only at Caracas, the capital, but flew more than 2,000 miles on visits to other sections of the country, with particular attention to U.S. oil and industrial interests.

In Guatemala, which Miller visited a year ago after the overthrow of the Communist-dominated government by Carlos Castillo Armas, they were received by Castillo Armas, now president, and visited various Guatemala beauty spots. In Mexico, they talked with newspaper, business and government people, interviewed President Ruiz Cortines and visited the former president, Miguel Alaman [sic].

Miller said:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"There isn't anything like Caracas in this world. A few years ago it was a poor capital, set in a narrow valley about three miles long at an altitude of 3,000 feet. There was no thought that it ever would expand and no place to expand. Well, they are expanding now right up the mountainsides.

"Construction everywhere. New streets and highways. A new civic center costing $300,000,000. A new resort hotel is going up astride a 7,000-foot mountain that will cost $15,000,000."

"Manana" – tomorrow – still gets frequent use, Miller said, but not much in Caracas.

"The only time I saw it there," he said, "was in a flashing electric sign running across the top of a modernistic mercantile building. It read, 'Buy now, pay tomorrow.'"

The Rev. J. Pierce Newell, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, was among the special guests at the weekly Rotary Club luncheon. He is the father of Mrs. Everett Bauman, of Caracas.

c. (B4/f5)

Democrat and Chronicle
March 7, 1956

Gannett Executive Reports
On South American Journey

Newly-returned from a flying trip to three South American countries during which he visited their heads of state, Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, yesterday described the trip as "eye-opening."

Miller, who has made trips south of the border in the past, flew thousands of miles with Mrs. Miller to Venezuela, Guatemala and Mexico.

Speaking with special reference to Venezuela at a luncheon meeting of the Rotary Club he said there was "construction everywhere." He described new streets and highways, a 300-million-dollar civic center, and a new hotel astride a mountain, all in Caracas, Venezuela.

"Manana" – tomorrow – still gets frequent use, Miller said, but not much in Caracas. Mexico impressed him "very much indeed." While there he interviewed President Ruiz Cortines and visited former president Miguel Aleman.

He had words of praise for President Carlos Castillo Armas of Guatemala, who, he said, "deserves the sympathy and help of the Western world." Armas rose to power with a military junta which overthrew the old administration in 1950 [1954?]. The country has a large illiterate population.

Oil-rich Venezuela by contrast has "no poor labor in the country." Assisted by President Phil Gerner of the Rotary Club, Miller used several large photographs of Caracas business and industrial scenes. The blowups were made by the Eastman Kodak Co. for the purpose with the aid of Frank Teagarden of Kodak public relations.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"About all the State Department usually gets is criticism," Miller observed. "But very often that criticism stems from nothing but ignorance. Our people in Central and South America deserve great credit for the job they are doing."

The Rev. J. Pierce Newell, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, was among the special guests at the weekly Rotary meeting in the Powers Hotel. He is the father of Mrs. Everett Bauman of Caracas, whose husband is a Creole Petroleum Corp. executive at Caracas.

d. (B4/f6)

- I -

BY PAUL MILLER

Does Rochester need oil wells and a dictator?

The question came to me more than once in Caracas - - the 3,000 foot high capital of oil-rich Venezuela - - as I read the Rochester news briefs my office telegraphed to me daily during a recent tour.

We North Americans have long joked about our Latin neighbors and their reputed love of putting off everything possible to manana - - tomorrow.

Some of them can turn that around on us today. As our daily Rochester news-grams told of more "plans" for the Civic Center and such, the roar of trucks and sounds of construction told a story of progress actually under way in Caracas, which has no modern parallel.

Down there, on the order of the 42-year-old president, General Marcos Perez Jiminez, they have ripped out 400 buildings in the heart of town and are two-thirds of the way toward completion of a kind of Venezuelas Rockefeller Center costing $300,000,000.

This is only part of the story. There are new hotels, new apartment projects, new highways, new schools and college buildings, and new water and sewage systems as President “P. J.” and his government pursue their policy of “sowing the petroleum.” The government receives upward of half a billion dollars yearly from the 18 oil companies doing business in this northernmost of South American countries. Much of the money is going into the building splurge.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In Rochester, and this is said not critically but merely to make the little point, we have been talking about a civic center for 30 years or more. In Caracas, they’ll have started and completed their $300,000,000 Centro Bolivar in one-third that time.

Sure, I know - - Rochester doesn’t have oil wells spewing liquid gold; and we neither have a dictator nor wish one. Yet it’s interesting all the same, isn’t it, to point up the contrast however conditions may differ? Particularly when, as noted, North Americans have held so long to the mistaken idea that it’s the Latinos who specialize in delay.

(Who couldn’t forgive Pete Barry or Bob Aex, by the way, if they now and then wish they had only to order a house removed and a street widened to get it done.)

The Creole Petroleum Corp., a subsidiary of Standard Oil of New Jersey, has in Venezuela the biggest U.S. foreign investment anywhere - - about One Billion Dollars. Creole people are close indeed to what’s going on in Venezuela. And why not? Creole helps pay for it. Creole directors decided to invite some U.S. publishers and others to come down and get the picture first-hand. The idea was to spread the story of an American company's problems and accomplishments on foreign soil, and also to get some publicity for Venezuela as well.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mrs. Miller and I recently returned from such a visit. We spent several days in Caracas. Then we flew 2,000 miles in less than a week outside the capital. We ran out of adjectives the first day.

We landed at Maiquetia, airport for Caracas, at dusk - - after a non-stop 8-hour flight from New York.

In the next 20 minutes after leaving Maiquetia, we had our first real introduction to the New Venezuela. The fine modern airports had impressed us. The ride in to the city of Caracas opened our eyes.

It is between 10 and 11 miles from coastal Maiquetia to Caracas. It used to be over an hour, over a road with hundreds of twists and turns. On the new $60,000,000 toll highway we were whipped up from the Caribbean Sea to 3,000-foot-high Caracas in 20 minutes. It's a six-lane highway. Two tunnels, one over a mile long, bore through the Andean foothills. Three of the largest pre-stressed concrete bridges in the world span the deepest valleys. The project was - - and is, for the road is still being extended and improved - - a part of the Venezuelan government's program to "plow the petroleum." They take half a billion dollars a year in taxes from the 18 oil companies, most of them American, operating there, and with reasonable satisfaction, apparently, on both sides.

What did we think of it, a friend asked on the ride in.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Fabulous," Mrs. Miller and I replied in unison and laughingly agreed to try henceforth for some new adjectives. We'd applied that one, we recalled, to the airport reception and to the Maiquetia airport itself.

Roaring Venezuela started quietly enough.

Columbus discovered it on his third voyage to the New World in 1498. A year later, a Spanish adventurer, Alonso de Ojeda, sailed farther - - to Lake Maracaibo in Western Venezuela. Indians then, as now, lived in houses built on stilts out over the lake. Hence the adventurers called the area Venezuela - - Little Venice.

Caracas, the capital, was never envisaged as a commercial center; simply as a seat of government and as a retirement home for wealthy farmers. Oil has made it a booming city of over a million inhabitants within two decades - - really less, for the really big development has come only within the last few years.

Traffic and housing problems are enormous. Office buildings as well as homes now are climbing the slopes of surrounding mountains for lack of building space in the crowded narrow valley where the city was born.

Mansions as big as resort hotels dot the mountainsides. The streets are jammed with automobiles, all but a relative few of U.S. make. Prices and wages both are high - - Creole Petroleum Corp. says even its unskilled labor averages $4,400 annually in pay and benefits. Creole, with a billion dollar investment in Venezuela, is the biggest, but 17 other oil companies, mostly U.S., are doing business there under conditions generally similar.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Going off the first tee at a Caracas Country Club, I remarked to my companions at the whim that would lead a man to put a house on a mountain top, pointing to one nearing completion all alone up a height within our view. I suggested that perhaps the lots were cheap up there.

One of my companions set me straight.

"Nothing whomsical [sic] about that," he explained. "It's a prize home site. Any lot within our view, whether on a mountain top or mountain side, is worth a fortune. The man building the particular house you are talking about paid 600,000 bolivares for the lot alone."

That stopped me, for 600,000 bolivares is $180,000!

Like San Francisco, Caracas has a climate that permits hillside building with no worry about icy roads - - they call it perpetual Spring, and I would not dispute the description, for that's all I saw in Caracas. Elsewhere in Venezuela, of course, the weather varies. The whole country lies in the latitude of the torrid zone; altitude is the deciding factor. Coastal areas can be hot and damp. The high Andean passes are chill and wet the year around.

Not everybody is rich or getting that way. In a population of between 4,000,000 and 6,000,000 persons, with illiteracy a nationwide problem, naked poverty is widespread.

The government, although concentrating on Caracas, is making some start also on housing, hospitals, schools and sanitary facilities elsewhere. Caracas, however, is getting the bulk of that portion of the half billion dollars annually form the oil companies. Even in Caracas, thousands on thousands live in squalor -- though, I think, those conditions are scarcely worse than some I have seen in Manhattan above Central Park or in Washington within a few blocks of the Capitol!

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The government's Banco Obrero, "Workers Bank," is financing a long-range slum-clearance program. The Bank completed 13 new low-income structures with a total of 1,950 apartments and 52-four story buildings of eight apartments each last year. These were to accommodate 11,800 people from nearby slums which were destroyed.

- 6 -

The valuation the government agents place on a shack is credited by the Bank as a down-payment toward the purchase of an apartment. Rentals, applied to the mortgage, range from $10 to $20 a month.

Throughout all Venezuela some $40,000,000 was estimated spent within the last year for low and middle income housing.

- 7 -

How long before the Venezuela bubble is to burst? Apparently it will be quite a while. Indicated oil reserves seem to assure production equal to today's or greater for 20 years. And estimates are that world requirements for oil will double in that period. Meantime, the Venezuelans are working to diversify in two directions. (1) They are developing other sources of continuing income. (2) They are seeking to enlarge oil sales outside the United States so that they will not be over-dependent upon market here.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

e. (B4/f12)

[Source/date unknown]

Washington Scene . . . By George Dixon

A Craving for Votes

CARACAS, March 1 – Gen Marcos Perez Jimenez, who became President of Venezuela without benefit of ballot, is a dictator with a rather uncommon obsession. He is consumed with ambition to be elected.

General Perez Jimenez says he hopes to have a general election by the latter part of next year, and everybody I talked to, all over this fantastically variegated country, seems to believe him.

He has even convinced United States Ambassador Fletcher Warren that he means to risk a free election . . . .

"President Perez Jimenez works day and night at the task of selling himself and his government to the Venezuelans. He is the most public-relations-minded dictator I have seen in my 35 years in the United States Foreign Service, and I've served in Cuba, Bolivia, Nicaragua, Colombia, Paraguay, Hungary, Latvia, and did a stretch as director of the Office of South American Affairs."

If Perez Jimenez goes to the polls there is one thing he'll have in common with many United States "statesmen." The oil lobby won't be against him.

PEREZ JIMENEZ puts on a great show of being frank with the press – and he impresses with his sincerity . . . .

THIS VENEZUELAN government doesn't fool around. The President doesn't speak enough English to make a direct interview pay off, so I am indebted to Ambassador Warren for the answers to many questions.

I asked about communism. Our envoy broke into a wide grin.

"The United States can take lessons from Venezuela in handling Communists," he said. "Venezuela has no diplomatic relation with the U.S.S.R. or any of the satellites whatsoever.

"Russia had an embassy here. The Venezuelans ordered it closed. The Czechoslovakian Ambassador lodged a protest and they threw him out too."

Venezuela is copying many of our ways, but it differs radically from us in one interesting respect.

Our two most engrossing topics of conversation are the weather and business. But the weather in Venezuela doesn't change enough to speak of, and neither does the political situation. Hence, Venezuela's big conversation pieces are the bolivar and business.

The bolivar is currently worth about 30 cents. But, boy oh boy, you sure can't say that about business!

(Copyright, 1956. King features Syndicate, Inc.)

f. (B4/f5)

*****

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Democrat and Chronicle
Sunday, March 8, 1956

Venezuela Uses Oil Billions

400 Buildings in Caracas Heart Razed to Make Way for Big Center

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice President, the Gannett Newspapers

WE NORTH AMERICANS have long joked about our Latin neighbors and their reputed love of putting off everything possible to tomorrow.

Some of them could turn that around in us today. As Rochester newspapers report more plans for the Civic Center and such, the roar of trucks and sounds of construction tell a story of progress actually under way in Caracas, Venezuela, that has no modern parallel . . . .

g. (B4/f3)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
March 9, 1956

Community Tribute Given Rabbi Rosenberg

Rabbi Stuart E. Rosenberg was dispatched formally to his new pastorate in Toronto yesterday with a tribute from the men and women he served in Rochester.

About 300 Jews and Christians joined to honor the spiritual leader of Temple Beth-El at a luncheon in the JYM&WA. Dr. Rosenberg, who is 34, has been leader of the congregation since 1946 . . . .

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, reported that Dr. Rosenberg's weekly inspirational column in The Times-Union may soon be syndicated nationally. Miller said: "His conviction is that people need and want inspiration in their daily living" . . . .

h. (B4/f3)
*****

Times-Union
March 9, 1956

Best Wishes Accorded

1920

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

To Rabbi Rosenberg

About 300 Jews and Christians joined to honor Rabbi Stuart Rosenberg yesterday before he left for his new pastorate in Toronto . . . .

Also joining in honoring Rabbi Rosenberg yesterday were Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers . . . .

i. (B4/f6)

*****

U.S. News & World Report
March 9, 1956

A NATION THAT OIL IS BUILDING

Venezuela Booms While "Nationalized" Neighbors Lag

For a study in contrasts in a vital industry look at what's happening among U. S. neighbors to the south.
The industry: oil. It's a boon to Venezuela. It's an expensive headache to Mexico, Argentina, Brazil.
All four are producers. In only one is oil in private hands. Only that one has had a flourishing industry through the years.

CARACAS

Developments in Latin America are calling attention in this part of the world to a case history of government vs. private operation of a key industry – oil.

The largest countries in Latin America are Mexico, Brazil and Argentina. But a much smaller country –Venezuela – is outstripping them. Oil is the main reason. Each country has extensive petroleum deposits. Venezuela is the only one of them where the entire industry is operated by private companies.

* In Mexico, oil is a Government monopoly. Today the once-flourishing industry doesn't sell enough petroleum products abroad to pay for the oil products it imports from the United States.

* In Brazil, surveys indicate large reserves of petroleum. A special law prevents foreign companies from operating present fields or exploring for new ones. Brail produces only 2 per cent of the oil it uses in a year.

* In Argentina, Government controls prohibit private oil companies from expanding. Development of the industry is a government monopoly. Argentina, with oil in the ground, still has to buy half its petroleum abroad.

* In Venezuela, by contrast, oil is a private industry. The country is now the world's No. 1 exporter of oil and Venezuela is booming as never before.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Oil companies, hemmed in by governmental regulations in the three largest countries, are operating full tilt and with Government encouragement in Venezuela. Production is second only to that in the U.S. Nearly twice as much oil is flowing from Venezuela's wells as the total petroleum output of the Soviet Union. Oil revenues are making it possible for the country to buy goods and services in the U.S. at the rate of half a billion dollars a year.

There is much to be learned from a closer look at the experience in all four of these oil-producing countries of Latin America . . . .

j. (B4/f6)

March 14, 1956

The Honorable Carlos Castillo Armas
President
Republic of Guatemala
The National Palace
Guatemala City, Guatemala, C.A.

Dear Mr. President:

I returned from my recent visit to Guatemala a greater admirer than ever of your beautiful country and with even higher hopes for its continued progress.

Both Mrs. Miller and I greatly enjoyed our visit with you at the National Palace and are indebted to you for your courtesy in having provided us with a car and driver during our stay. It was a wonderful visit in every way and we do hope to come again many times in the years that lie ahead.

I devoutly hope your land program will prove a great success and that developments which will follow your granting of oil concessions will bring a new and even greater prosperity to Guatemala.

With very best personal regards to you and your splendid staff,

Sincerely,

k. (B4/f13)
*****

(1.) Democrat and Chronicle
March 21, 1956

Keating Lauded by Colleagues, Remains Mum on Senate Offer

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By JAKE UNDERHILL

Rep. Kenneth B. Keating's friends praised him with speeches and applause last night, but the Rochester Republican's decision on running for the U. S. Senate remained unannounced.

Declaring he did not know whether Keating wants to go to the Senate, House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R-Mass) said he was "selfish" but that he wants Keating "to stay with me" and become chairman of the House Judiciary Committee next year . . . .

The top-ranking Republican in the House recalled that in 1936 he had been offered an opportunity to run for the Senate, but turned it down because he believed that in the House of Representatives he best could serve the country.

President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon sent their praise for Keating in two of the scores of letters and telegrams received at the dinner. The President said he was happy to join in praise of Keating's "outstanding public service."

"They don't come any better than Ken Keating," read the message from Nixon . . . .

Congressmen Introduced

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, toastmaster for the dinner, introduced the prominent political, legal and clerical figures at the speaker's table . . . .

PHOTO:
Caption:

SALUTE TO KEATING—Rep. Kenneth B. Keating, above, acknowledges ovation of more than 700 who jammed the Chamber of Commerce last night to honor Rochester Republican at testimonial. House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr., at left, was speaker. Martin lauded Keating's leadership in capital.

(2.) ## Martin Predicts Ike-Nixon Sweep

Friends Laud Keating. Page 1

November's election will bring an Eisenhower-Nixon sweep and a "substantial" Republican majority in the House of Representatives, the minority leader of the House predicted here yesterday.

Rep. Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R-Mass) said no Democratic candidate for president "has a chance" of beating President Eisenhower in November. The Republican leader shrugged off questions on who will receive the Democratic nomination. He expected Vice President Nixon again to be a candidate.

In the event of a republican majority in the House, Martin would be returned to the speaker's chair. Rep. Kenneth B. Keating of Rochester would become chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, Martin pointed out.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Keating will have to choose between the House chairmanship, "a very, very important and very splendid job," and running for the U. S. senate, Martin said.

The minority leader and a delegation of other House Republicans arrived here yesterday afternoon for the Rochester Bar Assn.'s testimonial dinner for Keating, who represents the 38th District. Martin was principal speaker at the banquet attended by about 700 in the Chamber of Commerce.

With Keating and Martin in The Gannett Newspapers airplane which flew from Washington were Reps. Hugh D. Scott Jr. (R-Pa), former Republican national chairman; Harold C. Ostertag, 39th District Republican, and William R. Williams, Cassville Republican.

A former Virginian, but an outspoken advocate of civil rights legislation, Scott said hopes of civil rights legislation were "blasted" by the naming of Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss) as chairman of the influential Senate Judiciary Committee. Eastland became chairman on the death of Sen. Harley M. Kilgore (D-WVa).

The Pennsylvania congressman said he recently told Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler that he had seen no evidence that Southern Democrats would give any consideration to civil rights legislation.

Bills protecting civil rights will get out of the House Judiciary Committee, said Scott, who was dubious about their success in the Senate Committee. He revealed that he has an appointment today with Deputy Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers to discuss possible civil rights bill. – UNDERHILL.

(3) PHOTOS
Captions:

SPEAKERS' TABLE – Camera shows focal point of speakers' table. Dining from the left are Rep. Harold C. Ostertag, Martin, Keating and Paul Miller, the executive vice president of Gannett Newspapers, who last night served as toastmaster. The Bar Assn. held the testimonial dinner in Keating's honor.

FELLOW LAWYERS – Rep. Frank Traynor, at right, president of Bar Assn., gives a warm handclasp to fellow attorney, Rep. Keating, after presenting him a plaque.

OLD FRIENDS – Mrs. Charles W. Weiss Jr., national committeewoman from Rochester, confers at dinner with Rep. Hugh D. Scott Jr., ex-national GOP chairman.

l. (B4/f16)
*****

Times-Union
March 21, 1956

(1.) Keating Mum on Senate Run
As 700 Pay Tribute at Dinner

1924

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By KERMIT HILL

Rep. Joseph Martin Jr. of Massachusetts, Republican leader and former speaker of the House of representatives, last night told 700 friends of Rep. Kenneth B. Keating that the Rochester legislator "would be a great credit to this great Empire State" as a United States senator . . . .

(3) PHOTOS
Captions:

GUEST OF HONOR – Rep. Kenneth B. Keating waves in response to tributes.

"MR. SPEAKER" – Rep. Joseph W. Martin Jr., Speaker of the House in GOP congresses, delivers main speech and high praise of Keating to more than 700 of Keating's friends who gathered in main hall of Chamber of Commerce last night.

LEADS IN TRIBUTE – J. Frank Traynor, president of Rochester Bar Assn., leads applause for Rep. Keating. Traynor presented legislator a silver plaque on behalf of association.

(2.)

Posner Explains Refusal To Attend Keating Dinner

William N. Posner, Monroe County Democratic chairman, said today he refused to attend the testimonial dinner for Rep. Kenneth B. Keating of Rochester last night because he did not want to participate in the "political build-up" of a Republican who might be running against Sen. Herbert H. Lehman, Democrat, in November.

Posner said in a written statement today:

"Keating is being actively advanced by Republican leader Fred Parrish as a candidate for the senator nomination to oppose Sen. Lehman next fall. The dinner, I reasoned, and, judging from the newspaper accounts I reasoned correctly, would obviously be a Republican political buildup of Mr. Keating and we Democrats simply would not lend ourselves to any movement against Sen. Lehman, a great public servant who has the respect and affection of all real Democrats and also a multitude of Republicans. Any self-styled Democrat who helped launch Keating in his senatorial venture could hardly hope to stand up and be counted as loyal to his party."

(Joseph S. Rippey, candidate of the anti-Posner Monroe County Democratic Political Committee for the Democratic county chairmanship, was seated at the head table at the Keating affair. He was introduced as "a Rochester Democratic leader" and a member of the bar association which sponsored the Keating testimonial dinner.)

Posner added that he also felt "the bar association should not be partisan since it obviously is made up of both Democratic and Republican lawyers." The association "would do well to ponder the ethics of their action," he said.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

m. (B4/f15)

Rochester Times-Union
October 2, 1956

Diplomacy of 1850 Called Futile at Suez

Paul Miller Tells Editors Of Cairo Observations

Special to The Times-Union

HARTFORD – The Suez Canal crisis is an example of the futility of using the diplomacy of 1850 in the world of 1956, newspaper executives from four states were told last night.

Paul Miller of Rochester, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers and editor and publisher of The Times-Union, told executives of the Gannett organization, gathered in Hartford for a two-day conference, that his first-hand observation of the situation in Egypt convinced him that the traffic going through the Suez Canal is refutation of any idea the Egyptians could not run the canal.

"When you've seen the convoys – each ship a quarter to a half-mile apart – you wonder why the West ever had the idea ships couldn't be kept moving by the sons of the Nile," he said.

"Calling on the British and French troops for possible action in the Suez was an example of 1850 diplomacy," he said. "I think the developments prove we are nearer than we have ever been before to a realization that peaceful negotiations are the answer, not threats of force."

Miller flew to London at the time of the Suez Canal users' London conference Sept. 19 and went on from there to Cairo, to see the situation first-hand. He returned to Rochester Friday.

"There is one overriding fact in this controversy standing out above everything else," he told the newspapermen. "The Egyptians are successfully operating the canal."

Miller predicted the canal controversy will get one of the lengthiest airings ever heard in the United Nations.

EGYPTIAN REACTIONS

He called the dispute the nearest thing to a threat of war since Korea, with any military action probably involving American forces. But he related a few Egyptian reactions to bear out their side of the dispute explaining "we already know the other side."

The Egyptian argument, he said, is that Egypt paid about 60 per cent of the original cost of constructing the canal. The Egyptians claim the Suez Canal Co. was an Egyptian company with international stockholders.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

They argue further that by nationalizing the company, they put an end to exploitation which was bringing dividends exceeding 10 per cent to foreign stockholders, and that some of the revenues received by Egypt can be used to improve the canal – to widen and deepen it and possibly make a double track canal out of it.

What happened to Secretary of State Dulles' plan for a virtual boycott of the canal by taking tankers around the Cape of Good Hope?

CITES HIGH COST

That plan, Miller said, is economically impractical right now. It takes about $3,000 a day to keep a large oil tanker at sea, and the route around Cape Hope is about 5,000 miles farther from the Middle East oil refineries than the route through the Suez Canal. Harbor and dock facilities are inadequate.

"The trip around the Cape of Good Hope was mostly talk," he observed.

America is somewhat vulnerable in the field of foreign aid in the eyes of the Egyptians, Miller reported.

"They say we are driving them into the arms of the Russians," he said. "They point out with some bitterness that after the war we gave billions to needy countries all over the world, but that we recently backed down on lending Egypt 70 million dollars for the Aswan Dam project.

"The great bulk of our giveaway program of recent years, though not that right after the war, has probably done us as much harm as good, and the whole program ought to be reassessed."

Amplifying his comments of the need for tactful, modern diplomacy, rather than antiquated shows of force, he said the Western world is just beginning to realize how much faith it had pinned on a tiny 103-mile canal between Suez on the Red Sea and Port Said on the Mediterranean.

Instead of weakening Nasser's popularity in Egypt, the rushing of British and French forces through the Mediterranean has increased the dictator's popularity at home, Miller said. Now, he reported, some Egyptians talk as though the Suez problem has been settled, and indicate that Nasser's next major triumph will be the achieving of a solution to the Arab refugee problem and arrangements of a peace with Israel.

"The question," Miller said, "is how are the British and French going to bring their troops back home gracefully?"

PHOTO
Caption:

U.S. NAVY SAILS THROUGH SUEZ – Making passage through the Suez Canal as part of a convoy is the Navy destroyer Compton (left). Newly-recruited pilots from the United States reportedly led the convoy. In the foreground is seen the Egyptian flag. (UP Facsimile)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

n. (B4/f15)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
October 3, 1956

Suez Solution Lies In Talks, Editors Told

HARTFORD, Conn., Oct. 2 – The negotiation table , not military threats , is the most practical means to settle international disputes today and developments in the Suez Canal crisis are a case in point, Paul Miller, Rochester newspaper executive, last night told his colleagues from four states . . . .

o. (B4/f15)

Times-Union
October 4, 1956

* * *

EYE ON THE NEWS – Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, will report on his recent trip to the scene of the Suez Canal dispute on Eye on the News on Channel 10 at 7:15 p.m. today. Mayor Peter Barry also will be a guest on the program with a special message on voter registration.

p. (B4/f15)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
October 5, 1956

Suez Cited as Showing End to Power Politics

The day of power politics as the solution to international tensions has disappeared, Paul Miller said last night.

The executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers in a television report described his recent trip to the Suez Canal area, scene of the present international dispute over Egyptian seizure of the waterway.

"The day of the display of power as the answer to international tensions has disappeared," Miller said. "The day of negotiation as the answer to such problems has now arrived."

The Suez incident has made it clear that the answer lies in negotiation not the threat of force, the newspaper executive said.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Egyptians do not consider they seized the canal, Miller said. They look upon their action as nationalization of a home-owned enterprize [sic] within their own border, he added.

Miller reported that he witnessed no display of hostility to himself or other Westerners during his stay in the Suez area. He also pointed out that Western fears that Egypt lacked the ability to run the canal have been proved false by the amount of traffic now using the waterway. Miller spoke over "Eye on the News" on Channel 10.

q. (B4/f15)

Times-Union
October 5, 1956

'Logical, Factual'
Report on Suez

Paul Miller's comments on the Suez Canal crisis (Page One, Times-Union, Oct. 2) seem to me the most logical and factual statements regarding the controversy made to date.

It seems difficult indeed for France and England to outgrow their short pants.

C. GREENE

* * *

I have just finished reading Paul Miller's report on Suez . . . It was refreshing reading . . . I know that country and people well having taught school in Alexandria, Egypt, years ago. Thanks!

HELEN HAMILTON

* * *

It is heartening to read Paul Miller's statement that any resort to force or boycott by France or England in the Suez crisis would be an antiquated and stupid policy, out of keeping with the diplomacy of a more enlightened age.

To give credit where credit is due it might be added here that a similar point of view was recently expressed by the Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov. He said: "These attempts of force are caused by lack of understanding of the spirit of our times and of the renovation of the forms of social life that is in progress throughout the vast expanses of the East."

The world in which we live is not a static one. Unfortunately some peoples [sic] minds are. For this reason we are thankful to you, Mr. Editor for reminding us that we are living in a changing world and that international disputes should not be settled by the effete and antiquated policies of the past.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Suez problem is now where it should be – in the hands of the United Nations. There is little doubt but that an amicable settlement will be reached, one which will combine the interests of Egypt as a sovereign state and the interests of all other states using the canal.

ROBERT A. MACLEAN

32 West Brook Rd.
Pittsford

q. (B4/f15)

*****

Ogdensburg Journal
October 7, 1956

(1.)

Egypt Can Run Suez Canal Miller Finds On Trip To Waterway

Hartford, Conn. – (GNS) – The Suez Canal crisis is an example of the futility of using the diplomacy of 1850 in the world of 1956, newspaper executives from four states were told Monday night at Hotel Statler.

Paul Miller of Rochester, executive vicepresident of the Gannett newspapers, told executives of that organization, gathered in Hartford for a two-day conference, that his first-hand observations of the situation in Egypt convinced him that the present traffic going through the Suez Canal "is a refutation of any idea the Egyptians couldn't run the canal" . . . .

(2.) Paul Miller, in his talk to the Gannett editors at Hartford, Conn., reported in today's paper, must have opened the eyes of a lot of people when he said that a personal visit to the Suez canal showed that the Egyptians were capable of running the ditch. Heretofore the propaganda has followed an opposite line. Miller is a keen observer and is in the habit of reporting things as he sees them, not using another's eyes. The press and politics, domestic and world, need more of his kind.

PHOTO:
Paul Miller

r. (B4/f15)

Rochester Times-Union
October 8, 1956

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A Personal Report to You On the Suez Canal Crisis

Paul Miller, editor and publisher of the Times-Union, recently made a 10-day flying trip to London and Cairo to study and report on the Suez crisis. His observations and impressions – written "like a letter home" – are contained in a series of five articles, of which this is the first.

By PAUL MILLER

I left Cairo, Egypt, at 3 a.m. one day, and was back at my desk in The Times-Union building at 3 p.m. the next day.

I know of nothing better than that simple air travel report to point up the fact, so trite but so true, that the world is indeed getting smaller every day with greater and greater transportation speeds and better and better communications facilities.

Moreover, due to America's leadership of the Western world, nothing of significance can happen in any part of the world without affecting every home and family in the United States.

When President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt nationalized the Suez Canal Co. on July 26, and when France and Britain promptly responded by calling up troops, it posed a world crisis.

To Americans who recall other post-war crises the world around, including the Korean fighting of 1950-53, there came immediate thoughts – and correctly so – that the new Suez controversy might again mean still higher taxes, more inflation, and more American boys in uniform.

How It Looks

I made a reporting trip to London and Egypt to learn what I could for the benefit of the Gannett newspapers and our readers about this latest world crisis. It has now taken the following turns:

1 – Conferences are under way at London to work out details of a canal users association which may, among other things, undertake to represent the interests of Western world shippers with Col. Nasser.

2 – Both Egypt, on the one hand, and England and France on the other, are before the U.N. Security Council in New York for a hearing on their separate charges in the dispute.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(Egypt charges, in brief, that England and France threatened the peace by rushing troops to the Mediterranean after Nasser's nationalization of the canal company.

(England and France charge that Nasser's action was a threat to peace and security. They want to see Egypt compelled to put the canal under some form of international control so that it cannot be closed or opened to ships of any nation at the whim, as they put it, of one man, Col. Nasser.)

3 – The Egyptians, having set up an Egyptian canal authority, are operating the canal successfully on their own.

The position of the United States – at first solidly aligned, apparently, with Britain and France – has been modified. The U.S. now is in a position of some independence, although still urging also that the rights of users be guaranteed through new agreements or international control of some kind.

So much for a brief sum-up of the crisis and how it stands today.

A 'Letter Home'

Now for a somewhat personal report, like a letter to readers' homes, of what this writer did and what he saw.

I had in mind that I'd like to go on to Cairo and see the picture there for myself and for our readers. However, I reached London on the morning of Sept. 19, really expecting to return home after the "users" conference. I suspected that this might not be the best time for a Western visitor along the Nile! Finally, I went to Cairo on assurances of friends in London and at the Egyptian embassy that I would find Cairo more calm and collected than I was. They were right. I did.

I visited with Prime Minister Sir Anthony Eden in London – it was a personal conversation, not an interview; heard our Secretary of State John Foster Dulles twice set forth his views as to what the "users" conference was intended to do and not do, and talked with other delegation members of ours and other countries.

I can sympathize with any individual or group for any confusion over the "users" conference. In my opinion, confusion is inherent in the structure of the organization. However, it may be put in an orderly, logical light at the meetings still going on at London. Egyptians, by the way, call it – among other things – the Canal Users Hunting and Fishing Club, or the Canal Usurers Assn.

Egyptians have made it clear they want nothing to do with the "users."
Both sides are before the Security Council of the United Nations in New York.
British and French troops are still "poised and ready" – as the tacticians like to say.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

But there is one over-riding fact standing out above everything else in this controversy that seethes and races from the East River to the Eastern Desert and back again.

That fact is this, in capital letters:

THE EGYPTIANS ARE SUCCESSFULLY OPERATING THE CANAL.

NEXT: A visit to the Suez Canal.

MAP:
VITAL WATERWAY – Map traces Suez Canal route.

s. (B4/f15)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
October 8, 1956

U.S. Election Intrigues Foreigners, Says Miller

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice President of The Gannett Newspapers

Everybody abroad wants to know about Ike.

Foreign government officials, of course, are striving mightily to preserve a position of impartiality. They hasten to say so even as they ask a U.S. visitor for the latest election forecast from America.

A number of foreigners I saw on a quick trip to Britain and Egypt assumed President Eisenhower would be re-elected. Yet they wondered – even as you and I – how he's feeling healthwise now. They asked about this man Nixon who is running on the sane ticket or something, and whether some of the things Stevenson and former President Truman say can possibly be true.

Campaign speeches in the United States get little attention abroad. There are brief reports, however, of major campaign efforts here. There is some general idea in the street that the man named Stevenson and also Mr. Truman, who is well known and well liked overseas, are saying some awful things about the man best known abroad as commander in chief of the Allied war effort in Europe.

Most officials clearly believe that Washington is trying desperately to keep things on an even keel internationally during the election campaign.

Many in England who favored a strong policy toward Egypt's President Nasser in the Suez crisis think the U.S. toned down its own stand, after what seemed to be a bold start, to avoid any criticism in the campaign.

They think, in short, that we ran out on them instead of strongly backing them up when they mobilized troops and talked of using force, if necessary, to wrench the Suez Canal back out of Nasser's sole grasp and put it under international control.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

They think we softened up for political reasons.

It is known that President Eisenhower has stated many times, and to Secretary of State Dulles, that political considerations here must have no place in our approach to foreign affairs.

I never missed an opportunity to tell this to our foreign friends and critics.

Probably few believed me. Few of them would work that way. Why, they think, should we?

But they're all interested in Ike.

Paul Miller recently
Made a 10-day flying trip
to London and Cairo to find out first-hand about
the Suez crisis.
He has compiled his observations into a series
of five articles. Written
"like a letter home," this informative new series
will begin today in The
Times-Union.

t. (B4/f15)

Rochester Times-Union
October 9, 1956

(1.) A Personal Report to You

The One Big Fact: Canal Is Operating

Following is the second in a series of five articles by Paul Miller, editor and publisher of the Times-Union, giving his first-hand observations on the Suez crisis from a recent flying trip to London and Cairo.

By PAUL MILLER

There is a lot of talk, but one big fact, in the Suez Canal crisis. The big fact is that the Egyptians are successfully operating the canal. The ships are going through.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

After President Nasser, in the name of Egypt, took over the Suez Canal Co. July 26, it was widely doubted – most certainly in London, Paris and Washington – that the Egyptians would be able to run it.

A highly skilled, carefully trained pilot is needed aboard each ship that plows through the narrow, 103-mile-long canal linking the Red Sea, through Suez, with the Mediterranean, through Port Said.

It's the high cost of keeping a ship afloat, any ship, that is at the root of the concern of canal users that it operate on a split-second schedule.

One ship aground could lead to a days-long traffic jam that could cost shippers collectively millions of dollars.

Take oil, which in 1955 made up four-fifths of all the northbound cargoes passing through the canal from Suez to Port Said.

The Suez Canal Co. charged a tanker carrying 100,000 barrels of oil $12,000 to use the canal. It costs about $3,000 a day to keep a tanker at sea. Delay of any kind not only is expensive in a specific haul; it may mean loss of other schedules fixed ahead.

That's why canal pilots earn $15,000 and upward a year, in base pay and bonuses. Each ship must have a pilot aboard. He must know every peculiarity in the passage.

The Alternatives

What can nations dependent upon shipping from beyond Suez do to reduce their dependence on the canal?

They can go round the Cape of Good Hope. But look: The distance between London, for example, and the Persian Gulf (Abadan, Iran) via Suez is 6,600 miles; via the Cape it is about 12,000. The extra distance for a round trip would be 10,800 [?] miles.

It is estimated that the cost of a vessel's going through the canal and back again, loaded, would be barely 20 per cent of the extra cost and loss of earnings involved in the extra 30 days or so which such a vessel would need to round the Cape both ways.

The greatest problem which a general use of the route round Africa would create is a shortage of ships. It would take at least 20 per cent more dry cargo space to maintain the present flow of commodities between Western Europe and countries east of Suez – not counting oil.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It is estimated that the petroleum shipments from the Persian Gulf to Western countries as a whole would require 55 per cent more tanker tonnage if they had to be diverted round Africa.

Build bigger tankers? This is planned, but new harbor facilities would be required to care for them around the Cape. Adequate facilities do not exist now.

Build more pipelines to take the place of shipped oil? This has long been under consideration.

Or, to lessen the risks of canal traffic tie-ups, what can be done?

Build a double-track Suez Canal? This, too, has long been discussed. It is a long-range project proclaimed in Cairo today by the Egyptians themselves. Also widening and a general speeding up. For it is estimated that canal traffic may double in a decade.

The Suez Canal Co. was largely British and French owned and controlled. When the company's old pilots walked off the job, soon after the Egyptians made their grab, it was assumed by many that the canal would be a mess of grounded tankers in no time.

The Western nations got up their canal users association idea not only to further their aim of somehow restoring the canal to international control. They also conceived of it as a practical operating agency which was to have its own pilots for the ships of those nations participating.

But not only did the Egyptians put through the ships with but few mishaps. They proudly announced they wanted more and bigger convoys. How were they doing it, and thus astonishing and frustrating the great nations of the West?

With an Egyptian friend as guide, interpreter and companion, I left the Semiramis Hotel on the Nile in Cairo at 7 a.m. to see the Suez Canal. We had a driver who'd been to the canal before, a reasonably comfortable Dodge and a 13-hour schedule.

The schedule took us, first, directly to Ismailia – headquarters of the old Suez Canal Co. and now of the Egyptian canal administration. Ismailia is about halfway on the 103-mile ditch – (over twice as long as the Panama Canal) – between Suez on the Red Sea and Port Said on the Mediterranean.

The canal is under martial law. But with our passes, and despite a few road blocks fashioned (appropriately enough) with oil drums, we made good time up the macadam which borders the canal for its entire length. Occasionally, we saw Egyptian troops training in the desert near what were British camps until John

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Bull ended occupation of the Canal Zone and withdrew some 80,000 Tommies last year.

There were few cars. The open road from Cairo to Ismailia had been crowded with stragglers and donkeys and goats that formed a heedless, constant hazard. There were scarcely any on the canal road itself after we left Ismailia. We made good time. The sun was bright and warm. The breeze was cool.

Miles in the distance, then we saw approaching us the beginning of the first of two convoys which would move from Port Said to Suez that day, synchronized for proper passing schedules with two also moving out of Suez toward Said.

It was a nine-ship convoy (they put through 30, 40 and more ships a day) headed by a British tanker.

Half a mile back of the tanker chugged a second vessel, the Bretagne, out of Marseille and bound for Madagascar. She was the first passenger-carrying ship (I learned later) to pass through the canal since Egypt took over July 26. She had civilians and 150 French troops.

The ships seemed to climb up out of the desert in the distance, one by one, a quarter-to-half mile apart, I judged. On they came – Dutch, Russian, Panamanian registry. They were empty tankers, all save the French, bound for cargoes in the oil rich desert beyond Suez.

Dramatic Refutation

It was majestic, dramatic refutation of any idea that the Egyptians couldn't run the canal.

When you've seen the convoys, you wonder why the West thought ships couldn't be kept moving by the sons of the Nile.

An Egyptian officer said to me at Ismailia:

"What made them think we couldn't run this canal? Eighty per cent of the employes [sic] of the old company were Egyptians."

(Right up to the start of the London "users" conference, the association plan had been championed as the answer to an expected traffic jam in the canal. The concept changed after the ships kept right on pounding through though, despite resignation of the European pilots. The theme then became, as the London Economist put it, that one man mustn't be left in position to exercise pressure or discrimination while paying lip service to the principle of free passage.)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I pondered the question on up the canal road to Port Said, where a couple of ships already lay in the harbor that afternoon as another convoy began forming for the next movement during the night.

NEXT: The Egyptian side of the dispute.

PHOTO:

EGYPTIAN PILOT – Canal pilot Yousri El Ayoubi, left, guides French ship.

MAP:

ALTERNATE ROUTES – Map shows mileage via Suez, Cape of Good Hope.

(2.) What to Do About Russia?

What can the West do about Russia's influence in the Middle East?

Sir Robert Boothby, distinguished Conservative member of Commons, proposed a "common anti-communism policy" in a speech at London. He said:

"All over the world, the power and influence of the West is declining. Why? Because we are conducting a global struggle against the forces of communism without any common policy.

"For example, there has been no effective Anglo-American cooperation in the Middle East since the war. If we had had a common policy, the Suez crisis would never have arisen."

u. (B4/f15)

Rochester Times-Union
October 11, 1956

(1.) A Personal Report to You

A Look at Suez Crisis From Egyptian Side

This is the third in a series of five articles by Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, giving first-hand observations on the Suez Canal controversy.

By PAUL MILLER

1938

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Egyptians argue that they are right, and the aggrieved party, in the Suez Canal dispute.

The users' side may be briefly and over-simply stated thus:

Most "users" want international control of Suez Canal operations. They don't want, as one said, to be at the mercy of a dictator who could, by closing the canal, "cut off half the oil of Europe" – almost half is shipped via the canal. They say President Nasser of Egypt had no legal right to nationalize the canal. The company was to have passed to Egypt, at the end of a 99-year-old concession, in 1968. They refer to July 26, 1956 as "grab day."

WHAT DO THE EGYPTIANS SAY TO ALL THIS?

"They accuse us of having 'seized' the canal," one official said. "We didn't. We already had it. It is a ditch across Egypt.

"We 'seized' or nationalized the canal COMPANY. It was not an INTERNATIONAL company. It was an EGYPTIAN company. It just had multi-national STOCKHOLDERS. Egypt nationalized this company just as Britain nationalized a lot of things. We announced that we will pay off the former owners and stockholders at the stock price in effect the day before nationalization was proclaimed.

'Pure Exploitation'

QUESTION: But how about the agreement running to 1968?

THE EGYPTIAN ANSWER:

"The company was thinking about 1968, too. They were not putting anything back into the canal that they didn't have to. They followed a policy of pure exploitation. Last year the canal had revenues of 97 million dollars and a gross profit of 45 million dollars. Last year's dividend exceeded 10 per cent.

"They should have been widening and deepening the canal or planning, perhaps, a double track.

"We are going to use some of the profits elsewhere, too, of course, but we have big plans for improving the canal. The more ships that go through, the more money Egypt will make out of it. We want more and more."

QUESTION: How about barring the canal to Israel? At London, it was said that if you could do it with one, you could and might do it with others.

THE EGYPTIAN REPLY:

We were at war with Israel. Besides, we didn't bar their ships from the canal. We barred them from the approaches to the canal, same as Britain did with its enemies."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

WHO'S RIGHT?

The case is getting an airing such as few international controversies in the United Nations.

SOME THINGS SEEM FAIRLY CLEAR:

Great Britain is in a box; France likewise. The U.S.A., for once, has not gone out on any limb too far.

All three may well end up in some sort of compromise with Egypt far removed from the original goals of (1) punishment for Col. Nasser and (2) full international control of the Suez Canal.

It seemed to me that, when Britain and France reacted to Nasser's July 26 nationalization move by mobilizing troops, they moved as if the year were 1856 – not 1956; as if they still could run a gunboat into a colonial harbor somewhere and take over. The U.S. was less bellicose, but appeared to lend considerable support.

Then Col. Nasser got off one of his wild speeches. French and British nationals frantically cleared out of Egypt. The talk was of war.

NOW WHERE ARE THEY ALL?

Some British and French leaders still speak ominously, but not very convincingly, of force "if all else fails."

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles speaks mostly of time and international unpopularity as the agents that may bring Egypt's 38-year-old dictator to terms.

There is little talk now of even a little war.

The British and French thought rushing troops to the Mediterranean area might help hasten the fall of Nasser at home. Events proved them wrong. Nasser has more support at home than ever.

American Policy

HOW ABOUT U.S. GOVERNMENT POLICY?

There is criticism in some quarters at London and Paris that the U.S. has appeared progressively to soften its position; that every meeting seems to signal some further watering-down of proposals for moves against Nasser.

Maybe so.

At least it's OUR policy – not one dictated, or at least influenced, as was our war-without-victory policy in Korea, from a foreign capital.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

American policy is to seek a settlement based on justice and international law while recognizing that we of course stand for peace, but not at any price.

Many abroad suspect that what, to them, is our "soft" policy toward Egypt is dictated by a Washington desire not to stir up anything anywhere during the election campaign.

This seems to be incorrect. An intimate of Secretary Dulles said the other day:

"President Eisenhower has said to the secretary, not once but many times: Foreign policy is one thing. Politics is something else. We are going to do what we believe is right in foreign affairs, as in others, without any regard to politics."

NEXT: Russia makes hay in the Arab world.

(2.)

British Rib Conferences Poetically

Various conferences aimed at settling the Suez crisis are gently ribbed by the London (England) Sunday Dispatch in the following poem:

IN CONFERENCE

If it's Suez or Ceylon
Or where Mr. Khrushchev's gone
We must call a conference for that;
We must never own defeat
Or political retreat
We can still call a conference for a chat.

There is nothing better than
A conferential plan
In dealing with attempted coup d'etat ;
And the fact that it's too late
To amend affairs of state
Has never stopped a conference so far.

If with heated perorations
From some delegated nations
Aggressively our notions they dare spurn;
To stop Nasser's machinations
Let's invoke United Nations
And let them call a conference in turn.

And if this brings no redress
To the shipping lines distress
And Egypt's ownership is unassailed;
Proceed then with elan
With the simple wizard plan

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Rochester Times-Union
October 11, 1956

A Personal Report to You

Cairo Hubbub Reflects Little Of Suez Crisis

This is the fourth in a series of articles on the Suez Canal crisis by Paul Miller, editor and publisher of The Times-Union, based on a personal observation trip to London and Cairo.

By PAUL MILLER

While the Egyptian government frets and stews in the Suez Canal crisis, life in general goes on without apparent strain or major change along the ageless Nile.

There was no sign of animosity toward this visitor. I'd never have known there was a "crisis" on the streets of Cairo.

Many anticipate that the unfavorable publicity Egypt has been getting will frighten investors and keep tourists away. It is clear that it has and can have that effect. It is not so clear how long the effect will continue, barring further incidents.

The Semiramis Hotel, named for a famous queen, has only about half as many tourists as in October a year ago.

AN OLD GUIDE at the pyramids – he said he'd been at it since 1910 – told me business was so bad out there that, to share such tourists as there are among all the guides, he sometimes is assigned to work only one day a week.

I said for want of anything better, "Well maybe it will pick up again next year."

"Next year," he echoed me. "I need a pick up next month."

Out my window at the Semiramis lay a magnificent view of the Nile, the fine riverside drive, brightly lighted, stretching along beside it; numerous modern new buildings rising along the thoroughfares facing toward the river, including the new Shepheard's Hotel.

Traditions vs. 1956

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It could have been any great city, except –

Donkey carts wove precariously among a tangle of motor cars. Pedestrians – who must be the world's most heedless, as are the drivers, too – dodged and squirmed, swarms of them, without regard for sign or light, large numbers of men trailing about in the long gowns called balabiya [jalabiya ?], which many still affect. And women in the traditional veiled covering of the Moslem world.

Everywhere 1956 clashes with the traditions of centuries.

The Egyptians swarm to the movies. They particularly like Marilyn Monroe. There were four M.M. movies showing at one time in Cairo.

Most Egyptians I saw smoked American cigarettes. I was told that even Nasser smokes L and M's (the tips for which, by the way, are manufactured by Eastman Kodak Co. at Kingsport, Tenn.).

The first Egyptian I saw preferring local cigarettes was Hussein Aziz, undersecretary for foreign affairs.

"American cigarettes are too strong," he explained. (I had always thought their cigarettes were stronger!)

Women Fight for Rights

The women are battling for equal rights on all fronts, but I gathered they've not scored many sensational successes to date.

They were given the vote this year. Few voted, but that was to be expected.

The liveliest newspaper in Cairo, Al Akhbar (The News), has been championing women's causes. It started a mother's day. It sent out taxis to take women voters to the polls.

Still, it was news when a husband who beat his wife for looking out the window was sentenced to jail. He told her to quit looking, but she kept on.

The brief item, as interpreted to me by an Egyptian friend, reported that the judge said of course there was no law against husbands of the poorer classes hammering on their wives, but this one went too far. He left his wife permanently marked.

*** * ***

THE HOURS they keep in Cairo!

Two Egyptian publishers of a daily newspaper, a Sunday and assorted weekly and monthly magazines, work a schedule like this:

From 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Then Siesta. Return at 5 p.m. or 6 p.m. and stay on the job until 12 midnight.

Somewhat the same way in the government. There is much coffee and there are many delays all morning. They perk up at night.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It had been arranged for me to see President Nasser my last night in Cairo, Wednesday, Sept. 26. A cabinet meeting was called unexpectedly, however, and it ran until midnight. They telephoned and asked me to remain over to see the colonel the following day. I had my airline reservations arranged, and felt I had to come home.

* * *

I DEPARTED CAIRO under a full moon at 3 a.m. Thursday, Sept. 27. I was in London by early afternoon and en route homeward across the Atlantic by 8:30 p.m. I was back in my office by 3 a.m. Friday, Sept. 28.

Again, and finally:

The world is shrinking. Barriers and traditions are tumbling and will continue to do so at an accelerated rate.

Some government leaders all over the world see this clearly. So should we all; so must we all.

NEXT: Russia moves to take advantage of our troubles in Mid-East.

w. (B4/f15)

Rochester Times-Union
October 12, 1956

A Personal Report to You

Force and Threats No Answer Now To World Crises

Last in a series of five articles by the editor and publisher of The Times-Union, based on a personal observation trip.

By PAUL MILLER

With the West in trouble with the Arab world, the Russians are working night and day to make the most of it. The reds are particularly active in Egypt right now.

Egypt, it seems to Westerners, is playing a dangerous game. Some Egyptians, perhaps even President Gamal Abdel Nasser, sense this, too.

One in an important station said to me:

"You are driving us into the arms of Russia. If the West imposes trade restrictions, where else are we to turn save to the Iron Curtain countries? I for one would never be Communist. If my country turns to communism, I shall be exiled or shot. My whole background has assured for me a place on the list of those who would go. There are many others."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

To the rejoinder that many Americans believe it was President Nasser who got Egypt where she may be drawn into the toils of Russia by trying unsuccessfully to play off Russia against America, he cut in:

"You sold arms to Israel. You promised them to us and then backed out on your promise. Nasser had to turn to the Communists to get what we need for our own protection."

Another said:

"You try to balance off things between both Egypt and Israel. You thus get yourself in trouble with both."

An Historic Course

Some time ago, Cliff Carpenter of the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle toured Israel, Egypt and Jordan and returned to write of his observations and experiences there. I asked him, based on his broad experience, to comment on what I was told. He said:

"When good-hearted America follows its historic course of trying to help the underprivileged, and when the underprivileged are in two camps hating each other passionately, then we certainly do get ourselves into a diplomatic pickle.

"Arabs have a tragic history of conquest and subjugation and even of racketeering self-rule. We sympathize with them.

"The Jews have a tragic history of pogroms and global discrimination at the hands of other races. We sympathize with them.

"Both need help and understanding, for actually they have much in common. So, yes, America's policy has been vague; but because of kindness. Egypt, distrustful, wildly nationalistic, is creating and prolonging trouble in the Middle East."

An Egyptian said:

"The United States has made the mistake of UNDER-estimating Egypt. The Russians probably OVER-estimate us."

WHATEVER THE BACKGROUND, and however it may be debated, the orientation of Egypt today, if it is definitely oriented at all, is toward more rather than fewer economic ties with the Russian orbit.

And President Nasser, in the testing time today and for months ahead, may find Soviet intercourse increasingly necessary if his dictator government is to survive.

Yes, it's a happy hunting ground for the Russians – and Moscow is losing no time.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A Fact Dramatized

Yet some good may come of almost anything, including the crisis posed by Egypt's nationalizing of the Suez Canal.

1 It set men and nations to intensified planning for other ways to transport commodities, particularly oil, from the lands lying beyond Suez.

2 More important, in the opinion of many, it dramatized the fact which must be drawn sooner or later on all:

FORCE IS NO LONGER THE ANSWER, OR THE THREAT OF FORCE.

Said the London Observer, in a sober editorial analysis of Britain's own awkward position after troops were called up, threats implied – and nothing happened save that the Egyptians proved they could run the canal and openly defied the West:

"The government's proclaimed purpose has been the establishment of 'international control' of the Suez Canal. It is the right aim, not only for Suez, but also for the next problem, oil itself.

"Unless we can discover how to establish systems of international control, all capital investments in backward areas will continuously be in danger, and the acquisition of atomic power by more and more countries in the next few years will only increase the world's instability.

"if we use political methods likely to earn us majority support in the world today, we may yet save our face, our Suez interests, and the prospects of the next generation as well."

THE DEPENDENCE of our European friends is in a way frightening to an American. They can't move without U.S. support, and, I believe, won't.

No American can come away from Cairo without some such thought as this:

Some how, some way, the United States must get in position again to exercise a healthy influence in the Middle East.

We can have confidence that President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles have this, along with so many other problems, very much in mind. In them repose the hopes of millions, and for them the millions' prayers.

x. (B4/f15)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
Sunday, October 14, 1956

(1.) Nations Should Profit from Experience of Suez Crisis

Traveler to Cairo Reports:
1946

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

What is the Suez Canal crisis all about? Paul Miller, executive vice president of the Gannett Newspapers, recently made a 10-day flying trip to London and Cairo to find out. Here, compiled from his daily series especially for Sunday Democrat and Chronicle readers, is his report.

By PAUL MILLER

SOME good should come from the crisis posed by the nationalizing of the Suez Canal . . . .

PHOTO
Caption:

HE STARTED IT ALL – President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt reads about Suez crisis which followed his nationalizing of the canal, in an Arabic newspaper during a trip from Alexandria to Cairo. He had been in Alexandria resting. (AP)

(2.)

Rally Cheers Eden Re-Pledging Guns If Needed at Suez

Security Council Debates Suez, Page 1A

LLANDUDNO, Wales, Oct. 13 (AP) – Prime Minister Eden told 4,000 cheering Conservatives today Britain refuses to rule out force as a means of settling the Suez dispute with Egypt.

His declaration at a mass rally of party workers here followed this up-to-the-minute report which he said had come to him from Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd in New York:

"A little progress" has been made in secret three-power talks between Lloyd and French Foreign Minister Christian Pineau and Egyptian Foreign Minister Mahmoud Fawzi. But "wide differences of opinion" still divide the two sides, presumably over the measure of international control to be exercised over the canal's operation.

Eden, whose leadership of the Conservative party and thus of the government has been a subject of much speculation in recent months, won a prolonged ovation at the end of his hour-long speech. Members of his Cabinet and party bosses joined the crowd in rising to sing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" as a demonstration of support.

The British leader also dropped a broad hint that a far-reaching new relationship may be in the works to link the British Commonwealth with Western Europe in commerce, in defense and politically. One "happy consequence" of the Suez crisis, he said, has been to increase the sense of partnership between the countries of Western Europe.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Suez crisis has led some senior government officials and Conservative politicians to rediscover Britain's friends in Europe and at the same time to feel that American foreign policy often slows down in an election year even when vital Western interests are at stake.

They have declared privately they draw the political moral that Britain should move closer in its ties to the European continent.

y. (B4/f15)

*****

The Tulsa Tribune
Wednesday, October 10, 1956

Groping for Suez Solution

The search is now on for a face-saving solution to the Suez.

In the grand debate now under way before the UN Security Council a proposal has been made by Russian Foreign Minister Dmitri Shepilov that an eight-nation committee be set up to negotiate a treaty for the management of the Suez canal. A previous demand by Britain and France that the Security Council endorse the London conference's scheme for internationalizing the canal has again been scornfully rejected by Egyptian Foreign Minister Mahmoud Fawzi.

No one expects the Security Council to approve the internationalizing scheme. For a vote on such matters must be unanimous among the Council members and Russia has already indicated it will veto the London proposal. The reds are not going to give up their present popularity among the aroused Arabs by joining in any scheme that would limit Egypt's sovereignty over the canal . . . .

Paul Miller, vice-president of the Gannett newspapers, returned recently from a trip to Cairo with the remark that the British and French have tried an 1850-model solution. The days have gone when the interest of the East India Co. could be protected by the British navy or the interests of New York banks sustained by landing the U.S. Marines. It may be deplorable that backward countries would tear up solemn agreements (Egypt had agreed to let the Suez Canal Co. operate until 1968), but the cure is no longer swift or simple. Any armed action to seize the canal would drive India and Pakistan out of the British Commonwealth, and the Lord knows what else would happen in the inflamed Moslem world.

Colonel Nasser is in a tight money bind, and ought to be open to compromise. But the British and French claim that under Egyptian control the canal would soon be choked with wrecks now looks silly. Las week end a record number of ships passed between the two seas. Moreover the time to strike is in the heat of anger, for as each day passes without further incidents anger cools. Therefore the British and French contention that if Nasser doesn't accept internationalization they must and will attack him takes on more and more the coloring of a bluff.

A compromise solution that would enable the British and French on the one hand and Nasser on the other to maintain face would be fine. But whatever happens, poor old Uncle Sam will pick himself out of the ditch. The Arabs are furious that we backed the internationalization scheme, and the British and French are sore because our opposition to the use of force caused them to lose what they regarded as the psychological moment for strong retaliation.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Ah well, if all the nations that dislike us for our good-natured, fumbling meddling will feel a bond of kinship among themselves we'll have almost One-World after all.

10. 1957

a. (B4/f25)

Niagara Falls Gazette
February 4, 1957

[See also Rochester Times-Union, February 1, 1957]

Dulles Stands Out As Second to None Among Recent Secretaries of State

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice-President, Gannett Co., Inc.

I DON'T KNOW whether John Foster Dulles can or will long continue as secretary of state.

Whether he does or not, it is time somebody spoke up to answer some of the criticism of Dulles, much of which came during the campaign when there was so much general mud slinging [sic] that insufficient attention was given to answering that specifically directed at the secretary.

This piece will deal particularly with two of the main charges against Dulles during the campaign and since:

1. That the professionals in the Department of State are unhappy with the way he runs the place.

2. That he takes too much on himself flitting from conference to conference rather than sending the help.

*** * ***

TO DISCUSS CRITICISM of the State department today it is necessary to consider some facts.

One is that the secretary of state is an appointee, and often a political appointee, while the department itself is full of men – many of them of high competence – who are professionals.

There never has been a time when many of the professionals, under any secretary, didn't believe and confide to friends that they could run it better than the secretary. Naturally, men skilled in their trade can always pick flaws in the operations of the boss.

So, there are those in the State Department today who will admit that they could do a better job than Dulles, or who believe that Dulles could profit by lending them an ear. Mostly, they are career men who are not close to Dulles. Those who are close to him, and this is human nature, too, are disposed to feel that he is doing a job on which even they might have difficulty improving.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

THIS APPLIES, TOO, to Dulles' traveling.

When the secretary goes abroad, he is No. 1 in any American delegation and all eyes focus on him. Naturally, if somebody else went, that somebody else would be in the limelight. Naturally again, there are those who resent that the secretary has seen fit to play the leading role instead of waiting in Washington for them to report.

You can argue it either way.

Personally, I would rather have a secretary of state willing to go out on the firing line and carry the load himself, deeply as I regret what seems to be a fact, namely, that Dulles has wrecked his health by overwork. If he has, then we should thank him fervently, not criticize. Whatever brought on his problem, it developed while he was giving his best for his country as surely as did the boys in the mountains of Karea [sic], or in the Solomons, or on the beaches at Normandy.

THERE HAS BEEN criticism that Dulles is vacillatory or that certain underlings don't always know what he has in mind.

Dulles doesn't make United States foreign policy. If he is vacillatory, or seems to be, part of it is agreed approach, top level, nothing for which he could or should be expected to take sole credit or blame.

Take the Suez crisis. After Dictator Nasser of Egypt seized the Suez Canal Company on July 26, Britain and France began mobilizing. They will tell you today that they thought they had U.S. support at the time. Certainly they had our sympathetic ear and interest.

However, even if they were led to believe that their warlike moves had tacit approval here, there was no U. S. commitment to follow them out the window. Our diplomatic representatives, Dulles, included, deserve credit rather than criticism for the fact that they kept us out of direct involvement.

Because U. S. policy was down the middle we were in a position to act for peace when Israel struck Egypt and Britain and France moved their troops into the Canal Zone under the pretext of protecting the canal.

* * *

LET'S GO BACK. We don't necessarily throw a man out of a job because he isn't perfect. Nobody, least of all Dulles, has contended that Dulles is perfect. On balance, though, he is a great secretary of state and certainly superior to many, going back even beyond World War II. Run over the list:

Secretary Hull was a fine man who had lost control of the department, for all practical purposes, by the time he left it in 1944.

Edward R. Stettinius wasn't sufficiently in command even to have access to all the messages President Roosevelt, in effect his own secretary, was exchanging with Allied Powers.

James F. Byrnes, was a sort of interim appointee who had already made his name and fame when he went to the department.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

General George C. Marshall, who was secretary only at the insistence of President Truman, likewise already had had his great career.

How many besides Harry Truman and the people who worked for him will contend that Dean Acheson, brilliant and polished as he was, performed outstandingly as secretary of state?

Pair off John Foster Dulles with any one of the men, fine as each of them was in his own way, and Dulles stands second to none.

* * *

CRITICS SPEAK OF DULLES' having "lost control" of the situation in Europe and the Middle East. It's ridiculous. Since when did the United States ever have control?

It is time for general indignation at much of the criticism.

It is beyond time for the expressions of the praise and gratitude Dulles has earned and deserves for a night-and-day effort that has damaged his health and might have killed him.

b. (B4/f25)

COUNTY OF MONROE
VETERANS' INFORMATION BUREAU
NEW YORK STATE VETERANS' SERVICE AGENCY

168 CLINTON AVENUE SOUTH
ROCHESTER 4, NEW YORK
February 11, 1957

DeWAIN F. FELLER
DIRECTOR

ARTHUR M. DOUD
ASST. DIRECTOR

TELEPHONE
BAKER 5-9300

Dear Paul:

Were I to obey the impulse to commend you whenever I thought it deserved, my pen would be in hand quite frequently.

Thank you very much for sending me a copy of the Inaugural Ball Program. It has been the source of great pleasure to my family and myself.

I would like to take this occasion also to tell you that I thought your article of February 1, on John Foster Dulles, was terrific. It was a grand tribute to a great man and was expressed at a time when it took courage to do so. I think you are tops.

Sincerely,
[Indecipherable]

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

DeWain F. Feller

Paul Miller, Executive Vice-President
The Gannett Company
Times Union Building
Times Square
Rochester 14, New York

DFF/s

c. (B7/f1)

Rochester Times-Union
Friday, February 8, 1957

Words Won't Lick Inflation Danger

Eisenhower's Look-Alike Policy - - No Hope for Cut in Spending

By PAUL MILLER

The economic policies of the Eisenhower administration look more and more like those of Truman and Roosevelt.

The President's talk in his press conference this week of some sort of controls to combat inflation just about closed whatever gaps remained. It was an old record scratching away again.

It is clear that growing numbers of Republicans, and Eisenhower Democrats as well, are a little less bewitched – and increasingly bothered and bewildered – to misquote the popular song of some years back.

I get this not only in conservative Upstate New York but in not-so-conservative other parts of the country as well.

Many who voted for more stability and an end to at least some of the gimme programs now feel cut adrift by what they have seen, heard, felt and paid for. Many who still hold loyally to some hope were shaken anew when President Eisenhower declared, discussing his $71.8 billion budget: —

"As long as the American people demand and, in my opinion, deserve the kind of services that this budget provides, we have got to spend this kind of money."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

So saying, he invited Congress to cut the budget – but offered no suggestions himself.

Congressmen, with the exception of a very few, will inevitably add to bigger spending every year. They all have their local and regional pets and projects. They will holler for economy, but economy somewhere outside their own districts.

* * *

IF NO REAL LEADERSHIP for economies is to come from the President of the United States, who was elected in part by those who believed he would try to put an end to wasteful spending, then there very likely will be no effective leadership at all.

Senator Byrd of Virginia will do the best he can, but that won't be enough. He already has pointed out – and former President Hoover has echoed him – that the federal government is going to collect and spend even more, much more, than Eisenhower's budget sets forth. Substantial items such as the Social Security, unemployment, and highway trust funds do not show in the budget.

The unhappy truth seems to be that the administration is talking economy and anti-inflation while practicing something else.

The President has asked both business and labor to cooperate in holding the line. But he proposes no relief from the swollen and ever-swelling federal payrolls and programs which, as Senator Byrd says, constitute "a major factor" in the inflation that is as great a threat to the United States as is Moscow in its way.

Only [Treasury] Secretary [George Magoffin] Humphrey speaks up. And he offers no specific proposals for cutting the spending.

* * *

WHY CAN'T SOMETHING BE DONE?

Apparently nothing will be done as long as whatever party is in power thinks spending is popular.

The purchasing power of the dollar has declined 2 cents in 12 months. I hear a lot of talk about the danger that continued big government spending will mean – still more inflation and still more decline. But such talk doesn't come from quarters where the bulk of the votes are. Most people still sold on the idea that we can somehow get something for nothing from the government.

Even Congressman Ken Keating, representing one of the surest Republican districts anywhere, is quoted as saying that "big spending is here to stay."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

We need dramatic and determined leadership at the highest level, supported powerfully all up and down the line, to make any effective cut.

With President Eisenhower offering no such leadership, nothing will be done by this administration barring a change that only great popular demand could bring.

* * *

You don't like all this?

Neither do I, but facts are facts.

d. (B4/f25)

(1.) Feb. 8, 1957

Dear Mr. Miller:

Your editorial on Eisenhower policies most welcome, albeit a bit slow in coming. As a Republican in arms I share your alarm. Unfortunately for us we were carried away by the Gop [sic] banner and Ike's "nice guy" properties.

Secretly I believe that both of us should have voted for the intellectual Mr. Stevenson despite the fact that he was and is a Democrat. We need thinkers to-day and whether they are "nice guys" or not. As a fellow who can smile easily, get in a reference to the Lord in the right place hardly qualifies are [sic] beloved Ike to assume the responsibilities to which we unwittingly elected him. I trust that your criticisms of Administration policies will continue whenever warranted.

In closing may I be permitted to remark that your editorials on the local special election were hardly worthy of you – much too wishy-washy. Here is an example of sheer stupidity on the part of our county leader as well as an indication that for tossing the taxpayer's [sic] money out the window the republicans can now give the Democrats "lessons".

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I am enclosing an editorial from a small town newspaper that in my opinion does the job on the situation that you should be doing.

Thanks again for your Friday editorial.

F H McGhee (signature)

Francis H. Mc Ghee

Right to publish acknowledged . . if so desired . . . initials only please.

(2.) It's Only Money!

The needless special election foisted upon the county of Monroe and its political subdivisions by a short-sighted and open-handed Republican majority will give the Democrats ammunition that was usually found in the pouches of the GOP.

The cost estimated variously at $12,000. to $15,000. will be charged to the taxpayer. The Republicans in all fairness did not want the election and the Democrats didn't care. Bills were introduced to permit the vacancy to be carried over until next fall but for reasons known only to politicians this money-saver failed to muster the necessary majority. Insiders were "surprised".

More "surprised" than anybody was Fred I. Parrish, Monroe County Republican leader and clerk of the state senate who confidently nominated Gould Hatch for the job. As Mr. Hatch is also an incumbent assemblyman, and quite likely to be elected senator, it re-opens the door for still another special election to fill his post of assemblyman.

At this writing the only situation that could prevent another special election would be the election of Democrat George Kelly who does not at present hold an elective state post. The traditional Republican tenor of Monroe County precludes such a possibility.

Thus it is quite possible that in the Democratic ammunition box ready for November firing will be not only one special election permitted by the GOP majority but the necessity of a second, chargeable to Fred I. Parrish as an additional $15,000. "Boo-boo".

e. (B4/f25)

Winchester Evening Star
EVENING ESTABLISHED 1896

1955

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Daily News-Record
MORNING HARRISONBURG, VIRGINIA

HARRY F. BYRD, JR.
PUBLISHER

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

February 11, 1957 j

Dear Paul:–

Your signed piece in Friday's Times-Union is excellent.

I am sending it on to Father.

I do regret the President is not providing leadership on this vital matter.

With warm regards,

Cordially,

Harry (signed)

Mr. Paul Miller
Vice President
The Gannett Newspapers
Rochester 14, N.Y.

f. (B4/f25)

1957 Eastern Conference
CONTROLLERS INSTIUTE OF AMERICA
May 16-18, 1957 . . . Sheraton Hotel, Rochester, New York
SPONSORED BY THE ROCHESTER CONTROL

February 11, 1957

Mr. Paul Miller
Editor and Publisher
Times-Union
Rochester, New York

Dear Paul:

I read your article "Words won't lick Inflation Danger" on the editorial page last Friday with a great deal of interest and agree with your comments.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Over the years I worked at General Motors I had my "finger" in the compiling of quite a few budgets and there were always places where we could recommend further cuts. I am disappointed that the President did not indicate any places where he felt that could be done.

When I was with OPS back in 1951-52 we were asked to throw together a budget on very short notice – once a six-months budget in less than twenty-four hours – and our figures were mere guesses. I can't believe that the Director of the Treasury compiled this one with anything less than extreme care, so why does he not make some recommendations.

I hope you express yourself further on the editorial page on this very vital subject.

Sincerely,

Roy Jordan (signature)
34 Ridgeview Drive
East Rochester, New York

g. (B7/f1)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, February 16, 1957

The Big Squeeze: Inflation and You

By PAUL MILLER

It just could be that people in general are waking up to the ravages of increasing inflation as everybody from housewives to manufacturers finds prices going up and up.

That has been somewhat indicated by not wholly unrelated events of the past week:

1. The Eisenhower administration still isn't offering any public help, but Senator Byrd and Senator Knowland, one the great Virginia Democrat, the other the California Republican who may one day be president himself, have called for a cut in the 71.8 billion dollar [597.6 billion in 2013] Eisenhower budget.

2. Nationwide surveys indicated that Byrd and Knowland, along with others at Washington, may have been encouraged in their budget-cutting proposals by an avalanche of anti-spending letters from the home folks.

Senator Knowland voiced hope that some 2 billions might be trimmed off the budget. Senator Byrd speaks of 5 billions.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

OF COURSE, BIG AND WASTEFUL SPENDING by government is only one cause contributing to inflation. An economist speaking to a Rochester group the other day made this statement:

"President Eisenhower is the first chief executive of our country in a long time to single out wage and salary increases without productivity increases as a prime factor in U.S. inflation.

"Wages went up 5 per cent in 1956 despite the fact there was no increase in productivity. With the already 'banked up' wage and salary increases still to come in 1957, the inflationary pressures will continue."

He added:

"Price increases still are taking place generally. We are getting both rising industrial and rising farm prices.

"The resumption of inflationary pressures is the largest single problem for 1957."

* * *

AS THIS SPEAKER SAID, President Eisenhower spoke out on wage and price increases, urging both labor and management to hold the line and help avoid further inflation.

That required more political courage than we often see.

However, the factor of government spending is powerful too, and the President still (as this was written) has offered no real leadership in that area.

He just dropped the budget on Congress and suggested that Congress try to cut it.

A specific word from Ike such as the words from Senator Byrd and Senator Knowland commented on at the start of this column could have enormous effect.

If that specific word doesn't come pretty soon – while Congress is debating and considering the budget – no one need expect any major operations downward on the budget. If that word does come, some needed pruning may possibly be done.

* * *

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A READER TELEPHONED to ask what reaction was received to the piece printed in this space last week, which made the point that the economic policies of the Eisenhower administration are looking more and more like those of Truman and Roosevelt.

The reaction to that editorial went like this:

1. Some readers wrote or said, "You should blame Congress, not Ike or the administration."

2. Some asked, "What can Ike do alone about the spending?"

3. Others, commending the column, wrote "It was about time somebody told the truth."

* * *

SPEAKING OF READER REACTION, it's been a long time since Rochester's Congressman Ken Keating has been the subject of as much criticism as I have heard in connection with his noisy and (many thought) un-Keating-like speeches against inviting Tito to the U.S.

Keating is increasingly important, and rightly so, in Congress. That is why some of his friends were all the more disappointed by his antics on the Tito matter. They thought he sounded like some other congressmen of far less ability and standing, with whom they don't like to see Keating compared.

On the same general subject: Wonder what Mayor Wagner of New York thinks now about his cold-shouldering of old King Saud?

Of course, it was the round-eyed little princeling who stole the show on Saud's visit here. But the whole thing came off better, one gathers, than even the greatest optimists at Washington had hoped for. We need more such visits, not less.

h. (B7/f3)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, March 2, 1957

The Big Question: Where Do We Cut Too-High Budget?

By PAUL MILLER

1959

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Cut-that-budget talk continues in Washington and elsewhere – but still there's no leadership for such from the White House.

Perhaps the President is practicing a bit of psychology. Perhaps his advisors figure that silence on his part may stir up further anti-budget indignation in Congress where there are some signs of spreading determination to slash the 72.8 billion dollar burden.

Can such determination stand the acid test of application to the congressmen's own local programs? That's the question that will ultimately decide.

And, speaking of that, our own IRONDEQUOIT BAY PROJECT has been taking a shellacking from some critics of big spending. They call it "typical of the kind of pork-barrel project which is running up federal government bills that really should be projects for local financing only."

Said the Wall Street Journal:

"Besides the more grandiose expenditures (in the Public Works authorization bill now shaping up in Congress) are a host of 'little' items. Between $1 million and $2 million of all the taxpayers' money would be spent to widen a channel for the benefit of one thousand people keeping pleasure boats on a New York state bay . . . ."

There is a great deal more to the Irondequoit Bay project than the pleasure of boat owners. Still – let's face it – it IS typical of hundreds which, taken together, add up to enormous spending countrywide.

* * *

DAVID LAWRENCE, long a great reporter and interpreter of the Washington scene, pointed out the other day that "there will be no tax relief till the country discovers that the federal government really cannot afford to keep on paying for things the local units of government ought really to be doing for their citizens . . . ."

Lawrence also said:

"Whether President Eisenhower likes it or not, he has to go along with the programs which have been initiated under previous administrations."

There is some evidence that the country IS waking up.

I believe nearly everyone who takes the trouble to think knows WHY the budget is high.

What many would LIKE to know is why no leadership is being given by the White House in trying to cut it down.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

FORTUNE MAGAZINE DUG UP an angle on the President's budget which may come as a surprise to many – especially farmers:

"In fiscal 1958 the U.S. plans to spend less on foreign aid than it does to subsidize tis own farmers. For the farmers, expenditures are expected to run to some $5 billion whereas total foreign aid is budgeted for $4.4 billion."

Farmers often are among outspoken opponents of foreign aid. Their spokesmen also are loud in demands for cuts in government spending. What sometimes happens, in such cases, is that congressmen favoring foreign aid bills trade off votes with congressmen from so-called farm states, and vice versa. Then BOTH programs go through substantially.

i. (B7/f3)

Rochester Times-Union
Friday, March 8, 1957

Probes and No-Fear Politics

- - - Will 'Liberalism' Last? . . Dulles and his Critics

By PAUL MILLER

Are politicians losing their fear of big union leaders?

Have Congressmen accepted what some pollsters and others have long contended? Namely, that starting with Senator Taft's 1950 victory over heavy labor opposition in Ohio, it has been proved that union officials can't deliver the votes of their members.

Putting the questions thus is over-simplifying. It assumes that politics is all-governing. But politics does figure in all Washington considerations. That's the way our system works.

Still, politics aside, there has been increasing evidence that many congressmen are willing to bore in and let the chips fall where they may in all sorts of investigations.

As a matter of fact, too, some unions were themselves taking steps to clean house even before Congress moved in.

It IS true, however, that there's apparently been a change in the Washington atmosphere in this respect.

* * *

1961

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Kennedy, Nixon – and 1960

The Republicans – Modern Republicans, that is – appear set to out-Deal the Dealers in the drive to elect Vice President Nixon as president in 1960.

The Democrats – Modern Democrats, that is – are fighting to keep the GOP out of the "liberal" position.

Democratic Senator John Kennedy of Massachusetts predicted this week that Dick Nixon will be the 1960 Republican nominee and "hard to beat." Hence, young Kennedy seemed to urge, the Democrats need to hustle up some giveaways and get ahead again in this contest which nobody minds but us taxpayers.

Kennedy didn't put it quite that way. He said:

"Congressional Democrats must shape a responsible progressive record with deeds that match our words. For it is precisely this gap between rhetoric and the record that casts doubt on the new liberalism of the Republicans."

Kennedy is one of the comers in American politics. He's only 39, smart, personable and wealthy. He'll be very much in the 1960 picture himself, likely for vice president.

* * *

I'M NOT SURE THE COUNTRY isn't ready for a change from the "liberalism" of Roosevelt, Truman and, lately, Eisenhower.

I'm not so sure that a shift of sentiment isn't taking place that could make the 1960 conventions something other than might be expected looking back on the past five or six. "Liberalism" and all that goes with it may not be so popular by then.

Certainly there's some significance in this fact:

Congressmen, due in part to newspaper reporting of Eisenhower administration spending and budget matters, are floundering in a pile of protesting mail from constituents the like of which many never saw before.

The home folks want that 72 billion dollar budget worked over.

The White House finally has been forced to take notice. But as this was written neither President Eisenhower nor his budget director had offered any real hope. The President did tell his press conference that perhaps the rate of government spending could be slowed. He said he knew of no program in the budget which should be abandoned.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

THE WEEK'S DEVELOPMENTS seemed to point up a growing cleavage in Republican Party thinking on federal spending: The Eisenhower administration finally talking of some slowing down; Republicans such as Senate Majority Leader Knowland, urging broad economy cuts – and backed, again, by those letters the congressmen are getting from home.

* * *

'. . . For Goodness Sake, Shut Up'

It was bound to come – some criticism, that is, for the reference made here last week to the Irondequoit Bay project. I reported that it has been pointed to as an example of the sort of project for which federal money will be spent but which ought to be underwritten locally, if at all.

A lady wrote:

"If you can not [sic] be constructive in civic matters – for goodness sakes shut up."

Both Rochester newspapers support the Irondequoit Bay project and have for years. I have spoken for it and signed petitions. So have others at the newspapers.

Having been taxed millions for other projects all over the U.S.A., the Rochester area is entitled to a little, too, including funds for Irondequoit Bay. But let's not try to pretend it isn't any different than a lot of other projects. It isn't.

* * *

Dulles Critics . . . Strangely Quiet

Secretary Dulles appears over the hump in his battle against the savage and often senseless criticism of several weeks.

On Feb. 1, the following appeared in this column:

"It is time for general indignation at much of the criticism of Dulles.

"It is beyond time for the expressions of praise and gratitude that Dulles has earned and which he deserves for a night-and-day effort that has damaged his health and might have killed him."

The critics were strangely quiet after the agreement was worked out, largely by Secretary Dulles for our side, whereby Israel started getting out of the Gaza Strip.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

At least two writers who have not always cheered him, James B. Reston of the New York Times and Roscoe Drummond of this and other newspapers, moved over this week.

Reston wrote: For his tireless and promising diplomacy in recent days, Secretary Dulles is entitled to at least one innocent passage down this narrow corridor (Reston's column) to the bottom of the page . . ."

And Drummond: "It deserves to be said that Secretary Dulles contributed the creative proposal that persuaded Prime Minister Ben-Gurion to agree to comply with the U.N. resolution without advance U.N. guarantees."

As this is written, Dulles has flown off to Australia, continuing the grind that for a man of 69 and with his medical history just can not [sic] go on forever. He'll have to quit and let up one of these days. I'll wager it will NOT be under fire.

*** * ***

IF AND WHEN Secretary Dulles does have to step aside, the two best present guesses to succeed him are "Onward Christian" (so-called at last week's Gridiron Dinner) Herter and former SHAPE Commander Alfred Gruenther, now heading the Red Cross.

The Gridiron jingle went as follows:

ONWARD CHRISTIAN HERTER
POUNDING AT THE GATE,
READY TO BE DRAFTED,
SHOULD DULLES ABDICATE.

j. (B7/f3)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, March 16, 1957

One Place to Cut -- School Aid Bill

By PAUL MILLER

Marion Folsom, one of all Rochester's favorite Rochesterians, is locked in the sort of Washington fracas he probably dreaded most when he became Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Here he is, one of the country's best known businessmen, trading punches with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce over the Eisenhower administration's proposed school-building program!

Marion Folsom is a former president of the Rochester Chamber. He has numerous friends in the leadership of the U.S. Chamber, of which he is a former director.

Yet, mild-mannered and self-effacing though he is, Secretary Folsom, as the home folks know, never runs away from a fight. He's far from running away from this one.

* * *

WHAT'S IT ALL ABOUT? Briefly, the Eisenhower administration wants 1.3 billion dollars for school construction. It says there's a big schoolroom shortage and federal aid is the answer. The Chamber says there were more classrooms built in the last decade than actually are required, and that federal aid wouldn't be the answer anyway. Folsom accuses the Chamber of "misleading statements." The Chamber retorts hotly. There you are.

Who's right about the actual number of needed classrooms? Loren Pope, the education expert on our Washington bureau staff, tried to find out. He concluded that nobody knows, for certain. Mr. Pope's conclusion has been reached by other more or less disinterested fact-finders.

How's it going to come out? Some of Washington's best guessers think the school building program is doomed.

First, "Federal aid to education" still isn't a generally popular idea (Eisenhower himself opposed it when he was president of Columbia University).

Second, Congress seems serious about trying to whack the proposed Eisenhower spending some place. This is a fairly safe place to cut, controversy over school aid being what it is.

Note: Even if his bill does lose, as I (and many another of his admirers) have to hope it will, Marion Folsom will remain one of the most highly-regarded men in official Washington.

It IS Eisenhower's Budget

It was largely "politics," but it seems to me that House Democrats were right, at that, when they passed the resolution requesting President Eisenhower to tell 'em how and where to cut his budget.

After all, it is his budget, isn't it?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

At least, it was sent to Congress by the President. Of course it is a compilation of recommendations, themselves whittled by the Budget Bureau, of various bureau and department heads.

Congress can cut the budget, and it will – some. But a budget of record proportions, for peacetime, never should have left the White House in the first place. It should have been cut there, and in the Budget Bureau, just as Mr. Truman's budget was cut by Ike's experts after the Eisenhower administration first took office. It wasn't so difficult when the aim was to show up Truman.

The truth is that the Eisenhower administration has shown a reluctance to cut spending in direct proportion to its tenure; the longer the Eisenhower team stays in office, the more some of them seem to act – money-wise – like the Roosevelt and Truman administrations before them.

Every indication is that the people want the budget cut. The test will come when we see popular reaction to some of the cuts that affect special groups. Will they approve budget-cutting in May as they do in March? Ike's advisers apparently think not.

Off and Running for '58

The Republicans are off and running early, 18 months ahead in fact, for new York's 1958 governorship nomination.

President Eisenhower indorsed Leonard Hall of Oyster Bay, lately retired as Republican national chairman – at least Ike seemed to indorse him; but then Ike toned it down at his press conference this week, saying in answer to our Paul Martin's questions that he'd be for Hall should Hall get the nomination.

"Newsweek" magazine said to watch Nelson Rockefeller . . . .

k. (B7/f3)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
March 23, 1957

Congress Talks Budget Cuts - - Keep on Writing

By PAUL MILLER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Newspapers will have had a great deal to do with it, if the cut-the-budget talk in Congress results in any real slashes.

Editorial writers across the nation jumped on the Eisenhower budget, and on the howling inconsistency of sending to Congress a budget that even the President admitted ought to be cut, as soon as the wires spread the story on local news desks.

Readers responded with a mail barrage that has exceeded anything seen by many veteran congressmen.

* * *

SINCE THEN:

1. The Budget Bureau, which at first couldn't see a thing to do, now is taking another look.

2. Department heads, who couldn't think of a place to cut before, now are finding some. (First was, of course, bluff old Charlie Wilson. He ordered a 12 per cent cut in the number of civilians and military people working in defense offices in the Washington area.)

3. With Senator Byrd leading the way, as usual, numerous legislators in both houses of Congress are proposing cuts, big and little. They may just possibly add up to something consequential.

Don't be too optimistic.

Do keep writing letters – even to Ken Keating and Harold Ostertag.

The New York World-Telegram put it this way:

"If enough people howl – and howl in writing, in letters addressed to their senators and representatives – the administration's horrifying $71.8 billion budget can be cut to sensible proportions. And dormant recommendations from the Hoover Commission can be activated, for permanent multi-billion economies."

AND BY THE WAY, what ever happened to the One Party Press about which we heard so much a while back?

Will newspapers be hearing that cry now from, say, the Modern Republicans?

One Prediction – and Wrong

I have made only one prediction since starting this weekly column. Noting New York State's pressing need for highways and highway funds, and the opposition of Republican Senate Leaders Mahoney and Erwin to the proposed 1-cent gas tax increase, I wrote:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"They'll come around (and be for it) in time."

However, they have persisted in opposition, despite Republican State Chairman Jud Morehouse, who favored it, with the result that any possibility of getting the tax – and the needed revenue – apparently is gone for the year.

Not a very good record, one prediction – and it all wrong.

So here's another try:–

I predict good friends Walter Mahoney and Austin Erwin will be PROVED wrong by coming events.

l. (B7/f3)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, March 30, 1957

Man of Many Skills --Master of All

By PAUL MILLER

MIAMI BEACH – Norman Vincent Peale, who could incorporate as the General Motors of popular religion, considering all he does, was splashing around the salt water pool of the Sea View Hotel.

"Come on in," he called, squinting in the sunshine.

It looked like an ideal place to turn the tables on a man whose writings and sermons reflect first of all, I think, the work of a truly great reporter.

He's forever interviewing everybody else. I interviewed him. You may "come on in," too.

*** * ***

BUT FIRST, if you don't already know him through his column in The Times-Union (on this page today) – or otherwise – meet Dr. Peale.

This sandy-complexioned, bright-eyed man, of medium height and build, floating there in the pool between speeches on a Southern tour, is –

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Pastor of Marble Collegiate Church in New York City, where he preaches twice each Sunday to overflow crowds.

Editor of a magazine devoted to personal accounts of individual religious experiences.

A columnist whose weekly articles appear in some 180 newspapers.

Author of numerous books and pamphlets including the best selling [sic] "Power of Positive Thinking" (well over 2 million copies).

Far-traveling lecturer with a schedule averaging about three a week.

Radio and television personality with – joined often by the attractive Mrs. Peale – his own regular programs.

Conductor of a question and answer page that brings in some 4,000 letters a week to Look Magazine.

I marvel at him as who doesn't? . . . .

m. (B4/f25)

*****

The Quill
for
March , 1957

Rochester Papers Find Formula for Hard Hitting Letters to the Editor

Freeswinging bipartisan policy wins approval during recent national campaign from both parties and helps get the voters to the polls.

By JOSEPH N. FREUDENBERGER

LETTERS to the editor – are they important to a daily newspaper? Is their importance increased when a field is served by only one paper? How can a newspaper attract voices of authority to its letter column?

Most dailies confront a letter problem such as that faced by the Rochester (N.Y.) Times-Union when Paul Miller became its editor in 1947. Cranks, crackpots and axe-grinders had enjoyed too free a hand. Many professional men were reluctant to submit letters. Some Democrats scoffed: "What can you expect from the one-party Republican press?" More restrained members of the Democratic organization didn't write letters.

To this problem, Editor Miller offered only this general solution:

"Readers are interested in the opinions of others so letters to the editor make newspapers more interesting . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"We express the newspapers' opinions on the editorial pages. At the same time, we invite for publication expressions of contrary views.

"The Times-Union, for example, printed several pro-Stevenson editorials from other newspapers while itself editorially supporting President Eisenhower and Mr. Nixon."

LETTER writers applauded. Representing a cross-section of Rochester population and opinion, they came from fields of education, religion, law, industry and the home. In age they ranged from a young college student and an equally young housewife to a retired minister, a retired school superintendent and a professional writer.

Miller's idea of a post-election good will dinner (with pollster Sam Lubell as speaker) captured the imaginations of newspaper executives, politicians and students of government.

New York's Governor Averell Harriman, in a telegram read at the dinner, said:

"This is a unique event and I am sure that it will have a worth-while effect in stimulating even more widespread expression by your readers of their views on public issues.

"As a frequent reader of the 'Letters to the Editor' columns of our newspapers, I appreciate what a valuable open forum they provide for such discussions of important issues by the public. I commend your newspapers for an original idea and I join you in congratulating your guests of honor on their active participation as citizens in the discussion of public affairs."

Wrote Paul Butler, chairman of the Democratic National Committee:

"My warmest congratulations to the Gannett Newspapers and to the 'best letter' writers for the distinctive contribution which they have made to broader discussion of the issues before us these critical days. You have set an excellent example in effectively serving the major purpose of American elections – which is to make our people active participants in our political processes, rather than mere sideline observers or spectators."

WROTE Leonard W. Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee:

"This is an outstanding example of public service by the Gannett Newspapers. Your campaign has helped citizens develop and express their political views, enabling them to go to the polls and intelligently vote for the candidates of their choice."

But the "Dear Sir" dinner was more than a get-out-the-vote promotion (though Editor Miller believes in those, too). It was a get-together and get-acquainted meeting for opinion makers from many strata of Rochester society . . . .

n. (B7/f3)

*****

Rochester Times-Union

1970

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

April 6, 1957

Mayor Peter Barry
--A Fine Record

By PAUL MILLER

Last Chance to Cut Spending?

People who ridicule major federal economy proposals (and thereby inferentially support more big federal spending) may not know or may not mind that more and more federal spending means (1) more and more federal control, (2) less and less individual liberty and individual opportunity and (3) socialism of which we already have more than many like.

I wish the millions of well meaning [sic] Americans who think they can have Uncle Sam do more and more for them, and without unhappy results in time, could hear first-hand from some of the countries that already have gone pretty much all the way. Sweden is a good example.

Advocates of continually-increasing federal spending would stoutly deny that the Big Government philosophy can lead here to what has happened under socialism elsewhere.

On the other hand, many Americans believe that such an end is inevitable if government is not cut down; that the United States may have, right now, this year, its last chance to curb free-spending government and turn around.

That's why they are appalled at the spending turn of the Eisenhower administration.

They feel that if this administration can't or won't cut government programs then we may never see another that can or will.

o. (B7/f3)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, April 27, 1957

Letters Count
In Budget Cuts

By PAUL MILLER

1971

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

NEW YORK – This is Newspaper Week in New York, or has been. It is a good time to congratulate Times-Union readers who write letters to their public servants on what now appears to be a hopeful prospect:

Your letters, along with those of other newspaper readers the nation over, calling for less government spending, are having a continuing effect.

You began getting results several weeks ago. Now even congressmen and appointed officials, who took you lightly at first, are beginning to pay some heed. The cuts in the federal budget will not be as big as they ought to be, but it is clear that nothing short of a national crisis can prevent some saving.

The high point in the changing scene came when President Eisenhower sent up his letter indicating points at which he thought the budget might be trimmed. This letter was inadequate and was a long time coming, but it was a step in the right direction.

* * *

KEEP ON WRITING your senators and congressmen . . . you have good company.

Here is an interesting example , of which I learned only this week, about what is going on in one community – the little city of Mexico, Mo. Representative citizens got together and formed "The Mexico, Missouri Citizens Committee to Curb Inflation." They purchased a full page advertisement in the Mexico Evening Ledger and printed an open letter to Missouri senators and congressmen which they asked other newspaper readers to tear out and mail. After reviewing government spending policies, their message concluded:

"We believe the time has come when we should be more grateful to our chosen representatives for what they SAVE us than for what they get for us. INFLATION MUST BE CURBED."

That page advertisement, by the way, is being circulated throughout the country.

SAD BUT TRUE TAX STORY

Three news stories struck me particularly here this week, as follows:

1 – The speech by our own Marion Folsom in which he defended the Eisenhower budget and its proposed school building program.

2 – The report of the further rise in living costs – two-tenths of 1 per cent in March, making 12 of the last 13 months in which consumer prices have gone up. As the New York Herald Tribune put it: "The buying power of the dollar is being steadily eroded and the end is not in sight."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It surely isn't. The cost of living went up 3.7 per cent in the last 12 months. It has gone up more than 4 per cent since Eisenhower took office in January, 1953.

3 – Continuing talk about a tax cut in Washington.

We have debated editorially with good friend Marion Folsom over his school building program and will not rehash the arguments here. I will repeat that I find arguments for federal school building programs in 1957 a lot like the past school spending arguments of the New Dealers the Eisenhower administration was going to show up. Senator Harry Byrd of Virginia notes we have had the New Deal and the Fair Deal. Now, says Byrd, we have the Present Deal.

As for the cost of living increases: Government spending contributes to this. Yet the Eisenhower administration still is largely espousing halfway measures or none at all toward the budget.

With all this – more spending programs proposed, only minor budget cuts – it is useless to talk in Congress or anywhere else, about cutting income taxes. Tax cuts under present conditions would only further affect the value of the dollar. It is sad, but it is true.

A New Eisenhower Button

HERE AND THERE: The story in New York is that a company manufacturing campaign novelties is going out bring out a new Eisenhower button. It is to read: "I Like Edgar". . . . It is interesting to a former Washington reporter to read the confessions of FDR's press agent about killing or withholding from distribution, pictures that showed President Roosevelt's true physical condition back in 1944 and 1945. I thought then and I think now that it was wrong and a disservice to the country . . . . One of the points of great and admirable contrast between Roosevelt and Eisenhower is Eisenhower's disarming candor about his health. This is a tribute also to New Yorker Jim Hagerty, Ike's press secretary, who has insisted from the first on giving the public even the most intimate facts about the President's condition.

p. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
May 4, 1957

Senator McCarthy: The Man or Times?

By PAUL MILLER

1973

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

My most intimate recollection of Senator [Joseph] McCarthy [November 14, 1908-May 2, 1957]:

Finding myself seated next to him at a Washington Gridiron Club dinner when he was at the height of his power . . . Marveling that some of the top figures in the government fell over each other coming by to pat the senator on the shoulder and butter him up . . . . Noting that he seemed to take it all in stride, as if homage were his due . . . . Listening to his declaimer of any intention to embarrass the White House, even while he swung low blows at appointments started by Ike himself.

In politics, as in sports, a man may be an idol one day and a lonely, forlorn figure the next. McCarthy, a grandstander always, had it all.

Some of the people who fawned over him a little while ago would not be seen in the same room with him in the months before his death. Others remained loyal throughout, kept expecting a comeback, some form of general public vindication. Some insist it will come even yet.

And the argument will be long continued, whether McCarthy produced the times or the times produced McCarthy . . . .

Niagara Falls Boom and Growth

Have you visited Niagara Falls within recent years? It's worth the drive, whether via the Thruway or along beautiful Route 104. And not for the falls alone.

It's worth it to see and study what is planned and already underway in the city of Niagara Falls, one of the great coming boom and growth areas of the nation.

Niagara Falls city is blessed with much more than beauty. It also has superb natural resources that have attracted major industries and will attract more. It has homes and residential areas fine enough for a community twice the size.

Niagara Falls has community leadership of a high order. Quite a place and quite a prospect . . . .

q. (B7/f4)

Rochester Times-Union
May 11, 1957

Economy Tide Is Rolling

By PAUL MILLER

1974

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Too much and too late. That will be the final verdict of many on President Eisenhower's plans to go to the people next Tuesday with a plea for support of his budget.

The budget of $71.8 billions is too much.

The President's radio-TV plea is too late.

Nearly everybody outside Washington seems agreed that the budget ought to be cut sharply. Letters have deluged Congress. The economy tide is rolling. Let it roll.

As for an appeal to all the letter writers and others, it climaxes a series of stop-and-go developments at the White House that appears beyond explanation.

First, after sending his budget to Congress, the President seemed to invite cuts. Later, under growing public pressure, he had a review made which should have been made before the budget went to Congress.

Then the President wrote a letter offering suggestions as to where cuts might be made. Yet, at about the same time, in his press conferences, he seemed to be trying to defend the budget in its entirety.

And now, after a foreign aid economy proposal, he's going on the air to ask public support of the budget with the argument that it's necessary for national security.

The people love Ike but they are not buying more and more government spending by his administration – particularly when many who voted for him thought they were buying something different.

* * *

DISILLUSIONMENT IS APPARENT on all sides. Take the letter written to the President this week by W.H. Doerfner, a General Motors executive, reading:

"I will no longer support you nor will I support the Republican party as long as it condones your proven unsound monetary policies and your New Deal-inspired international WPA."

Perhaps not many would go all the way with Mr. Doerfner, but there's no question – judged from what we read in our mail and hear otherwise at The Times-Union and other newspapers.

People are fed up. They are showing it locally as well as nationally.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Was there any significance, or is any trend indicated, in the fact that Rochester area communities have voted down three or four major community projects in just the last few days? It could be.

For Morse – In Red Crayon

Oregon's U.S. Senator Wayne Morse, the renegade Republican turned something-or-other, has an Eastern booster.

I've been receiving weekly postcards, postmarked New York City and neither signed nor dated, reading:

WAYNE MORSE for PRESDIENT

. . . in red crayon.

Help That Never Came

There have been questions about it, and concern has been expressed, but we only now are getting direct testimony as to the effect of American propaganda broadcasts on the Hungarian people prior to the uprisings against Russian communism.

Endre Marton, former Associated Press correspondent in Hungary, now in the United States, said the other day that the Freedom Fighters were encouraged to expect help that never came and that the U.S. really never had any intention of sending.

He said:

"The broadcasts of the Voice of America and Radio Free Europe, particularly the latter, led the people to "expect something – and nothing happened."

The Voice of America is a part of our government's overseas propaganda effort. Radio Free Europe is not government-run; it is supported by contributions. The argument has been made for it that RFE could, therefore, take a stronger, more positive approach than a government-sponsored propaganda service.

* * *

PEOPLE LISTENING IN HUNGARY don't know the difference, Marton said. His testimony will not help the Voice of America with economy-minded congressmen. Nor will it help Radio Free Europe in the fund-raising campaign now going on.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I am among those, and there may be many, who have supported both in the past but who have been reluctantly reassessing the whole foreign propaganda campaign in their own minds of late. It may be time to modify both.

Would Sinatra Sue Himself?

Times-Union movie expert Hamilton B. Allen has been in Hollywood this week. One of his first reports dwelt on the apparent studio popularity of singer Frank Sinatra.

That led one of Allen's Times-Union associates, who does not share the reported studio attitude toward Sinatra, to review clippings in The Times-Union library files.

"I found, he reported later, "that Frank Sinatra has made enough disgusting news – fights, sensational marital and romance angles and the like – to make me wonder whether even a rehash of those spot news reports wouldn't almost be libelous in itself. What would Sinatra do then? Sue himself?

r. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
May 18, 1957

If No Real Economy – What Is Coming?

There Must Be a Start --Will Ike Make It?

By PAUL MILLER

Few can come off anything but second-best in an argument with President Eisenhower over defense spending.

Some tried in Ike's first term when his administration made certain defense cuts. They did not get far.

Now there are senators who would spend even more on defense than Ike's budget proposes – and there are many who would spend less.

There will be compromises, as always. Still it is a good bet that strictly military spending proposals will come through Congress without major cuts.

But –

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The big debate over the Eisenhower administration budget does not center around strictly military spending.

It is not unlikely that he White House speech writers picked that angle for the President's first speech last Tuesday night, because they knew as we all do that the President is less vulnerable in military affairs than in others. Again, who wants to take on General Ike over what's needed to preserve our safety in the Atomic Age?

* * *

THE SPEECH DEALT largely with military matters, with brief bows to others. Sandwiched in was a specific – and vigorous plug – for a "four-year emergency program of schoolroom construction at a cost of $325 million a year."

Just as Roosevelt and Truman used to do, the President argued that this school building program is only temporary.

The American public has learned that emergency programs and emergency tax hikes, almost without exception, go on and on.

Besides, Ike wouldn't be President when the school building program came to the end of its four-year term. He would have no control over it.

What would happen, based on past experience, is this:

If the "emergency" program is passed, the experts will find, at the end of the four years, that there still remains and "urgent need" for its continuance.

They will recommend that it be carried on a while. Then the education lobby will lambaste those "benighted champions of false economy" who want to "scuttle the program." Cynical? No, practical. See if you can name one government "temporary" program that hasn't gone something like that.

* * *

NEXT TUESDAY, the president makes the second and last of his reports to the people.

He did not meet the real economy issue in his first talk. Let's hope he will do so next time.

This real issue, disturbing so many, is what caused the seeming turnabout on the part of the Eisenhower administration? What has come over the President himself?

During the first Ike term, a budget of over $70 billion was cut to $65 billion and there was a $7 billion tax cut.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Now we casually are handed a $71.8 billion budget, as if the people would take it for granted that in a period of greatest prosperity they are to go on shelling out for more and more government spending with no official mention whatever of any specific plans for change.

Hard to Accept

The President recommended no cuts in his speech. He spoke broadly of programs of Congress. He mentioned none specifically that he would like Congress to abandon.

Already, it is being reported that the next federal budget, now being planned, will be even bigger.

If there is to be no real move toward government economy this year, and none next – when is it coming? There has to be a start some time. That's what people are saying. That's what the President seemed to ignore.

At the President's press conference this week, a reporter reminded the President that some Republicans believe he has "moved to the left politically" since 1952. Ike said:

"If anything, I think I have become more conservative."

On the record, this is hard to accept.

*** * ***

FLASHBACK: In 1951, I interviewed General Eisenhower, then NATO commander, at his Paris headquarters about the possibility that he might be the Republican presidential nominee in 1952.

I told him, "A lot of people back home don't know whether you really are a Republican."

He smiled and replied:

"Of course, I'm a Republican – but I'm an open-eyed Republican" . . . .

s. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, May 25, 1957

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

They Still Like Ike
--But What About Budget?

By PAUL MILLER

The best thing about President Eisenhower's TV budget speeches was Ike himself.

He looked well, spoke strongly – and the country took a good look and relaxed. They still like Ike.

It remains to be seen whether the President sold his budget. There is no doubt that he re-sold himself to many who were beginning to wonder. While still not agreeing with him about his budget, they felt reassured that Ike himself is honestly convinced of the need for all those billions.

* * *

A PERSONAL APPRAISAL of Upstate New York reaction, based on newspaper mail and fairly varied contacts, may be put in two paragraphs:

First speech – A failure.

Second speech – Stronger, more effective. Still not persuasive to the rank and file who are more opposed to foreign aid than anything else in our federal spending.

* * *

FORTUNATELY, I BELIEVE, for all of us the economy advocates in Congress remain strong.

Newspaper readers noted that both Rochester area congressmen, Kenneth B. Keating and Harold C. Ostertag, still believe not only that the budget in general can be cut but that funds for the armed services can be pruned "without" – as Ken Keating put it – "the slightest impairment of our defense potential."

* * *

SENATOR BYRD OF VIRGINIA hasn't given up.

I telephoned him as this was being written. As readers know, Byrd has urged what his critics call a "meat axe" approach to the budget – he'd whack out $6.5 billion. At President Eisenhower's press conference, a reporter asked comment on Byrd's proposed cuts. Ike said with a smile:

"That is going to be quite a trick, if he can do it."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Reaching Senator Byrd at his Capitol office, I asked him how about it. He said, well, he still has hopes for his overall cutting program which embraces the following:

3 billion dollars from domestic-civilian expenditures.

2 billions from foreign aid.

1.5 billions from defense appropriations.

"I'm asking that the budget-supporters go back to the presidential budget of just two years ago and explain to the people why we must spend $9 billions more now," said Senator Byrd, adding:

"The United States is better off and foreign countries are certainly no worse off."

MY OWN PERSONAL PREDICTION: Budget cuts all the way, including defense and foreign aid – but nothing even remotely approaching what Senator Byrd is shooting at.

More's the pity.

A fact that emerges from a recent survey, says NEWSWEEK magazine, is that a reaction has set in – even among Democrats – against the welfare-state philosophy of the 30s and 40s. It adds:

"For example, in predominantly Democratic Arizona (but which went for Mr. Eisenhower in 1952 and 1956) the question – 'Would you vote for the President today? – was usually answered 'No.' But many Arizonians – as well as many others around the country who answered in the negative – allowed that if Adlai Stevenson, Wayne Morse, or G. Mennen Williams (who generally are considered New Dealers) were running against him, they would 'have to go for Ike.'"

Aided Don't Like It Either

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Here's a switch: The very day Secretary Dulles was before the Senate Foreign Relations committee urging (and with considerable encouragement from the senators) that there be no cuts in his program, an Associated press dispatch from Karachi, Pakistan, reported:

Amjad Ali, Pakistan's finance minister, declared "our economic dependence on the United States has grown beyond expectations. The sooner we get to our feet the better for us and the country."

* * *

REMINDED ME of the crusty old captain of the MAURETANIA who more than once told Mrs. Miller and me on an Atlantic crossing 'way back in 1949:

"We British would be better off if we'd never had any of your so-called aid. We'd have worked out our own problems and we'd be coming out on our own now."

I didn't fully agree with him, nor did most of our British friends – but I can see his point better today. And who would have dreamed, back in 1949, that a President of the United States still would be asking for billions more for foreign aid in 1957? It was to have been all over and done with, our foreign friends "put on their feet" and all that, long before now.

Moral: Once a federal spending program is started, scarcely anything short of a major war or depression can stop it.

Far from stopping foreign aid, or even moving to do so, we're getting it better organized and set up for permanent operations now. The new look program presented by Secretary Dulles drew praise. Even Senator Capehart of Indiana, who said he hadn't voted for a foreign aid bill in 10 years, announced he'll vote for this one.

Nevertheless: Foreign aid can, will, and should be cut . . . .

t. (B7/f4)

*

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, June 8, 1957

AS I SEE IT

What Are Jury's Rights? Let's Have Final Decision

By PAUL MILLER

1982

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Times Union and The Democrat and Chronicle have decided to contribute to funds being raised by citizens seeking a conclusive answer to this question:

Has a Monroe County grand jury the right and duty to criticize public officials, if it determines criticism is justified? Or must it keep quiet unless it has enough "on" the officials to indict and bring them to trial?

You may have thought there is no question that a grand jury could call attention publicly to anything it wishes.

But, say some of our judges, not so. They contend a grand jury can praise our public servants. But it mustn't criticize unless it's actually ready to go all the way and indict 'em . . . .

u. (B7/f4)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, June 15, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Criticism and Political Pro --He Learns to Expect It

By PAUL MILLER

The Monroe County confusion over the rights of a New York grand jury was reviewed here last week in connection with announcement that The Times-Union and The Democrat and Chronicle are contributing to a fund aimed at obtaining a clarifying court ruling.

There has been considerable comment since, including that by one caller who said:

"Some young lawyers don't wish grand juries formally empowered to criticize, because the young men look forward to serving in public office one day, themselves. They wonder how they'd like grand jury criticism directed at them."

One answer is that no one, man or woman, should aspire to public office who isn't prepared for criticism. It's part of the political life, as any political pro can attest . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

v. (B4/f28)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Monday Evening, July 8, 1957

Nixon Gives Rights Bill Good Chance

Vice President Visitor here; Makes Canada Cruise

By KERMIT HILL

Vice President Richard M. Nixon, a visitor here, today gave the Eisenhower administration's controversial civil rights bill "a good chance" of getting through the Senate at the current session.

The measure, which passed the House of Representatives last month by a 286-126 vote, was due to come up in the Senate today. It is expected to touch off a showdown fight and possibly the longest Southern fili[buster] . . . .

Nixon, a staunch supporter of the bill, commented to a reporter:
"I believe there is a good chance the Senate will pass a civil rights bill at this session. Of course, there will be a lot of discussion – I won't call it a filibuster."

"We are not rigid," he stated, "but generally speaking, we feel the bill in its present form is moderate and would not cause the violent reaction which some of its opponents talk about."

He said no amendment has been summited to the administration yet for its approval. Sen. O'Mahoney (D-Wyo) has announced he is preparing an amendment which would provide for the right of jury trial in cases of civil rights offenses prosecuted by the federal government. Nixon said he could not comment on any amendment which has not been submitted formally to the Senate . . . .

w. (B4/f28)
*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Tuesday, July 9, 1957

Nixon Appraises Purge As 'Struggles for Power,'

1984

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Warns of Optimism

By BILL BEENEY

Vice President Richard M. Nixon, appraising the political purges in Russia as "an internal struggle for power," yesterday cautioned against a too optimistic evaluation of the Kremlin shakeup.

"We would be naïve to think that the political changes indicate any change in the basic direction of Soviet policy or any softening of the Soviet line of world conquest," Nixon said in an interview here.

"What we are seeing is an internal struggle for power. Khrushchev is simply getting rid of his potential rivals, and we are likely to see more rather than less dictatorship in the future. Khrushchev will be, even more than in the past, the man who calls the signals."

'Not Going Too Well'

But the Moscow maneuvers do indicate, said the vice president, "that things have not been going too well in the Soviet Union or the satellite countries."

The interview was conducted in serene and cloudless skies over Lake Ontario aboard The Gannett Newspapers plane as it brought Nixon and four companions back to Rochester yesterday morning after a weekend of relaxation and golfing in Canada.

With him were his host, Paul Miller, a long-time personal friend and president of The Gannett Newspapers; Carl S. Hallauer, president of Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.; Harry F. Byrd Jr., a state senator in Virginia and son of U.S. Senator Harry Byrd; and Rex Smith, vice president of American Airlines.

'Took Life Easy'

The group, concerned strictly with "a few days of relaxation," left Rochester quietly last Friday by boat for a cruise in Lake Ontario. They played golf Saturday and Sunday at the Bay of Quinty [sic], Ont., Canada, "took life easy the rest of the time," and returned to tangle with Oak Hill Country Club's East Course. Nixon and Byrd flew back to Washington last night. Smith flew to California where he has a speaking date today.

Tanned, as trim as a new sailboat, and looking refreshed after what he said was his first weekend off "in a long while," Nixon settled back in his airplane seat and offered his opinions on a variety of subjects:

On the controversial civil rights legislation now before the Senate:

"I believe there's a good chance that some civil rights legislation will be acted upon by the Senate at the current session. You can't tell what direction the debate will take until we get to that point."

On Rep. Kenneth B. Keating and Rep. Harold C. Ostertag:

"Ken and I went into the House together in 1947. I've known and admired him for 10 years. He has reached a position of top leadership in the House, is one of the most articulate spokesmen for the administration, and is considered to be one of the most 'solid' of our Congressmen.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"In my opinion, Ken would be a strong candidate for any office for which he might run.

"Harold Ostertag has made a very favorable impression in the House. He has done a fine job; he is, in contrast to some men who might be considered

Continued on Page 19

Nixon Appraises Purge of Russian Leaders

Continued from Page 17

'one-termers,' the kind of a man who should be able to remain in the House as long as he wants the job."

On government spending:

"There has been a great deal of concern about the budget, and defense spending. The answer is that we must, of course, do the job as economically as we can. But we MUST do it. We can't afford to weaken our own defenses – particularly at this time of Russian unrest.

"I don't accept the theory that government spending is needed for a prop to business.

"Once the international situation is such that we can safely make cuts in government spending for defenses, we ought to do so. It is better for the economic health of the country to have individuals spending more and government spending less. Unfortunately, there seem to be no prospects in the immediate future for decreased defense spending."

On income taxes:

"The present level of taxes is not one that should be continued unless it is needed. When we can reduce them, we should. I'm speaking of individual income taxes as well as corporation taxes."

On the American economy:

"There has been too much pessimistic talk about how much goods the American economy can absorb. The pessimists have always been proved wrong. I don't see any ceiling to our economy.

"The rest of the world is growing, too. Asia, Africa and South America are just waking to their potential. They are beginning to produce goods we can use and are developing the need for products we can sell them. The world's economy has a tremendous potential. I believe we will see a great increase in America's markets abroad for many years to come."

On U.S. boom-and-bust possibilities:

"Ours, being a free economy, will have its ups and downs. But I believe that the violence of those upturns and downturns will be greatly cushioned in the future by the government techniques which have been developed.

"I don't see any possibility of a major depression."

In Positive Fashion

1986

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Nixon answers questions carefully yet unhesitatingly. He talks straight-from-the-shoulder in terms that leave no room for misunderstanding. Affable, smiling, he nonetheless concentrates thoughtfully on every question, frames his answers in positive fashion . . . .

x. (B7/f5)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 27, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Why Go Someplace Else?
New York Has Everything

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Another Grand Jury Criticizes

Another grand jury report has been made public in New York City of a character that presumably would be kept secret in Rochester.

The Manhattan jury recommended an inquiry into the City Department of Buildings, alleging "inadequacies" in department procedures.

Here in Rochester, State Supreme Court Justice Charles B. Brasser is still sitting on a report by Monroe County's April-May Grand Jury.

He sealed it when the jury turned it in to him, saying:

"There is no authority for a grand jury to criticize a public official or department of government unless evidence justifies the finding of an indictment . . ."

The implication was that the presentment was critical of something or somebody in our local government.

Previously, Erie County grand juries regularly had been turning in presentments of a kind that Justice Brasser would and has banned here; likewise, and now again, New York City grand juries.

An organization of Monroe County grand jurors was formed to try to get the sealed report made public. Funds were raised and counsel retained. Legal moves are in the making.

*** * ***

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

THIS WEEK, the thing got into politics.

Democrats, warming up for the local campaign, suggest something may be hidden that the public ought to know. Republican County Chairman Fred Parrish retorts that the matter has no place in politics.

In my opinion, it has this small place:

So far as is known, the Republican organization did nothing to seek release of the sealed report or to bring about what is important – a test of Justice Brasser's contention, to the end that uniformity may be established over the state.

True, the Republicans didn't HAVE to get into it.

By not doing so, however, and indeed by seeming to stand aside from the volunteer groups fighting to unseal the report, they left themselves open to the charge, however undeserved, that they hoped the report never would see the light of day.

*** * ***

IT IS INCONCEIVABLE that had the report (whatever its content) been made public promptly, it would have been all but forgotten by now.

It is certain that had appropriate officials and party leaders joined in an effort to get clarification of the question whether grand juries may criticize without indicting, there would now be no "issue."

It still is not too late for some such action.

. . . Newspaper Facts of Life

A Syracuse University researcher studied political reporting of the news magazines: Time, Newsweek and U.S. News for the period of the 1956 political campaign.

Now he has published his conclusions asserting:

"Definite bias" was apparent in the news columns of Time and Newsweek;

U.S. News offered "fairly definite coverage without apparent bias."

*** * ***

THE SURVEY WAS ONE MORE in a widespread look at news media by college researchers and others. Studies sprouted all around after Adlai Stevenson, in his 1952 campaign, complained of a "One-Party Press."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The surveys and the discussions they generated may possibly have influenced some editors of newspapers as well as of magazines to try even harder in the 1956 campaign for neutral handling of news.

However, most editors and most newspapers were dedicated to unbiased reporting long, long before Mr. Stevenson publicly took note that relatively few preferred him to General Eisenhower.

*** * ***

IT IS NOT ALWAYS EASY to get access to laymen, but newspapers should never cease trying to obtain general public understanding of these newspaper facts of life:

We regard reporting of news as one thing;

And commenting editorially as something else again.

Each has its place in most newspapers. Relatively few intentionally permit editorial expressions mixed in with news reports. Many do encourage today's fine crop of reporters to g beyond and behind the bare facts and give explanation and background.

Even so, what is objective reporting or fair explanation and background to one reader, may look like biased editorializing to another. Correspondence in Rochester only this week has demonstrated that all over again.

It's a problem of performance as well as of public relations. We are committed to the continuing effort to make one match the other.

y. (B7/f5)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, August 3, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Booming Connecticut --A Hustling Governor

By PAUL MILLER

HARTFORD, Conn. – This great and growing capital of the Nutmeg State is one of the boom areas of the nation. Expanding industry, particularly United Aircraft, is chiefly responsible.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Connecticut's efforts to keep ahead in state and local planning is outstanding, its problems typical of those besetting growing communities everywhere.

It is always a pleasure to be in Hartford. I had another look this week on a visit to the Hartford Times, a member of The Gannett Group and one of the finest newspapers anywhere:

A rehabilitation commission is moving in on the nearest thing to a slum with plans for apartments, a park, and low-cost housing;

New bridges are going up to span the Connecticut River in five more places;

Thruway-type street and highway construction is cutting commuting time from new housing developments;

Insurance companies – Hartford is the Insurance City – and local businesses, including the Hartford Times, are deep in expansion plans.

* * *

CONNECTICUT IS COMPACT. The problems of distance and diversity here are less acute than in New York State. Still, any visitor must be impressed by the unity and cooperation apparent in the attack on problems of the age of jets and atomics . . . .

* * *

IN THE MIDDLE HERE, literally and figuratively, is the personable, hustling governor, Abraham Ribicoff, known pretty generally as Abe. A Democrat, he's a former lawyer, former congressman – and the only elected statehouse office-holder not a Republican.

A brief call on Abe Ribicoff is enough to drive home all over again how many now turn to government for the answer to problems . . . .

It's a hard life, but Abe Ribicoff (like most professional politicians) thrives on it.

He has a collection of wood and plastic donkeys on the mantle over the fireplace faced by his desk.

Right in the middle of the donkeys is one lone Republican elephant.

"I put it there on purpose," he tells visitors, "keeps me reminded that I'm governor not of a political party, but of all the people."

Smart fellow and a stimulating one . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

y. (B4/f28)
*****

Hartford Times
August 22, 1957

Nixons Give Reception for Gannett Chief

From the Times Bureau

Washington – Vicepresident and Mrs. Nixon entertained at home Tuesday night with a reception for Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller of Rochester . . . .

Tuesday, Mr. Miller called on Senator William F. Knowland (R-Calif.), GOP floor leader, and Senator Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.), a Democratic leader, at the Capitol.

Wednesday he met with Senators Irving M. Ives and Jacob K. Javits, and Representatives Kenneth B. Keating and Harold C. Ostertag of the Rochester area. All are new York Republicans.

Mr. Miller had lunch at the Metropolitan Club with Sam P. Gilstrap, director of the Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs at the State Department.

z. (B4/f27)

[See also (B7/f5):

Rochester Times-Union,
Saturday, August 10, 1957,

AS I SEE IT

Billy Graham in the Garden --and This Was New York?

By PAUL MILLER]

The Gannetteer
September 1957

A Publisher Goes to Hear Evangelist Graham

Last month President Paul Miller of Gannett Co., Inc. attended a New York rally conducted by the Rev. Billy Graham, evangelist. He reported the experience in the following signed editorial published in the Rochester Times-Union, of which he is editor and publisher:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By PAUL MILLER

IT WAS DIFFICULT to believe that this was New York City, quite impossible that it could be the Madison Square Garden I know.

As the choir in the balcony behind the pulpit sang an invitation hymn, "Just As I Am," there was movement here and there along the front rows of the seats that covered all of the vast floor of the Garden up to within about 30 feet of the pulpit.

A Negro woman stepped out alone across the open expanse of floor and stood, as Billy Graham indicated, before his pulpit. She was joined by a small boy, then a girl with a pony-tail hair-do. A young couple followed. Now there was a stirring in the great shadowed reaches of the farthest balconies, and throughout the tiers of boxes just off the floor. All aisles became alive with movement toward the front:–

Adults of all ages and all manner of appearance. A handful of teenage boys who fully fitted the description of gang kids to whom Billy Graham had made a special appeal. Schoolgirls in clusters of three and four.

On they came. They packed the open floor area before and beside the platform. They stretched out in lines back up the aisles.

The choir, at Evangelist Graham's signal, broke into another old revival hymn, "Almost Persuaded." The voices and the piano and organ on the platform, rolled out to fill the Garden where boxing, hockey, horse shows, circuses and basketball are the common fare.

Hundreds had now responded to Billy Graham's appeal for "decisions for Christ."

I SAT MARVELING from a box facing above and to one side of the front row of seats. I could see the expressions of dozens of those who came down the aisles. It was a moving experience.

This was New York?

The tall powerful young evangelist, handsomely attired in a blue-gray Rochester-tailored suit, with gray shirt and lively tie, could have dominated any theater stage in the city had acting rather than the ministry been his career.

But his manner and his preaching and his appeal at "invitation" took many of the thousands hearing him back in memory to "revival meetings" in small towns in the South and West and even here in the East. The hymns were the same:

"I Need Thee Every Hour."
"What a Friend We Have in Jesus."
"Draw Me Nearer."
Lord, I'm Coming Home."

I heard those 40 years and more ago in Claremore, Okla.!

The same songs, the same general appeal, generating the same response among the thousands drawn from the most blasé city on earth.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

An older man sitting next to me whispered, “It’s this way every night. I just can’t believe it.”

APPARENTLY, Billy Graham has difficulty believing it himself. He has lost weight during the meetings, but he says he never felt better in his life. “The Lord is seeing me through.” He looks trim and fit. His color is good.

He speaks with vigor but (I was pleased to note) with less emotion and fewer gestures than one might suspect after hearing him on radio or TV. He follows his prepared sermon rather closely, gripping the pulpit stand with one hand as he points a finger or holds up his Bible with the other hand.

He wears his hair cut full. His eyes are deep-set.

He smiles often, works in frequent humorous anecdotes – there were chuckles and outright laughter from the audience.

I had been in New York on business for a day and decided on the spur of the moment to stay over and hear Billy Graham, one of the great personalities of all time and a controversial one.

As his call for “decisions” was answered by the tide of all kinds and colors, I looked at their earnest faces. I couldn’t help making a resolution or two myself.

Then I thought of those who have criticized and scoffed.

The older man next to me whispered again:

“I’ve lived here and been active in churches all my life. Nothing has ever stirred New York like this.”

I don’t see how any one [sic] could attend and not get some spiritual stimulation out of the experience.

aa. (B7/f5)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, August 17, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Greater Rochester in 1975: It Will Be MUCH Greater

By PAUL MILLER

. . . A Simple Approach to Heart

The response to a newspaper piece often provides better material than the original.

So it was again this week in letters commenting on the Billy Graham-Madison Square Garden report printed here last Saturday.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

GEORGE W. COOKE of 4 Lynchford Pk., was reminded of his own experience – when he took his two oldest boys to New York City and concluded a day of sightseeing by attending a Billy Graham meeting before returning home on a late train.

"At the conclusion of Mr. Graham's sermon," Mr. Cooke writes, "my 13-year –old son turned to me and said: 'Dad, don't you think we all ought to go up front?' Growing boys can throw a lot of tough questions at their fathers, but do they come any harder than that? Just as I began to protest mildly that we had a train to catch in a few minutes, my 11-year-old son, who was sitting on the other side, nudged me in the ribs. 'Say, I didn't come to New York just to go to church. When are we going to Broadway to see the bright lights?'"

Mr. Cooke added:

"Although juvenile delinquency, crime, marital breakdown, racial prejudice, war and unrighteousness have never seemed susceptible to easy solutions, I came away from Madison Square Garden feeling that many of us have been looking for overly complicated means of correcting the great ills of our day. Perhaps what we have really needed all the time is just a direct and simple approach to the hearts of individual men, women and children.

"In any event, I can most assuredly agree with you that no one can attend a Graham meeting in New York and not get some spiritual stimulation out of the experience unless it be an 11-year-old boy bent on seeing the bright lights on Broadway."

* * *

A FELLOW EDITOR, Edward M. Perkins of the Le Roy Gazette-News, commented at some length on the Billy Graham report, then concluded:

"I am an old, old dog in this newspaper game, in a small weekly paper capacity and fall far short of knowing all the answers. Looking back upon nearly 62 years as editor and owner of a paper, and reviewing the water that has gone over the dam here and throughout the world, I have very definitely reached the conclusion the philosophy of Christ, as advocated by Billy Graham, is the one and only thing that will straighten out the mess."

Who could sum it up any better?

bb. (B7/f5)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, August 24, 1957

1994

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

AS I SEE IT

Reuther Runs the Course: Everything Back to Normal

By PAUL MILLER

Walter Reuther apparently enjoys posing as a statesman, complete with broad views and long-range thinking. Sometimes, too, he makes a convincing picture.

Nobody, however, seems to me to shed a pose and revert to type any faster than Reuther-the-statesman after he gets a rebuff.

He ran that course this week. As the statesman, he had proposed in an elaborate presentation timed for Sunday newspapers, that major automobile manufacturers cut $100 off the price of 1958 cars.

The language of the presentation seemed studiedly restrained and respectful.

It was calculated, in my opinion, to muddy the water and put auto makers in a hole public relations-wise prior to contract negotiations with Reuther's union.

* * *

REUTHER MUST HAVE KNOWN that prices of products are not generally regarded as a proper subject for collective bargaining – he's been told that often enough.

Yet, stepping out of the statesman role, he howled as if hot an unexpected wallop when General Motors reminded him all over again, and counter-suggested that if Reuther wants to help fight inflation he get his union to extend the existing contract.

At that, Reuther cried "arbitrary rejection" and "shocking disregard" of public welfare – Chrysler later also rejected the proposal so pending from Ford, everything is back again to what must pass for normal in Detroit.

Reuther, who many suspect has national political ambitions for himself, may be expected to make life tough for the automotive Big Three, and to the accompaniment of publicity for Reuther.

Few, however, will expect him to make any contribution to forces effectively fighting inflation, now or in the future. On the contrary.

. . . Confidence in McClellan

1995

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Young Robert F. Kennedy is most in the limelight, but it's Senator McClellan, the Arkansas Democrat, who gives me the feeling that the rackets investigation is in good hands.

I visited the hearing this week in a room of the Senate office Building at Washington. Senator McClellan is chairman of the Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor and Management Field. Kennedy is chief counsel. They're working on labor mostly now. They'll get around to management later.

They sat with other members of the committee behind a long table on a platform backed to the wall at an end of the room. At young Kennedy's side sat his brother, John, the senator.

At a smaller table on the floor below and before their platform this week sat James R. Hoffa of the Teamsters Union and his lawyer, George Fitzgerald.

Reporters and photographers were at tables moved in close about the witnesses. Spectators swamped the chairs that filled the remainder of the high-ceilinged hearing room; standees overflowed around the walls and out the door.

* * *

I HOPE I'M PROVED WRONG, but watching the Kennedy young men, splendid as they are, I couldn't help feeling at times that it was a case of boys trying to do men's work.

Senator McClellan is something else again. The Democrats have many presidential nomination possibilities for 1960. McClellan won't be overlooked as a prospect, if he doesn't stub his toe in the meantime.

* * *

INCIDENTALLY, WHAT YOU HAVE BEEN READING and hearing as to the work of the McClellan Committee is only a beginning.

The big job will come after the hearings. Then the committee must draw its legislative recommendations.

Consideration presumably will be given to, among other things, ways to prevent use of union funds for loans to officers and favors to officers' friends; also to preventing the use of union funds for personal empire building by ambitious union officers.

PHOTO
Caption:

Robert Kennedy, counsel for the rackets committee, confers with Senator John McClellan (right), chairman of the committee.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

. . . Apathy on Billboards

Every motorist who objects to defacement of the new 41,000-mile federal interstate highway system should note the names of the seven senators who voted to kill the billboard control law this week.

Bertram Tallamy, former New York State Thruway head, now federal highway administrator, fought to control the billboards, but apathy was the word for the attitude of the Democratic leadership in both houses of Congress and, for that matter, Washington in general.

The Outdoor Advertising Association of America (reports the Washington Post and Times-Herald) put the squeeze on business-minded legislators. Building trades and sign painters' unions pressured labor-oriented lawmakers.

The bill was killed 7-to-6 in the Senate Public Works Committee. Here are the names:

Senators who voted to kill – Kerr, (D) Oklahoma; Kuchel, (R) California; Hruska, (R) Nebraska; Scott, (D) North Carolina; McNamara, (D) Michigan; Revercomb, (R) West Virginia, and Edward Martin, (R) Pennsylvania.

Senators who voted AGAINST killing the bill – Gore, (D) Tennessee; Neuberger, (D) Oregon; Chavez, (D) New Mexico; Carroll, (D) Colorado; Cotton, (R) New Hampshire, and Francis Case, (R) South Dakota.

The issue may be raised again at the next session of Congress. By that time much of the highway route may have been surveyed and prime advertising sites staked out for billboards.

. . . Stalled Rights Bill

As Paul Martin, chief of our Washington Bureau, pointed out in a dispatch this week, the Republicans may take control of the Senate within the next few months.

This prospect explains why some Southern Senators at Washington are working so hard to get the pending Civil Rights legislation approved before Congress adjourns, probably within two weeks.

They fear they'd get a stiffer Civil Rights bill under a Republican-controlled Senate than the one which passed the Senate and is now bottled up in the House Rules Committee.

They're putting all the pressure they can on the chairman of that committee (through which all legislation must pass before reaching the House floor).

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The chairman wants no bill whatever. He doesn't even want to call a meeting of his committee!

cc. (B7/f5)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, August 31, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Why Can't Republicans Win? It Started with the Budget

By PAUL MILLER

It takes no expert to conclude that there's something wrong some place in the Republican party when –

1. A popular president gets as little from Congress as Mr. Eisenhower has from the 85th.

2. A special election in Wisconsin provides a shattering Democratic upset for an Eisenhower Republican who'd been generally expected to win.

The Democrats were quick to proclaim that Democrat William Proxmire's Wisconsin victory showed growing disapproval of Republican conduct of foreign affairs, or of the Republican farm program or of so-called tight money.

The Republicans were more inclined to believe that a Republican party split in Wisconsin was mainly to blame.

* * *

WHO'S CORRECT? As usual, no one factor was wholly conclusive. The fact is that Republican party splits are not confined to Wisconsin, although they may be worse there than in many states.

Republicans, like the Democrats, are split all over. The dissenters, however, are for the most part mild dissenters. They don't like a lot of what the party seems to be standing for at Washington. They like even that better than the Dealism, both New and Fair, before Ike, yet not enough to become enthusiastic – indeed, in many cases, not enough to vote.

Reports from Wisconsin say that many conservative Republicans and pro-McCarthy people stayed home on election day.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Whatever the full story, as our Washington bureau chief, Paul Martin pointed out, Eisenhower Republicans have a record of losing elections:

Former Govs. Langlie in Washington, McKay in Oregon, Thornton in Colorado, Peterson in Nebraska; also former Senators Duff in Pennsylvania and Lodge in Massachusetts.

* * *

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER, whose own personal popularity goes right on staying high, surely will go down as one of the great exemplars of patience and fortitude.

He doesn't threaten Congress.

He doesn't get mad at the Russians

He doesn't publicly second-guess party leaders over such debacles as that in Wisconsin.

As he kept on taking a buffeting from Congress, a reporter asked him if he might abandon his "friendly persuasion" method of dealing with Congress in favor of "give 'em hell" a la Harry Truman.

No, he said in good-natured reply, he'd just have to go on doing "what is natural for me."

* * *

IS THAT GOOD ENOUGH? Or is even more vigorous White House leadership indicated in developments since the landslide of November 1956?

The politicos and editorial writers will be busy with that question for a long time.

I believe it goes beyond that. I believe the President's influence began slipping in the uncertain back-and-forth over the shocking budget he sent to Congress. It was out of character with what much of the public thought an Eisenhower budget ought to be.

Later, the White House seemed to turn around and help cut a budget which Eisenhower had defended at first. There seemed to be a swing back toward a somewhat more conservative position.

But the budget battle was the beginning of Republican post-election defections and doubt; the beginning but, I think, not the end.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Captions:

'Congress Just Isn't Giving Us Much Leadership'

'Lopsided Gunfight'

dd. (B7/f6)

*

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, September 7, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Rep. Keating of New York: 'Came Fully into His Own'

By PAUL MILLER

I sometimes fear that Congressman Ken Keating may be getting too much publicity for his own good. I am sure he gives out too many statements on too many subjects. Still, with so many Washington legislative balls in the air it's probably inevitable and may do him no harm at that.

This week he received newspaper praise that can only be all to the good.

It came from Arthur Krock, than whom no Washington writer is more respected, in a New York Times column commenting on the fact that in any session of Congress "reputations are made, lost, retained or enhanced to some degree . . . ."

Among those in the House whose reputations were "enhanced," Arthur Krock listed only three and as follows:

"Keating of new York, Cannon of Missouri and Wigglesworth of Massachusetts."

He wrote:

"To Keating goes the principal credit for the legislation that dispelled the threat to the work of the FBI that was inherent in the Supreme Court's decision in the Jencks' case."

(Of course, Keating was active in many other directions legislatively, particularly on Civil Rights.)

* * *

2000

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I HAVE KNOWN Congress and congressmen more or less intimately for a good many years and I believe Congressman Keating is one of the most effective members of the post-war period.

He came fully into his own in the 85th Congress.

If he remains in the House and keeps his health, he will, barring some unforeseeable upset, continue to grow in stature and influence.

If he decides to turn elsewhere, he will find a choice of opportunities in the years ahead – appointive as well as elective.

From now on, he will figure in speculation as to the two major New York State elective offices, governor and senator, every time there's a Republican nominating convention coming up.

And you will see him "mentioned" out of Washington for federal appointments from time to time if and as openings develop – it could be solicitor general, say; or attorney general; or a high State Department desk.

*** * ***

BUT NO MAN EVER APPEARED to enjoy a job more than Keating appears to enjoy what he's doing right now.

The last time I was down there he had just been given the job of clearing the compromise Civil Rights legislation with disagreeing party leaders. At the same time, he had his FBI bill going, he was sounding off in the field of professional sports over something I never quite understood, and his office – staffed heavily with well-known young Rochesterians – was jumping.

He was grinning happily, as he puffed from appointment to appointment, showing no sign of care or strain.

All the while, he was continuing to handle the mail and the visitors from home for all the world as if he had nothing else to do.

PHOTO:

'. . . no man ever appeared to enjoy a job more.'

. . . A Rebuttal from Reuther

It is our custom, and a good one we think, to offer space for rebuttal to persons who may be criticized in these editorial columns.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

So, after the Aug. 24 piece dissecting Walter Reuther's proposal that auto makers cut prices, a copy was sent to him.

* * *

Here without further comment, is the reply from Harry Kranz, administrative assistant to the president of the United Auto Workers, Reuther being in London at the Trades Union Congress:

"I should like to make the following comments on the editorial: . . . .

ee. (B7/f6)

*

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, September 28, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Conference with a Goal: Better Newspapers for You

By PAUL MILLER

Time Will Prove Eisenhower Right

Everybody knows how the Arkansas Affair might have been "better handled."

The second-guessers are having a field day, Gov. Orval Faubus is on a Yell County speaking tour (appropriately); Old Satchmo may go to Russia after all (if asked [he never went]).

Had he acted earlier, it might have been argued successively that Little Rock authorities were not given time enough to get the situation in hand.

Had he waited much longer, even worse incidents than those pictured in your newspapers might have resulted.

ff. (B7/f6)

*

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, October 5, 1957

AS I SEE IT

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Convention or Commission:
The Best Constitution Idea

By PAUL MILLER

Indications are that voters will reject on Nov. 5 the proposal for a state constitutional convention.

There's very little public interest and certainly very little public understanding. This was made clear in a random survey conducted in their localities by New York State newspapers of the Gannett Group this week.

Such interest as has been manifest to date has come largely from the politicians: Democrats are heartily in favor; most Republicans are heartily opposed.

*** * ***

I AM AGAINST THE PROPOSAL because I don't think anything worthwhile would come of a convention or that anything could be accomplished in the convention that can't be accomplished without one.

But let me tell you about something, now being informally discussed by some, that it seems to me everybody could get behind –

This is a permanent Constitutional Commission.

Such a commission would be on the job all the time, as needed. It would analyze and research all proposals for constitutional change; then make recommendations to the Legislature for initiation of amendments.

It seems to me that this would represent vast improvement over the present method of putting it up to the voters every twenty years . . . .

Such a commission would have a full-time staff of government experts. It could operate sufficiently in the background to stay reasonably clear of political or other pressure groups. Its recommendations would be factual, leaving debate to the legislative floors or the public forum at the general election when a proposed amendment was submitted.

Amendments proposed by the commission would follow the established legislative procedure for amending the Constitution: Each would have to be approved by two successive Legislatures and be ratified by the voters before taking effect . . . .

All Have the Right
To Have Their Say

2003

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Lord Altrincham, who got headlines by criticizing the Queen, was back this week with an attack on fellow Lords.

Should newspapers ignore this peer who jousts with his pen?

Many Britons, including some British editors, think so. I received an editorial the other day, clipped from a British magazine by a Rochester friend, which contended that the press "showed irresponsibility" in printing the stories quoting the noisy young Lord.

Few American newspaper men would agree.

I believe, for example, that the letter column – in which readers may have their say fully, subject only to some regard for good taste and the libel laws – is one of the most valuable departments in any newspaper . . . .

gg. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, October 12, 1957

AS I SEE IT

We Can't Laugh Off Sputnik, America Is Running Second

By PAUL MILLER

Something more reassuring than anything heard from official Washington is needed in reply to the beep of Sputnik.

This is no time for panic. Restrained comment is indicated, especially in high places.

But pride and pretense have no place in the sorry picture of America running second. And complacency, or even the appearance thereof, is inexcusable.

*** * ***

AS THIS IS WRITTEN, only Mr. McElroy, the new secretary of defense, has ventured to promise any move for corrective action. And he went little further than to speak of removing bottlenecks in testing and evaluation, and to promise cooperation by all three services.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

All can appreciate President Eisenhower's determination to head off hysteria, yet, bless him, it certainly came as no great comfort when he told his news conference that Russia's release of the Sputnik did not raise HIS apprehensions "one iota." It sure raised mine!

If we know anything at all as a nation, it is that we are in a race for survival.

*** * ***

THAT BEING TRUE, how can we square some of our Washington comment with this appraisal – printed by The Times-Union on Thursday – from Martin Caidan, author and consultant on U.S. missile and satellite programs:

"The conclusion is inescapable that not only do the Soviets have the dreaded intercontinental ballistic missile, but that their war rocket is accurate . . .

"The United States has never even fired in a test a successful ICBM. The Russians have fired theirs repeatedly."

Well, then, what now?

*** * ***

I BELIEVE THE PEOPLE of this country will be satisfied with nothing less than full official information on why we got behind and what we need to do; then, a crash program to regain the lead in this field.

As a starter, we will have to concede humbly and frankly that the U.S. has been terribly remiss, instead of tending to laugh off or minimize our defeat.

And we will have to make other programs and projects give to put the required dollars and brains back of the missile and satellite drive.

All this can be done without calling Congress back. And without hearings where politics would dominate.

But this much appears certain:

You will hear further calls for a special session and definite development of a Congressional investigation if the White House and Pentagon do not themselves take decisive, determined, reassuring action soon . . . .

. . . Teacher's
Freezing Look

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

From what we hear at the newspapers, not many Rochester school teachers agree with Kings County Judge Samuel Leibowitz that old-fashioned discipline would cut down juvenile delinquency.

Many parents probably agreed, though, when the judge, eating fire on a TV quiz show, termed progressive education "bunk" and added that it would be well "to get back to the days when the mere look of a teacher was enough to freeze a kid in his tracks."

I wonder if parents, many of them, also would agree with another remark of the outspoken judge.

He said:

"There ought to be a federal program of teaching prospective parents how to bring up children."

But who'd do the teaching?

hh. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, October 19, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Survival in a Rocket Age --Have We Enough Stamina?

By PAUL MILLER

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. – I stood on the site of the first permanent English settlement in America on nearby Jamestown Island this week and was troubled by thoughts that must trouble many who come here:

Is there, now, any cause for which we Americans of today would or could go through what the colonists endured?

Indeed, have we the stamina to endure what they suffered, or are we too soft already?

In this difficult area, developed as a great park now and the scene of an appearance by Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip this week, the population of the first colony shrank from 500 to about 60 in one awful winter because of disease, Indians, and starvation.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Yet here – only 12 years later in 1619 – the first representative legislative assembly convened to set a pattern for self-government in America!

*** * ***

TODAY, WE ARE IN A RACE for survival as a nation.

Can we remain ahead, and thus live in some security, if we continue, as most of us do, to put pleasure and comfort ahead of nearly everything else?

Dorothy Thompson wrote the other day:

"Complacency and love of ease have ever been the death of nations. And they all too patently characterize American society. If the Russians overtake us, it will be because they are not, as a people complacent, and they do not 'take it easy.'"

*** * ***

WHAT A CONTRAST between life today and that in an early colony.

Today our youngsters, bless 'em, go to school in palaces; get there on rubber tires, have more supervised extra-curricular recreational programs than they (or their parents) can keep up with, get "free" aid for this and that, have to go through a rigamarole [sic] of permits and stuff to hold a job, have thousands of dollars of scholarships available, and on and on.

Of course, most of us wanted it that way. We pay for it.

But I wondered, all the same, standing there on Jamestown Island, poking about the hallowed ruins of the old church, gazing across the green meadow down over the broad James River.

"Come on and hurry," some one [sic] said then, "or we'll miss the reception for the Queen . . . ."

. . . Soul-Searching in High Places

There may be some complacency, but not where it would hurt, and there is much grave soul-searching in high places at Washington as American scientists continue tracing Sputnik and wonder what next from Moscow.

It may be too many Americans still do not fully comprehend that the blasts which hurtled the little moon [Sputnik. Etymology: Russian, "fellow-traveler"] heavenward also set off a world-wide reaction favorable to the Soviets – peoples remote and not so remote now may conclude that Russia has drawn abreast, if she has not actually gone ahead, of us in the arms race.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

This is not because of the capability of Sputnik itself. It is because of the rocketry the Russians had to develop and utilize in the launching.

Two developments this week may or may not indicate the satellite's propaganda value to Russia:

First, Egypt's astonishing move in dispatching some troops to Syria;

Second, Yugoslavia's recognizing of East Germany.

Thus openly contemptuous of the United States and of U.S. aid, they thumbed their noses at Uncle Sam.

* * *

THERE STILL IS NO OPEN ADMISSION from our leaders that any radical revision of our defense may be indicated.

Senator William Knowland, campaigning for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in California (where he is hearing directly from the people), comes up with an idea:

He proposes:

"Why not a bipartisan review of the entire American defense effort."

Why not; indeed? If not that, it will be intensely partisan, hence more prolonged. Action I needed now.

I believe public opinion, fanned or not by administration critics, will force greater official attention to the rocket and satellite program in time. May the administration take its lumps and act on its own!

. . . Sputnik, Symington

Speaking of partisanship, the Sputnik uproar was made for Senator Stuart Symington of Missouri – a one-time Rochesterian. He has been crying wolf for years, urging great appropriations for air defense and cuts in other areas.

Senator Symington was secretary of the Air Force under President Truman. He knows Washington. He also knows the Pentagon. I, for one, have often suspected that some of the seemingly inside information of which he has made use came direct from undisclosed sources in the Pentagon.

Be that as it may, "Stu" Symington is the one public personality in either party to come even further to the fore in the wake of Sputnik. A great many things can happen between now and the Democratic convention of 1960. One might be that Symington would be a stronger contender than he was at Chicago a year ago.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Here is a sample of what he is saying today, as quoted by Arthur Krock in the New York Times:

"If and when the rocket system which launched Sputnik is used to fire a hydrogen warhead, our whole outmoded defense system built on the basis of tradition instead of progress, falls to pieces at a waste of billions."

ii. (B7/f6)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, November 2, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Reporter's Good Job: Separates Facts and Opinion

By PAUL MILLER

. . . The Robert Frost Rebellion

Robert Frost, the poet, represents at 83 a lone voice for rebellion that a lot of us could heed.

"He is against everything and everybody that want people to rely on somebody else," wrote James B. Reston in the New York Times. "He is against the United Nations. He is against the Welfare State. He is against conformity and easy slogans . . .

*** * ***

"His pet project is to band together all men and women who want to stamp out 'togetherness'. The glory of America," he says, "has been its pioneers who celebrated 'separateness' and who were not always seeking protection."

*** * ***

A GREAT OLD MAN; still one not likely to command much attention in a day when U.S. Army investigators draw some shocking conclusions as to factors that led numbers of our boys captured in Korea to turn up weaklings and worse.

Said a report digested in The New Yorker magazine:

"Collaboration" ran as high as 30 per cent among U.S. prisoners for technical and rather minor collaboration.

More than 13 per cent were guilty of "serious collaboration" – writing disloyal tracts or agreeing to spy or organize for the Communists after the war.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A U.S. Army doctor, Major Anderson, himself a prisoner, asserted:

"Our soldiers' attitude was not what they might do to help themselves, but what could somebody else do to help them."

Major Anderson concluded that the Americans' attitude was the result in part of the shock of being captured, but he added:

It was also, I think, the result of some new failure in childhood and adolescent training of our young men – a new softness."

*** * ***

I SAY DON'T BLAME the young men. Don't blame the children. It's the kind of world we've been building for them, and for ourselves. We started many years ago, quickened the pace in the depression-ridden 30s, continued even in the post-war prosperity.

Few of our youngsters, bless 'em, have a lick of work to do any time before voting age and often later. They are coddled by schools, by the law and in our homes.

A teacher who really disciplines one may wind up in court. We parents are in and out of the house and in and out of town. We leave 'em up to the school teachers and Sunday school teachers.

So what can we expect but softness from a generation raised to softness among parents who, ourselves, look more and more to the government for the security Americans used to win (or not) by themselves. The wonder is that so many – the great majority – are so fine, so self-reliant, considering the raising we give them.

*** * ***

POET FROST WROTE a couplet awhile back:

"Nature within her inmost self decides
"To trouble men with having to take sides."

I for one am going to try to take sides in large measure with Robert Frost. As a starter I am at least going to try to read some early American history to my younger boys still at home – provided I can get 'em away from "Joe Palooka," "Peanuts" and TV.

jj. (B7/f7)

*****

Rochester Times-Union

2010

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Saturday, November 16, 1957

AS I SEE IT

California: Great Schools And a Political Earthquake

By PAUL MILLER

Biggest story in major league-conscious San Francisco Wednesday and Thursday had to do with Willie Mays and his efforts to buy a house in a white section. The star outfielder of the New York Giants, now to be the San Francisco's team, got the house after having had a turndown because of neighborhood opposition. Such problems aren't limited to the south [sic]. . .

kk. (B4/f27)

U.S. News & World Report
November 22, 1957

Censorship – A Declaration By Catholic Bishops

Following are excerpts from a statement released Nov. 17, 1957, by the Catholic Bishops of the United States after their annual meeting in Washington, D.C.:

Censorship is today a provocative and sometimes misleading word. It generates controversy by provoking those who would deny in fact any restrictions, legal or moral, upon freedom of expression. It misleads, since few approach the problems of censorship without emotion.

Obviously, the state does have some power of censorship. In times of war or great national danger, few will deny it a preventive power. In normal circumstances, however, the state exercises only a punitive function, placing restraint on those who misuse liberty to deny equal or greater rights to others. The state's power of censorship is not unlimited.

Morally, the Church can and does exercise what is called censorship. This right is hers from her office as teacher of morals and guardian of divine truth. Her decisions bind her people but her sanctions upon them are only spiritual and moral. She does, nevertheless, express her judgments to all men of good will, soliciting their reasoned understanding and their freely given acceptance and support.

Most commonly in civil affairs the particular freedom that is involved in discussions of the subject is freedom of the press, not only in newspapers and other publications but also such dramatic expression as is represented in the theater, motion pictures, radio and television.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Because in modern times the press has been a major instrument in the development of knowledge and the chief means of its diffusion, freedom of the press is closely bound up with man's right to knowledge. Man's patient, plodding ascent to the heights of truth evidences the spiritual powers given him by God and at the same time their wounding by sin. His search for truth is an enriching and ennobling experience, uniquely proper to man.

The right to know the truth is evidently broad and sweeping. Is the right to express this knowledge, whether through speech or press, equally broad? That man has a right to communicate his ideas through the spoken or written word is beyond challenge. And yet it can be recognized at the outset that expression adds a new element to knowledge. Directed as it is to others, it is an act that has social implications. Society itself must take cognizance of it. Although man must claim and hold to freedom of expression, he must also recognize his duty to exercise it with a sense of responsibility.

This is a freedom that is intimately bound up with other freedoms that man prizes. Freedom of the press is patently a key safeguard of civil liberty. Democracy does not exist without it. The day free expression of opinion is extinguished and all are constrained to fall into a single pattern of political thought and action, democracy has died.

* * *

Because freedom of the press is a basic right to be respected and safeguarded, it must be understood and defended not as license but as true rational freedom. The kind of uncritical claims for and defense of liberty which so often have been made in our day actually places that liberty in jeopardy. For this reason we feel that light must be thrown not only on its meaning but also on its limits.

To speak of limits is to indicate that freedom of expression is not an absolute freedom. Not infrequently it is so presented. It is alleged that this freedom can suffer no curtailment or limitation without being destroyed. The traditional and sounder understanding of freedom, and specifically freedom of the press, is more temperate. It recognizes that liberty has a moral dimension. Man is true to himself as a free being when he acts in accord with the laws of right reason. As a member of society his liberty is exercised within bounds fixed by the multiple demands of social living.

In the concrete, this means that the common good is to be served. It will entail, among other things, a respect for the rights of others, a regard for public order and a positive deference to those human, moral and social values which are our common Christian heritage. It is within this context that freedom of expression is rightly understood.

This recognition of limitations has been given statement in recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States: "We hold that obscenity is not within the area of constitutionally protected speech or press." (Roth v. United States, 77 S. Ct. 1304, Alberts v. California, 77 S. Ct. 1304, June 24, 1957.) The decisions touching on this subject are encouraging to those who have been deeply concerned over trends that threatened to destroy the traditional authority exercised by the state over expressions and displays of obscenity.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Contrary to this trend, the Court has held that there is such a thing as obscenity susceptible of legal determination and demanding legal restraint; that laws forbidding the circulation of obscene literature are not as such in violation of the Constitution; that the Federal Government may ban such publications from the mail; that a State may act against obscene literature and punish those who sell or advertise it.

The decisions reasserted the traditional conviction that freedom of expression is exercised within the defined limits of law. Obscenity cannot be permitted as a proper exercise of a basic human freedom. Civil enactments as well as the moral law both indicate that the exercise of this freedom cannot be unrestrained.

Ideally, we would wish that no man-made legal restraints were ever necessary. Thus, restraint on any human freedom would be imposed rather by one's own reason than by external authority. In any case, restraint's best justification is that it is imposed for the sake of a greater freedom. Since, however, individuals do act in an irresponsible way and do threaten social and moral harm, society must face its responsibility and exercise its authority. The exigencies of social living demand it.

* * *

Although civil authority has the right and duty to exercise such control over the various media of communication as is necessary to safeguard public morals, yet civil law, especially in those areas which are constitutionally protected, will define as narrowly as possible the limitations placed on freedom. The one purpose which will guide legislators in establishing necessary restraints to freedom is the securing of the general welfare through the prevention of grave and harmful abuse. Our judicial system has been dedicated from the beginning to the principle of minimal restraint. Those who may become impatient with the reluctance of the state through its laws to curb and curtail human freedom should bear in mind

Continued from page 77

A DECLARATION ON CENSORSHIP

That this is a principle which serves to safeguard all our vital freedoms – to curb less rather than more; to hold for liberty rather than restraint.

In practice the exercise of any such curbs by the state calls for the highest discretion and prudence. This is particularly true in the area of the press. For here an unbridled power to curb and repress can make a tyrant of government, and can wrest from the people one by one their most cherished liberties.

Prudence will always demand, as is true under our governmental system, that the courts be in a position to protect the people against arbitrary repressive action. While they uphold the authority of government to suppress that which not only has no social value, but is actually harmful, as is the case with the obscene, the courts will be the traditional bulwark of the people's liberties.

Within the bounds essential to the preservation of a free press, human action and human expression may fall short of what is legally punishable and may still defy the moral standards of a notable number in the community. Between the legally punishable and the morally good there exists a wide gap. If we are content to accept as morally inoffensive all that is legally unpunishable, we have lowered greatly our moral standards. It must be recognized that civil legislation by itself does not constitute an adequate standard of morality.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

An understanding of this truth, together with the knowledge that offensive materials on the stage and screen and in publications have a harmful effect, moved the Bishops of the United States to set up agencies to work in the field – for motion pictures, the National League of Decency; for printed publications, the National Office for Decent Literature.

The function of these agencies is related in character. Each evaluates and offers the evaluation to those interested. Each seeks to enlist in a proper and lawful manner the co-operation of those who can curb the evil. Each invites the help of all people in the support of its objectives. Each endeavors through positive action to form habits of artistic taste which will move people to seek out and patronize the good. In their work they reflect the moral teaching of the Church. Neither agency exercises censorship in any true sense of the word. [END]

ll. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, November 23, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Missiles, Moons, Moscow: The Questions and Answers

By PAUL MILLER

Not since wartime have Americans been beset and bedeviled by more urgent questions and concerns than have flooded in upon us since the Sputniks:

1. Why did we get behind Russia, anyway?

2. Can we catch up?

3. What is the real significance of the Soviet moons?

These are a few.

Beginning with them, this week's column will encompass a series of pertinent questions being raised today – with answers it has been possible to obtain from some in a position to know in science, education, business and government.

1. Answer to No. 1: We made a calculated decision to concentrate on long-range bombers. The Russians built bombers but they went ahead on long-range missiles, too.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

And No. 2. Yes, But what worries some is whether we have the kind of "Buck Rogers" research going in other areas also. Weather, for example. The Russians are working hard there. If they learn to control weather, even over limited areas, the threat could be worse than the missiles.

No. 3. That the Soviets could now probably put The Bomb on Rochester, N.Y. via missile rather than by plane.

* * *

SOME OTHER QUESTIONS:

Q. How long before Sputnik did U.S. government agencies know the Russians would be capable of launching a satellite in 1957?

A. Perhaps as much as 15 months before the event which was Oct. 4, 1957.

Why Were We Beaten?

Q. Then how come we didn't move faster, ourselves, in anticipation of the Russian launching?

A. We didn't comprehend the implications or the shock Sputnik would produce in the Free World. Actually, anybody who could read the newspapers, and remember, knew how Russia was progressing. We did not "integrate the totality" of their effort.

Q. Khrushchev says the big bombers might as well be scrapped now. Has Russia done so?

A. No. but she may be producing fewer now.

Q. What's the main reason our radical weapons programs sometimes seem slow?

A. Principally because of our complicated decision-making machinery. It takes years for our military planners to make up their collective minds, more time to negotiate contracts. We took eight years to develop the B52 (heavy bomber); the Russians developed a comparable plane in four.

Q. What can we do to speed up decision-making?

A. We must transfer the development of radical new weapons-planning and development from the military services to an independent civilian-dominated agency. Moreover, we must make it profitable for private companies to work in government radical weapons programs

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Q. How can we make it profitable?

A. Perhaps by figuring the return on some base other than cost of production. Most contractors earn only 3 or 4 per cent on government contracts now.

Who Is To Blame?

Q. Is there any hopeful aspect of the Sputniks?

A. Putting up the satellites now may very well be recorded in history as Khrushchev's colossal blunder. He thus awakened and unified our country.

Q. What's the history of our lagging missile program? Who's to blame?

A. We gave Convair a study contract in 1946. Then we cancelled it in 1947. If Convair, interested by then, hadn't gone ahead on its own we'd be worse off even than we are now.

Q. What will the coming congressional investigation of the U.S. missile program probably disclose?

A. First, that we got behind simply because we started late, on a calculated decision. Second, that the U.S. now is making a massive effort in this field. Third, that U.S. programs are effective programs. Fourth, that if we continue to provide the necessary funds, there is no reason the U.S. needs to stay behind.

Q. What's the hope for federal tax reduction?

A. Forget it.

Q. Why all the administration fuss for continued and even expanded U.S. aid to the uncommitted underdeveloped countries?

A. The U.S. is no longer self-sufficient. The underdeveloped countries hold the still undiscovered natural deposits of the world. They have vast potential resources; they will provide vast markets. Somebody is going to develop them; they must not be developed behind the lowering curtain of Soviet communism.

Q. What are some current world danger spots from the U.S. viewpoint?

A. 1. Guatemala – once Communist dominated, now threatened anew.

2. Laos.

3. Indonesia.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Q. What bad effect did the events of Little Rock actually produce in the free and uncommitted nations outside the U.S.?

A. Less than some anticipated. Very little really.

Q. What about space travel?

A. In the next two or three generations , if we work hard enough, we will have the means of visiting other planets.

Q. Can the U.S. beat the Soviets while doing business-as-usual?

A. (By a scientist with a sense of humor). When I am feeling blue and pessimistic, I think the Russians could be ahead of us in everything within five years. When I am on the optimistic side, I think 10 years!

What Must We Do?

Q. What must we do to bring the full strength of our Free Enterprise system to bear upon regaining the lead, then remaining ahead?

A. Many things. Here are a few: Give a clear right-of-way to pending missile programs, as now being done. Toughen up our educational system – and ourselves! Whittle down the domestic benefits programs of all kinds in favor of what has to be done to keep our country from falling into a position where she could be blackmailed into surrender by a stronger Russia.

*** * ***

COMMENT: All this will be hard. If those who should know do know (and how can we afford to doubt them?) nothing comes ahead of the necessity of improving our entire national posture vis a vis the Communist world.

Vice President Nixon said publicly Thursday in Washington:

"We are at war now as surely as in 1942."

Fletcher Knebel, The Times-Union's Washington paragrapher, summed it up thus – with tongue in cheek – this week:

"Oh for the good old days when the Russians were trying to steal our secrets."

*** * ***

A FINAL NOTE: It seems to me almost providential that Richard Nixon instead of one less able is the vice president at this time.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

He is necessarily carrying much of what ordinarily might be the presidential load. He also is supplying some of the direction. For example, he saw – apparently long before most White House advisors – that Sputnik was more than a "glittering bauble," as one White House aide put it a few days after the launching of Sputnik I. Nixon is close to the public. He knew at once that Sputnik had shocked the country and the Western World. He knew the scientific reasons why. And he knew prompt, positive, dramatic action was indicated. He apparently could not get his view across for a while; it clearly is prevailing now.

mm. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, November 30, 1957

AS I SEE IT

The Eisenhower Question: Shall he Remain in Office?

By PAUL MILLER

White House denials to the contrary, it seems only logical that President Eisenhower and his intimates would have considered whether he should continue in office and, if so, under what conditions.

If they have not done so, they should have; ordinary prudence would dictate it.

Few presidents have enjoyed the prestige and popularity that are deservedly Eisenhower's. Still, while most Americans undoubtedly hope and pray that the President can serve out his term, they don't want him to attempt it at the possible cost of his health.

And there's more to it than that.

If it is at all likely that the President is to be even partly incapacitated for any length of time, it can only be hoped that he will officially put somebody else in charge for the period.

A more or less headless White House is something that the United States can ill afford at any time, certainly not now.

So, while White House aides may continue to insist there's no discussion there of any change, it's certainly the subject of major speculation elsewhere the world over.

*** * ***

2018

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

THREE POSSIBILITIES are generally discussed:

1. The powers of the President would be exercised in fact, though not in name, by the White House staff. This was done during Eisenhower's past illnesses.

2. The President would resign, explaining health would not permit him to continue.

3. The President would continue in office, but would designate the vice president as acting president for the period of convalescence only.

Based on reported comment in Washington and throughout the country, I believe sentiment would favor the President's remaining in office as long as possible but lightening his burdens.

If that does represent popular will, and if the President chooses to follow it, the best bet would seem to be that Vice President Nixon (Possibility No. 3) will be designated.

There was much criticism at the political level and otherwise of Sherman Adams, assistant to the President, in other Eisenhower absences from the White House.

This Adams criticism has not lessened in recent months.

Nixon, contrarily, has grown steadily in stature and public regard – though he still has not silenced all of his critics.

It is generally felt that Nixon was well ahead of the White House in correctly appraising the grave significance of Russia's earth satellites.

* * *

TO CHECK REACTION to the President's illness The Wall Street Journal queried more than 100 industry officials, housewives, shoppers, and others coast-to-coast.

The Journal concluded as follows:

"Businessmen are worried by Ike's upset, but expect no serious national complications, economic or political . . . A goodly number of people believe Ike might do well to resign if his health doesn't improve. Few express concern over the prospect of Vice President Nixon's growing voice in administration affairs."

* * *

THE SITUATION CLEARLY CALLS for new looks at Vice President Nixon.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Here is mine:

Dick Nixon has come a long way since 1952. He was probably his party's best political campaigner even then, at 38. Now there's no question about it.

No man could work harder at a job than he has at being vice president. In so doing, he has learned much and matured fast.

He knows that there must be compromises in politics, but he has hardened even so in his own convictions. One example: He is a more outspoken champion of continued large-scale foreign aid even than the President, although some of his closest party friends and supporters do not fully agree with him, including yours truly.

He has enormous energy. On political or on government goodwill tours, he is never too weary to meet and talk with any and all who want to meet and talk with him.

He is articulate. No member of the Eisenhower team can more skillfully discuss administration policy and attitudes whether with critics or friends.

He is a warm and friendly person who tries to like and be liked. And the same for his attractive wife, Pat. Together, they are a pair we are lucky to have on the job for us in Washington and in the world at large, whether or not the future holds still greater tasks for them than those they are, separately and together, discharging now.

* * *

THE WHITE HOUSE HANDLING of the President's illness reports – slow, evasive and incomplete for hours – emphasizes anew the folly of trying to cover up important facts.

Whether in government or business, the best rule for dealing with the public on matters of public interest and concern is this:

Tell the truth, promptly and fully, however distasteful the telling.

The truth will become known eventually in any event.

Doubts and false reports grow from delays and misrepresentations. Then they have to be overtaken. So tell the truth and get it over with – it's the No. 1 rule of good public relations.

* * *

2020

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

ONCE THE LID WAS TAKEN OFF at the White House, information about the President's illness flowed freely; public tension and doubt subsided.

Despite lapses, I often reflect, we scarcely know what White House "secrecy" is today, recalling that of 1944-45.

President Roosevelt was a haggard shell, and looked it, but any suggestion that he was ailing brought cries of reproach, wrath, and indignation from those around him. They suppressed facts, destroyed photos, and fought to maintain the myth to the end, even through his shaky report to Congress after the Yalta Conference.

I sat in the press gallery that February day in 1945 with a copy of the advance text of what was given out as FDR's own Yalta report. Actually, of course, it had been prepared for him. He appeared unable even to read it straight. He made so many mistakes, changes, and husky-voiced interpolations that trained stenographers were required to keep the advanced text corrected as he droned along.

nn. (B4/f29)

National Press Photographer
November, 1957

Moeller Charges Govt. Interferes with Press

The charge that the federal government is actively interfering with the processes of freedom of information was made in Rochester by journalism professor Leslie G. Moeller, director of the State University of Iowa's School of Journalism, who said that administrators learned that "the handout, and a tight rein on subordinates, is a method of controlling the flow of information."

"For the first time in its history," Moeller told the Rochester Photo Conference, the federal government has begun to espouse formally the theme that "the public does not have a right to know."

Moeller cited executive sessions totaling one third of all congressional committee hearings and the absence of information from the Atomic Energy Commission on atomic fall-out as examples of what he termed "the right of suppression" being practiced in areas of our government.

The Iowa educator said freedom of information or "the right of access," is perhaps under greater challenge in this country now than it ever has been and that the real beneficiaries of freedom of information are its weakest defenders.

"Mr. and Mrs. Every-Day Citizen," he said, "give the strong impression of not bothering much with this sort of thing. In general, Mr. Average Citizen seems to feel that, so long as things go moderately well, freedom in the abstract is somebody else's business," he added.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Moeller urged that educators and professionals in the media of mass communications bend every effort to bring to the public a sense of personal identification with freedom. He said a national climate favorable to freedom is built on information about freedom: "The citizen cannot act in darkness," he declared.

The Iowa journalism school head called for research into the question of how to interest the average citizen in the news items which should be of interest to him. "The mass media ought also to know much more about what the public most vigorously dislikes in the media . . . a type of news coverage, or a kind of picture, or a type of advertising."

"The mass media," he said, "need more research about the impact of their content." They are "the greatest educational force" we have for the one hundred twenty million citizens beyond school age. "The media do well in the cause of freedom," he said in conclusion, "but they need to be much better."

PHOTO
Caption:

HAPPY CREW at conference get together after dinner. L. to r.: Mrs. Oscar N. Solbert, Gannett Newspapers President Paul Miller, Mrs. Don McMaster, Gen. O. N. Solbert, Mrs. Frank Gannett, Don McMaster, Vice President-General Manager of Eastman Kodak.

oo. (B4/f26)

Time
December 16, 1957

THE PRESS
The Chain That Isn't

To upstate New York's Rochester Democrat and Chronicle in 1886 came an indignant letter from one of its newsboys. Protesting that he had been billed $.06 too much for his papers, ten-year-old Frank Ernest Gannett demanded that the error be "rectified," added in his boyish scrawl: "I have always meet my bills."

From this aggressive faith in the rewards of enterprise, hardheaded Newsboy Gannett (accent on the net) never wavered. It led him, frustratingly, into politics, notably as the highly unsuccessful "businessman's candidate" for the Republican presidential nomination in 1940, into angel and pamphleteer for the National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government and sundry other ultraconservative pressure groups. Through industry and acumen, round-faced, open-headed Frank Gannett also built one of the nation's biggest and most profitable newspaper empires. When he died last week in Rochester at 81, long-ailing Frank Gannett not only owned the 125-year-old Democrat and Chronicle

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(circ. 125, 405), but 21 other papers as well – more than any other U.S. publisher has ever acquired without the help of inheritance.

Tolerant Teetotaler. Frank Gannett was a chain publisher who hated chain papers. Instead of cultivating a deadening conformity, papers in the Gannett "group," as the publisher preferred to call it, were encouraged to vary their typography, choose their own features, mold editorial policies to suit their own communities. Boasted Publisher Gannett: "Nothing ever goes out of my office with a 'must' on it." Example: though Gannett and his flagship paper, Rochester's evening Times-Union (circ. 128, 147), zealously promoted the St. Lawrence Seaway, his Albany Knickerbocker News (circ. 53, 870) doggedly fought the project as an economic threat to Albany.

Publisher Gannett, whose name appeared as editor only on the Times-Union masthead, always sent his political pronouncements to his other editors with the notation: "For your information and use, if desired" – and editors were free to ignore them.

In 1948, when other Gannett papers (nearly all in solid Republican territory) supported Tom Dewey for President, Gannett's Independent Democratic Hartford (Conn.) Times (circ. 120, 182) backed Truman; in 1952, when Gannett backed Taft, the Times and most other papers in the group boomed Eisenhower. His Independent Republican Binghamton (N.Y.) Press (circ. 64,562), one of the best small-city newspapers in the U.S., has lately made a habit of supporting Democrats for mayor. During a state election campaign in which several of his papers had gone counter to Gannett's publicly expressed views, F.E.G., as he was called, sighed to Vice President (now President) Paul Miller: 'You know, Paul, sometimes I don't know about this autonomy." Tolerant Teetotaler Gannett's only inviolate command: his papers must never accept liquor ads.

Responsibility. The Gannett papers, nonetheless, share distinct family traits that go beyond sound management or geographical proximity. (Except for Illinois' Danville Commercial-News, New Jersey's Plainfield Courier-News and the Hartford Times, all are published in New York cities and small towns.) Conservative in news judgment as in politics, they have little use for exposes, play down stories of sex and crime. "A newspaper, to suit me," said Gannett, "must be one that I would be willing to have my mother, my own sister or daughter read." Many readers, particularly in the 15 cities where Gannett has a monopoly, complain that the modern mothers would not object to livelier coverage or sharper writing.

On the other hand, most of the papers are enthusiastic home-town boosters, campaign busily for local improvements, sponsor dozens of community enterprises. In keeping with this sense of community responsibility – and to perpetuate his newspapers – Publisher Gannett in 1935 gave two-thirds of his Gannett Company common stock to a philanthropic foundation administered by his executives.

The Great Hyphenator. For his career of building profitable provincial dailies, farm-born Frank Gannett was prepared by a maxim-minded mother ("Little strokes fell big oaks") and the example of a father who was a failure as a farmer and hotelkeeper. After working his way through Cornell, Newsman Gannett had risen to managing editor of the Ithaca News before he bought a half share of the ailing Elmira Gazette in 1906 (for $20,000), later merged it with the rival Evening Star. Gannett started looking for other money-losing dailies to buy and merge – and soon won fame as the busiest newspaper hyphenator in upstate New York. From Rochester, where he merged the Union & Advertiser with the Times, he went on to combine Utica's Herald-Dispatch and Observer, Elmira's Telegram and Advertiser, Ithaca's News and Journal. He fought Hearst in Rochester (where W.R.H. spent $8,000,000 in a hopeless stab at putting F.E.G. out of business), and was himself driven to the ropes in Brooklyn, where he bought the old Eagle in 1929 and shucked it at a loss of $2,000,000 three years later. He never founded a paper, but he bought with an auditor's sure eye; in all, Publisher Gannett acquired 30 papers (plus a string of TV and radio stations) in 51 years, merged ten, unloaded only three.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

In politics, Gannett backed Franklin Roosevelt in his early years, but by 1940 was billing himself as The Man Who Stopped the New Dealers. While he was denounced by F.D.R. as an "isolationist" – and by the late Andrei Vishinsky as a "warmonger" – Gannett in his political philosophy was always animated by the same abhorrence of waste that made him a successful publisher. Though he suffered from diabetes for 33 years, Frank Gannett did not slow perceptibly until 1948, when he had a stroke. Bouncing back, he ran his empire until 1955, when he fractured his spine in a fall. Management and the presidency of the Gannett group has since gone into the hands of able, Gannett-groomed Paul Miller, 51, onetime Washington bureau chief for the Associated Press, who believes as firmly as F.E.G. in giving his editors free rein.

For man who has done so much in a field where the tools of self-promotion are so irresistibly at hand, Gannett was a surprisingly little-known man, even in the communities he served. "Although he owned the Times for 30 years," said a Hartford *Times*man, "if he walked through the business section it is doubtful whether two people would have recognized him." But one measure of Frank Gannett's success was the fact that his papers last week ran their own staff-written editorials on their publisher's death.

PHOTO:

PUBLISHER GANNETT (LEFT) & FRIENDS*
Papers that mother can read.
* Editorial Director Vincent S. Jones, President Miller.

pp. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, December 28, 1957

AS I SEE IT

1957: It Was Year When . . .

2024

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1958: May Be Even Better

By PAUL MILLER

1957 doesn't look so good in some respects on its way out, but wait a minute – 1957 was the year when:

Russia exposed the superior power of its rocketry as it launched Sputnik I and thereby woke us up to a peril of which we might not otherwise have learned in time.

Wall Street slipped enough to alarm, but not enough to ruin. We thus got a valuable new reminder that nothing, but nothing, goes up, up, and up, without something coming down.

The crucial need for better educated men and women brought our whole educational system under review. Our schools need a lot more money. Indeed, money should be secondary to reorganization for better utilization of personnel and facilities available right now. (What do your children do? Ours go to school from 8:30 to 2:30 and come skipping home at 3 p.m. with not enough assigned work to keep them busy half an hour.)

Changes and illnesses in our national government brought us into closer touch with new men coming up and we found them good. Examples: McElroy will certainly outshine Wilson at Defense; Anderson is a worthy successor to Humphrey at Treasury.

Congress finally waded into union messes which many had suspected for years but walked gingerly around for political reasons. Proposed corrective legislation will be watered down, but it will be better than none. Some big union bosses who had the run of Washington for two decades are either keeping blessedly quiet or showing a humility and a regard for the welfare of members and public undreamed of only a few years ago.

No matter for what reason – whether because we were scairt (as the cynics say) or more socially minded (as others say) or in trouble and hence more basic (as it seems to me) – we turned long new looks on religious matters.

We got reacquainted with national humility after Russia's triumphs and our busts in the missile field. For the first time in the memory of living negotiators, we went into an international conference with more to ask than to give. There were signs that the new experience was good for us.

* * *

1957 FOSTERED some reassuring recollections:

2025

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

While worried by the Sputniks, we recalled that in 1942, we had nothing ready to match the Jap Zero fighter in the Pacific, and before that little to aid the staggered heroes of Britain's sky battle. Yet soon the great U.S. production tide was started; soon our aircraft had established clear superiority; soon our supremacy was apparent.

Business slumped in 1957, but the nation's money managers – right or wrong – had the courage to take unpopular deflationary steps at a time when they thought them necessary, the Patmans and Kefauvers to the contrary notwithstanding.

Yes, 1957 was a good year in many ways.

*** * ***

WHAT ABOUT 1958? There are many indications that it will be even better.

Better as we confidently join the life or death battle, unhappily neglected awhile, for control of outer space.

Better as we profit from temporary setbacks and go on to sounder business and industrial achievements.

Better as we take a searching look at our whole educational system, not neglecting an especially close look at that key factor, ourselves as parents.

And certainly, better as we recall again, facing into the new Year:

"For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

This is still America.

Luke 11:10 is still true.

(2) PHOTOS
Captions:

WALL STREET '. . . nothing goes up, up, and up'

BILLY GRAHAM '. . . long new look at religious matters'

11. 1958

Paul Miller and Richard Nixon: From Ike to Watergate
(Box # 1, 5, 6, 28)

2026

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Even a cursory examination of the four boxes listed above for this topic revealed more than enough material for at least a peer-reviewed journal article. Combined with the material contained in other boxes relating to Miller's Cold War journalism, postwar conservative philosophy, 1962 trip to East Berlin, and 1972 trip to Communist China, there may very well be enough documentation for a thoughtful and perceptive monograph of Miller's relationship with one of the most polarizing political figures of the twentieth century.

1. 1954

a. (B3a/f73)
*****

The AP World
January [?] 1954

'TONY DONE MADE THE GRADE!' AS NATIONAL PRESS CLUB HEAD

Vaccaro Installed President At Washington Shindig

WASHINGTON – "Mistuh Tony done made the grade!"

Thus was Tony Vaccaro's installation as National Press Club president wrapped up in fellow-staffer Don Whitehead's story noting country-wide recognition . . . .

NOT all contributors were newsmen.

Included was a letter from President Eisenhower addressing Tony as "Dear Mr. President" and expressing the wistfully fiscal request that Tony let him know if he found a way to "reduce club dues, balance the club deficit and serve bigger and better meals "in the club" at drastically lower prices." There was a letter from former President Truman expressing high regard for Tony and the job he had done during his seven years as White House correspondent. The Eisenhower letter appears at right.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Vice President Richard Nixon (see cover), a top notable among the 700 members and guests present, took an active part in the proceedings. He read a list of suggested pledges to Tony and swore him in.

All in all, it was a big event for Executive Representative Vaccaro, one of the biggest since he entered the service at Nashville in 1929, thence going to Memphis and on to Washington where he has been since 1938.

THE photo shows Tony (2nd from l.) with Vice President Nixon, General Manager Frank Starzel and Paul Miller, now a Gannett Newspapers executive, but at one time Tony's superior as Washington chief of bureau . . . .

b. (B3a/f73)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Sunday, March 28, 1954

1,500 Turn Tables, Honor Carl Hallauer At Testimonial Fete

The role was reversed for Carl S. Hallauer last night. An outstanding civic leader whose affability and amiable wit have caused him to be drafted as toastmaster at scores of testimonial dinners for others, found himself guest of 1,500 persons who gathered in his honor at the Sheraton Hotel.

Persons prominent in the business and political life of the nation, state and city attended the dinner, which was sponsored by the Lincoln Republican League.

Chief speaker was Rep. Jacob K. Javits of New York City, member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Javits arraigned Republican congressional foes of certain phases of President Eisenhower's program for the nation, among them Sen. Joseph McCarthy. These men, he held, endanger chances of the Republicans winning congressional elections next fall. (Details, Page 1-A.)

Other speakers, introduced by Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett newspapers and toastmaster for the affair, were . . . .

Miller read numerous telegrams from prominent friends of Hallauer who were unable to attend.

Included was a letter from Governor Dewey, who, letting the bygone of the 1952 convention be a bygone, as Miller pointed out, hailed Hallauer as a leader in every good cause and a man who never let creed, race or color stand in the way of his friendships.

Other letters were from former President Herbert Hoover, Vice President Richard M. Nixon [James A.] Farley (who cabled his regrets while enroute to France), Frank Gannett, Spyros Skouros, president of Twentieth Century-Fox; Ralph S. Damon, president of Trans-World Airlines; Leonard W. Hall, chairman of the Republican national Committee; Senator Styles Bridges and Joseph M. Martin Jr., Speaker of the House . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

c. (B3a/f73)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Tuesday, April 20, 1954

AP Elects Two from Midwest

NEW YORK (AP) – Members of The Associated Press re-elected four directors and elected two new ones at the annual AP meeting yesterday.

(Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, is a member of the AP board.) . . . .Four AP staffers participated in a panel discussion at the annual meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel yesterday following an address by Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, to the AP membership.

The four staff men, who answered questions from publishers about foreign affairs, were:

Frank Noel, Pulitzer Prize-winning photographer captured by the Communists in Korea.

Relman Morin, who won a Pulitzer Prize for reporting of the Korean War.

John Hightower, a Pulitzer Prize winner for international reporting.

Thomas Whitney, who spent seven years in Moscow as an AP correspondent.

Moderator of the discussion was Benjamin M. McKelway of the Washington Star, an AP director.

Noel told the AP members that there is a schism between the Chinese Reds and the Russians and he expressed hope that the United States would exploit it. Noel, who was released last year after the Korean truce, said the schism began developing about two years ago.

The Chinese Communists, he said, “want the Russians to get out.”

“But instead of getting out,” he added, “they are bringing their wives and children in. The Chinese don’t like it.”

Noel was asked his opinion of “Fifth Amendment Communists” in the United States. His answer was: “I don’t care how they dig the Commies up. I think the best way to deal with Commies is at the open end of a .45.” A person either is or is not an American, he declared.

Whitney told the gathering that he believes American possession of the H-bomb has confronted Russia with something of a dilemma. He explained it this way: Communist dogma always has held that there will be world revolution entailing conflict; and now the Kremlin faces the proposition that conflict would mean destruction of the Soviet Union.

Hightower, answering a question said he did not know whether Vice President Nixon was speaking for the administration or for himself when he said U.S.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

troops might have to be sent to Indochina. Either way, he said, Nixon's remarks were in line with the thinking of many Washington officials.

Morin told the gathering that he believes the South Korean army will be developed within a reasonable time to a point where U.S. troops can be withdrawn to a reserve area – possibly outside Korea.

McKelway jibed a so-called "off the record" talks and "news leaks."

His comment, made in opening the discussion session, was in obvious reference to Nixon's "off the record" talk before the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington last week.

2. 1955

a. (B4/f1)

Times-Union
May 25, 1955

PHOTO
Caption:
Vice President Nixon

Nixon Lays It on the Line:

If We Are Strong, We Survive; Show Weakness, We're Done For

By PAUL MILLER

Vice President Richard Nixon, a veteran himself, told us the facts of life last night about the why and wherefore of peacetime military service.

If, he said, the United States had possessed an adequate military establishment in the late '30s there might never have been a World War II.

And, he added, if we hadn't dismantled our mighty military machine at the end of that war, there might never have been a Korea.

The vice president, here to accept a gold award from the Military Chaplains' Association in a ceremony attended by all too few at Eastman Theater, laid it on the line in a fashion some don't like.

Some would rather believe that we should get along with a minimum defense system and rush into preparedness only when we are threatened or actually attacked.

That may have been good enough in the old days – before airplanes, say – though many doubt it was good enough even then.

2030

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Certainly it isn't good enough today when the United States has (and Russia probably has) the capability of building and delivering a hydrogen bomb packing more explosive force than all the bombs dropped by all the air forces engaged in the second [sic] World War.

What Mr. Nixon told the Eastman audience last night was this:

1. We can be effective in maintaining world peace only so long as we are militarily strong.

2. The way to assure that strength is to see to it that our young are trained and ready all the time.

So Mr. Nixon urged some form of Universal Military Service. Lacking that, he hopes we oldsters will do all we can to encourage young men to get into the armed forces and serve, understanding that in so doing they may preserve not only their own lives but the peace of the world in the process.

He conceded, unhappily, that a soldier is a hero in wartime but apt to be regarded as something else again in time of peace.

Let us, then, he urged, make clear to our youth that we appreciate their willingness to serve and honor them for it. Let us do that in every way we can, personally and through organizations set up for the purpose, like the U.S.O.

First, though, a lot of us need to get the blinders off: The blinders that shut out the facts of life which, ignore them though we may, press in on us from every side in today's troubled world.

Realize, Mr. Nixon was saying, that 1955 is as simple as this: If we are strong, we should be able to survive. One big slip to weakness, and we are done for.

May this message get home to millions!

b. (B4/f1)

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT
WASHINGTON

June 14, 1955

Dear Paul:

This is just a note to thank you for sending me the editorial you wrote concerning your six-footer and his current life in the Marines as well as the one about the speech I gave in Rochester recently. I appreciated your thoughtfulness in calling both of them to my attention.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I would like to borrow the last line of the one concerning my speech - - "May this message get home to millions" - - and add it to the one about your son, Ranne. It seems to me that your thoughts would help thousands of our fellow Americans who have sons or daughters in the Armed Forces.

It was good to see you in Rochester and I am looking forward to having a visit with you the next time you are in Washington.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely,
Dick (signed)
Richard Nixon

Mr. Paul Miller
Executive Vice President
The Gannett Newspapers
Rochester 14, New York

c. (B4/f1)

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF DEFENSE
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

[SEAL]:
DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

June 10, 1955

MANPOWER AND PERSONNEL

Dear Mr. Miller:

Thank you very much for the two articles from the Rochester Times-Union which you sent me following my brief visit to Rochester with the Vice President.

I enjoyed both of the articles you wrote and have taken the liberty of reproducing the magnificent article about your son and his departure for the Far East. I think your article carries more impact in saying the things we feel in the military than any article I have ever read.

Please let me know if and when you come to Washington.

Sincerely yours,
Henry Du Flon (signature)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Henry Du Flon
Deputy Assistant Secretary

Paul Miller
Executive Vice President
Gannett Newspapers
Rochester, New York

2. 1956

a. (B4/f5)

The Caracas Daily Journal
January 26, 1956

Newsman Talks
U.S. Politics

Mr. Paul Miller, now in Venezuela as a guest of the Creole Petroleum Corporation, said yesterday that he believed Eisenhower would run again for president.

Mr. Miller, a Republican, and Executive Vice President of the Gannett newspapers in the United States, had some very clear ideas on the subject of the coming presidential election campaign now currying force in the country.

His personal guess was that Eisenhower would run "but," he said, "the next few weeks naturally will decide that issue. It will depend principally on the professional opinion of Dr. White, his personal physician."

"Eisenhower," he continued, "has earned high personal prestige not only in his own party but also among the Democrats. He is also well-liked abroad. During his administration he has developed the best executive organization to date in U.S. Government. It would be too bad if he didn't run again.

In remarking on the opposition, he said that Stevenson had the best organization. He still had the organization that was left from the last campaign year and it was evident that he had more universal prestige than either Harriman or Kefauver, the two principal Democratic contenders for the nomination. He also predicted a little more "noise" from Governor Lausche of Ohio.

In the event that Eisenhower didn't run, he said, the Republican Party still had several strong candidates from which to select. The important names on this potential list were Vice President Nixon, Chief Justice Warren, Senator Knowland, Governor Herter of Massachusetts and, though not seriously considered as a candidate, Milton Eisenhower. He also added that if Eisenhower (Ike) were to run again, his running mate would probably still be Nixon.

Nixon, he said, came through the period of Eisenhower's illness with great credit. Although considered by some as immature politically, it was to be taken into account that he is only 43 but has already had ten years in congress, plus the years of his vicepresidency [sic]. He is a vigorous personality and, though he was put – or put himself – on the spot, he came out of those 47 days of Ike's illness with little serious criticism. "He is without doubt, a very controversial figure," he concluded.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Miller, who is also a director of the Associated Press, is here with his wife, Mrs. Louise Miller. During their seven-day, they will visit oilfield areas in both Eastern and Western Venezuela and the iron mining regions in Bolivar. As an "added attraction," Creole has arranged for them to begin their tour with a sightseeing flight over Angel Falls in the Gran Sabana.

There are 22 papers in the Gannett newspaper chain located in cities in New York, New jersey, Connecticut and Illinois. The home office is in Rochester, N.Y., where the Millers have their residence.

Shortly after the Arbenz overthrow in Guatemala, Mr. Miller made a trip to that country. When he leaves Venezuela, he expects to stay several days there again and then proceed to Mexico, where he will also spend some time.

He declared that Venezuela was receiving excellent publicity in the United States and the fact that he had heard so much about it prompted him to make the visit.

"We were not prepared for what we found," both Mr. and Mrs. Miler declared yesterday.

After a personal visit with the President of the Republic next Sunday, Mr. Miller will continue his trip north.

b. (B4/f13)

*****

(1.) Democrat and Chronicle
March 21, 1956

Keating Lauded by Colleagues, Remains Mum on Senate Offer

Rep. Martin Sees Ike Sweep,
Page 5

By JAKE UNDERHILL

Rep. Kenneth B. Keating's friends praised him with speeches and applause last night, but the Rochester Republican's decision on running for the U. S. Senate remained unannounced.

Declaring he did not know whether Keating wants to go to the Senate, House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R-Mass) said he was "selfish" but that he wants Keating "to stay with me" and become chairman of the House Judiciary Committee next year . . . .

The top-ranking Republican in the House recalled that in 1936 he had been offered an opportunity to run for the Senate, but turned it down because he believed that in the House of Representatives he best could serve the country.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon sent their praise for Keating in two of the scores of letters and telegrams received at the dinner. The President said he was happy to join in praise of Keating's "outstanding public service."

"They don't come any better than Ken Keating," read the message from Nixon . . . .

Congressmen Introduced

Paul Miller, executive vice president of The Gannett Newspapers, toastmaster for the dinner, introduced the prominent political, legal and clerical figures at the speaker's table . . . .

PHOTO:
Caption:

SALUTE TO KEATING—Rep. Kenneth B. Keating, above, acknowledges ovation of more than 700 who jammed the Chamber of Commerce last night to honor Rochester Republican at testimonial. House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr., at left, was speaker. Martin lauded Keating's leadership in capital.

(2.)

Martin Predicts Ike-Nixon Sweep

Friends Laud Keating. Page 1

November's election will bring an Eisenhower-Nixon sweep and a "substantial" Republican majority in the House of Representatives, the minority leader of the House predicted here yesterday.

Rep. Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R-Mass) said no Democratic candidate for president "has a chance" of beating President Eisenhower in November. The Republican leader shrugged off questions on who will receive the Democratic nomination. He expected Vice President Nixon again to be a candidate.

In the event of a republican majority in the House, Martin would be returned to the speaker's chair. Rep. Kenneth B. Keating of Rochester would become chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, Martin pointed out.

Keating will have to choose between the House chairmanship, "a very, very important and very splendid job," and running for the U. S. senate, Martin said.

The minority leader and a delegation of other House Republicans arrived here yesterday afternoon for the Rochester Bar Assn.'s testimonial dinner for Keating, who represents the 38th District. Martin was principal speaker at the banquet attended by about 700 in the Chamber of Commerce.

With Keating and Martin in The Gannett Newspapers airplane which flew from Washington were Reps. Hugh D. Scott Jr. (R-Pa), former Republican national chairman; Harold C. Ostertag, 39th District Republican, and William R. Williams, Cassville Republican.

A former Virginian, but an outspoken advocate of civil rights legislation, Scott said hopes of civil rights legislation were "blasted" by the naming of Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss) as chairman of the influential Senate Judiciary

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Committee. Eastland became chairman on the death of Sen. Harley M. Kilgore (D-WVa).

The Pennsylvania congressman said he recently told Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler that he had seen no evidence that Southern Democrats would give any consideration to civil rights legislation.

Bills protecting civil rights will get out of the House Judiciary Committee, said Scott, who was dubious about their success in the Senate Committee. He revealed that he has an appointment today with Deputy Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers to discuss possible civil rights bill. – UNDERHILL.

(3) PHOTOS
Captions:

SPEAKERS' TABLE – Camera shows focal point of speakers' table. Dining from the left are Rep. Harold C. Ostertag, Martin, Keating and Paul Miller, the executive vice president of Gannett Newspapers, who last night served as toastmaster. The Bar Assn. held the testimonial dinner in Keating's honor.

FELLOW LAWYERS – Rep. Frank Traynor, at right, president of Bar Assn., gives a warm handclasp to fellow attorney, Rep. Keating, after presenting him a plaque.

OLD FRIENDS – Mrs. Charles W. Weiss Jr., national committeewoman from Rochester, confers at dinner with Rep. Hugh D. Scott Jr., ex-national GOP chairman.

o. (B4/f16)
*****

Times-Union
March 21, 1956

(1.) Keating Mum on Senate Run
As 700 Pay Tribute at Dinner

By KERMIT HILL

Rep. Joseph Martin Jr. of Massachusetts, Republican leader and former speaker of the House of representatives, last night told 700 friends of Rep. Kenneth B. Keating that the Rochester legislator "would be a great credit to this great Empire State" as a United States senator . . . .

(3) PHOTOS
Captions:

GUEST OF HONOR – Rep. Kenneth B. Keating waves in response to tributes.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"MR. SPEAKER" – Rep. Joseph W. Martin Jr., Speaker of the House in GOP congresses, delivers main speech and high praise of Keating to more than 700 of Keating's friends who gathered in main hall of Chamber of Commerce last night.

LEADS IN TRIBUTE – J. Frank Traynor, president of Rochester Bar Assn., leads applause for Rep. Keating. Traynor presented legislator a silver plaque on behalf of association.

(2.)

Posner Explains Refusal To Attend Keating Dinner

William N. Posner, Monroe County Democratic chairman, said today he refused to attend the testimonial dinner for Rep. Kenneth B. Keating of Rochester last night because he did not want to participate in the "political build-up" of a Republican who might be running against Sen. Herbert H. Lehman, Democrat, in November.

Posner said in a written statement today:

"Keating is being actively advanced by Republican leader Fred Parrish as a candidate for the senator nomination to oppose Sen. Lehman next fall. The dinner, I reasoned, and, judging from the newspaper accounts I reasoned correctly, would obviously be a Republican political buildup of Mr. Keating and we Democrats simply would not lend ourselves to any movement against Sen. Lehman, a great public servant who has the respect and affection of all real Democrats and also a multitude of Republicans. Any self-styled Democrat who helped launch Keating in his senatorial venture could hardly hope to stand up and be counted as loyal to his party."

(Joseph S. Rippey, candidate of the anti-Posner Monroe County Democratic Political Committee for the Democratic county chairmanship, was seated at the head table at the Keating affair. He was introduced as "a Rochester Democratic leader" and a member of the bar association which sponsored the Keating testimonial dinner.)

Posner added that he also felt "the bar association should not be partisan since it obviously is made up of both Democratic and Republican lawyers." The association "would do well to ponder the ethics of their action," he said.

p. (B7/f1)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
August 17, 1956

Ike's Health, Nixon: Adlai Lays It on Line

By PAUL MILLER

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

CHICAGO – Adlai E. Stevenson has laid it on the line.

Vice President Richard Nixon will be a focal point of violent attack in the coming campaign.

Linked will be the health of President Eisenhower.

The man from Illinois boldly disclosed this campaign concept last night within an hour after the Democratic National Convention nominated him . . . .

Adlai Stevenson, 1956 model, is a long, long way from the reluctant dragon of 1952. He stormed the country in the primaries. Here he triumphed also in the smoke-filled rooms. He's as polished, as gentlemanly, as ingratiating as ever. But there's a toughness and a drive and a determination there today that was absent, or less apparent in 1952.

This is going to be a campaign with a capital "C."

Dick Nixon will be under constant attack. President Eisenhower will be handled differently, but aggressively as well. Both, further health setbacks or no, will have their hands full this time.

Adlai Stevenson is moving out fast.

q. (B7/f1)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
August 19, 1956

Pro, Anti-Nixon Forces Skirmish In Battle of Polls at San Francisco

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice President of The Gannett Newspapers

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18 – Preconvention skirmishing, such as it was for there's mighty little of it, developed into a battle of polls today. (See details on Page 12A.)

First, Harold Stassen, boosting Gov. Christian Herter, called a press conference to present his "latest nationwide study of voter opinion." It showed, of course, that Richard Nixon WILL be a handicap to President Eisenhower in the campaign.

Next, Sen. Styles bridges, immediately following Stassen before the same reporters in the same hall – the Knob Room at the Fairmount Hotel – handed out leaflets reporting a different poll. It showed, of course, that Richard Nixon will be NO handicap to President Eisenhower in the campaign.

The delegates could take their choice . . . .

I VISITED FORMER President Hoover this morning. He looked well and spry in the usual blue double-breasted suit, seated at his desk in the presidential suite at the Mark Hopkins. The desk was covered by letters and telegrams. He's still digging out of the greetings received on his 82nd birthday Aug. 10. "Guess I must have received 25,000," he said smilingly.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Hoover addresses the convention Tuesday night. Otherwise, he's taking no apparent part. Doesn't even expect to go out there on opening night, Monday. He asked to be remembered to his old friend Frank Gannett and other friends in Rochester. I said I'd relay his greetings by wire. Here it is . . . .

r. (B7/f1)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
August 22, 1957

Stassen's Efforts: What of Effects?

By PAUL MILLER
Editor and Publisher, The Times-Union

SAN FRANCISCO – [Harold] Stassen's dump-Nixon drive has had some effect on delegates at the Republican National Convention.

1. It caused a conscious, if largely casual, appraisal of other possible candidates.

2. It raised among some top party pros a nagging question: "What if Stassen SHOULD turn out to be right?"

As for the first, delegates had an opportunity to get a good look at Sen. William F. Knowland of California. As temporary chairman, he ran the convention until the permanent chairman, Joe Martin, took over.

They have also seen much of Goodwin (Goodie) Knight, popular governor of California. He tried mightily to keep the California delegation from endorsing Nixon for renomination . . . .

Many delegates appeared to believe they'd made a new discovery in Sen. Knowland, who took over from his friend and sponsor, the late Sen. Robert A. Taft, as Republican leader of the Senate. Whatever the future may hold, Knowland clearly improved his party position here.

After looking them all over, if random comment is any gauge, the conventioners more or less contentedly came back to where they started – with Dick Nixon for vice president . . . .

KNIGHT'S OPPOSITON

The apparent enmity between Gov. Knight and Vice President Nixon becomes somewhat more understandable out here. Knight has strong union labor support in California. Organized labor leaders here oppose Nixon.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

There are personal animosities, including professional jealousies, perhaps. But the division of labor loyalties adds up to the major element in Knight's continuing anti-Nixonism.

In the lighthearted banter of this lighthearted convention, a new story makes the rounds daily. The latest:

"A Truman-Stassen third party is being formed," one delegate tells another. "Their slogan is 'We mess up everybody.'"

s. (B7/f1)

Rochester Times-Union
August 25, 1956

The Plight of Harold and Harry

Stassen: Frisco's HST

By PAUL MILLER
Editor and Publisher,
The Times-Union

SAN FRANCISCO – Harold E. Stassen wound up as the Harry S. Truman of San Francisco.

The parallels are equally pointed, equally perplexing – and almost equally painful.

In Chicago, Truman rode the wrong horse, Gov. Harriman, until it was too late to get off gracefully.

Stassen, though himself a veteran of 25 years in politics, let himself in for approximately the same general fate in San Francisco, fighting Vice President Richard Nixon.

DEAL OF DOING

From here on, it will take a deal of doing for Stassen to regain anywhere near the party standing he's enjoyed nationally since 1940 when, billed as the "boy governor" of Minnesota, he keynoted the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia and was Wendell Willkie's floor manager.

Since then, Stassen has had his ups and downs. But he always managed to regain an earnest, if small, group who boosted him for anything and everything, with the White House clearly their ultimate goal.

Now look:

1. – For all his protestations of acting for the party's good, he's pure poison to just about everybody close to Richard Nixon – with, for the moment at least, the very considerable exception of President Ike.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

2. – In striving to clamber back aboard the party train, he almost won as many hoots and "how now" smiles in convention corridors as sincere welcomes for his pains. He was spared boos when he addressed the convention. The leadership had passed the word to delegations please not to greet him impolitely.

The President told a press conference that he had no other thought than that Stassen would return to the official family as White House disarmament assistant.

Later, Stassen himself said that he would be back on the job Monday morning. He took a leave to carry on his fight to nominate somebody other than Nixon for Vice President.

"I owe Mr. Nixon all-out support from this point," Stassen blandly said.

Yet, like Truman, who will be quoted throughout the campaign on his Chicago statement that "Adlai Stevenson can't win," Stassen will be quoted by Democratic campaigners on his oft-repeated prediction that Nixon will cost the ticket "millions of votes."

Some anti-Stassen republican leaders fear that a Republican defeat in November, or even a close squeak, would open the door for an "I told you so" from Harold Stassen.

Most, however, grew stronger for Nixon during Stassen's attack than they were before.

And it was clear that rank and file delegates, having looked over the crop of possibilities to replace Nixon, turned to him with confidence that he is, as President Eisenhower said, as good a man as they could pick for the vice presidency.

2 RESULTS

So Harold Stassen's solo uprising, his calm but insistent urging that Nixon be replaced, finally produced this situation:

Nixon is back, stronger than ever.

Stassen is out in left field; nobody knows quite where.

Some say of Stassen, "he MEANT well . . ." but political leaders shun a loser like the plague and "he meant well" is seldom an acceptable excuse for one who bolts the organizational fold for an excursion of his own.

t. (B7/f1)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Monday Evening, August 27, 1956

WE SUPPORT IKE

GOP Stronger

2041

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

After Frisco

* * * * * *

Ike Shows Surprising Vigor, Nixon Wins New Friends

By PAUL MILLER
Editor and Publisher of The Times-Union

After two weeks of the sound and fury of the two national conventions, the 1956 American political prospect is just what it was before:

President Eisenhower will be reelected unless he suffers another illness.

Actually, the republicans may be in a more favorable position now than before Chicago and San Francisco. There are two main reasons:

1. Eisenhower appears stronger physically and more vigorous than his most fervent well-wishers had dared hope.

2. Richard Nixon came out of the Cow palace with more friends and supporters than he took in.

THE DEMOCRATS NOMINATED the ticket most republican leaders expected. It is a good one. But Adlai Stevenson and Estes Kefauver, without some now unforeseen break, would have to do the impossible to beat Ike.

Readers saw the pictures of the President in the newspapers , and perhaps on TV. Neither did justice to his unexpectedly radiant and ruddy appearance up close in the flesh at San Francisco.

Nor could this have been a surface impression only. What Ike went through at Frisco could have knocked out almost any reader of these reflections!

To wit:

Within 48 hours, Ike submitted himself to tumultuous welcomes, parades, handshaking, dozens of conferences including the climactic meeting with Harold Stassen, the first presidential press conference ever conducted “live” on TV, more parades, more handshaking, the acceptance speech, and a train ride to his holiday at Pebble Beach.

He was up next day at 7:30 a.m. and banging out golf balls at 9 a.m.

Again: What reader of this report could take on that schedule, with or without a heart condition?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

NOW, ABOUT NIXON. He could not have come out of the convention any better if the party high command had planned it that way.

Harold Stassen's attack strengthened Dick Nixon. Stassen knocked out only himself.

I heard many delegates , who had not seen or known much of Nixon intimately prior to the convention, praise him after his speech at San Francisco. They expressed wonderment that they'd heard so much against him before they got there. They asked themselves what was back of the anti-Nixon talk. (Read the explanation of the attacks on Nixon, by C. Lynn Fox, on Page 18 today.)

Governor Christian Herter of Massachusetts was Stassen's No. 1 candidate to dump Nixon. Herter is a great public servant. Yet it was clear – off the respective performances of Herter and Nixon in the Cow Palace – that Nixon would be a more vigorous, a more attractive and a more persuasive campaigner than Herter could ever be. This was common comment out there.

Putting the spotlight on Nixon led to a careful examination by many of the substance behind the Nixon criticism of which we have heard so much.

After sorting it out, delegates clearly came to the conclusion that the main thing against him seemed to be that he's a hard-hitting campaigner such as the Republicans have not been able to boast in years. No wonder his opponents don't like him. He has grown in public esteem. That grow will continue.

Adlai Stevenson and Estes Kefauver will run an exhaustive campaign. Stevenson showed at Chicago that he is a much more able politician than in 1952 – and he was good then. It will not be enough, however, against the greatest public personality since FDR at his best; that's Ike.

* * *

NOTES ON THE DEMOCRATS: In young Sen. Jack Kennedy of Massachusetts, the Democrats have a new political star of national appeal. He may well reach the top in time. Many hope so. Some republicans are happy that he is not the Democratic vice presidential nominee right now – they think he'd have attracted more votes than Estes Kefauver . . . Young Sen. Gore of Tennessee is another democrat certain to be heard from further . . . .

The Rochester Times-Union will, of course, support Eisenhower and Nixon. They are more able, more experienced and more needed now even than they were in '52.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The nation, however, is fortunate indeed that Adlai Stevenson is again the Democratic nominee.

u. (B4/f15)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
October 8, 1956

U.S. Election Intrigues Foreigners, Says Miller

By PAUL MILLER
Executive Vice President of The Gannett Newspapers

Everybody abroad wants to know about Ike.

Foreign government officials, of course, are striving mightily to preserve a position of impartiality. They hasten to say so even as they ask a U.S. visitor for the latest election forecast from America.

A number of foreigners I saw on a quick trip to Britain and Egypt assumed President Eisenhower would be re-elected. Yet they wondered – even as you and I – how he's feeling healthwise now. They asked about this man Nixon who is running on the sane ticket or something, and whether some of the things Stevenson and former President Truman say can possibly be true.

Campaign speeches in the United States get little attention abroad. There are brief reports, however, of major campaign efforts here. There is some general idea in the street that the man named Stevenson and also Mr. Truman, who is well known and well liked overseas, are saying some awful things about the man best known abroad as commander in chief of the Allied war effort in Europe.

Most officials clearly believe that Washington is trying desperately to keep things on an even keel internationally during the election campaign.

Many in England who favored a strong policy toward Egypt's President Nasser in the Suez crisis think the U.S. toned down its own stand, after what seemed to be a bold start, to avoid any criticism in the campaign.

They think, in short, that we ran out on them instead of strongly backing them up when they mobilized troops and talked of using force, if necessary, to wrench the Suez Canal back out of Nasser's sole grasp and put it under international control.

They think we softened up for political reasons.

It is known that President Eisenhower has stated many times, and to Secretary of State Dulles, that political considerations here must have no place in our approach to foreign affairs.

I never missed an opportunity to tell this to our foreign friends and critics.

Probably few believed me. Few of them would work that way. Why, they think, should we?

But they're all interested in Ike.

Paul Miller recently

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Made a 10-day flying trip to London and Cairo to find out first-hand about the Suez crisis. He has compiled his observations into a series of five articles. Written "like a letter home," this informative new series will begin today in The Times-Union.

v. (B4/f23)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
Sunday, October 7, 1956

Letters to the Editor on . . . .
Why They Still Like Ike . . . . or Favor Adlai

She Likes Dick

Anybody but an optimistic Eisenhower would be scared to his death by the declarations such as those given out in the newspapers by Justin Wroe Nixon, Dean Margaret Habein and Sol Linowitz.

And what have they, specifically, against Dick Nixon?

I have never heard a criticism of him as presiding officer in the Senate. And he was credited with efficiency and modesty in his pinch-hitting when President Eisenhower was ill.

Thursday evening on TV, his answers to questions from newsmen all over the country were frank, fearless and confident.

Does Dr. (Justin) Nixon want to see a Democratic Congress with its most important committees again headed by veteran states-righters and Negroe-wrongers? Just now they are trying to prove that integration in the District of Columbia is unworkable and a failure.

RUTH L. GREENE

Pittsford

He Likes Adlai

MAY I express the views of an independent voter on one issue in this election. For years I have cast my vote for president, primarily on the issue of foreign policy. On that issue more than upon any other has it depended whether we would have enough order in the world for us to carry on satisfactorily our domestic life.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I voted for Dewey in ’48 and for Eisenhower in ’52 on this issue, believing that it was important for the Republicans to become responsible for our bipartisan foreign policy.

But now our foreign policy needs serious overhauling. The new developments in Russian policy alone call for it. What is called a “peace” is, to a considerable degree, chaos in a temporary equilibrium. The internal workings of the State Department where Scott McLeod, Senator McCarthy’s friend has a dominant position; our attitudes toward Germany, Japan and the neutral nations; our contacts with the Iron Curtain countries and China; and above all, the aims of our policy – all need candid and thorough re-appraisal.

In spite of the President’s fine character, the Eisenhower administration, if re-elected, cannot do this. It will be weakened in influence by the President’s ineligibility for re-election. It will be limited in maneuvering by the party’s powerful right wing which will not face the century we are living in. It will be tied to the personality and methods of Secretary Dulles who tries to handle everything himself.

No commission can do this re-appraising. Only a President can do it who is elected by all the people, and who will use the powers of his high office as Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson did, to appeal to the minds and hearts of our people for advance all along the line.

It is because I believe that Gov. Stevenson understands that this job needs to be done and is able and willing to do it, that I am for him.

JUSTIN WROE NIXON

93 Beverly St.

w. (B4/f23)

Democrat and Chronicle
October 8, 1956

Letters to the Editor
‘Adlai Is Not in Ike’s League’

EDITOR’S NOTE: Every letter must be signed with full name and address of the writer. In cases involving danger of severe personal hardship or questions of professional ethics, signatures may be withheld at our discretion. Space limitations may require editing of those letters which are printed; brevity by writers will be a guarantee of least possible editing.

IT beats me how a wonderful man, Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon, can get so much bum information as he makes clear HE has got in his letter in Sunday’s Democrat and Chronicle.

For example, he repeats that Scott McLeod has a “dominant position” in the State Department. This is not true. McLeod did a pretty good job in a very tough spot, but to say he is in a “dominant position” is to misrepresent.

*** * ***

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

THEN DR. NIXON is critical of Secretary Dulles for doing so much work himself. This can be argued either way, of course, and my guess is that those who yack about Dulles doing too much are, by and large, the same ones who say Eisenhower is a part-time president. They can't win.

Yet what a contrast from years past when the State Department wasn't even permitted to function. Secretary Stettinius once told me, in 1945, with the glee of a schoolboy, that President Roosevelt had decided henceforth to let his Secretary of State see "most" of the messages he, FDR, was exchanging with foreign powers! I take it that sort of operation suited Dr. Nixon.

Much of the remainder of his letter is the 1956 Democratic party line. It has been debated and debated and more of the same is to come.

Yet I must comment on Dr. Nixon's comparing Stevenson and Eisenhower.

Stevenson was a fine man in various secondary appointive jobs in Washington during and after the war. He became a good governor of Illinois. He means well.

* * *

BUT – the irresponsible charges and impossible promises Stevenson has got off in 1956 should have disqualified him in the minds of all of us as a candidate for president.

Stevenson is going to have more to apologize for, after he takes his licking on Nov. 6, than any campaigner for major public office since Tom Dewey in 1950.

Moreover, Stevenson personally is of course not in the same league with Ike. Perhaps few ever seriously contended he was, but it is a matter of opinion and Dr. Nixon is entitled to his.

One expects expressions like Dr. Nixon's from those who don't know or who have an axe to grind. A man who has to be in the public eye as much as Dr. Nixon ought to know the facts. I find it disappointing.

PAUL MILLER

5455 Clover St.
Pittsford

x. (B4/f23)

ROCHESTER SAVINGS BANK

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK

THOMAS H. HAWKS
PRESIDENT

October 9, 1956

2047

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Mr. Paul Miller
The Gannett Company
Times Square
Rochester 14, N. Y.

Dear Paul:

There have been many interesting and informative editorials and letters to the Editor appearing in the Democrat and Chronicle and the Times Union during the past several weeks. This, we all agree, is a very healthy thing, and I certainly hope they will continue throughout the balance of the campaign.

This letter is merely to tell you that I think one of the most outstanding letters was your reply in yesterday's Democrat to Dr. Nixon's letter which appeared on Sunday. True to your form it was a fine job, and I commend you.

Most sincerely,
Tom (signed)

THH/b

y. (B4/f23)

BAUSCH & LOMB OPTICAL CO.
ROCHESTER 2, NEW YORK

M. H. EISENHART
HONORARY CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

October 10, 1956

Mr. Paul Miller
Gannett Co., Inc.
55 Exchange Street
Rochester 14, New York

Dear Paul:

I am simply astounded at the attitude with regard to this election on the part of men like Justin Nixon. I have read his comments and reasons for voting for Stevenson and I do want to tell you how pleased I was to read your reply. I think you did a fine job.

How some of our so-called intellectuals, and particularly a minister, can even consider voting for Stevenson in contrast to President Eisenhower is beyond my imagination.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Keep up the good work!

Most sincerely,
Herb (signed)

MHE H

z. (B4/f23)

THE SENATE
STATE OF NEW YORK
ALBANY

GEORGE T. MANNING
52nd DISTRICT
CHAIRMAN
COMMITTEE ON EXCISE

October 10, 1956

Mr. Paul Miller
Managing Editor
Rochester Times Union
Rochester, New York

Dear Paul:

The "amens" that were surely sounded by thousands of Rochesterians after reading your letter to Dr. Nixon must still be reverberating!

Your reply was a masterpiece and bespoke eloquently many thoughts a lot of us have had and hesitated to voice because we were loath to tangle with the "cloth."

Nice work on a job that badly needed doing.

Sincerely,
George (signed)
George T. Manning

GTM:VM

aa. (B4/f23)

Democrat and Chronicle
October 10, 1956

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Letters to the Editor
Dr. Nixon Replies; Is Replied to!

EDITOR'S NOTE: Every letter must be signed with full name and address of the writer. In cases involving danger of severe personal hardship or questions of professional ethics, signatures may be withheld at our discretion. Space limitations may require editing of those letters which are printed; brevity by writers will be a guarantee of least possible editing.

I APPRECIATE the compliment when my friend Paul Miller, publisher of The Democrat and Chronicle, replies personally to my letter of Oct. 7 on the campaign. It is like seeing your opponents send in their first team when their goal is threatened.

The points Paul raises I must discuss very briefly. He accuses me of following the "Democrat party line." I suppose he is thinking of my reference to the Republican party's "powerful right wing which will not face the century we are living in." Let me say that if he will read Donovan's "Eisenhower: The Inside Story," he will find that the President himself has been worried about conditions within his party that grow out of the power of the conservative elements in it. At one time he even considered whether he should organize a new party.

* * *

MY REFERENCE to Secretary Dulles was no reflection on either his character or his intentions. I wrote a letter to the papers in his behalf when he ran against Senator Lehman. My point is now that he has become so identified with our policy as it is, that he can hardly reappraise himself.

Paul's main charge against me is that I have operated on the basis of "bum information." Let us see how "bum" it is, as tested by my reference to Scott McLeod's "dominant" position in the State Department which Paul says I "misrepresent."

I hold no brief for "dominant." "Highly influential" will do as well. Scott McLeod is of course a symbol of the influence of Senator McCarthy, the baleful effects of whose activities, as Senator Cain recently discovered, continue on after McCarthy has lost his personal prestige.

We had a devastating revelation of these effects on the State Department in the letter published on January 17, 1954, signed by five former ambassadors and career officials of the department, Norman Armour, Joseph Grew, R. W. Bliss, William Phillips and G. H. Shaw.

In its summary of the letter the New York Times said, "Attack seen aimed at Senator McCarthy and department security officer S. McLeod. Letter charges a foreign service officer reporting honestly may later find loyalty and integrity challenged." In my experience abroad last year (1955) I found confirmation of what these former State Department officials had said. Can we wonder that many of our able young people hesitate to seek employment in the department?

* * *

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

NO, AFTER rereading my letter in the light of Paul Miller's criticism I do not find anything substantial in it I want to withdraw. It is based on what I believe is adequate information. Nor do I have any "ax to grind" beyond seeing my country have a foreign policy that will help bring order in the world – a desire which goes back to experiences in France during the first World War.

I know that others will estimate both issues and candidates differently. And our political campaigns are such as to make the stoutest American heart quail. However, this is our American way, and after viewing some other ways, I am for ours.

But it is the business of independents to see to it that the big issues are not lost sight of in the political hassle. That is why I have lifted out the issue of foreign policy. I believe that a serious re-appraisal of our foreign policy is due, if we are to avoid the calamity of another great war.

With malice toward none and charity for all.

JUSTIN WROE NIXON

93 Beverly St.

bb. (B4/f23)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
October 11, 1956

Letters to Editor: Political Pot Comes to a Boil

Attention Letter Writers!

THIS page is happily engulfed in letters to the editor. We like them. We hope they keep coming. For the people are really speaking up.

But as in past election seasons, we now find it necessary to remind writers that there is no place for the wordy and long letter. We will edit all letters to a reasonable length consistent with our space, preserving as best we can the writer's main points. We confidently expect only agreement with this technique, for it is the only way to achieve fairness for all writers. And needless to say, brevity at the source will make editing unnecessary!

(1.) It is extremely difficult for me to understand how an outstanding Christian gentleman, scholar and statesman like Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon can enlist under the banner of Adlai Stevenson and sing and march to "Onward Christian Soldiers" beside Talmadge, Eastland and thousands of other Southern demagogues, reactionaries, rabble-rousers, hate-mongers, city bosses and racketeers.

Indeed, it puzzles me to understand how any ordinary Christian can support Stevenson so long as he cheerfully accepts and solicits such support in his campaign to become the President of the United States . . . .

C.T. LUNSFORD, M.D.
574 Clarissa St.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

(2.) The Language?

I am confident that Paul Miller, in his recent rejoinder to Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon, did not intend to show any disrespect to him, because in calling him "a wonderful man' Mr. Miller obviously meant to register his own sincere agreement with the high estimate in which Dr. Nixon is held by our community.

Nevertheless, it seems to me that Mr. Miller did unwittingly use in several instances "the language of disrespect" which detracted from the force of his letter as a whole, employing such phrases as "bum information," "to misrepresent," "those who yack about Dulles," and "much of the remainder of his letter is the 1956 Democrat party line."

Surely, Dr. Nixon, who has been widely known as a political independent, never as a follower of any party line, and who habitually makes a conscientious effort to inform himself before he speaks on any subject, deserves better treatment than the above phrases connote. Mr. Miller's letter could have been written hurriedly and under the strain of political emotion – a strain which most of us probably have to undergo whenever we prepare to exercise our right of suffrage.

Seldom are we for any one candidate 100% and zero percent for his opponent. The rivals may rate, in our judgment, more like 60% to 40% or even as closely as 51% to 49% -- but when we cast our ballot, we must vote 100% for the one and zero percent for the other and in order to make this necessarily distorted judgment, we have to call in the help of our emotions.

Perhaps a man who has to be in the public eye as much as Mr. Miller, may want to consider – not necessarily the logical content of his recent letter, but at least some of its disparaging connotations.

DAVID RHYS WILLIAMS
69 Highland Ave.

Editor's Note: Mr. Miller has been out of the city and out of reach for consultation. Therefore this is our own comment, not his. We think the Miller letter assailed Dr. Nixon's political thinking, not his person. And it is our own belief that when a cleric deals in politics he cannot expect to be protected by his cloth.

(3.) Ike Dedicated

On an evening news broadcast of Oct. 5, I heard Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon quoted as saying he was not only in favor of the policies professed by Mr. Stevenson, but that he did not want to see Mr. Richard Nixon become President.

What right has Dr. Nixon to assume that President Eisenhower is not going to live? As a religious leader doesn't Dr. Nixon believe in a higher power in the matter of life and death?

If Dr. Nixon voted for President Eisenhower in 1952 why doesn't he support him now . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The great majority of the people of our country and around the world know that President Eisenhower has dedicated his entire life to his country in war and in peace, always with an abiding faith in God . . . .

MRS. E. B. BROWN

57 Calumet St.

(4.) 'Ike Has Character'

Astonishment and dismay filled my heart after reading Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon's article in Sunday's Democrat and Chronicle.

As a church leader in this community one would naturally expect Dr. Nixon's endorsement of President Eisenhower because of his integrity, his active support and attendance at church services, his firm belief in prayer and open avowal of its use in governmental deliberations, his devotion to his family – in contrast to Mr. Stevenson's divorce – and his above board dealings and truthfulness. Any person with such a character and religious background deserves and should have the active support of all church people, whether Catholic, Jewish or Protestant.

One cannot build a golden age with men of lead . . . .

EDITH A. HAGLUND

9 Cypress St.

(5.) For Dr. Nixon

The opinions of Dr. Justin Wroe Nixon are well respected in Rochester as elsewhere. Evidence of this is in letters appearing in this column. One such letter comes from the very heart and head of The Democrat and Chronicle itself, Paul Miller (Oct. 8), in reaction to Prof. Nixon's published decision to support Adlai Stevenson for president (Oct. 7).

That Mr. Miller's response appeared so quickly is testimony enough to his respect, even if he had not called Dr. Nixon "a wonderful man."

Like many Rochesterians I not only appreciate Dr. Nixon's thinking, I seek it out. Hence, I am grateful for his considerate move in making his decision public. All who know Dr. Nixon know that he does not make decisions easily. He has gained our respect because of his own deep respect of evidence and his ability to weigh it carefully.

Mr. Miller claims that Dr. Nixon has been subjected to "much bum information." Yet, there is only one fact in Dr. Nixon's letter which he attempts to refute – Scott McLeod's position in the State Department.

Dr. Nixon's letter emphasizes "the issue of foreign policy." The three major objections he has to the Eisenhower administration in that regard are left untouched by Mr. Miller.

Though Mr. Miller admits that Dr. Nixon is entitled to his own opinion he ends his reply with the view that Dr. Nixon's opinion could only be expected from "those who have an axe to grind," and that he is disappointed that Dr. Nixon doesn't know the facts.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The clear implication is that if one knows the facts he is led to one clear-cut irrefutable decision. Only prejudice leads us to such decisions. A rational weighing of evidence demands an appreciation of at least two sides of an argument: a rational decision is invariably a compromise.

I am sure that if Dr. Nixon's full argument were known we would see that his decision has been hard earned – arrived at not through ignorance of the facts but careful evaluation of their import.

Those of us who consider our vote as "independent" are in great need of the rational thinking which Dr. Nixon represents whether we finally agree with him or not. There will be "wonderful men" voting both ways on Nov. 6. To make a decision surely does not mean ignorance of the facts!

J. A. SANDERS

191 Highland Parkway

cc. (B4/f23)

(2) PHOTOS:
1956-6 A
1956-6 B

PM and Vice President Richard M. Nixon, Rochester, N.Y., Oct. 17, 1956

[PM, Richard Nixon and 2 unidentified men]

3. 1957

a. (B4/f24)

(1.) In honor of
The President of the United States and Mrs. Eisenhower
and
The Vice President of the United States and Mrs. Nixon

The Inaugural Committee
requests the pleasure of the company of
Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller
at the

Inaugural Ball
Monday evening the twenty-first of January
One thousand nine hundred and fifty-seven
at nine o'clock
Washington, District of Columbia

(2.) In honor of

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Governors of the States
and
Special Distinguished Guests

The Inaugural Committee 1957
requests the pleasure of your company
at a Reception
Sunday afternoon the twentieth of January from three-thirty until six o'clock
at The Statler
in the City of Washington

(3.)

The honor of your presence is requested at the ceremonies attending the Inauguration of the President and Vice President of the United States
January twenty-first
Nineteen hundred fifty-seven

(4.) (2) PHOTOS:

1957 4a
1957 4b

Mrs. Walter Cronkite, Mr. Miller, Mrs. Miller & Mrs. Gannett
Inaugural Ball
Park Sheraton, Washington, D. C.
January 21, 1957

b. (B4/f27)
*****

Bay of Quinte COUNTRY CLUB LIMITED

BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO

Please . . . RAKE THE BUNKERS
and
REPLACE YOUR DIVOT

DICK NIXON – 94
CARL HALLAUER – 102
HARRY BYRD – 116

2055

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Signed Paul Miller (signed)
Attested Dick Nixon (signed)
Date 7 / 6 – 57

c. (B4/f28)

(18) PHOTOS:

1957-3 A-Q +1

d. (B7/f3)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
March 8, 1957

Probes and No-Fear Politics

- - - Will 'Liberalism' Last? . . Dulles and His Critics

By PAUL MILLER

Kennedy, Nixon – and 1960

The Republicans – Modern Republicans, that is – appear set to out-Deal the Dealers in the drive to elect Vice President Nixon as president in 1960.

The Democrats – Modern Democrats, that is – are fighting to keep the GOP out of the "liberal" position.

Democratic Senator John Kennedy of Massachusetts predicted this week that Dick Nixon will be the 1960 Republican nominee and "hard to beat." Hence, young Kennedy seemed to urge, the Democrats need to hustle up some giveaways and get ahead again in this contest which nobody minds but us taxpayers.

Kennedy didn't put it quite that way. He said:

"Congressional Democrats must shape a responsible progressive record with deeds that match our words. For it is precisely this gap between rhetoric and the record that casts doubt on the new liberalism of the Republicans."

Kennedy is one of the comers in American politics. He's only 39, smart, personable and wealthy. He'll be very much in the 1960 picture himself, likely for vice president . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

d. (B4/f28)

Rochester Times-Union
Friday Evening, July 5, 1957

PHOTO
Captions

Vice President Relaxes on Lake Ontario

Vice President Richard M. Nixon came quietly into Rochester today to join Publisher Paul Miller in a weekend of relaxation on Lake Ontario. Plans included fishing and golf. The vice president (right) and the president of The Gannett Newspapers are shown about to set sail from the Rochester Yacht Club.

e. (B4/f28)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
July 6, 1957

PHOTO
Caption:

HERE TO RELAX – Vice President Richard M. Nixon is pictured with Publisher Paul Miller, president of The Gannett Newspapers, at Rochester Yacht Club yesterday before they boarded a boat for weekend cruise on Lake Ontario. Trip is strictly for relaxation purposes, will include fishing [and] golf.

f. (B4/f28)

Rochester Times-Union
Monday Evening, July 8, 1957

(1.)

Nixon Gives Rights Bill Good Chance

Vice President Visitor here; Makes Canada Cruise

By KERMIT HILL

Vice President Richard M. Nixon, a visitor here, today gave the Eisenhower administration's controversial civil rights bill "a good chance" of getting through the Senate at the current session.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The measure, which passed the House of Representatives last month by a 286-126 vote, was due to come up in the Senate today. It is expected to touch off a showdown fight and possibly the longest Southern fili[buster] . . . .

Nixon, a staunch supporter of the bill, commented to a reporter:

"I believe there is a good chance the Senate will pass a civil rights bill at this session. Of course, there will be a lot of discussion – I won't call it a filibuster."

"We are not rigid," he stated, "but generally speaking, we feel the bill in its present form is moderate and would not cause the violent reaction which some of its opponents talk about."

He said no amendment has been summited to the administration yet for its approval. Sen. O'Mahoney (D-Wyo) has announced he is preparing an amendment which would provide for the right of jury trial in cases of civil rights offenses prosecuted by the federal government. Nixon said he could not comment on any amendment which has not been submitted formally to the Senate.

*** * ***

THE VICE PRESIDENT offered his hopeful evaluation of the measure's chances as he prepared to tee-off on Oak Hill Country Club's east course for a final round of golf before returning to Washington.

Nixon, guest of Paul Miller, president of The Gannett Newspapers, spent the weekend sailing on Lake Ontario and golfing and sightseeing on the Canadian side. He golfed Saturday and Sunday after a sail across the lake through choppy waters.

The party, which included Carl S. Hallauer, president of Bausch and Lomb Optical Co., Rex Smith, American Airlines executive, and Harry F. Byrd Jr., son of Virginia's senator, made unannounced visits to several spots, including Picton, Ont. Hallauer said when Nixon was recognized there the mayor and a delegation of Picton residents showed up with syrup, cheese and other gifts from the community.

Nixon went unrecognized in some places. At one spot, a waiter stepped up to the table and asked:

"By any chance are you the vice president of the United States?"

When Nixon confirmed his identity, the waiter hurried to the kitchen, returning shortly to report that other employes [sic] of the establishment didn't believe the U.S. vice persident [sic] was a customer. Nixon accompanied the waiter to the kitchen to greet the workers.

The party was returned to Rochester at 9:30 a.m. today in a flight in the Gannett Newspapers airplane piloted by Russell F. Holderman, chief pilot. Holderman met the party at the Royal Air Force station in Trenton, Ont. On landing here, the group unloaded golf clubs and headed immediately for Oak Hill Country Club.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The vice president rode to the country club with Mrs.

(Please turn to Page 10)

Nixon Winds Up Holiday with Golf

(Continued from Page 1)

Frank Gannett, who met the party at the airport.

* * *

SURPRISED GOLFERS and a number of youngsters crowded around the vice president as he alighted at Oak Hill. Several women golfers asked him to sign their golf score cards.

Nixon, dressed in a yellow knit golf shirt and pearl gray slacks, flashed the famous campaign smile as he waved to caddies and golfers on the club grounds. He borrowed a No. 5 wood from Charles McKenna, club golf professional.

The vice president displayed a talent for putting on the practice green adjacent to the clubhouse. He dropped in three out of three four-footers and two out of three five-footers before heading for the first tee. He recalled that the world's top golfing talent played last year's National Open over the rolling, lush green east course.

A flip of the coin paired Nixon with Hallauer in the foursome. Miller and Byrd paired up for the round.

After Byrd and Miller each drove off, taking a second ball – a "Mulligan" – after poor first drives, Nixon stepped to the tee. About thirty [or] forty spectators stood around watching as he lined up his ball. The vice president took an easy swing, driving a straight drive that soared over the 200-yard marker. Hallauer followed with a shorter, straight drive down the middle of the fairway.

Nixon was scheduled to return to Washington this evening after a reception at the Miller home on Clover road, Pittsford.

(2.) (2) PHOTOS

Captions:

OAK HILL golf course appealed to Nixon, here putting on third green of East Course. He liked it so well he extended to 18 what was to have been 9 hole game.

GREETING from Mrs. Frank Gannett is given Vice President Nixon at Roch-Ester-Monroe County Airport, after weekend of yachting, golfing, sightseeing.

(3.) Ike Beats Him At Golf – Nixon

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Vice President Nixon shoots in the high 80s on the golf course but he's usually not good enough to beat President Eisenhower, he disclosed today.

The President shoots in the low 80s, Nixon said. The President seldom discloses his golf score, which is a subject of much speculation among golfers.

"The President is at least three or four strokes better than I am," Nixon said. "He has broken 80 on occasion."

g. (B4/f28)

*****

Democrat and Chronicle
Tuesday, July 9, 1957

Nixon Appraises Purge As 'Struggles for Power,' Warns of Optimism

By BILL BEENEY

Vice President Richard M. Nixon, appraising the political purges in Russia as "an internal struggle for power," yesterday cautioned against a too optimistic evaluation of the Kremlin shakeup.

"We would be naïve to think that the political changes indicate any change in the basic direction of Soviet policy or any softening of the Soviet line of world conquest," Nixon said in an interview here.

"What we are seeing is an internal struggle for power. Khrushchev is simply getting rid of his potential rivals, and we are likely to see more rather than less dictatorship in the future. Khrushchev will be, even more than in the past, the man who calls the signals."

'Not Going Too Well'

But the Moscow maneuvers do indicate, said the vice president, "that things have not been going too well in the Soviet Union or the satellite countries."

The interview was conducted in serene and cloudless skies over Lake Ontario aboard The Gannett Newspapers plane as it brought Nixon and four companions back to Rochester yesterday morning after a weekend of relaxation and golfing in Canada.

With him were his host, Paul Miller, a long-time personal friend and president of The Gannett Newspapers; Carl S. Hallauer, president of Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.; Harry F. Byrd Jr., a state senator in Virginia and son of U.S. Senator Harry Byrd; and Rex Smith, vice president of American Airlines.

'Took Life Easy'

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The group, concerned strictly with "a few days of relaxation," left Rochester quietly last Friday by boat for a cruise in Lake Ontario. They played golf Saturday and Sunday at the Bay of Quinty [sic], Ont., Canada, "took life easy the rest of the time," and returned to tangle with Oak Hill Country Club's East Course. Nixon and Byrd flew back to Washington last night. Smith flew to California where he has a speaking date today.

Tanned, as trim as a new sailboat, and looking refreshed after what he said was his first weekend off "in a long while," Nixon settled back in his airplane seat and offered his opinions on a variety of subjects:

On the controversial civil rights legislation now before the Senate:

"I believe there's a good chance that some civil rights legislation will be acted upon by the Senate at the current session. You can't tell what direction the debate will take until we get to that point."

On Rep. Kenneth B. Keating and Rep. Harold C. Ostertag:

"Ken and I went into the House together in 1947. I've known and admired him for 10 years. He has reached a position of top leadership in the House, is one of the most articulate spokesmen for the administration, and is considered to be one of the most 'solid' of our Congressmen.

"In my opinion, Ken would be a strong candidate for any office for which he might run.

"Harold Ostertag has made a very favorable impression in the House. He has done a fine job; he is, in contrast to some men who might be considered

Continued on Page 19

Nixon Appraises Purge of Russian Leaders

Continued from Page 17

'one-termers,' the kind of a man who should be able to remain in the House as long as he wants the job."

On government spending:

"There has been a great deal of concern about the budget, and defense spending. The answer is that we must, of course, do the job as economically as we can. But we MUST do it. We can't afford to weaken our own defenses – particularly at this time of Russian unrest.

"I don't accept the theory that government spending is needed for a prop to business.

"Once the international situation is such that we can safely make cuts in government spending for defenses, we ought to do so. It is better for the economic health of the country to have individuals spending more and government spending less. Unfortunately, there seem to be no prospects in the immediate future for decreased defense spending."

On income taxes:

"The present level of taxes is not one that should be continued unless it is needed. When we can reduce them, we should. I'm speaking of individual income taxes as well as corporation taxes."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

On the American economy:

"There has been too much pessimistic talk about how much goods the American economy can absorb. The pessimists have always been proved wrong. I don't see any ceiling to our economy.

"The rest of the world is growing, too. Asia, Africa and South America are just waking to their potential. They are beginning to produce goods we can use and are developing the need for products we can sell them. The world's economy has a tremendous potential. I believe we will see a great increase in America's markets abroad for many years to come."

On U.S. boom-and-bust possibilities:

"Ours, being a free economy, will have its ups and downs. But I believe that the violence of those upturns and downturns will be greatly cushioned in the future by the government techniques which have been developed.

"I don't see any possibility of a major depression."

In Positive Fashion

Nixon answers questions carefully yet unhesitatingly. He talks straight-from-the-shoulder in terms that leave no room for misunderstanding. Affable, smiling, he nonetheless concentrates thoughtfully on every question, frames his answers in positive fashion.

He was dressed in vacation style, wearing a bright yellow short-sleeved shirt and gray flannel slacks when he boarded the plane at the Royal Air Force station in Trenton, Ont. The boat was brought back to the Rochester Yacht Club by its crew.

As for the vice president's golf, it's in the late 80s. "I never swung a club until 1951," he admitted. "And I don't get as much chance to play now as I'd like to." But he is a serious linksman.

At Oak Hill, where an impromptu gallery congregated at the first tee to watch the foursome – Nixon and Hallauer, paired after a coin toss against Miller and Byrd – hit off, the vice president passed up his chance to take a "Mulligan" (a second tee shot). With good reason: His drive was straight and true, 210 yards down the middle of the fairway. He caught the creek in front of the green when he hooked his second, but came out with a six.

Played in Showers

Throughout the round, the latter part of which was played through brief, intermittent showers, Nixon was in the 200-yard vicinity off the tees, but his putter was misbehaving on Oak Hill's slick greens, and he settled for a 92. That included three strokes lost to the creek, and unfamiliarity with the course could be blamed for a few other shots, although the vice president didn't alibi – he was happy enough with the round "except for that darned putting." And he was lavish in his praise for the course: "It's a tough one all right, but a real challenge. And beautiful."

The "match" officially wound up "all even," because Hallauer had to leave after the first nine holes were played, and his place was shared on the second nine by his son-in-law, Arnie Johnson, for four holes, then Russell Holderman,

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Gannett pilot, for the last five holes. Miller was the low man in the foursome with an 88.

At Oak Hill, as at the golf club in Canada, Nixon obligingly signed autographs and shook hands with scores of folks who stepped up to say hello. Before leaving Oak Hill to attend a reception at Miller's home in Clover Road, Pittsford, the vice president stopped to talk with a number of young people who were at the course, and chatted with the caddies at the request of one of their number who, earlier, had advised Nixon that "the caddies would sure like to meet you Mr. Vice President."

Nixon's bagtoter, 17-year-old Liddon Bullock, of 288 Baden St., said: "He's a wonderful man, all right. And a pretty good golfer, too."

Without Bodyguards

This was the first trip the vice president has made "in several years," he said, without a Secret Service bodyguard. He experienced no difficulty, and in Canada – where his visit was entirely unofficial and unannounced – the reception from those who met him was a high point of the weekend.

The mayor of Picton, Ont., where the group stopped, brought gifts of maple syrup and cheese. At the City Hotel in Belleville, the group sat [at] a corner table when one man in the room, after eyeing Nixon for several minutes, approached and said: "Mister, have you ever been mistaken for the Vice President of the United States? You sure look like him."

Nixon nodded, said he could understand that because he was the vice president. The man who had asked him was convinced, went back to report his findings to his companions. But they having looked on in obvious doubt, were unconvinced. Nor were they converted while the group was present. "I've seen those fellows who look like somebody else before," was the way one man dismissed the incident.

(3) PHOTOS
Captions:

THOUGHTFUL FORE-SOME – Preparing to tackle Oak Hill's East Course yesterday, Vice President Richard M. Nixon, right, and his playing partners consider the task confronting them. Others from left: carl S. Hallauer, president of Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.; Harry F. Byrd Jr., Virginia state senator, and Paul Miller, president of The Gannett Newspapers. Miller's son, Kenper, is standing next to him. Nixon was a guest of Miller over the last weekend.

TRAP TROUBLES – Vice President Richard M. Nixon explodes from trap on second hole of East Course. He shot a 92, found course "tough but wonderful."

AUTOGRAPHER – The Vice president's autograph was sought by many folks yesterday – and graciously given to Mrs. Ray H. Larrabee, right, Mrs. Francis Collins.

h. (B4/f28)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

*

The Picton Times
Picton, Ontario
Tuesday, July 9, 1957

Vice-President of United States Visits Picton

A surprise visitor to Picton on Saturday evening was United States Vice-President Richard Nixon. Mr. Nixon arrived at Prince Edward Yacht Club dock aboard the huge sailing yacht "Widgeon" of Rochester, N.Y. Accompanied by Paul Miller, president of Gannett newspapers, and Carl Hallauer, president Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., both of Rochester, he walked uptown and covered the business district on foot. Returning to the Yacht Club, he chatted with a group of Picton children and signed autographs . . . .

i. (B4/f27)

Editor & Publisher
July 13, 1957

Nixon on Cruise

ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Paul Miller, president of Gannett Newspapers, entertained Vice President Richard M. Nixon on a weekend cruise aboard the Gannett yacht on Lake Ontario. Golfing stops were made at Canadian and New York links. Also in the party were Harry F. Byrd Jr., editor of the Winchester (Va.) Star; Carl S. Hallauer, president of Bausch and Lomb Optical Co., and Rex Smith, American Airlines executive.

j. (B7/f5)

*

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, July 20, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Will Sen. Ives Run Again?
It Could Be Ken Keating

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Backseat for McCahill and Miller

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Almost any story about photographs – even one highly personal – must be appropriate in Rochester.

This one concerns a weekend with Charles F. McCahill, former Rochester publisher, now an executive of the Cleveland News and the Plain Dealer.

* * *

HE WAS TELLING, even while driving us to his home from the airport, about the Kodak color picture he'd made of the Pope on a Vatican visit a few weeks ago. He was proudly showing it before we'd unpacked.

I had along some prints of pictures made of Vice President Nixon on his visit to Rochester a week ago. I promptly produced them.

Charlie McCahill was polite, but it was clear that he was a bit condescending when he suggested that he'd take his picture and I could bring the Nixon shots to a dinner with some friends.

* * *

WE'D SCARCELY ARRIVED and joined three or four other couples when Mr. McCahill said, "Paul, they'd probably like to see our pictures before dinner." As I began opening the photo envelope, another guest, a Clevelander I'd just met, reached for his inside coat pocket.

"That reminds me," he said quietly. I just happen to have a picture with me that you all might like to see."

He passed it around. One look, and Messrs. McCahill and Miller were ready to concede defeat.

The picture exhibited by our friend, taken last spring on the front steps of his Georgia place, showed him and his wife greeting distinguished visitors for lunch – President and Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

k. (B4/f28)

*****

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
August 17, 1957

Millers Invited To Nixon Party

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16 (GNS) – The Vice President and Mrs. Nixon sent out invitations today for a reception at their new home on Tuesday evening honoring Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller of Rochester . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

l. (B4/f28)

Rochester Times-Union
August 19, 1957

Nixons to Honor
Mr., Mrs. Miller

Times-Union's Own Bureau

WASHINGTON – The Vice President and Mrs. Nixon have sent out invitations for a reception at their new home on tomorrow evening honoring Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller of Rochester. Miller is president of the Gannett Co.

Nixon's office said that a number of Miller's newspaper friends in Washington are being invited.

m. (B4/f28)

Rochester Times-Union
August 21, 1957

Nixons Fete
Mr. and Mrs.
Paul Miller

Times-Union's Own Bureau

WASHINGTON – The Vice President and Mrs. Nixon entertained at home last night with a reception for Mr. and Mrs. Paul M. Miller of Rochester. Miller is president of Gannett Co., Inc.

The party was attended by approximately 40 newspaper men and their wives, most of them old friends from the days when Miller served in Washington as chief of the Associated Press bureau during World War II.

The Millers received guests with the Nixons at the front door.

Nixon took the guests on a personally conducted tour of the vice president's new home, showing his collection of gifts from the heads of states in countries the Nixons have visited in Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

*** * ***

FOLLOWING THE RECEPTION, THE Millers dined with the Nixons and Mr. and Mrs. B.M. McKelway at the Metropolitan Club. McKelway is editor of the Washington Evening Star.

Miller played golf in a foursome with the vice president this morning at the Burning Tree Country Club.

n. (B4/f28)
*****

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

The Washington Post
Wednesday, August 21, 1957

Stitches Saved Sophia's Day
A Sneeze Was Not Her Undoing

By Maxine Cheshire

STATUESQUE Sophia Loren finally met a man who made her "feel small" when introduced to six-footer Sen. Jack Kennedy (D-Mass.) yesterday, but he shook hands and bolted out of camera range before they could get acquainted.

"If that shy young man didn't want his picture taken with me, then why did he come HERE?" she inquired, gesturing toward a mob scene of jostling photographers and leering admirers who jammed the Italian Embassy for a late afternoon reception in her honor. Sen. Kennedy's bashful behavior left her with a puzzled expression on her face, in view of the fact that crowds of other Congressmen had been stepping on each others [sic] toes to have their meeting with the film star recorded by the cameras.

Sophia's first reaction was to pout good-naturedly. "I feel so small," she told Sen. Kennedy's less-reticent and also tall companion, Sen. George Smathers (D-Fla.). But she didn't mean her ego had been deflated. Buckling her knees, she stooped to something like 5 feet and added: "I have to look up to him. All afternoon , I have been looking down at everybody else" . . . .

SOPHIA even figured, indirectly, at a reception given yesterday by Vice President and Mrs. Richard M. Nixon in their Forest Lane home for friends in the newspaper world. Guests of honor Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller and other newsmen and their wives watched the Nixon's daughter, Tricia open a box containing two Italian dolls sent to her and her sister, Julie, by the film star.

It was part of the tour of the Nixon's new and spacious Wesley Heights home which the Millers and other guests were given. Old friends of the Nixons since the days when Miller was chief of the Washington Bureau, he and Mrs. Miller were in town from Rochester, N. Y., where he's president of the Gannett News Service.

Besides the dolls from Sophia Loren, Tricia Nixon proudly exhibited a litter of 3 small kittens, two days old . . . .

o. (B4/f28)

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle
August 22, 1957

Nixon Reception
In Capital Home
Honors Millers

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21 (GNS) -- Vice President and Mrs. Nixon entertained at home last night with a reception for Mr. and Mrs. Miller of Rochester.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

This morning Miller played golf at the Burning Tree Club in a foursome including the vice president; William P. Rogers, deputy attorney general, and Rep. Jack Westland (R-Wash), a former national amateur national golfing champion. The reception was attended by approximately 40 newspapermen and their wives, most of them old friends from the days when Miller served in Washington as chief of the Associated Press Bureau during World War II.

Following the reception, the Millers dined at the Metropolitan Club with the Nixons and Mr. and Mrs. B. M. McKelway and Mr. and Mrs. Walker Stone. McKelway is editor of the Washington Evening Star and Stone is editor in chief of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

p. (B4/f28)

*****

Hartford Times
August 22, 1957

Nixons Give Reception for Gannett Chief

From the Times Bureau

Washington – Vicepresident and Mrs. Nixon entertained at home Tuesday night with a reception for Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller of Rochester . . . .

Tuesday, Mr. Miller called on Senator William F. Knowland (R-Calif.), GOP floor leader, and Senator Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.), a Democratic leader, at the Capitol.

Wednesday he met with Senators Irving M. Ives and Jacob K. Javits, and Representatives Kenneth B. Keating and Harold C. Ostertag of the Rochester area. All are New York Republicans.

Mr. Miller had lunch at the Metropolitan Club with Sam P. Gilstrap, director of the Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs at the State Department.

q. (B4/f28)

August 23, 1957

Private Memorandum - - Nixon Visit

When he left here, after his Rochester visit in July, Vice President Nixon told me he had never had a better time in his life. He said he wanted to try to repay it in some way. However, I never expected him to go quite as far as he did when Louise and I were in Washington Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

He and Mrs. Nixon had asked to give a reception for us at their new home in Wesley Heights, not very far from our old Spring Valley home in Washington, and we had, of course, said this would be wonderful and we would enjoy it very much. The reception was arranged for Tuesday evening, August 20.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

I had arranged to work in a number of appointments in connection with our Washington trip, starting at 2:30 p.m. Tuesday, shortly after we arrived down there. This first appointment was with Senator Knowland of California who, of course, is a much older friend than Vice President Nixon. Indeed, I believe Bill Knowland introduced me to Dick Nixon at Chicago in 1952. Anyway, I had a very good visit with Senator Knowland. He has planned an arduous speaking trip throughout California the latter part of September and continuing into October; thereafter, he will announce his candidacy for Governor of California. He plans, of course, I believe, to be a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination in 1960, if all goes well in his race for California and the ensuing administration.

Louise and I went to [the] Nixons' home, which really is quite similar to our former Washington home, a little early so that we could have a visit before the guests began to arrive and make our plans for receiving, etc.

Both the Nixons met us at the front door and we all went on a tour of the house; they showed us how they have been redecorating and fixing it up – they have been in it only a few months. It has a large center hall leading straight out to steps that go down to a big screened-in porch overlooking a back lawn that slopes down to the woods. There is no house back of them for some distance. Moreover, they are on a dead-end street on a circle with two other homes, and so have much more privacy than they had at their old house.

Off the center hall to the left is a stairway and, under that, stairs leading to a full basement, which includes a rumpus room and bar, and a utility room. Double doors to the dining room lead off the center hall to the left between the front stairway and the back porch. To the right of the center hall, just inside the entrance, is a sunken living room, quite large. Doors lead on to the back porch from the living room and also to a small study back of the fireplace at one end of the living room. I am not going to go into detail about the whole house. I just wanted to give you this general idea of the first floor layout, which, as you can see, opens up beautifully and will enable them to entertain large groups such as they had for us without any problem. The house is of stone and stucco, with a slate roof.

They had about forty members of the Gridiron Club and their wives, 70 or 80 in all. In addition to Gridiron Club members, they had invited at my request the Walker Stones, the Paul Martins and, of course, Jean and Larry Smith. Larry and Jean happily came a little early also and joined us on the tour.

It was great fun, of course, to see all of our old friends for a couple of hours. We had learned, meantime, that dinner had been arranged in a room at the Metropolitan Club downtown for the McKelways (editor of Washington Star) and the Stones (editor-in-chief of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers) added to the Nixons and Millers – eight of us.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

After the cocktail party broke up, the Nixons and their 11-year old daughter 'Tricia and Louise and I sat down to review the doings on the back porch for awhile before going down to the Metropolitan Club. When we arrived down there, in the Nixon's [sic] limousine – the driver turned out to be one I had known when he was chauffer for old Tom Connolly years ago – we found the Stones and the McKelways waiting and everything all set in a beautifully appointed room, the Anderson room. We had a very pleasant evening and still got back to the Statler at a decent hour – something I had planned for the reason that Dick had arranged for his car to pick me up at 8:15 the following morning, Wednesday, and I didn't want to be tired with that early morning golf match coming up.

I got up and got out on time, to find the car – license number 111 – waiting. Dick was all set when we got to the Nixon house. We were at Burning Tree a little before 9:00. He had invited Jack Westland, now serving his third term as congressman from Everett, Washington, and a former national golf champion, and William P. Rogers, Deputy Attorney General of the United States, also a good golfer. We had a little coffee while we were getting into our golf things and matched to see who would play whom and for how much. As it wound up, Bill Rogers, who is a friend of mine, and I teamed up against Nixon and Westland. On the basis of our handicaps, Westland (a scratch player) figured I should get four strokes a side. That's the way we played.

I have played Burning Tree many times before and often have got into trouble in the woods along the narrow fairways. On Wednesday morning, happily, I started off well and was never in any major difficulty all the way 'round. Indeed, I played the best golf I have played all year. Happily, too, the same was true of both Dick Nixon and Bill Rogers. Westland had a 37 on the first nine, but played the kind of golf he is noted for on the second to get a 34, a 71 total. Dick had 84, Bill 80, and I an 82. All of us were very pleased to have done as well as we did, even including Westland, I guess, and we had a wonderful time in perfect weather, except that Bill Rogers had to answer the phone a time or two on the Civil Rights matter – he is Acting Attorney General in the absence in London of Herb Brownell.

We finished our round a little after 1 and I had a luncheon engagement with Sam Gilstrap, a former college roommate from Oklahoma who now is head of the department of Far Eastern Affairs at the State Department. I rode up to the Capitol from Burning Tree with Dick Nixon in his car, so that we could get in a little more talk. Then he let me have his car and I went down to the Metropolitan Club to meet Gilstrap. Rex Smith of American Airlines happened to be in town and he was along also, with Walker Stone; four of us.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

After lunch, thanks to the help of Paul Martin in making some speedy arrangements, I called on the Rochester Congressmen, both New York Senators, and also looked in on the Hoffa hearing for the better part of an hour before joining Louise back at the Statler for dinner with Jean and Larry Smith and the Stones.

So much for a long-winded resume, which I have put down for my own edification as much as for that of anyone else.

Summing up, we were very much impressed with the Nixons in their new home – Louise particularly – by the way they are trying to raise their two little girls and by the way Mrs. Nixon runs her house, with no more help than Louise has. Indeed, I believe she doesn't have any full time permanent help at the moment. They had caterers in for our party and Nixon's aide helped on the door. As for my personal views of Nixon, I believe he is the best campaigner the Republicans have had for many years, and has grown a very great deal indeed, as of course he should have, in recent years. I also think a great deal of Bill Knowland and was pleased to see Bill looking in better health and spirits than I have seen him in two or three years.

PM

r. (B4/f28)

MUNICIPALITY OF THE
TOWN OF PICTON
MAYOR'S OFFICE

September 13th, 1957

Mr. Paul Miller, President,
The Gannett Newspapers,
Rochester 14, New York.

Dear Mr. Miller: –

I take pleasure in enclosing some copies of photographs that were taken during your recent trip to the County of Prince, Town of Picton; taken at the Prince Edward Yacht Club when you had as your guest here Vice-President Nixon.

I trust these will be of interest to you, and I have also forwarded other copies to Vice-President Nixon which I trust he will receive in good order.

With kind personal regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,

2071

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

MUNICIPALITY OF THE TOWN OF PICTON,
H J McFarland (signature)
H. J. MCFARLAND

MAYOR.

HJM:nf

Encls.

s. (B4/f28)

Rochester Times-Union
Monday, August 26, 1957

Sports Gossip

* * *

Cot Deal Now Knows How Reds, Cards Pilots Feel

By MATT JACKSON
Times-Union Sports Editor

Manager Cot Deal of the Rochester Red Wings, Birdie Tebbetts of the Cincinnati Reds and Freddie Hutchinson of the St. Louis Cardinals have something in common . . . The trio have seen their charges collapse in the stretch drive . . . If such things prove nothing else, they vouch for the honesty of the national pastime.

Deals' club has lost seven in a row and 12 of the last 15 contests . . . It will take something like a major miracle if the Wings go all the way to the playoffs . . . But Deal, in his misery has company . . . Take the St. Louis Cardinals. . . . A few weeks ago the team was leading the league, then nine (count 'em) straight losses just about wrote the swan song of the Cards' pennant chances.

But the fellow who really must be suffering is Tebbetts, boss of the Redlegs . . . His charges have lost 12 of the last 13 contests . . . It is practically the same team that battled down to the wire with the Brooklyn Dodgers and the Milwaukee Braves last year.

* * *

CONGRESSMAN JACK WESTLAND, a former national amateur champion (1952), proved that a tour of duty in the capital need not ruin a golfer with outstanding talents.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Westland paired with Vice President Richard Nixon against Deputy Attorney General William P. Rogers and Times-Union publisher Paul Miller at Burning Tree Club, Bethesda, Md., last Wednesday, shot a one-under par 71.

> "It was just about perfect golf," stated Miller . . . Westland had four bogies on the front nine, recorded a birdie and had an eagle 3 on the par 5 9th hole . . . Then, coming back, he had two more birdies to go with seven pars. Rogers had an 80, Miller an 82 and Nixon an 84.

t. (B4/f28)

Editor & Publisher
August 31, 1957

Reception for Millers

WASHINGTON

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller of Rochester, N. Y. were entertained by Vice President Richard M. Nixon and Mrs. Nixon Aug. 21. The Millers stood at the front door with the Nixons to receive guests, about 40 newspapermen and their wives whom Mr. Miller knew when he headed the AP bureau in Washington. Mr. Miller is president of the Gannett Company.

u. (B7/f6)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, October 26, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Week of Good News --All Around the World

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Notes from a Day at Washington

The administration appears content (though amid many dissents within ranks) to undertake no major defense shakeup to put more emphasis on missiles.

The ruling thinking seems to be that Secretary McElroy, new defense boss, as one of the best propagandists for soap while at Proctor and Gamble, can improve public relations for the Pentagon. And there's always the hope that our scientists may themselves pass a miracle soon.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Others feel a prompt reappraisal and realignment is indicated – Vice President Nixon, for example, of whom the Wall Street Journal reported:

"His (Nixon's) view of the Russian missile developments, while by no means alarmist, is definitely a more serious one than that suggested by the official statements in Washington. By implication at least he suggested there should be some changes in the allocation of funds and efforts of the defense program toward more research and development of new weapons, always with an eye on the government's fiscal integrity."

I believe the public at large holds with Nixon, is distressed at administration failure to react with strong measures (though heartened by Secretary McElroy's more-information policy), still hopes for something in line with Nixon's reported thinking.

Meanwhile, it seems likely that there will be a thorough but private investigation of the entire defense program by the full Armed Services Committee of the Senate.

There are hints, though, that we have hope of some surprise developments on our side before too long that will be encouraging and reassuring to the United States – and bad news to the Soviets.

v. (B7/f7)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
November 9, 1957

AS I SEE IT

A Public relations Lesson: Tell Truth, Frankly and Fully

By PAUL MILLER

. . . The Man They WON"T Forget

The Democrats now find themselves with about as many potential presidential candidates as New York has possible Republican candidates for governor.

New Jersey's Governor Meyner received a big push in his re-election victory last Tuesday.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Already much in the picture were Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts, Senator Kefauver of Tennessee, Governor Williams of Michigan and Senator Symington of Missouri; plus, and don't write him off, twice-defeated or not, Adlai Stevenson.

None of these is a clear standout. A free-for-all is the 1960 Democratic convention prospect . . . .

*** * ***

AGAINST THE RASH of Democratic presidential hopefuls, Vice President Nixon rates a clear standout in the GOP. He is the best campaigner the Republicans have had in years – a reputation not dimmed by the trouncing Jersey Republicans took this week despite two days of speech-making by Nixon.

Republican politicians the nation over will not soon forget that Nixon had the courage to go in and fight for a Republican candidate few gave much of a chance.

. . . Missile Double-take

The Eisenhower administration clearly did a double-take in the missiles field. Only two weeks ago, top strategy was reported to be:

Sit tight, let the new defense secretary, Mr. McElroy, improve the information and publicity program; and see what comes from the inevitable congressional investigations.

There were those at Washington who did not think this adequate. They wanted a dramatic move by the President after Sputnik I. But they felt they getting scant encouragement before Sputnik II.

There is no way to assess the effect of the Sputniks on the elections, if any. It is apparent, however, that the country at large wanted something more than it was getting from the President himself prior to his Thursday night statement.

The question still not answered fully by the administration, and certain to be raised repeatedly from here on, is: How did Uncle Sam get behind Russia in the first place?

v. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, November 23, 1957

AS I SEE IT

Missiles, Moons, Moscow: The Questions and Answers

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

By PAUL MILLER

Not since wartime have Americans been beset and bedeviled by more urgent questions and concerns than have flooded in upon us since the Sputniks:

1. Why did we get behind Russia, anyway?

2. Can we catch up?

3. What is the real significance of the Soviet moons?

These are a few.

Beginning with them, this week's column will encompass a series of pertinent questions being raised today – with answers it has been possible to obtain from some in a position to know in science, education, business and government.

Answer to No. 1: We made a calculated decision to concentrate on long-range bombers. The Russians built bombers but they went ahead on long-range missiles, too.

And No. 2. Yes, But what worries some is whether we have the kind of "Buck Rogers" research going in other areas also. Weather, for example. The Russians are working hard there. If they learn to control weather, even over limited areas, the threat could be worse than the missiles.

No. 3. That the Soviets could now probably put The Bomb on Rochester, N.Y. via missile rather than by plane.

*** * ***

SOME OTHER QUESTIONS:

Q. How long before Sputnik did U.S. government agencies know the Russians would be capable of launching a satellite in 1957?

A. Perhaps as much as 15 months before the event which was Oct. 4, 1957.

Why Were We Beaten?

Q. Then how come we didn't move faster, ourselves, in anticipation of the Russian launching?

A. We didn't comprehend the implications or the shock Sputnik would produce in the Free World. Actually, anybody who could read the newspapers, and remember, knew how Russia was progressing. We did not "integrate the totality" of their effort.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Q. Khrushchev says the big bombers might as well be scrapped now. Has Russia done so?

A. No. but she may be producing fewer now.

Q. What's the main reason our radical weapons programs sometimes seem slow?

A. Principally because of our complicated decision-making machinery. It takes years for our military planners to make up their collective minds, more time to negotiate contracts. We took eight years to develop the B52 (heavy bomber); the Russians developed a comparable plane in four.

Q. What can we do to speed up decision-making?

A. We must transfer the development of radical new weapons-planning and development from the military services to an independent civilian-dominated agency. Moreover, we must make it profitable for private companies to work in government radical weapons programs

Q. How can we make it profitable?

A. Perhaps by figuring the return on some base other than cost of production. Most contractors earn only 3 or 4 per cent on government contracts now.

Who Is To Blame?

Q. Is there any hopeful aspect of the Sputniks?

A. Putting up the satellites now may very well be recorded in history as Khrushchev's colossal blunder. He thus awakened and unified our country.

Q. What's the history of our lagging missile program? Who's to blame?

A. We gave Convair a study contract in 1946. Then we cancelled it in 1947. If Convair, interested by then, hadn't gone ahead on its own we'd be worse off even than we are now.

Q. What will the coming congressional investigation of the U.S. missile program probably disclose?

A. First, that we got behind simply because we started late, on a calculated decision. Second, that the U.S. now is making a massive effort in this field. Third, that U.S. programs are effective programs. Fourth, that if we continue to provide the necessary funds, there is no reason the U.S. needs to stay behind.

Q. What's the hope for federal tax reduction?

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

A. Forget it.

Q. Why all the administration fuss for continued and even expanded U.S. aid to the uncommitted underdeveloped countries?

A. The U.S. is no longer self-sufficient. The underdeveloped countries hold the still undiscovered natural deposits of the world. They have vast potential resources; they will provide vast markets. Somebody is going to develop them; they must not be developed behind the lowering curtain of Soviet communism.

Q. What are some current world danger spots from the U.S. viewpoint?

A. 1. Guatemala – once Communist dominated, now threatened anew.

2. Laos.

3. Indonesia.

Q. What bad effect did the events of Little Rock actually produce in the free and uncommitted nations outside the U.S.?

A. Less than some anticipated. Very little really.

Q. What about space travel?

A. In the next two or three generations, if we work hard enough, we will have the means of visiting other planets.

Q. Can the U.S. beat the Soviets while doing business-as-usual?

A. (By a scientist with a sense of humor). When I am feeling blue and pessimistic, I think the Russians could be ahead of us in everything within five years. When I am on the optimistic side, I think 10 years!

What Must We Do?

Q. What must we do to bring the full strength of our Free Enterprise system to bear upon regaining the lead, then remaining ahead?

A. Many things. Here are a few: Give a clear right-of-way to pending missile programs, as now being done. Toughen up our educational system – and ourselves! Whittle down the domestic benefits programs of all kinds in favor of what has to be done to keep our country from falling into a position where she could be blackmailed into surrender by a stronger Russia.

*** * ***

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

COMMENT: All this will be hard. If those who should know do know (and how can we afford to doubt them?) nothing comes ahead of the necessity of improving our entire national posture vis a vis the Communist world.

Vice President Nixon said publicly Thursday in Washington:

"We are at war now as surely as in 1942."

Fletcher Knebel, The Times-Union's Washington paragrapher, summed it up thus – with tongue in cheek – this week:

"Oh for the good old days when the Russians were trying to steal our secrets."

*** * ***

A FINAL NOTE: It seems to me almost providential that Richard Nixon instead of one less able is the vice president at this time.

He is necessarily carrying much of what ordinarily might be the presidential load. He also is supplying some of the direction. For example, he saw – apparently long before most White House advisors – that Sputnik was more than a "glittering bauble," as one White House aide put it a few days after the launching of Sputnik I. Nixon is close to the public. He knew at once that Sputnik had shocked the country and the Western World. He knew the scientific reasons why. And he knew prompt, positive, dramatic action was indicated. He apparently could not get his view across for a while; it clearly is prevailing now.

w. (B7/f7)

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, November 30, 1957

AS I SEE IT

The Eisenhower Question: Shall he Remain in Office?

By PAUL MILLER

White House denials to the contrary, it seems only logical that President Eisenhower and his intimates would have considered whether he should continue in office and, if so, under what conditions.

If they have not done so, they should have; ordinary prudence would dictate it.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Few presidents have enjoyed the prestige and popularity that are deservedly Eisenhower's. Still, while most Americans undoubtedly hope and pray that the President can serve out his term, they don't want him to attempt it at the possible cost of his health.

And there's more to it than that.

If it is at all likely that the President is to be even partly incapacitated for any length of time, it can only be hoped that he will officially put somebody else in charge for the period.

A more or less headless White House is something that the United States can ill afford at any time, certainly not now.

So, while White House aides may continue to insist there's no discussion there of any change, it's certainly the subject of major speculation elsewhere the world over.

*** * ***

THREE POSSIBILITIES are generally discussed:

1. The powers of the President would be exercised in fact, though not in name, by the White House staff. This was done during Eisenhower's past illnesses.

2. The President would resign, explaining health would not permit him to continue.

3. The President would continue in office, but would designate the vice president as acting president for the period of convalescence only.

Based on reported comment in Washington and throughout the country, I believe sentiment would favor the President's remaining in office as long as possible but lightening his burdens.

If that does represent popular will, and if the President chooses to follow it, the best bet would seem to be that Vice President Nixon (Possibility No. 3) will be designated.

There was much criticism at the political level and otherwise of Sherman Adams, assistant to the President, in other Eisenhower absences from the White House.

This Adams criticism has not lessened in recent months.

Nixon, contrarily, has grown steadily in stature and public regard – though he still has not silenced all of his critics.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

It is generally felt that Nixon was well ahead of the White House in correctly appraising the grave significance of Russia's earth satellites.

* * *

TO CHECK REACTION to the President's illness The Wall Street Journal queried more than 100 industry officials, housewives, shoppers, and others coast-to-coast.

The Journal concluded as follows:

"Businessmen are worried by Ike's upset, but expect no serious national complications, economic or political . . . A goodly number of people believe Ike might do well to resign if his health doesn't improve. Few express concern over the prospect of Vice President Nixon's growing voice in administration affairs."

* * *

THE SITUATION CLEARLY CALLS for new looks at Vice President Nixon.

Here is mine:

Dick Nixon has come a long way since 1952. He was probably his party's best political campaigner even then, at 38. Now there's no question about it.

No man could work harder at a job than he has at being vice president. In so doing, he has learned much and matured fast.

He knows that there must be compromises in politics, but he has hardened even so in his own convictions. One example: He is a more outspoken champion of continued large-scale foreign aid even than the President, although some of his closest party friends and supporters do not fully agree with him, including yours truly.

He has enormous energy. On political or on government goodwill tours, he is never too weary to meet and talk with any and all who want to meet and talk with him.

He is articulate. No member of the Eisenhower team can more skillfully discuss administration policy and attitudes whether with critics or friends.

He is a warm and friendly person who tries to like and be liked. And the same for his attractive wife, Pat. Together, they are a pair we are lucky to have on the job for us in Washington and in the world at large, whether or not the future holds still greater tasks for them than those they are, separately and together, discharging now.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

* * *

THE WHITE HOUSE HANDLING of the President's illness reports – slow, evasive and incomplete for hours – emphasizes anew the folly of trying to cover up important facts.

Whether in government or business, the best rule for dealing with the public on matters of public interest and concern is this:

Tell the truth, promptly and fully, however distasteful the telling.

The truth will become known eventually in any event.

Doubts and false reports grow from delays and misrepresentations. Then they have to be overtaken. So tell the truth and get it over with – it's the No. 1 rule of good public relations.

* * *

ONCE THE LID WAS TAKEN OFF at the White House, information about the President's illness flowed freely; public tension and doubt subsided.

Despite lapses, I often reflect, we scarcely know what White House "secrecy" is today, recalling that of 1944-45.

President Roosevelt was a haggard shell, and looked it, but any suggestion that he was ailing brought cries of reproach, wrath, and indignation from those around him. They suppressed facts, destroyed photos, and fought to maintain the myth to the end, even through his shaky report to Congress after the Yalta Conference.

I sat in the press gallery that February day in 1945 with a copy of the advance text of what was given out as FDR's own Yalta report. Actually, of course, it had been prepared for him. He appeared unable even to read it straight. He made so many mistakes, changes, and husky-voiced interpolations that trained stenographers were required to keep the advanced text corrected as he droned along.

x. (B7/f7)
*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, December 7, 1957

AS I SEE IT

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

‘The Treatment’ for Nixon; It Recalls Truman Contrast

By PAUL MILLER

James B. Reston, writing in the New York Times, reports that Vice President Nixon is getting “The Treatment” in Washington these days.

“The Treatment” may be Washingtonese for many things. In Nixon’s particular case, with his role in government continuing to grow, it means:

Being played up to by people who were only casual a few months ago.

Having to voice opinions, take a stand, in groups which have appeared somewhat less eager for his advice and counsel heretofore.

Becoming literally snowed under by social invitations and requests for speeches and autographs, beset at every turn by willing, outstretched hands.

* * *

THE SITUATION RECALLS a contrast, and an impression at the time, in the case of Harry S. Truman.

Just before the death of President Roosevelt on the afternoon of April 12, 1945, I was at a reception given by the late Joseph Farrington, the delegate from Hawaii, in his Washington home.

The Trumans were there, milling with the other guests, when one of the best known and most highly regarded foreign ambassadors in wartime Washington arrived impressively with his attractive wife.

They instantly became the center of attention, circling the room with a perfunctory handshake here and another there.

It was noted that they spent no more time and effort on Harry and Bess Truman than on any other. Then they departed for some other party.

When next I thought about it, was at 2 a.m. of the morning after President Roosevelt’s death in Warm Springs, Ga. There had been scarcely time for more than a bite until that late hour. I came out of my Associated Press office in the Washington Star building and hailed a taxi.

Driving out Massachusetts avenue past the great, still-lighted embassy of the ambassador who’d had no time for the Trumans at the Farrington party, I imagined him reproaching himself in a restless, wakeful night – perhaps with some help from his wife.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Why didn't I take the opportunity for a more cordial contact with Mr. Truman? But how could I know he was going to become President of the United States almost the very next day!"

The Trumans never forgot those with whom they had been close when he was "just the vice president," helping with the dishes in a modest apartment. They remained the same Harry and Bess to the old friends and were, rightly of course, choosy about the new.

* * *

ONLY THE PRESIDENT'S ILLNESS, and that happily light, plus his insistence from the start that the vice president be given greater duties and responsibilities, figure, we can be thankful, in Dick Nixon's increasing prominence.

But the parallel with Truman stands all the same. He's doubtless hearing from new admirers every day where he was conscious only of critics before.

That's life, I guess. It's politics, I know.

y. (B4/f29)

Rochester Times-Union
December 10, 1957

City-Inspired, City-Made

Tale of Nixon's Glasses

By BILL STRUBLE

Vice President Nixon is wearing glasses today because he had trouble reading a golf card during a holiday last summer in Rochester.

Furthermore, his glasses – lenses and frames – were made in Rochester.

It started the weekend of July 6 when the vice president was the guest of Paul Miller, presidnt [sic]of The Gannett Newspapers, for a three-day holiday that included voyaging across Lake Ontario and golfing at Belleville, in Canada.

* * *

DURING the golf game, Carl S. Hallauer, a member of the party, noticed that Nixon was holding his scorecard at arm's length while attempting to read it.

Hallauer, president of Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., said today that he asked Nixon:

"What are you going to do with your arms? You're about at the end of them."

From then on during the weekend, Nixon was kidded by Hallauer and others of the group.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Hallauer said he told the vice president:

"I think it's bad. The Democrats could put something in front of you and you could sign it without knowing what it said."

HALLAUER advised Nixon to have an eye examination, and about two weeks after the holiday he received a letter from Nixon requesting a list of persons who might perform the examination.

Hallauer complied and also told Nixon to send his prescription to Rochester, saying the vice president should have B&L products because he could be sure then of getting good quality.

Subsequently, representatives from the Bausch & Lomb branch in Washington called on Nixon with frames in various styles so he could select an appropriate set.

*** * ***

HALLAUER ADDED a footnote to the story of Nixon's difficulty in reading a citation presented to the King of Morocco at a recent White House dinner.

Nixon, without glasses, told friends after the dinner that the candlelight was poor and that his arm length was not great enough to permit him to read the exact wording of the citation. He admitted he extemporized a bit.

Hallauer, in Washington at the time, chided the vice president severely because by then Nixon had already received his glasses from Bausch & Lomb.

"I forgot them. I left them on my desk," Nixon explained to Hallauer.

But he promised Hallauer that he would wear them. I'll prove it to you," he said.

Hallauer asked, "How?"

"You wait and see," Nixon replied.

The vice president appeared yesterday for the first time wearing his new glasses.

The subsequent news item, appearing in newspapers across the country and in Rochester, apparently was Nixon's method of proving to Hallauer that he hadn't forgotten his glasses.

z. (B7/f7)

*****

Rochester Times-Union
Saturday, December 14, 1957

AS I SEE IT

We Could Take a Licking On NATO Missile Base Plan

By PAUL MILLER

. . . Reflections on Transatlantic Flight

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

If the Eisenhower administration has an adequate program for catching and overhauling Russia in the intercontinental missiles race, it still hasn't been well presented to ease popular doubts and misgivings.

The President's illness interfered with his own speaking program. It had been planned to restore confidence and win back slipping popular support. The fact that Administration speakers appeared to be riding off in all directions did not help.

Vice President Nixon was the first, and for some days the only top Administration figure, to concede the gravity of our situation and urge prompt action.

* * *

NIXON HIMSELF GOT THE SHOE on the wrong foot this week. He told reporters:

"Let's get away from our wailing walls and act like Americans. We've got work to do. Let's get on with it like Americans."

Where this misses is that people aren't "wailing" because Russia has a missile that can put an atomic bomb on New York. People are wailing because the administration has been slow and awkward in putting together a convincing response.

Inez Robb, a pretty lady columnist who can swing like Marciano with her typewriter, delivered the most biting rebuttal to the vice president's "wailing wall" remark. She wrote in the New York World Telegram and Sun:

"There's a wailing wall from New York to San Francisco. It is not crowded with cowards or sunshine patriots or quitters, but with honest citizens who are crying aloud for an Administration alert to the present crisis, imbued with a sense of urgency and capable of formulating a program for action.

"In the meantime, about the only thing the average citizen can do is pay his taxes and pray, and among the things he prays for is leadership from Washington and relief from political claptrap."

Nixon, who can take it as well as dish it out, probably enjoyed Miss Robb's rejoinder himself. It should be required reading by some of his associates . . . .

Paul Miller: Cold War Journalist, 1958-1979

Titles

Chronological

Paul Miller: Oklahoma's 'Boy Sportsman,' 1906-1932
2086

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Paul Miller and the Associated Press, 1932-1978
The War Years: Paul Miller's Confidential Files, 1941-1946
Paul Miller and the Gannett Co., Inc., 1947-1979

Thematic

Paul Miller and the American Presidents, 1943-1979
Trips, 1945-1976
Paul Miller and Postwar Conservatism, 1945-1979
Paul Miller and Richard Nixon: From Ike to Watergate, 1952-1974

Chapters:

ONE
Introduction

TWO
Oklahoma's "Boy Sportsman," 1906-1932

THREE
Paul Miller: Rising Star, 1932-1942

FOUR
World War II and the Origins of the Cold War, 1942-1947

FIVE
Containment, The Marshall Plan and Korea, 1948-1953

SIX
MADness: Massive Retaliation and Brinksmanship, 19-1962

SEVEN
Into the Darkness: LBJ and the War in Vietnam, 1963-1968

EIGHT
New Directions: Nixon, Kissinger and Ford, 1969-1975

NINE
American Malaise: The Carter Years, 1976-1979

TEN
Epilogue: America "Reborn Hard"

1958

Box 4

2087

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Folder #31: Scrapbook Contents, January – April 1958

1. Dwight D. Eisenhower, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, (n.d.).

2. The AP World (n.d.): "Post-War Correspondent," By Robert Bunnelle

3. Winchester (VA) Evening Star (1-2-58): "Is There a Need for a New Secretary of State?"

4. Rochester (NY) Times-Union (1-2-58): "Editor Appointed to Prize Panel"

5. Alfalfa Club 45th Anniversary Dinner Menu (1-18-58): The Statler, Washington, D.C.

6. Hon. Harry F. Byrd invites Paul Miller to the 45th Annual Alfalfa Club Dinner

7. Rochester (NY) Democrat & Chronicle (1-25-58): "Miller Predicts U.S. Space Win"

8. Binghamton Press (1-25-58): "Gannett Group Head Hopeful On Space Race"
   Elmira Star-Gazette (1-25-58): U.S. Beating Space Deficit, Gannett President Declares"

9. Danville (IL) Commercial-News (1-25-58):
   "Gannett President Optimistic About Space Race Chances"

10. Democrat & Chronicle (2-4-58): "Panel Told Russ Excel Only in Satellite Field"

11. Times-Union (2-4-58): "Soviet Know-How 'Was Surprise'"

12. Times-Union (2-14-58): Gannett Co. Buys Coast TV Station"
    Democrat & Chronicle (2-14-58): TV Deal Closed By Gannett Firm"

13. Times-Union (3-6-58): "You Should Get into Politics: 'Worthwhile Service to Public'"

14. Times-Union (3-12-58): "T-U Editorial Hailed, Inserted in 'Record'"

15. The Gannetteer (April 1958): "Congressman Lauds Editorial in Rochester T-U"

16. Danville (IL) Commercial-News (3-19-58):
    "Gannett President Hails Nixon; 'U.S. Fortunate He's Vice President'"

17. Danville (IL) Commercial-News (3-20-58):
    "GM Discloses New Orders Which Will Up Employment"

18. PHOTO – 1958 -5D – (3-19-58): Paul Miller at GM's 50th Anniversary Dinner

19. Danville Chamber of Commerce "Salute to General Motors" (3-19-58): Program/Menu

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

20. PHOTO – 1958-5E – (March 1958): Taken by Ranne at Chapel Hill, Carolina Inn, March 1958

21. Times-Union (3-31-58):
"Rockefeller Talk to Jaycees Sellout: Speech Tonight Expected to Deal With National Defense"

22. Democrat & Chronicle (4-1-58): "Cut Taxes to Fight Dip, Rockefeller Says Here"

23. Democrat & Chronicle (4-1-58): "'Not a Candidate' Says Rockefeller On Visit to City"

24. Times-Union (4-1-58):
"Cut Taxes to Fight Slump, Rockefeller Recommends"
"Rockefeller Talks Politics"

25. Albany (NY) Knickerbocker News (4-8-58):
"Citizens Would Be in Real Trouble If Press Only Spoke for Politicians"
"Don't Blame the Mirror If It Shows The Blemishes Along with Beauty"

26. (Utica, NY) Beacon News (4-9-58): "Opportunity for Press"

27. (Newspaper and Date Unknown): "Light Where Light Is Needed"

28. Democrat & Chronicle (4-13-58): "Mrs. Roosevelt, Sen. Kennedy Set For Israel Talks"
Times-Union (4-12-58): "Sen. Kennedy Due At Israel Salute"

Folder #32: Scrapbook Contents, April – June 1958

1. Dwight Eisenhower, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, New York, April 28, 1958.

2. (Newspaper and Date Unknown):
"Hall Accepts Invitation To Speak Here on June 11"
"Kennedy Proposes Allies Help Develop Mid-East"

3. Richard Nixon, Washington, D.C., to Fred Herman, Rochester, NY, April 23, 1958.

4. Averell Harriman, Albany, NY, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, April 28, 1958.

5. Peter Barry [Mayor], Rochester, NY, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, April 25, 1958.

6. Kenneth B. Keating, Washington, D.C., to Frederick A. Herman, Rochester, NY, April 29, 1958.

7. Democrat & Chronicle (5-2-58): "Chest-Red Cross Launch Drive for 4 Million"

8. Rochester Citizens Committee for Israel's Tenth Anniversary Celebration Invitation (5-12-58)

9. Memorandum (n.d.):
City-Wide Luncheon Sponsored by the Rochester Citizens' Committee

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

For Israel's Tenth Anniversary Celebration [Guest Speaker: Senator John F. Kennedy]

10. Democrat & Chronicle (5-13-58):
"New Mid East Plan Urged by Kennedy At City Israel Fete"
"Young Senator Mum on Ambitions"

11. Times-Union (4-12-58): "Kennedy's Own Profile in Courage"

12. Elmira (NY) Star-Gazette (5-13-58): "You Couldn't Blame HST"

13. Democrat & Chronicle (5-13-58): "In Retrospect"

14. Times-Union (4-12-58): "How Did It All Happen? What Can We Do About It?"

15. Democrat & Chronicle (6-8-58):
"Susan B. Anthony Club Names Hostesses For Hall Fete"
"GOP Club Garden Party Set"

16. Democrat & Chronicle (6-8-58): PHOTO: Distinguished Visitors

17. Democrat & Chronicle (6-14-58):
"It's a new Alliance: Daughter of Japanese Diplomat Married Here to German Native"
(2) PHOTOS – 1958-7A/7B – (6-13-58): Paul Miller with Mieko Tsuda

18. Democrat & Chronicle (6-14-58): "Four Rochester Leaders To Visit French 'Twin'"

Folder #33: Scrapbook Contents, July – November 1958

1. Thousand Island Club [Golf] Scorecard (7-12-58): Paul Miller (76) and Harry F. Byrd, Jr. (106)
PHOTO – 1958-13A – (7-12-58): July 12, 1958 Thousand Island Club

2. PHOTO – 1958-13F – (7- 1958): Taken by P.M. aboard _____ July 1958. [Richard Nixon]

3. [Invitation] "In honor of Madame Chiang Kai-shek: A reminder that The Vice President and Mrs. Nixon are expecting the pleasure of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller's company at luncheon on Friday, July eighteenth, one o'clock, 4308 Forest Lane, N.W."

4. Democrat & Chronicle (7-17-58): "Henry W. Clune's 'Seen and Heard'"

5. Walker Stone, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, 8-1-58.

6. Democrat & Chronicle (6-14-58): "Mayor Barry Etudie for Trip to France"

7. Frank Devans, Rochester, NY, to Paul Miller, 8-28-58.

8. Dwight D. Eisenhower, Newport, RI, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, 9-5-58.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

9. Times-Union (9-10-58): “Jessica Weis’ Nomination for Congress Sure”

10. Democrat & Chronicle (11-10-58): “Throngs Cheer Champ Keating In Homecoming”
PHOTO – 1958 15 – (n.d.): Kenneth B. Keating et al.

11. Times-Union (11-10-58): “Keating Comes Home To Hero’s Welcome”

Folder #35: Rennes (France) Correspondence. Trip Plans. October 1958

Folder #36: Rennes (France) Scrapbook Contents, October 1958

Folder #37: Scrapbook Contents, 1958. Rochester Party Leaves for France on the Liner Liberte

1. Times-Union (9-10-58): “Rennes Asks About Our Town”

2. Times-Union (9-22-58): “Rennes Awarded Civic Medal”

3. Democrat & Chronicle (9-24-58): “City Strengthens Ties With Rennes, France”

4. Times-Union (9-27-58): “A Mission of Goodwill: From Rochester to Rennes” By Paul Miller

5. Times-Union (10-1-58): “4 Rochester ‘Ambassadors’ Sail for Rennes”

6. Democrat & Chronicle (10-1-58): “City Delegation to Sail Today On Goodwill Trip to France”

7. Democrat & Chronicle (10-2-58): “City Goodwill Ambassadors Set Sail for Rennes, France”

8. Times-Union (10-4-58): “A Mixup on Quemoy Letters – Critics land on Nixon” By Paul Miller

9. Times-Union (10-6-58): “Pupils’ Paintings Due for Rennes”

10. Democrat & Chronicle (10-8-58): “Rochesterians Welcomed By French City Delegates”

11. Times-Union (10-8-58): “Delegates Tour Ageless Rennes”

12. Democrat & Chronicle (10-9-58): “Formal Ceremony Links City and France ‘Twin’”

13. Times-Union (10-9-58):
“Rennes U. Honors De Kiewiet: Rochesterians Witness Presentation of Degree in French City”

14. Democrat & Chronicle (10-10-58): “Rochester-Rennes Union Blessed”

15. Times-Union (10-10-58): “Historic France Seen by Visitors”

16. Times-Union (10-11-58):

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"A Letter From Rennes: A Mixture of the Old and New -- With Modern Civic Problems"

17. Democrat & Chronicle (10-11-58): "Linowitz Proposes Formosa Formula in Rennes Speech"

18. Times-Union (10-11-58):
"Dateline: Rennes, France – Rochester's New Twin City"
"City's Twin Becoming Sextuplet"
"Delegation Members Get Hand-Made Gifts"

19. Democrat & Chronicle (10-14-58): "Rochesterians Offer Future Rennes Links"

20. Times-Union (10-14-58): "Rennes Visitors Overwhelmed"

21. Times-Union (10-16-58): "French Friends Won by Barry"

22. Times-Union (10-16-58): "Long-Settled Rennes Is City of Old and New"

23. Times-Union (10-18-58):
"A Better Feeling in Europe – Credit general De Gaulle" By Paul Miller

24. Democrat & Chronicle (10-22-58): "Rochester Group Arrives in Israel"

25. Times-Union (10-23-58): "The Contrasts of Israel: Barbed Wire and Progress" By Paul Miller

26. Times-Union (10-24-58): "City Group Widens South Israel Tour"

27. Times-Union (10-27-58): "'Rennes Delegation' Ends Israel Tour"
Photo: "Tel Aviv Interview – Publisher Paul Miller of Rochester talks with Premier David Ben-Gurion . . . ."

28. Times-Union (10-29-58): "Rochesterians in Jerusalem"

29. Times-Union (10-31-58): "Delegates Return From Rennes Visit"

30. Times-Union (11-1-58):
"French Confident Under DeGaulle, Rochester's Rennes' Delegation Reports"
"Scenes and Experience . . . Rennes, Israel and Rome" By Paul Miller

31. Times-Union (11-8-58): "Rockefeller a Vote Getter – Ken Keating Is Too" By Paul Miller

32. PHOTO – 1958-19a/SB15 – (October 1, 1958): Rochester Party Leaves For France
(2) PHOTOS – 1958-19b/19c/SB15 – (n.d.)
PHOTO – 1958-20/SB15 – (n.d.)

33. Mary Golding, Rochester, NY, to Paul Miller, Geneva, Switzerland, n.d.
"Fred Forman requests reassure you no festivities plenty rest in Israel no Rennes repetition."

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

34. Rennes Plan-Guide

35. Times-Union (12-22-58): "Rennes: A City Torn, Rebuilt"

36. Le Musee de Rennes (n.d.)

Folder #39: Israel. Scrapbook Contents, October 1958 (folder 1 of 4)

1. (8) PHOTOS – 1958-9A/9B/9C/9D/9E/9F/9G/9H – (n.d.)

2. (3) PHOTOS – 1958-9I/9J/9K – (October 26, 1958)

3. Reuven Dafni, Jerusalem, Israel, to Sol Linowitz, Rochester, NY, November 19, 1958.

4. "Your Tour Through Israel" (n.d.)

5. Democrat & Chronicle (11-8-58): "Israel: A Pressure Cooker"

6. Democrat & Chronicle (11-11-58): "Israel's Progress Told By Returned Travelers"

7. Democrat & Chronicle (11-13-58): "Tour Highlights, Sidelights Sketched for Chamber Unit"

8. (Newspaper and Date Unknown): "Overflow Crowd Hears Delegation"

9. Times-Union (11-11-58): "Israel: 'New Land Risen from Ashes'"

10. Touring Map of Israel (n.d.)

11. (3) Picture Postcards

12. United Jewish Welfare Fund Invitation to "Eyewitness Report on Israel" (November 10, 1958)

13. Picture Postcard: "Rome – Monument to Victor Emanuel II" (n.d.)

14. (24) PHOTOS – 1958-10A-10X – SB15 (n.d.)
(24) PHOTOS – 1958-11A-11X – SB15 (n.d.)
(23) PHOTOS – 1958-12A-12V – SB15 (n.d.)

Folder #40: Israel Scrapbook Contents, Background Information (2 of 4)

1. "The Arab World Today: Some Basic Facts"

2. American Bar Association Journal (Vol. 43, June 1957): pp. 522-525.
"Analysis of a Tinderbox: The Legal Basis for the State of Israel" By Sol Linowitz

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

3. "From a Democrat and Chronicle Writer in Smouldering Middle East" By Homer W. King (Reproduced from the Democrat and Chronicle Editorial Pages, August 1958)

4. The New York Times (November 5, 1958):
"Arabs in Israel Shun New Homes"
"Israeli Position Found Improved"

5. The New York Times Magazine (November 16, 1958):
"Still They Come to Israel" By Gertrude Samuels

Folder #41: Israel Scrapbook Contents, Tenth Anniversary (3 of 4)

1. Israel's Peace Offers to the Arab States, 1948-1958: The Record (1958)

2. Highlights in the Life of Israel:
Chronology of Israel's Struggle to Be Born, Survive and Grow, 1947-1958 (1958)

Folder #41a: Israel Scrapbook Contents, Israel's 10th Anniversary World Committee (3 of 4)

1. Israel Today: The Israel Defence Forces (August 1958)

2. The Histadrut (1958)

3. The Hebrew University of Jerusalem (n.d.)

4. Ein Gev: Israel's Rural Music Center (n.d.)

1959

Folder #45: Scrapbook Contents, January – March 1959

1. (2) PHOTOS – 1959-1A/1B: "AP Board – January 1959"

2. The Gannetteer (December 1958):
"Newspaperboy Winner Meets Group President At Party in France"

3. Nieman Reports (January 1959): "A Glance Backward at the Press"

4. William H. Hudnut, Jr., Rochester, NY, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, February 13, 1959.

5. Northern Allegany (Fillmore, NY) observer (February 15, 1959): "Letter to the Editor"

6. The Oklahoma (Norman, OH) Daily (February 18, 1959): "Paul Miller Will Speak At J-Day"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

7. Times-Union (2-23-59): “County Aides Told 3 Main Problems of Government”

8. Democrat & Chronicle (3-7-59): “Masons to Aid Students In Mailing ‘Voices’ Home”

9. Democrat & Chronicle (3-8-59): “Freedom Key To Judgment, Says Publisher”

10. Democrat & Chronicle (3-15-59): “Hopefuls for ’60 Get Razzing at Gridiron Dinner”

11. [Invitation] “In honor of His Excellency The President of Ireland and Mrs. O’Kelly. To remind: The Vice President and Mrs. Nixon request the pleasure of the company of Mr. and Mrs. Miller at dinner on Wednesday, March eighteenth at eight o’clock. Chinese Room, The Mayflower, Seventeenth Street Entrance, Washington, D.C. White Tie.”
Dinner Menu

Folder #46: Scrapbook Contents, April – June 1959

1. Times-Union (4-14-59): “Challenge To AP Noted By Directors”

2. Democrat & Chronicle (4-21-59): “Treasury Chief Calls for Surplus As Nation’s Aim”

Folder #47: Scrapbook Contents, July – December 1959

1. PHOTO – 1959-6 – (July 1959): Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller [and] Paul Miller

2. Democrat & Chronicle (6-28-59): “Women Find Philip Is Prince Charming”

3. (7) PHOTOS – 1959-8a/8b/8c/8d/8e/8f/8g – (July 25, 1959):
Governor Rockefeller, Don U. Bridge, Paul Miller, Carl Hallauer

4. Nelson A. Rockefeller, Albany,, NY, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, July 14, 1959.

5. Times-Union (7-24-59): “Crime Termed No. 1 Menace: Atty. Gen. Calls It ‘Most Serious’”

6. (3) PHOTOS – 1959-9a/9b/10 – (July 24, 1959):
Mr. and Mrs. Wm. P. Rogers
S. Farnham, C. Williams, Atty. Genl. Rogers, PM

7. Thousand Islands Club Score Card (July 25, 1959)

8. William P. Rogers, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, July 27, 1959.

10. Sherman Farnham, Rochester, NY, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, July 28, 1959.
Lincoln Rochester Trust Company (check for $2.25)

11. William P. Rogers, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, (n.d.).

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

12. The (New Bedford, MA) Standard-Times (9-1-59):
"Paul Miller Says Khrushchev's Visit May Open Premier's Eyes on U.S."

13. Nelson A. Rockefeller, Albany, NY, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, October 1, 1959.

14. Binghamton (NY) Press (9-28-59):
"Too early for '60 Choice, Gannett President Believes"
"GOP Presidential Win Forecast by Newsmen"

15. Times-Union (10-1-59):
"Khrushchev Report Rated Good: Sen. Kennedy Delayed; Club Hears Miller"

16. Democrat & Chronicle (10-2-59): "Khrushchev Settled Nothing, Kennedy Warns in Talks Here"

16. The Bumblebee (10-3-59):
"Paul Miller Wins Acclaim of Ad Club In Substituting For Senator Kennedy"

17. Frank Devans, Miami, FL, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, November 15, 1959.

18. The Miami (FL) Herald (November 15, 1959):
"Voters Are Entitled to Hear Debate By GOP Hopefuls"

1960

Box 5

Folder #1: Scrapbook Contents, January – June 1960

1. Harry F. Byrd, Jr., invites Paul Miller to the 47th Annual Dinner of the Alfalfa Club, 1-23-60

2. [Business card]: Sun Fun III: Sport Fishing (February 1960)

3. [Postcard]: "Havana, Cuba" (February 26, 27, 1960)

4. Paul Martin, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Pompano Beach, FL, February 24, 1960.
"Vice president Nixon wants to have lunch with you Monday. . . ."

5. Times-Union (2-29-60): "Publisher Pays Visit to Cuba"

6. Law Day USA (5-1-60)

7. Times-Union (5-13-60): "Rennes Maps Cultural Center"

8. (Newspaper and date unknown): "Nixon Says Summit Collapse Did Not Dim Peace Hopes"

9. [Rear Admiral] H. A. Yeager, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, June 10, 1960.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

10. Democrat & Chronicle (6-10-60): “Press Institute Renames Miller”

11. Congressional Record (6-16-60):
“Outstanding Example of International ‘Sister Cities’ Exchange”

12. Richard Nixon, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, June 16, 1960.

13. Richard Nixon, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, June 24, 1960.

Folder #2: Cuba. Trip File, February 1960

1. American Opinion: An Informal Review (October 1963)

2. Times-Union (12-21-59): “Castro Operating Huge Spy System”

3. The New York Times (2-14-60): “Havana: The New Sugar Daddy From Moscow”

4. Times-Union (3-8-60): “Castro said Dec. 20, 1959, on TV: ‘The People will defend us. . . .’”

5. Associated Press, New York, NY, to Rochester Times-Union, March 8, 1960.

6. The New York Times (3-8-60): “Text of Herter Protest to Cuba Envoy”

7. Worldgram: From the Capitals of the World (Volume XLVIII-No. 10, n.d., 1960):
“Havana, Bonn, London, Cairo, Rome”

8. Harold K. Milks, Habana, Cuba, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, March 10, 1960.

9. The Wall Street Journal (3-9-60):
“‘Don’t Cut Cuba’s Sugar Quota,’ Say Western Beet Growers”

10. Habana Lunes (8 De Febrero, 1960): “Respalda Puerto Rico . . . Denuncio Venezolana”

11. Times-Union (3-5-60): “Report on Cuba Today: ‘Saddening’ . . . ‘Disturbing’”

12. Letter to the Editor (March 7, 1960): “Dear Mr. Miller. . . .”

13. The New York Times (n.d.): “Cuban Tragedy”

14. Times-Union (3-9-60): “Nixon Plans Strategy: Republicans See Kennedy Choice”

15. The (Tucson) Arizona Daily Star (3-10-60): “Some Facts About Cuba – I”

16. Democrat & Chronicle (6-11-60): “Castro Speeds Up Property Seizures”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

17. William H. Hudnut, Jr., Rochester, NY, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, March 12, 1960.

18. The (Tucson) Arizona Daily Star (3-11-60): "Some Facts About Cuba – II"

19. Inter American Press Association (3-10-60): Special Bulletin No. 1: Cuba

20. "An Open Letter to President Kennedy" (n.d.)

Folder #3: Scrapbook Contents, July – December 1960

1. Richard Nixon, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, September 10, 1960.

1961

Folder #4: Scrapbook Contents, January – June 1961

1. Richard Nixon, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, January 3, 1961.

2. [Invitation]: "A reminder that The Vice President and Mrs. Nixon are expecting the pleasure of the company of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller's company at dinner. . . ."

3. Richard Nixon, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, January 17, 1961.

4. [Invitation]: "Mr. Harry Flood Byrd, Jr. requests the pleasure of the company of Mr. Paul Miller at the 48 Annual Dinner of the Alfalfa Club. . . .'

5. Harry F. Byrd, Jr., Winchester, VA, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, February 6, 1961.

6. Times-Union (2-27-61): "On World's Fair Board"

7. Times-Union (2-28-61): "City's 'Twin' Gets Cultural Center"

8. Democrat & Chronicle (3-13-61): "Young GOP Board to Meet"

9. [Program]: "Washington Gridiron Weekend, March 10-12, 1961"

10. [Menu]: "The Gridiron Club Annual Dinner, Saturday, March 11, 1961"

11. Democrat & Chronicle (3-24-61): "Young GOP Plans Conference Here"
Times-Union (3-24-61): "State Young Republicans Meet Here"

12. Democrat & Chronicle (3-26-61): "Metro 'Musts' Given Young GOP"

13. Times-Union (3-27-61): "Metropolitan Setup Called Inevitable"

14. Democrat & Chronicle (3-27-61): "'Politics as Usual' Not Good Enough"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

15. Theodore C. Sorensen, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, April 12, 1961.

16. Democrat & Chronicle (6-6-61): "Publisher to receive Award For 'Sister Cities' Role"

17. *Times-Union (*6-13-61): "Publisher Accepts International Award made to T-U"

18. PHOTO – 1961-18a – (June 13, 1961): People-to-People Award

19. "The United States Peace Dollar"

20. Democrat & Chronicle (6-14-61): Freedom to Write"

21. Democrat & Chronicle (6-14-61): "Publisher Lists Benefits From Twin Program"

22. Camden (NJ) Courier-Post (6-14-61): "Head of C-P Gets Award Of President"

23. Times-Union (6-15-61): "Visitor from Rennes: French Newsman Pays Respects to 'Twin City'"

Folders #5-6: Globester Around the World Flight [see also Box 3, Folders # 44, 47]

Folders #7: Russia Trip. Correspondence, 1962

1. A. Vishnevskiy (TASS), Moscow, U.S.S.R., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, October 2, 1959.

1962

2. Loose Leaf Outline Route Map of Paul Miller's Russia Trip (n.d.)

3. "Suggested Questions for Newspaper Interview with Soviet Premier Khrushchev . . . ."

4. Walker Stone, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, May 16, 1962.

5. Times-Union (6-18-62): "Miller To Tour Russia With Group of Editors"

Folders #8: Russia Trip. Correspondence, 1962

1. Everyday Information for Visitors to Russia (n.d.)

2. Welcome to Moscow: A Guide for Visitors (American Embassy, Moscow, 1961)

3. Review of Exchanges (April 15, 1962):
"A Report on the United States Exchange Program with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe"

4. Alexander Pirnie, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, August 6, 1962.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

5. Geography as a Factor in the Problems of Russia (October 1948)

6. It Works . . . But Barely (n.d.): "A Superficial View of Russian Communism in Action"

Folder #9: Ten Days Behind The Iron Curtain, by Robert Hirschman, 1961

1. Robert W. Hirschman, Frankfurt/Main, FRG, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, January 11, 1963.

2. Ten Days Behind The Iron Curtain (1961)

Folder #10: Russian Trip. Scrapbook Contents, 1962 [see also Box 5/f 17, and Box 5/f 20-24]

1. AP LOG (July 12-18, 1962)

2. PHOTO – 1962-1D – (7-24-62): Interview on Berlin

3. PHOTO – 1962-2L – (7-16-62): Russian Premier Nikita Khrushchev shakes hands with PM

4. Phonetic Russian (n.d.)

5. American Express Company/ASNE: Tour of the U.S.S.R. (June23 – July21, 1962)

6. "Impressions of Russia" Open Luncheon (August 13, 1962)

7. "Report on Soviet Russia" (August 13, 1962)

8. Pierre Salinger, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, August 15, 1962.

9. "Views of Russia" (September 20, 1962)

10. Russia: 1962

Folder #11: Souvenirs, menus, maps, and stamps. Scrapbook Contents, 1962

Folder #12: Russia Trip. News Articles by Paul Miller, June – July 20, 1962

1. Times-Union (6-18-62): "Miller To Tour Russia With Group of Editors"

2. Democrat & Chronicle (6-19-62): "Miller to Join Other Editors In Extended Soviet Union Tour"

3. Times-Union (6-23-62): "Amid Throb and Bustle, Preparation for Long Trip"

4. Democrat & Chronicle (6-26-62): "Off To Russia"

5. Times-Union (6-27-62): "News Executives Fly to Moscow"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

6. Democrat & Chronicle (6-28-62): “U.S. Editors Arrive In Moscow”

7. Times-Union (6-30-62): “Report From Russia”

8. Democrat & Chronicle (7-2-62): “Touring Editors Leave Moscow”

9. Times-Union (6-29-62): “Cameraman Watches Thoroughfare Come Alive, Start Busy Day”

10. Times-Union (6-30-62):
“Wisecracks from Mr. K’s Son-in-Law And a Stroll Through Kremlin Grounds”

11. ASNE Bulletin (7-1-62): “Editors Tour Russia”

12. Times-Union (7-7-62): “On Tour from Moscow to Tashkent: Speeches, ‘Shashlik’ and Surprises”

13. Binghamton (NY) Press (7-3-62): “Soviet Wisecracks Needle U.S. Editors”

14. (Newspaper and date unknown): “Editors Meet Khrushchev”

15. Times-Union (7-14-62):
“Anti-U.S. Propaganda Floods Moscow; Our Side Doesn’t Get a Hearing”

16. Democrat & Chronicle (7-17-62): “Nikita Stresses Berlin As Core of Cold War”

17. Times-Union (7-17-62):
“2 1/2 Hours with Mr. K: Premier Takes Half-Hour To Answer One Question”

18. Binghamton (NY) Press (7-17-62):
“Miller Views Moods Of Man in Kremlin”
“May Ease Curbs on American Tourists, Not Books, Says Nikita”

19. Buffalo (NY) Courier-Express (7-17-62):
“Nikita Claims Soviet Rocket Can Hit Fly in Outer Space”

20. Columbus (OH) Citizen-Journal (7-17-62):
“Khru Talks, Twists And Taunts, Tells American Editors Nothing”

21. Columbus (OH) Dispatch (7-17-62):
“Khru Indicates Reds May Accept Nuclear Ban Following Next Tests”

22. Nashville Tennessean (7-17-62): “Move berlin Troops: Nikita”

23. New York Herald Tribune (7-17-62):
“U.S. Editors and K Interview”
(PHOTO): Paul Miller, of the Gannett Newspapers, greets Premier Khrushchev . . . .

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

24. New York Times (7-17-62): “Khrushchev Says Missile Can ‘Hit a Fly’ in Space”

25. Philadelphia (PA) Inquirer (7-17-62):
“Berlin Is Focal Point Of East-West Dispute, Khrushchev Insists”

26. Democrat & Chronicle (7-18-62): “U.S. Editors Taste Soviet ‘Freedom’”

27. Times-Union (7-18-62): “Russia’s Shortages Are Our Surpluses”

28. The (Binghamton, NY) Evening Press (7-18-62): “Propaganda for Editors”

29. Columbus (OH) Dispatch (7-18-62): “Khru Is Seen As Against War But Favoring Crisis”

30. Stars and Stripes (7-18-62): “Nikita Boasts Unstoppable Missile”

31. Times-Union (7-20-62): “Soviet Hospitality Praised”

32. Wall Street Journal (7-20-62):
“A New Dispute Reflects Basic Differences Between Russian and American Societies”

Folder #13: Russia Trip. News Articles by Paul Miller, July 21 – July 31, 1962

1. Times-Union (7-21-62):
“Transcript Hassle Mars Soviet Tour – Then On to ‘A Different World’”

2. Times-Union (7-24-62): “Open Letter to Khrushchev: ‘Come, Look at the Wall’”

3. New York World Telegram & Sun (7-24-62):
“Even East Germans Say: ‘In 30 Days Reds Would Gobble Up Berlin’”
“Letter Handed In at Kremlin”

4. Democrat & Chronicle (7-25-62):
“Newsmen’s Challenge To Khrushchev . . . ‘Have a Look At the Wall’”
“An Open Letter to Khrushchev”
“Friendly Rivals Miller, Classmate Take Pen in Hand”

5. Democrat & Chronicle (7-26-62): “Miller Home, Reports; K’s Hospitality Masks Aim”

6. Times-Union (7-26-62):
“West Berliners Hail Wall Plea to Mr. K” “U.S.-Russia Dialogue Drones On and On”

7. Times-Union (7-28-62):
“A Shaggy ‘Little Joe’ Visits Sweden”
“. . . 3rd Signature on Letter to Mr. K”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

8. Democrat & Chronicle (7-29-62): "Religion in the Soviet Union"

9. Times-Union (7-30-62):
"Road block To Peace: U.S. Soviet Tension; Problem of Easing It"
"Boss Man In the Kremlin"

10. Newsweek (7-30-62): "Da? Nyet!"

11. Democrat & Chronicle (7-31-62):
"Despite Hospitality and Friendliness of Russian People . . .
'Their Leaders Aim Is to Rule the World'"

12. Times-Union (7-30-62): "The Face of Russia"

Folder #14: Russia Trip. News Articles by Paul Miller, August 1 – August 15, 1962

1. Times-Union (8-1-62): "You Wait for Waiters But Not for Maid Service"

2. Times-Union (8-2-62):
"'We'll Tell Truth' About Tour of Russia"
"Kennedy, Rusk Get Report On Editors' Russia Trip"

3. Democrat & Chronicle (8-3-62): "4 Newsmen Confer with JFK, Aides"

4. Times-Union (8-3-62): "Russia's Housing Boom: Apartments Crowded; Some Poorly Made"

5. Columbus (OH) Citizen-Journal (8-3-62): "Editors Report On Trip"

6. Democrat & Chronicle (8-4-62): "Russ Yearn for Peace, Newsman Visitor Says"

7. Times-Union (8-4-62):
"Russians Pour Millions into Communications"
"Readers Have Their Say, Pro and Con, On Editor's Russia Trip Articles"
"'Nyet' Expected To New Proposals For A-Test Ban"
"Russia Revisited: Changes in Four Years – 'Life Is a Little Easier'"

8. Editor & Publisher (8-4-62):
"Editors' Letter to K Unanswered"
"U.S. Editors Caught in Soviet Squeeze"
"Even Mr. K Obliged For Soviet Portrait"

9. Democrat & Chronicle (8-5-62):
"Religion in the Soviet Union – (2): They Couldn't Find the Baptist Church"
"Communist Propaganda Tours Keep Moscow Hotels Busy"

10. Times-Union (8-7-62):

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"Miller To Tell Impressions Of Russia at Chamber"
"Red Hosts: 'Agreeable and Suave'"
"World wants Effective End To A-Weapon Testing"

11. Democrat & Chronicle (8-8-62):
"Paul Miller Reports on Moscow Visit: Red Security Sometimes Laughing Matter"

12. Times-Union (8-8-62): "Prices Keep Russians Poorly Dressed"

13. Democrat & Chronicle (8-9-62): "Moscow Foods, Prices Compared with Ours"

14. Times-Union (8-9-62):
"Vast Land of Contrast"
"U.S. Educational Expert Revisits Russian Schools-Once-Admired System Gets Radical Shakeup"

15. Democrat & Chronicle (8-10-62):
"Communist Empire Getting Weaker, Allen Dulles Believes"
"Kremlin Reins Loosening Up: Glimmer of Hope in Moscow Moves"

16. Times-Union (8-10-62): "A Silk Factory Deep in Ukraine"

17. Times-Union (8-11-62): "Tourist's Guide to Soviet Union – Friendly People, Beautiful Buildings"

18. Editor & Publisher (8-11-62): "The Editor of Pravda. . . ."

19. Democrat & Chronicle (8-12-62):
"Soviet lacks Skilled Labor: Sidewalk Repair Is Sloppy, Bricks Fall Off Buildings"

20. Times-Union (8-13-62):
"Red Feat Supports Moonshot Forecast"
"Chamber Hall Packed for Talk on Russia"
"Midnight in Moscow – City of 7 Million"
"The Communist Party: They Run It Like a Lodge"

21. Democrat & Chronicle (8-14-62): "Russ Scene Assessed In Talk, Pictures"

22. Times-Union (8-14-62): "Miller Cites Where Reds Lag, Lead"

23. Times-Union (8-15-62): "Photographer Hickey Scores for Our Side"

Folder #15: Russia Trip. News Articles by Paul Miller, August 16 – December 1962

1. Times-Union (8-16-62): "K's Farm Program Fine, But It Doesn't Work"

2. Democrat & Chronicle (8-19-62):
"Behind the Wall: "The Reds Dig Trenches; East Berlin Is Drab City"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

3. Times-Union (8-22-62): “T-U Picture Story: Hickey Visits Red Hospital”

4. Times-Union (8-24-62): “Focus On Russia”

5. Times-Union (8-31-62): “Focus On Russia”

6. Times-Union (9-6-62): “Focus On Russia”

7. Columbus (OH) Dispatch (10-31-62): “Russia Has Building Boom But Housing Still Problem”

8. Brockton (MA) Daily Enterprise (11-13-62): “Keen Look Behind the Iron Curtain”

9. Brighton-Pittsford (NY) Post (12-13-62): “Paul Miller Reports On Life in Russia”

Folder #16: Russia Trip. News Articles by Paul Miller from other than Gannett Newspapers, 1962

1. Knickerbocker (Albany, NY) News (8-6-62): “Seeing Russia (1): Barriers to Reducing Tension”

2. Knickerbocker (Albany, NY) News (8-7-62):
“Seeing Russia (2): A Woeful Shortage of Skilled Labor”

3. Knickerbocker (Albany, NY) News (8-8-62): “Seeing Russia (3): Reds Spend Millions on TV”

4. Knickerbocker (Albany, NY) News (8-9-62): “Russia’s Monotone Construction”

5. Knickerbocker (Albany, NY) News (8-10-62): “Housewives Face Food Problems”

6. *Boston (*MA) Herald (1-20-63):
“Report From Russia: Visitors Trade Quips With Editor of Izvestia”

7. Boston (MA) Herald (1-21-63):
“Report From Russia: How Soviet People are Kept in Uproar Over U.S. Testing”

8. Boston (MA) Herald (1-22-63):
“Report From Moscow – III: Khrushchev Ad Libs His Arguments”

9. Boston (MA) Herald (1-23-63): “Newsman Reports from Russia”

10. Boston (MA) Herald (1-24-63):
“Report From Russia: “Editors Take Note of Startling Contrasts”

11. Boston (MA) Herald (1-25-63):
“Report From Russia: “Soviet Police ‘Control’ Still Strong”

12. Boston (MA) Herald (1-27-63):

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"'Report From Russia:' Few Well-Dressed, Prices Up – Quality Down"

13. Boston (MA) Herald (1-28-63): "Report from Russia – No. 8: Communist party Is Kept Small"

14. Boston (MA) Herald (1-28-63):
"Report from Russia – No. 9: "Reds Use Church to Attack Religion"

15. Boston (MA) Herald (1-30-63):
"Report From Russia: Editor Sees Signs Soviet relaxing Iron Rule"

16. "Russia: Khrushchev Interview (1962)"

Folder #17: Russia Trip, 1962. Pravda and Other Foreign Language Newspapers

1. Soviet News (7-19-62):
"Nikita Khrushchov Gives Interview to Group of American Journalists (Full Text of Interview)"
"Disappointing Western Reaction to New Soviet Disarmament Proposals"
"US President Sees Soviet Ambassador"
"'We Must Make Culture an Instrument of Peace'"

Folder #18: Russia Trip, 1962. Departure Photographs from Russia, Sweden, and Berlin

Folder #19: Russia Trip, 1962. Photographs: Family at Airport, White House, Public Appearances

Folder #20: Travel Brochures: USSR, Crimea, Caucasus, Leningrad, Moscow, Samarkand, Sochi

Folder #21: Travel Brochures, 1962: Tashkent, Tbilisi, Uzbek Republic, Volgograd (Stalingrad)

Folder #22: Berlin. Pamphlets and Materials, 1962

1. It [The Berlin Wall] began August 13th . . . (n.d.)

2. Berlin: fate and mission (n.d.)

3. Leading Men in the Soviet-Occupied Zone of Germany (3-1-60)

4. The (Hamburg, F. R. G.) German Tribune (8-4-62): "A Weekly Review of the German Press"

5. The Divided City (January 1962)

Folder #23: Newspaper Reports from Russia. Correspondence, 1962

Folder #24: Newspaper Reports from Russia. Correspondence, 1963

Folder #25: Original Notes taken on Trip to Russia, 1962

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Folder #26: Russia, 1962. Editorial Notes (book cover removed to oversize)

Folder #27: Russia: 1962. Distribution List

Folder #28: Russia: 1962. Acknowledgement Letters

Folder #29: Russia: 1962. Acknowledgement Letters [see also Box 1/f 28]

Folder #30: Scrapbook Contents, July 1961 – April 1963 (folder 1 of 4)

1961

1. Democrat & Chronicle (7-7-61): "Quiet Newsman Covers World's Top Hot Spot – Moscow"

2. Times-Union (7-7-61): "How Things Look From 'Diplomatic Ghetto' in Russia"

3. Utica Daily Press (9-26-61): "Rochesterian On Land-Grant College Panel"

4. PHOTO – 1961-5 – (September 1961): Cooperstown – Sept. 1961

5. Democrat & Chronicle (10-17-61): "Greater Coverage Of Foreign News Advocated"

6. Democrat & Chronicle (10-25-61): "More Humor in Industry Urged by Publisher"

7. Niagara Falls (NY) Gazette (10-25-61):
"Humor Keeps Things in Focus, Gannett Head Tells Club Here"

8. Editor & Publisher (11-4-61): "SDX Votes to Admit Chapters Overseas"

Folder #31: Scrapbook Contents, July 1961 – April 1963 (folder 2 of 4)

1. Democrat & Chronicle (10-25-61): "Newsmen Are Guests Of Kennedy"

1962

2. [Press Release]: "Washington, Jan. 23 (UPI) – President Kennedy has invited 12 leading newspaper figures to a White House lunch today. . . ."

3. [Press Release]: "Washington, Jan. 23 (AP) – President Kennedy gives another of his series of luncheons for news executives today. . . ."

   Democrat & Chronicle (1-24-62): "Paul Miller Lunches with President"

4. [Menu]: "The White House, Tuesday, January 23, 1962"
[Name Tag]

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

5. Times-Union (1-24-62): “Miller Is Kennedy Guest AT White House Luncheon”

6. The Washington Post (1-24-62): At White House After JFK Order: Lone Glass of Milk on Table”

7. Democrat & Chronicle (1-31-62): “Miller Named Again To Brotherhood Post”

Folder #32: Scrapbook Contents, July 1961 – April 1963 (folder 3 of 4)

1. Brotherhood Week (February 18-25, 1962): “Brotherhood is Democracy at Work”

2. PHOTO – 1962-9 – (3-17-62): Gridiron Dinner, Washington, D.C.

3. LUNCHEON FOR THE PRIME MINISTER (April 27, 1962)

4. TOP PHOTO OF ’61 – “This photo of Presidents Kennedy, Eisenhower. . . .”

5. [Associate Justice] Tom C. Clark, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, May 9, 1962.

6. Times-Union (6-5-62): “Cornell Spotlights Land Grant Act”

7. Times-Union (6-15-62): “Briton Cites Benefit Of Common Market”

8. [Program]: “Land Grant Centennial Convocation, June 14-15, 1962”

9. Times-Union (6-16-62): “Paul Miller Talks at Cornell U.”

10. The Inland Valley Press Association (9-11-62):
“‘Press Conference’ at Oct. 16 Luncheon: 3 Top Editors Answer Your Questions on Russia Tour”

11. Democrat & Chronicle (9-18-62): “An Outline of Hopes and Goals Of Responsible Newspapers”

12. Inland Bulletin (9-26-62):
“Press Conference: Three Top Editors Answer Your Questions on Their Russia Tour”

13. PHOTO – 1962-13 – (n.d.): [Nelson Rockefeller and Paul Miller]

14. Utica (NY) Daily Press (9-28-62): “K Could Win Free Election In Russia, Editor Tells Press”

15. The Pontiac (MI) Press (9-28-62): “Russia Doesn’t . . . We Must Treasure Freedom”

16. Chicago (IL) Daily Tribune (10-17-62): “Nuclear War Not Probable, Editors Told”

17. Elmira (NY) Star-Gazette (10-25-62): “Most Russians Abhor War, Miller Tells Service Clubs”

18. (Newspaper and date unknown): “Miller Says Red Objective Still Is World Conquest”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Folder #33: Scrapbook Contents, July 1961 – April 1963 (folder 4 of 4)

1. Democrat & Chronicle (11-10-62): "Henry W. Clune's Seen and Heard"

2. The Inland Daily Press Association (11-13-62):
"Press Conference: Three Top Editors Answer Questions on Their Russia Tour"

3. Trinity-Pawling (NY) Times (11-14-62):
"Mr. Paul Miller Gives Lecture On Summer Tour of U.S.S.R."

4. The Tulsa (OK) Tribune (11-15-62):
"'Bigger' Government Makes News Job Harder"
"Miller To Talk On Russia to Sigma Delta Chi"
"News Dean Urges Truth About Crisis"
"U.S. Cuba Move Lauded in Talk By Paul Miller"

5. Rock Hill (SC) Evening Herald (11-17-62): "Stand Straight – America"

1963

6. The Washington Post (3-10-63): "Onward! Onward! Sails the Ship of State – on Stage"

7. (Newspaper and date unknown): "Ole Miss, CIA, JFK In-Laws All Roast in Gridiron"

8. Hartford (CT) Times (11-27-62): "Definite U.S. Action Needed, Gannett Chief Tells Leaders"

9. Editor & Publisher (4-20-63): "Publishers to Hear About Implications of Space Age"

10. Democrat & Chronicle (4-23-63): "'Fat American' Chided by Glenn"

11. The New York Times (4-23-63):
"Glenn Asks Establishment of Space-Data Center in U.S. to Speed Use of Knowledge"

Box 6

Folder #4: Scrapbook Contents, April 1963 – January 1964 (folder 1 of 3)

Folder #5: Scrapbook Contents, April 1963 – January 1964 (folder 2 of 3)

1. Democrat & Chronicle (8-20-63):
"Religious 'Freedom' In Soviet Union"
"The Vietnam Mess"

2. Times-Union (11-23-63): "No Man Could Meet Him Without Liking Him"

3. Democrat & Chronicle (12-3-63): "Editorial on Tragedy and Prayer"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

4. Funeral Services of John Fitzgerald Kennedy, Late President of the United States
November 25, 1963 at Twelve Noon. Saint Matthews Cathedral, Rhode Island Avenue NW.

5. The Mass on the Day of Burial for John Fitzgerald Kennedy.
Born May 29, 1917. Died November 22, 1963. At Saint Matthews Cathedral, Washington, D.C.
May he rest in peace.

6. John Fitzgerald Kennedy. President of the United States. May 29, 1917-November 22, 1963.
Dear God, Please take care of your servant John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

7. Democrat & Chronicle (12-3-63): "Miller Guest of Johnson At White House"

Folder #6: Scrapbook Contents, April 1963 – January 1964 (folder 3 of 3)

1. Dinner of the Inter American Press Association in honor of The Honorable John Fitzgerald Kennedy, President of the United States, on Monday, the eighteenth of November, nineteen hundred and sixty three.
The Hotel Americana, Miami, Florida.

2. (23) PHOTOS – 1963-16-20d – (November1963):
Miami, Florida – November 1963 (Miami Herald reception – I.A.P.A. convention)

1964

3. Democrat & Chronicle (1-10-64): "LBJ Accepts Bid to Speak At AP Meet"

Folder #8: Scrapbook Contents, January – October 1964 (folder 1 of 2)

1. Times-Union (1-15-64): "Paul Miller Sees Nixon as GOP Choice"
Democrat & Chronicle (1-15-64): "Nixon Likely Choice of GOP, Miller Says"

2. San Diego (CA) Evening Tribune (2-7-64): "AP President Commends Reporting of Assassination"

3. Democrat & Chronicle (2-7-64): "Kennedy Slaying Coverage Praised"
Times-Union (2-7-64): "Newspaper Coverage Of JFK Slaying Lauded"

4. The (New Orleans, LA) Times-Picayune (1-14-64):
"Nixon Likely GOP Choice, Says AP President"

5. The Hartford (CT) Courant (4-11-64): "AP News Service Given Credit for Helping U.N."

6. Times-Union (4-20-64):
"U.S., Reds Cut Output Of Nuclear Materials: LBJ, Khrushchev Announce Plans Simultaneously"

7. PHOTO – 1964-10 – (April 20, 1964): CBS Telecast of AP Luncheon

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

8. Editor & Publisher (4-25-64): "LBJ Tells AP Of Nuclear Cuts"

9. (8) PHOTOS – 1964-11a-12b – (April 20, 1964): AP Luncheon

10. The New York Times (4-21-64):
"U.S. And Soviet To Curtail Atomic Arms Materials; Johnson Sees Peace Step"

Folder #9: Scrapbook Contents, January – October 1964 (folder 2 of 2)

1. Democrat & Chronicle (8-12-64): "White House News Plan Draws Fire"

2. Editor & Publisher (August 1964): "What Can a Newspaper Do When Its City Is Torn by Riots?"

3. The New York Times (August 28, 1964): "President Johnson Attends Service for Mrs. Byrd"

Folder #10: Mexico (Gustavo Diaz Ordaz) Correspondence, November 1964

1965

Folder #11: Churchill, Winston. Funeral. Clippings, January 1965

Folder #12: Scrapbook Contents, October 1964 – April 1965 (folder 1 of 2)

1. Times-Union (1-30-65): "Churchill Journeys Into History"

2. (Newspaper and date unknown): "Millers Fly To Inaugural"

3. [Invitation]: Mexican Luncheon [for] President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz (November 29, 1964)

4. [Invitation]: Ambassador of the United States of America and Mrs. Freeman (November 30, 1964)

5. [Invitation]: The President [U.S.A.] for discussion of Radio Free Europe (December 2, 1964)

Folder #13: Scrapbook Contents, October 1964 – April 1965 (folder 2 of 2)

1. [Invitation]: LBJ Inaugural Ball (1-20-65)

2. Ceremonial to be Observed at the Funeral of The Right Honourable Sir Winston Spencer Churchill (1-30-65)

3. Times-Union (1-28-65): "Paul Miller To Be at Rites For Churchill"
Democrat & Chronicle (1-29-65): "Paul Miller Flies to London For Funeral"

4. The Order of Service for the Funeral of The Right Honourable Sir Winston Spencer Churchill (1-30-65)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

5. Democrat & Chronicle (2-1-65):
"Churchill Rites Spectacular in Vast Grandeur"
"Funeral Followed Exact Schedule"

6. [London, England] Daily Telegraph and Morning Post (1-27-65):
"World Press Converging On London"

Folder #14: Scrapbook Contents, April 20, 1965 – December 31, 1965 (folder 1 of 4)

1. The New York Times (April 20, 1965):
"Romney Decries Johnson's Plans"
"U.P.I. Clients Are Told Parleys On Vietnam Offer Best Way Out"

2. Editor & Publisher (August 24, 1965):
"AP Hits Restriction On Viet Nam News"
"UPI Men Give Views On Viet Censorship"

3. (Newspaper and date unknown): "AP, Gannett Chief Refutes Sen. Dodd's Press Criticism"

4. (Newspaper and date unknown): "Foundation Stones"

Folder #15: Scrapbook Contents, April 20, 1965 – December 31, 1965 (folder 2 of 4)

1. The Cocoa (FL) Tribune (6-3-65): "Two Astronauts Take Off With Brilliant Launch From Cape"

2. PHOTO – 1965-14 – (June 6, 1965): Robert Kennedy at [Rochester] Airport

3. Times-Union (6-5-65): "Sight of Gemini-4 Launch Heart-stopping Thrill of a Lifetime"

4. Democrat & Chronicle (6-7-65): "Make Most of Space Age, Miller Urges Union Grads"

5. Times-Union (6-7-65): "An Age To 'Soar' Miller Tells Grads"

6. Times-Union (6-16-65): "Continuing Needs Cited In Race Relations Field"

7. Times-Union (7-3-65): "Space Experts Look beyond Moon At Huge Cape Kennedy Wonderland"

Folder #16: Scrapbook Contents, April 20, 1965 – December 31, 1965 (folder 3 of 4)

1. Times-Union (7-28-65): "Notables Meet Here for P.M. Day"

2. (7) PHOTOS – 1965-17a-18b – (July 28, 1965): 'PM Day' Pictures

3. William P. Rogers, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, August 3, 1965.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

4. Harry F. Guggenheim, to Carl S. Hallauer, Rochester, NY, July 14, 1965.

5. J. Edgar Hoover, Washington, D.C., to Carl S. Hallauer, Rochester, NY, July 14, 1965.

6. Times-Union (7-28-65): "Nixon Here, Urges U.S. To Shun Ground War"

7. Democrat & Chronicle (7-29-65): "Nixon Urges U.S. Push Air, Sea Strikes in Viet"

8. Times-Union (7-29-65): "Sabotage N. Viets, Ex-Diplomat Urges"

9. Democrat & Chronicle (8-26-65): "Gannett Co. Men Humphrey Guests"
Times-Union (8-26-65): "Humphrey Host To 2 Executives"

10. Times-Union (8-28-65):
"U.S. Moves To Close Gap (If Any) For Superiority Over Russia in Space"

Folder #17: Scrapbook Contents, April 20, 1965 – December 31, 1965 (folder 4 of 4)

1. PHOTOS – 1965-24a/24b – (October 1, 1965): Paul Miller and Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson

1966

Folder #26: Scrapbook Contents, January 1, 1966 – April 15, 1968 (folder 1 of 5)

1. PHOTO – 1966-3 – (January 10, 1966):
Harry Byrd's Swearing In – January 10, 1966 – Taken at reception in Hubert Humphrey's Office

2. Santa Barbara (CA) News-Press (1-17-66):
"AP Head Cites Space Age Demands on News Agencies"

3. Santa Barbara (CA) News-Press (1-18-66):
"Rapport of Newspapermen Evident at Party for Senator"

4. Ventura County (CA) Star-Free Press (1-18-66):
"Vietnam Correspondents Praised By News Executive During Ojai Visit"

5. Santa Barbara (CA) News-Press (1-20-66):
"UC Students Were Right in Rebelling Against Rules, Kerr Tells AP Group"

6. The Gridiron Club of Washington, D.C. Eighty-first Annual Dinner (March 1966)

7. Today (4-3-66): "Promote the Cape, Says HHH"

Folder #27: Scrapbook Contents, January 1, 1966 – April 15, 1968 (folder 2 of 5)

1. PHOTO – 1966-10 – (May 3, 1966): "To Paul Miller – with best wishes. Hubert H Humphrey"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

2. Democrat & Chronicle (8-26-65): "U.S. Must Prove to Reds Viet War Costly: Humphrey"

3. (9) PHOTOS – 8b-9e – (April 25, 1966):
To Paul Miller – Distinguished Journalist and great American with warm regards

4. The Miami (FL) Herald (10-19-66): "Inter American Press Faces A Full Agenda"

Folder #28: Scrapbook Contents, January 1, 1966 – April 15, 1968 (folder 3 of 5)

1. Democrat & Chronicle (1-22-67): "LBJ Looks Well, Publisher Says"

2. [Menu]: The Gridiron Club Winter Dinner (December 3, 1966)

1967

3. The Gridiron Club of Washington, D.C. Eighty-second Annual Dinner (March 11, 1967)

4. The Washington Post (3-13-67): "Gridiron Club Sizzles Over LBJ's Guam Trip"

5. Washington Sunday Star (3-19-67): "Lord Snowden Vents Ire on Rumors"

6. World Journal Tribune, New York (4-23-67): "AP Meeting To Feature Viet Panel"

7. Ithaca (NY) Journal (4-25-67):
"Sen. Charles Percy (R-Ill.) shakes hands with Gen. William Westmoreland. . . ."

8. (8) PHOTOS – 1967-26a-26g – (4-24-67):
Sen. Charles Percy, Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Gen. William Westmoreland, Paul Miller, et al.

9. Time (May 5, 1967): "The War"

Folder #29: Scrapbook Contents, January 1, 1966 -- April 15, 1968 (folder 4 of 5)

1. Times-Union (6-24-67): "Press Freedom Broadened By High Court in Gen. Walker Case"

2. Mrs. George Romney, E. Lansing, MI, to Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, Oct. 14, 1967.

3. The Gridiron Club of Washington, D.C. Extraordinary Dinner (November 11, 1967)

1968

Folder #30: Scrapbook Contents, January 1, 1966-April 15, 1968 (folder 5 of 5)

1. PHOTO – 1968-14 – (n.d.): To Paul Miller – with best wishes, Hubert H. Humphrey

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Folder #20: Pan American Inaugural Flight – New York to Moscow

Folder #23: Scrapbook Contents, April 22, 1968 – September 19, 1968 (folder 1 of 3)

1. (Newspaper and date unknown): "Clifford Expects Saigon To Take On More Of Fighting"

2. Salt Lake City (UT) Tribune (5-25-68): "AP Chief Praises Viet Reporting"

3. Salt Lake City (UT) Tribune (5-25-68):
"Students Have No Right to Riot, AP Chief Says at Westminster"

4. Democrat & Chronicle (6-2-68): "Conserve Society, Samuels Urges"

Folder #24: Scrapbook Contents, April 22, 1968 – September 19, 1968 (folder 2 of 3)

1. Inaugural Flight Certificate . . . direct Jet Clipper Service New York to Moscow

2. Air Travel, Official Airline Guide (July 1968): "Bridging Two Worlds"

3. The New York Times (7-8-68): "Moscow Air Link To Open Monday"
Democrat & Chronicle (7-9-68): Moscow-New York Air Link to Open Monday"

4. Inaugural Flight: New York – Moscow, July 15, 1968

5. The Denver (CO) Post (7-15-68): "U.S. Russia Begin Airliner Services"

6. The New York Times (7-16-68):
"Russian Jetliner Inaugurates Direct Soviet-U.S. Passenger Flights"

7. Times-Union (7-16-68): "Pan Am VIP lands in Moscow"

Folder #25: Scrapbook Contents, April 22, 1968 – September 19, 1968 (folder 3 of 3)

1. [Envelope]: Russian Stamps

2. PHOTO – 1968-31 – (July 15, 1968): Vladimir Paranov (Russian journalist) and Paul Miller

3. (2) PHOTOS – 1968-32a/32b – (n.d.): Moscow – Pan Am Group

4. Guest List: Jet Clipper Inaugural Flight, New York to Moscow, July 15, 1968

5. Times-Union [?] (8-24-68): "The Russians Don't Want A 2nd Hungary"

6. PHOTO – 1968-37 – (August 1968): Republican National Convention

7. Editor & Publisher (August 17, 1968): "Watchdog will bark if campaign's dirty"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

8. AP World (Summer 1968):
"Vietnam AP Photographer Henri Huet crosses a Mekong Delta stream. . . ."
"Some of the 150 AP men at the Republican National Convention. . . ."

9. Chicago Tribune (8-27-68):
"At the [Democratic] Convention . . . Paul Miller. . . ."
"Kennedy Name May Be Placed Despite Plea"
"LBJ Birthday. . . ."

Folder #31: Scrapbook Contents, September 21, 1968 – September 14, 1969 (folder 1 of 4)

1. PHOTO – 1968-16 – (n.d.): Anthony Eden's visit to Rochester at Rochester Club luncheon

2. Mrs. Richard M. Nixon, to Louise Miller, Pittsford, NY, August 31, 1968.

3. Times-Union (9-21-68):
"Humphrey Underdog in Campaign – Can He Achieve Another Truman Upset?"

4. Times-Union (9-28-68): "Criticism of News Is One Thing, Official Regulation Is Quite Another"

5. (5) PHOTOS – 1968-19a/19b/19c/19d1/19e – (October 17, 1968):
[Richard Nixon] at Rochester Airport

6. Times-Union (10-5-68): "What Happened to Hubert Humphrey Is a Puzzler of the '68 Campaign"

7. Frank Devans, Rochester, NY, top Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, October 9, 1968.

8. Times-Union (10-26-68):
"Humphrey-Javits Pairing Aimed At Strengthening Weak HHH Position"

9. Times-Union (11-2-68):
"What Kind of Man Is Dick Nixon? Campaign Obscures Personal Qualities"

10. Times-Union (11-9-68):
"The Bombing Halt in Retrospect – And What Nixon Can and Can't Do Now"

11. Times-Union (November 1968): "Rocky Names 3 from City To Urban Development Unit"

12. [New Year's Card]: Richard Nixon and Family at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, November 6, 1968

13. Times-Union (12-21-68): "Nixon Off to a Strong Start Toward Goal of Uniting the Country"

14. Times-Union (12-28-68):
"An Incredible Space Achievement – But Still Only a Step into Vast Space"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

15. Times-Union (1-4-69): "What Business Can-and-Can't-Do In Helping to Solve Urban Problems"

16. Times-Union (1-4-69): "Rioting Students and Teachers Deserve Crackdown, Not 'Understanding'"

17. Times-Union (1-18-69):
"LBJ Attacked Nation's Problems But Leaves Legacy of 'Big Government'"

18. [Sunday Church Service]: The White House, Sunday, January 26, 1969

19. [Invitation]: The Fifty-sixth Anniversary Dinner of The Alfalfa Club, January 25, 1969

20. Times-Union (n.d.): "Inauguration Day's Effect: A Good Start, Calm and Businesslike"

21. Democrat & Chronicle (2-1-69): "Wallis Foresees New Pressures"

22. [Invitation]:
Mrs. Richard M. Nixon to Mrs. Paul Miller, White House Dinner, Saturday, March 15, 1969

23. (Newspaper and date unknown): "White House Party Lights Will Blaze Next Week"

24. Times-Union (n.d.): "Nixon Wins Praise in U.S., Europe – Former Foes Now 'Discover' Him"

25. PHOTO – 1969-21 – (August 13, 1969): Nixon Introduces [Neil Armstrong] the Celebrity. . . .

Folder #32: Scrapbook Contents, September 21, 1968 – September 14, 1969 (folder 2 of 4)

1. The Gridiron Club of Washington, D.C. Eighty-fourth Annual Dinner, March 15, 1969

Folder #33: Scrapbook Contents, September 21, 1968 – September 14, 1969 (folder 3 of 4)

1. Daily News (4-22-69): "Vows Smaller Role in Viet"

2. Democrat & Chronicle (4-22-69): "Rogers on Ending War: 'Both Sides Withdraw'"

3. The New York Times (4-22-69):
"Rogers, Here, Warns That Enemy May Not Want a Negotiated Settlement"

4. The (Lynchburg, VA) News (4-22-69): "Rogers Says U.S. Expects Peace Talks Will Succeed"

5. (3) PHOTOS – 1969-13a/13b/13c – (July 1969):
Patrick AF Base/L.J.M's luncheon/Lady Bird Honored Guest/Tuesday before moon launch

Folder #34: Scrapbook Contents, September 21, 1968 – September 14, 1969 (folder 4 of 4)

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1. Times-Union (7-16-69): “Apollo Men Fit, Ready”

2. The (Washington, D.C.) Evening Star (7-15-69):
“Wheeler Off to Study War Lull”
“Apollo Countdown Runs Smoothly”
“Trip May Lead To Changes in U.S. Tactics”
“Army Queried On Nerve Gas Production Plan”
“Edgewood Will End Gas Tests”

3. (2) PHOTOS – 1969-14a-15e – (July 15, August 13, 1969):
Cape Kennedy
Dinner with the astronauts
L.J.M.’s luncheon

4. [Welcome]: Century Plaza Hotel, Los Angeles, CA, to Mr. and Mrs. Miller, August 12, 1969.
“. . . President and Mrs. Nixon’s dinner in honor of the Apollo astronauts.”

5. Today (7-16-69): “Very Important Luncheon”

6. Democrat & Chronicle (4-22-69): “Lyndon Paces for ‘Baby’ Apollo”

7. The New York Times (7-15-69): “Thousands Flock to Be ‘There’”

8. Today (n.d.): [PHOTO] “LBJs Arrive at Patrick”

9. [Postcard]: “Apollo 11”

10. [Invitation]: “The President and Mrs. Nixon . . . on Wednesday Evening, August 13, 1969”

11. [Plaque]: “Here Men From the Planet Earth First Set Foot Upon the Moon. . . .”

Box 27

Folder #1: Scrapbook Contents, October 1, 1969 – July 10, 1970 (folder 1 of 2)

1. Pat Nixon, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, October 10, 1969.

2. [Invitation]: “The President and Mrs. Nixon . . . at dinner on Sunday, October 12, 1969”

3. Democrat & Chronicle (10-14-69): “Executives Of AP at Nixon Fete”

4. [Dinner Menu]: “The White House, Monday, December 1, 1969”

5. The Washington Post (12-2-69): “Nixon’s Ties: Boys’ Club Board Honored”

1970

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

6. Alfalfa Club 57th Anniversary Dinner Seating Chart (1-24-70): The Statler, Washington, D.C.

7. The (Washington, D.C.) Sunday Star (1-25-70): "It's Humphrey for '70 At Alfalfa Club Dinner"

8. [Menu]: "State Luncheon . . . By The Secretary of State and Mrs. Rogers, February 25, 1970"

9. Spiro Theodore Agnew, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, February 13, 1970.

Folder #2: Scrapbook Contents, October 1, 1969 – July 10, 1970 (folder 2 of 2)

1. [Invitation]: "The President and Mrs. Nixon . . . at dinner on Sunday, April 22, 1970"

2. Times-Union (4-21-70): "Defense Secretary and AP Officials"

3. The Washington Post (4-21-70): "Laird Sees Risks In Missile Delays"

4. PHOTO – 1970-10a – (4-20-70):
With Secretary of Defense Mel Laird Speaker at A.P. Annual Luncheon Waldorf, April 20, 1970

5. Times-Union (6-27-70): "Victories of Heath and Jacklin Give British a New Lift of Spirit"

6. Democrat & Chronicle (7-10-70): "Nixon Names Miller TO UN Commission"

Folder #4: Iron Curtain Countries. Scrapbook Contents, June 21 – July 21, 1970

1. Democrat & Chronicle (6-21-70): "AP Mission Takes Miller To Europe"
Times-Union (7-23-70): "Paul Miller Guest At 10 Downing St."

2. (9) PHOTOS – 1970-17-1970-19d – (6-25-70): Prague, Czechoslovakia. . . .

3. [Invitation]:
"The Ambassador [to Czechoslovakia] . . . Mr. Miller at lunch on Friday, June 26th [1970]. . . ."

4. Times-Union (7-3-70): "Courageous Czechs Repressed By Tighter Communist Clamps"

5. PHOTO – 1970-22 – 6-26-70): PM received by President of Romania

6. [Invitation]:
"The Ambassador [to Romania] . . . Mr. Miller at luncheon on Monday, June 29, 1970. . . ."
[Guest List]: In honor of Mr. Paul Miller, President . . . of Associated Press"

7. Times-Union (7-11-70):
"Friendly, Bustling Romania Tries For Some Independence from Soviet Union"

8. [Invitation]:

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

"The Ambassador [to Hungary] . . . Mr. Miller at a reception on Friday, June 3, 1970. . . ."

9. Transylvania (1966)

10. Times-Union (7-22-70): "Tough Hungarians Reach Out For More Contact with Free World"

Folder #5: Iron Curtain Countries. Scrapbook Contents, June 21 – July 21, 1970

1. Times-Union (7-25-70):
"Red Maverick Yugoslavia Thrives – But What happens After Tito Departs?"

2. Democrat & Chronicle (7-26-70): "Douglas-Home: Talks To Be Mideast Choice"

3. PHOTO – 1970-25a – (7-23-70):
PM & British Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home, Whitehall, London

4. (Danville, IL) Commercial News (7-26-70):
"High British Official Says Egypt, Israel, Think Negotiations Best Course:
Douglas-Home Airs Views to Paul Miller, Chairman of Gannett Newspapers"

5. Hartford (CT) Times (7-26-70): "What Is Yugoslav Future When Marshall Tito Dies?"

6. (Elmira, NY) Sunday Telegram (7-26-70): "Britain Sees Mideast Foes Set to Negotiate"

7. Niagara Falls (NY) Gazette (7-26-70): "Egypt, Israel Talks Might Develop Soon"

8. (Rockford, IL) Sunday Register-Star (7-26-70): British are optimistic on Mideast"

9. The (Utica, NY) Observer-Dispatch (7-26-70): "Egypt, Israel Ponder Talk"

10. The (Binghamton, NY) Sunday Press (7-26-70):
"Douglas-Home Believes Egypt, Israel Ready to Negotiate"

11. (20) PHOTOS – 1970-26a-29e – (July 1970): "Dubrovnik Palma"

12. (2) PHOTOS – 1970-30/31 – (July 1970): "Mallorca"

13. Democrat & Chronicle (7-27-70): "Miller Reviews His Tour"

14. Democrat & Chronicle (7-28-70): "Influential Romanian Editor Helps make Party Policy"

15. Democrat & Chronicle (7-29-70): "U.S. Campus Unrest Closely Watched in East Europe"

16. Democrat & Chronicle (7-30-70): "Space Program Earns Great Goodwill for U.S. Abroad"

17. Democrat & Chronicle (7-31-70): "East Europeans Crazy About Cars But Wait Is Long"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

18. Democrat & Chronicle (8-1-70): “Tourists Change World of Socialist Resort Dwellers”

19. “A Confidential Report to Directors of The Associated Press” (August 11, 1970)

Folder #6: Europe Trip. Clippings, Correspondence, Reports, 1970

Folder #7: London. Photographs, Correspondence, 1970

Folder #8: Prague, Czechoslovakia. Pamphlet, Correspondence, 1970

Folder #9: Bucharest, Romania. Pamphlets, Correspondence, 1970

Folder #10: Budapest, Hungary. Correspondence, 1970

Folder #11: Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Portugal and Spain. Correspondence, 1970

Folder #12: Scrapbook Contents, July 1970 – July 1971 (1 of 2)

1. Times-Union (9-12-70): “Stop Trying to Solve Problems With Federal laws, Agencies, Money”

2. Democrat & Chronicle (9-19-70): “UN Anniversary Hearing in City”

3. Times-Union (10-17-70): “War Is Declared On U.S. Society”

4. Times-Union (10-24-70): “Rochester Hearing to Review What’s Wrong – and Right – With UN”

5. Democrat & Chronicle (10-25-70): “Cooper to Lead U.N. Hearing”

6. Times-Union (10-26-70): “Wadsworth Admits U.N. Flaws; Pleased by Public Backing”

7. Times-Union (10-31-70):
“How Times-Union Editorial Board Arrived at Buckley, Rocky Endorsements”

8. PHOTO – 1970-33 – (n.d.): Paul Miller and Nelson Rockefeller

9. (2) PHOTOS – 1970-34b/34c – (n.d.):
[Spiro Agnew and Paul Miller] AP Managing Editors Convention, Ilikai Hotel, Honolulu

10. Honolulu (HI) Advertiser (n.d.): “Agnew speaks kindly of the press”

11. Times-Union (n.d.): “Passing of Portugal’s Salazar Challenges Country to Move into New Day”

1971

12. Times-Union (1-9-71): “Full Investigation Is Needed Of Abuses in Welfare Administration”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

13. Times-Union (1-16-71): “How Presidential Press Conferences Have Grown Through the Decades”

14. Times-Union (1-30-71): “Cape Kennedy Fights to Keep Its Role as America’s Top Spaceport”

15. A Prayer (Given by Paul Miller . . . in the early hours of the Apollo 14 moon mission)

16. Times-Union (2-6-71): “Higher State Taxes Unavoidable – But Spend for Real Needs, Cut Others”

Folder #13: Scrapbook Contents, July 1970 – July 1971 (2 of 2)

1. Times-Union (2-20-71): “Russian Navy Visits to Cuba Point up Soviet Threat to America”

2. Times-Union (2-27-71):
“T-U Reporters Dig into Welfare To Find What’s Wrong with the System”

3. The Gridiron Club of Washington, D.C. Eighty-sixth Annual Dinner (March 13, 1971)
[Menu]: The Gridiron Club Annual Dinner (March 13, 1971)

4. Times-Union (3-20-71):
“Rocky Makes Remarkable Turnaround In Asking Budget Cuts, Welfare Reform”

5. Times-Union (3-27-71):
“Search for Economies in State Aid Hits All Areas, Even Nursing Schools”

6. Times-Union (4-17-71):
“U.S. Newsmen, Table Tennis Team ‘Open the Door’ Again into Red China”

7. Democrat & Chronicle (4-18-70): “Rocky to Discuss Welfare at AP Lunch”

8. PHOTO – 1970-10 – (April 1, 1971): UN Commission Dinner, White House

9. Times-Union (4-24-71): “Manhattan Façade Still Shines, But Problems Plague City Behind It”

10. Times-Union (5-15-71):
“. . . New Hope for SST”
“. . . Tax on Losses?”
“. . . Slaughter in Pakistan”

11. Lyndon B. Johnson, Austin, TX, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, June 15, 1971.

12. Lyndon B. Johnson. National Historic Site, TX. LBJ Birthplace. LBJ Boyhood Home.

13. [Invitation]:
“The President and Mrs. Nixon . . . at the marriage of their daughter, Patricia. . . . June 12, 1971”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

14. (2) PHOTOS – 1971-11a/11b – (June 2, 1971)

15. The Columbus (OH) Evening Dispatch (7-1-71): "Centennial Good Wishes Are Received"

Folder #14: Richard M. Nixon. Rochester Trip. Cloverstone Reception. Clippings, June 18, 1971

Folder #15: Guests at Malacanang Palace, Philippines, July 1971 (1of 2)

Folder #16: Guests at Malacanang Palace, Philippines, July 1971 (2of 2)

Folder #18: Pacific Trip. Scrapbook Contents, July 9 – August 4, 1971

1. Times-Union (5-29-71):
"The Bust Lives of LBJ and Lady Bird: New Library, Writing, Ranch, Visitors"

2. The Daily Yomiuri (7-28-71):
"Sato Hopes Emperor Will Visit The US"
"Apollo 15 Heads For Moon Landing"
"Kimura: Sato For One-China Policy, Recognizing Peking"

3. Times-Union (7-19-71): "A Report from Asia: Hope and Optimism Prevail"

4. PHOTO – 1971-17 – (Summer 1971): Manila Stopover

5. Times-Union (7-21-71): [PHOTO]: "Philippine President On Nixon China Visit"

6. Times-Union (7-24-71): "Nixon, Rogers, Kissinger: 'Pros at Work for U.S.'"

7. (3) PHOTOS – 1971-13a-13c – (July 1971): PM and Premier Sato, Tokyo, Japan

8. (7) PHOTOS – 1971-14a-15b – (July 1971): Seoul, Korea

9. Times-Union (7-27-71): "China Trip 'Welcome,' Prime Minister Says"

10. Honolulu (HI) Star-Bulletin (7-27-71): "Sato Suggests Emperor Should Make U.S. Trip"

11. The Washington Post (7-28-71): "Japan Seeking U.S. Invitation For Emperor"

12. The Japan Times (7-28-71): "Sato Expresses Hope Emperor May Make Visit to United States"

13. The Japan Times (7-29-71): "Visit Unlikely Soon"
Asahi Evening News (7-30-71): "AP's Paul Miller Honored"

14. Times-Union (7-31-71):
"Talk with Japan's Prime Minister Centered on Visits by Emperor, Nixon"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

15. The Gannetteer (October 1971): "On Tour of the Far East"

1972

16. Times-Union (4-15-72):
"Apollo Flights Regrettably Ending – Will U.S.S.R. Succeed U.S. on the Moon?"

17. Times-Union (6-24-72): "Discussion and Information Can Resolve Grievances, Misunderstanding"

Folder #19: Pacific Trip. Correspondence, July 9 – August 4, 1971

Folder #20: Scrapbook Contents, July 1971 – May 6, 1972

1. The Gridiron Club of Washington, D.C. Eighty-seventh Annual Dinner (April 8, 1972)

2. Democrat & Chronicle (4-16-72): "Nixon Recalls Trip Across Lake Ontario"

3. Times-Union (4-24-71): "AP Chiefs, Price Boss Chat"

4. PHOTO – 1972-8b – (4-24-72): PM, Wes Gallagher, and C. Jackson, Grayson, Jr.

Folder #22: China Trip. Correspondence, notes, 1972

Folder #23: U.S. Department of State. People's Republic of China Fact Book, February 1972

Folder #24: China Trip. Quotations from Chairman Mao Tse Tung. Paul Miller's Notebook, 1972

Folder #25: First China Trip. Scrapbook Contents, July 19 – August 1[?], 1972 (1 of 4)

1. (3) PHOTOS – 1972-12a/12b/12c – (n.d): Arriving in China

2. Times-Union (7-18-72):
"AP, China Seek News Exchange"
"Cordial First Step For a Long Journey"

3. Times-Union (7-19-72): "Mission to China"

4. Democrat & Chronicle (4-24-72):
"Egypt's Soviet Snub Tickles Peking"
"China's Cooling It on Mao Cult"

5. Times-Union (7-24-72): "Visit to China Unlike Any Visit Elsewhere"

6. Democrat & Chronicle (4-31-72): "AP, Chinese To Swap News"

7. Times-Union (7-31-72): "AP Agreement Opens a News Link to China"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

8. Times-Union (8-3-72): "'People Traffic Jam' in China"

9. Times-Union (8-4-72): "Health Improves, Red Chinese Says"

10. Times-Union (8-7-72): "China Impression: Poor but on the Move"

11. Times-Union (8-8-72): "How China Wiped Out Drug Problem"

12. (8) PHOTOS – 1972-14a-15d – (n.d.): PM in China

13. Times-Union (8-9-72): "Acupuncture – For a Brain Tumor! His Scalp Was Open . . . No Reaction"

14. (3) PHOTOS – 1972 – 16a-16c – (July 20, 1972): Arrival in Peking

Folder #26: First China Trip. Scrapbook Contents, July 19 – August 1[?], 1972 (2 of 4)

1. Times-Union (8-12-72):
"Payoff on Nixon Journey to China: Door Opened Wider, Tensions Eased"

2. (Newspaper and date unknown): "Miller Greets China Leader . . . and Children"

3. (3) PHOTOS – 1972-17a/17b/17c – (n.d.): Photos showing the friendliness of Chinese children

4. Times-Union (8-18-72): "Nation of Acrobats?"

5. Times-Union (8-19-72): "How the Small Average Family Lives"

6. Times-Union (8-22-72): "Women's Togs: Plain, Clean"

7. (2) PHOTOS – 1972-18a/18b – (n.d.): Photos showing curiosity over Kodak Pocket Instamatic

8. PHOTO – 1972-19 – (July 30, 1972):
Premier Chou En-lai's Dinner Honoring Prince Sihanouk at the Great Hall of the People

9. Premier Chou En-lai's Speech at [Prince Sihanouk's] Reception, July 30, 1972

10. Times-Union (8-23-72): "Free Birth Control Pills Commonplace"

11. PHOTO – 1972-20 – (August 26, 1972): Sampans . . . crowd into a dock in Soochow

12. (3) PHOTOS – 1972 – 21-23 – (n.d.): Scenes from life in China

13. Times-Union (8-24-72): "Shanghai Editor Keeps in Touch by Working Like Peasant"

14. PHOTO – 1972-24 – (n.d.): AP Photographer Horst Faas

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

15. Times-Union (8-25-72): “About a Steep Wall . . . And Missing Dogs”

16. (2) PHOTOS – 1972-25a/25b – (n.d.): PM, Wes Gallagher, and wives at the Great Wall

17. Times-Union (8-26-72):
“Real Message from China – We, Too, Must Work Harter to Achieve Goals”

18. (8) PHOTOS – 1972-26a-27d – (n.d.): Photos showing various sightseeing tours

19. Democrat & Chronicle (8-27-72):
“Aim of China Is to Change People”
“Veteran newsman Paul Miller [and] his three-week, 4,000 mile trip within Communist China”

Folder #27: First China Trip. Scrapbook Contents, July 19 – August 1[?], 1972 (3 of 4)

1. (4) PHOTOS – 28a-28d – (n.d.): The Millers and Gallaghers meet Premier Chou En-lai

2. Times-Union (8-28-72): “Food Usually Superb And Lodgings Good”

3. Times-Union (8-29-72): “Volunteer Army Chinese Style”

4. (2) PHOTOS – 1972-29a/29b – (n.d.): The Millers and Gallaghers witness Chinese Army training

5. Times-Union (8-29-72): “Critique on Bathrooms, Barber Shops, Hotels”

6. Times-Union (8-30-72): “China Visitor’s Notes Along the Way”

7. Times-Union (9-2-72): “Overpopulated Countries Struggle For More Effective Birth Control”

8. Editor & Publisher (August 26, 1972): “U.S. – China resume news exchange after 22 years”

9. (5) PHOTOS – 1972-30a-30e – (July 1972): Associated Press Dinner for the News Agency

10. PHOTO – 1972 31 – (n.d.): News Agency ladies group with editor of Hsinhua

11. (4) PHOTOS – 1972-32a-32d – (n.d.): Photos showing departure from Peking

12. Gannett News Service (n.d.): “China Today”

13. James G. Stahlman, Nashville, TN, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, August 16, 1972.

14. Jack Purcell, White Plains, NY, to Paul Miller, August 17, 1972.

15. Homer W. King, to Paul Miller, (n.d.): Miller Greets China Leader . . . and Children

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

16. Times-Union (9-23-72):
"Q – How Much Did They Let You See? A – About All We Had Time to See"

17. Stillwater (OK) New-Press (10-19-72): "Red China Editor's Life Not Easy"

Folder #28: First China Trip. Scrapbook Contents, July 19 – August 1[?], 1972 (4 of 4)

1. The Gannetteer (10-18-72): "OSU Graduate Tours In China"

2. The Conference Board Record (November 1972): "To China, on Business"

3. (7) PHOTOS – 1972-39a-39g – (n.d.): Chinese Acupuncture

Folder #29: Applications for entry. Correspondence, 1972

Folder #30: Articles on China by Paul Miller, 1972 (folder 1 of 3)

Folder #31: Articles on China by Paul Miller, 1972 (folder 2 of 3)

Folder #32: Articles on China by Paul Miller, 1972 (folder 3 of 3)

Folder #33: China Opens the Door. Mailing Lists, 1972

Folder #34: China Opens the Door. Draft, speech, 1972

Folder #35: China Opens the Door. Correspondence, 1972 [see also Box 1, folder #28]

Folder #36: Photographs [Not of Paul Miller], 1945 --?

Box 28

Folder #1: China Photographs, 1972

Folder #2: China. Slide Presentation. Notes, 1972

Folder #3: Scrapbook Contents, June 1972 – February 1973 (folder 1 of 2)

1. Frank Horton, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, August 29, 1972.

2. Times-Union (10-7-72):
"Nixon Team Remembers Truman Upset And Vows to Take Nothing for Granted"

3. Times-Union (10-14-72):
"Gannett Papers Are 'on Their Own' In Making Election Endorsements"

4. Times-Union (10-26-72): "A Woman's View Of Red China Today"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

5. Times-Union (10-28-72):
"Limit President to a Six-year Term? Much Talk But No Action on Proposal"

6. Times-Union (11-4-72):
"Outcome Would Be Even Less in Doubt Without Nixon's 'Well-meaning Friends'"

7. PHOTO – 1972-45 – (n.d.): LBJ Ranch

Folder #4: Scrapbook Contents, June 1972 – February 1973 (2 of 2)

1. Times-Union (12-2-72):
"Nearly All Rochester Policemen Do Tough Job Efficiently, Honestly"

2. [Invitation]:
"NASA Cordially Invites You to Attend an Apollo Launch, December 6, 1972"

3. Today (12-6-72): "Apollo . . . a beginning"

4. Today (12-7-72):
"First Chinese Watchers"
"Apollo Brought Forth Panorama of Emotions"

5. Times-Union (12-2-72):
"U.S. Space Program Will Thrust Ahead With Skylab After Apollo's Ending"

6. [Invitation]:
". . . Inauguration of Richard M. Nixon . . . and Spiro T. Agnew . . . January 20, 1972"

7. Times-Union (12-30-72):
"Harry S Truman's Fighting Spirit Secured His Honored Place in History"

8. PHOTO – 1973-13 – (n.d.): PM, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Rogers, and Robert McCloskie

9. Exchanges of Notes regarding . . . the Owen Falls Dam, Uganda (Cairo, 5-30-49 to 3-20-50)

10. English-Russian Foreign Phrase Quick Spotter with Self Pronunciation (n.d.)

1973

11. New York (January 1, 1973); "Media Power – Beside Nixon, Who?"

Folder #5: Scrapbook Contents, February 1973 – July 1, 1973

1. The (Oklahoma City, OK) Daily Oklahoman (3-6-73):
"Gaylord Challenges Legislature on His Century Day"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

2. Congressional Record – Senate (March 8, 1973): "Order of Business: Mr. Harry F. Byrd, Jr."

3. (Binghamton, NY) Sun-Bulletin (3-17-73): "A half-century of newspaper work"

4. The Gridiron Club of Washington, D.C. Eighty-eighth Annual Dinner (March 10, 1973)

5. Times-Union (4-23-73): "Kissinger Reveals New Atlantic Plan"

6. Democrat & Chronicle (4-24-73): "Kissinger: Reds 'Cynically' Violate Pact"

7. The New York Times (4-24-73): "A.P. Meeting Here on U.S. Relations With Europe"

8. Publishers' Auxiliary (6-9-73): "Associated Press Annual Luncheon – NYC – April 23, 1973"

9. (5) PHOTOS – 1973-15a-15e – (n.d): PM, Wes Gallagher, and Henry Kissinger

10. PHOTO – 1973-16 – (4-22-73): ANPA Week: PM and Senator William F. Knowland

11. (2) PHOTOS – 1973 -17a/17b – (4-23-73): Gannett Party: PM and Secretary William P. Rogers

12. [Invitation]: "President and Mrs. Nixon . . . Mr. and Mrs. Miller at dinner . . . June 18, 1973"

13. [Guest List]: "Dinner at the White House: Monday, June 18, 1973 at eight o'clock . . ."

14. Seattle (WA) Post-Intelligencer (6-14-73): "U.S. Can Learn From China, AP Chairman Says"

Folder #6: European Trip Correspondence, 1973

Folder #7: Scrapbook Contents, July -- December, 1973

1. [Memo]: Calvin Mayne, to Paul Miller, November 11, 1973

2. (8) PHOTOS – 1973-5a-5h – (December 1973): Guam

Folder #10: Secretary of State William P. Rogers. Scrapbook Contents, August – October, 1973

1. Gannett News Service (n.d.): "White House Dinner in honor of William P. Rogers . . ."

2. Times-Union (8-28-73): "Rogers Says Watergate Hasn't Hurt Image Yet"

3. Democrat & Chronicle (8-29-73): "Watergate Hasn't Hurt, Yet . . ."

4. (4) PHOTOS – 1973-8a-8e – (August 1973): PM and William P. Rogers

5. [Invitation]: "President and Mrs. Nixon . . . Mr. and Mrs. Miller at dinner . . . October 15, 1973"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

6. The Washington Post (10-15-73): GNS Special by Dorothy McCardle: "White House Dinner"

7. Columbus (OH) Dispatch (10-21-73):
"White House Farewell Dinner For Rogers Memorable One"

1974

Folder #11: Scrapbook Contents, January – June 1974

1. The Alfalfa Club of Washington, D.C. 61st Anniversary Dinner (January 26, 1974)

2. The Gridiron Club of Washington, D.C. Eighty-ninth Annual Dinner (April 6, 1974)
[Menu]: The Gridiron Club Annual Dinner (April 6, 1974)

3. George [H.W.] Bush, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, June 25, 1974
PHOTO – 1974-4a – (n.d.)

1975

Folder #12: China Trip. Scrapbook Contents, 1975

1. Democrat & Chronicle (5-24-75):
"Domino Theory Vindicated; Now U.S. Has Diplomatic Work To Do"

2. Democrat & Chronicle (5-27-75): "U.S. has strong tie to Far East: Miller"

3. Times-Union (5-27-75): "U.S. Doing 'Fabulous' Job Helping Refugees on Guam"

4. Newspaper unknown (5-31-75):
"A Surprise Call Reopens Doors To People's Republic of China"

5. Democrat & Chronicle (6-3-75): "Chinese can wait on Taiwan, touring U.S. editors are told"

6. Times-Union (5-27-75): "Second Look At China"

7. (Newspaper and date unknown): "China labels Soviet Union chief threat to world peace"

8. (Newspaper and date unknown): "Taiwan the Biggest Sore Point In U.S. – China Relationship"

9. Times-Union (6-7-75): "Romance Pops Out in China"

10. Democrat & Chronicle (6-9-75): "Pass the bear's paws?"

11. Democrat & Chronicle (6-10-75): "Red China believes in atheism"

12. Times-Union (6-11-75):"Red Chinese Relaxed With Foreign Visitors"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

13. Times-Union (6-12-75): “U.S. Gains in Foreign Headlines”

14. Times-Union (6-13-75): “Some Observations on a 2d Visit to China”

15. Times-Union (6-19-75): “Peking’s Views Are a Jolt After Cordiality of the Hosts”

16. Times-Union (6-20-75): “Grime Does Not pay in Singapore; Neither Does Long Hair”

17. Times-Union (6-23-75): “Chinese Haven’t Brightened Up Fashions Much”

18. Times-Union (6-24-75): “Dental Work, Chinese Style”

19. Democrat & Chronicle (6-28-75): “‘Pitiless Penalties’ Wipe Out Drug Problem in Red China”

20. (18) PHOTOS – 1975-3A-3R – (n.d): China Trip

Folder #13: China Trip. Scrapbook Contents, 1975 (2 of 4)

1. Peking Review (April 18, 1975):
“Criticize the Doctrines of Confucius and Mencius to Consolidate the Dictatorship of the Proletariat”

2. Peking Review (May 9, 1975): “Peking Rally Celebrates Complete Liberation of South Viet Nam”

Folder #14: Tourist Guides, 1975

Folder #15: Negatives, 1975

Folder #16: China Trip. Scrapbook Contents, 1975 (3 of 4)

1. Statement of the Government of the People’s Republic of China (October 7, 1969)

Folder #17: China Trip. Scrapbook Contents, 1975 (4 of 4)

1. The Constitution of the People’s Republic of China (1975)

2. Inside a People’s Commune (1974)

3. Pioneer: Singapore Armed Forces News (May 1975)

Folder #18: Trip File, 1975 +

1. Times-Union (8-9-75): “Officials Go Back to the Farm To Keep in Touch with the People”

2. Times-Union (10-11-75): “Daniel Moynihan Isn’t the First To Speak Bluntly to Diplomats”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

3. Times-Union (12-4-75): “Untimely Overtures to China”

4. Times-Union (12-6-75): “Tiny Vice Premier Teng In Middle of Things Now”

1976

5. Times-Union (5-29-76): “The Astonishing Contrasts of the Two Chinas”

6. Times-Union (6-5-76): “As Mao Fades, Factions Battle”

7. Times-Union (8-7-76): “Visitors Are Handled With Care in China”

Folder #19: China [Trip] File. 1975-1979

1. Sino-U.S. Joint Communique (1972)

2. Two Views of China (1978)

3. [Invitation]:
“The Chief of the Liaison Office of the [PRC] . . . Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller . . . September 11, 1974”

4. “Brief History of AP Relations with the People’s Republic of China” (October 2, 1974)

5. (Magazine and date unknown): “What’s China’s Track?”

6. [Invitation]:
“In honor of His Excellency . . . Prime Minister of The Republic of Singapore . . . May 12, 1975”

7. George (H.W.) Bush, Peking, PRC, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, March 26, 1975.

8. Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, to George H. Bush, Peking, PRC, April 18, 1975.

9. The St. Petersburg (FL) Times (n.d.): “Report From China”

10. [Paul Miller’s] “China Diary” (May 30 – June 3, 1975)

11. Paul Miller, Shanghai, PRC, to Teng Hsiao-ping, Peking, PRC, June 6, 1975.

12. PM, Rochester, NY, to Goh Keng Swee [Deputy PM and Defence Minister], Singapore, 6-16-75.

13. The Los Angeles Times (3-2-79): “‘Peking’ Turns to ‘Beijing’ in New Times Usage”

Folder #27: Pacific Trip. Taiwan. Scrapbook Contents, May 1976

1. The (Taipei, Taiwan) China News (5-22-76):
“Moslems, PLO Leftists Agitate for Syrian Pullout From Lebanon”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

2. JAL [Japan Air Lines] Flight Guide

3. This Month in Taiwan (May 1976)

4. The Grand Hotel Shopping Arcade and Gourmet Restaurants (n.d.)

Folder #28: Pacific Trip. Hong Kong. Scrapbook Contents, May 1976

1. An Introduction to Hong Kong (n.d.)

2. Hong Kong: You'll wish you could stay longer (n.d.)

3. Hong Kong: The Facts (n.d.)

4. Hong Kong's New Territories (April 1975)

5. A-O-A Businessman's Handbook (April-May 1976)

6. (12) PHOTOS – 1976-7A-7L – (n.d.)

7. (4) Chinese Newspapers (May 25, 1975 – May 25, 1976):
Sing Tao (HK); Yuet Wah Daily News (HK); People's Daily (PRC); Chan Troi Moi (Guam)

Folder #29: Scrapbook Contents, July 1974 – August 1976 (folder 1 of 4)

1. Columbus (OH) Citizen-Journal (9-21-74): "Ford Asks $20 billion spending cuts"

2. "Introduction of Dr. Billy Graham by Paul Miller" (September 16, 1974)

3. Democrat & Chronicle (8-9-74): "Nixon visits to Monroe County were of another era"

4. (Springfield, MO) Sunday News & Leader (8-4-74): "Over-Government Is Problem"

5. The Alfalfa Club of Washington, D.C. 62nd Anniversary Dinner Seating Chart (1-25-75)

Folder #30: Scrapbook Contents, July 1974 – August 1976 (folder 2 of 4)

1. The Gridiron Club of Washington, D.C. Ninetieth Annual Dinner (March 22, 1975)

2. Columbus (OH) Dispatch (4-10-75): "U.S. Urged to Determine Responsibilities in World"

3. U.S. News & World Report (April 21, 1975): "Annual Survey: Who Runs America?"

Box 29

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Folder #1: Scrapbook Contents, July 1974 – August 1976 (folder 3 of 4)

1. [Invitation]: "On the Occasion of the Twenty-sixth Anniversary of the Founding of the [PRC] . . . The Chief of the Liaison Office of the [PRC] Mr. Huang Chen requests the . . . October 1, 1975"

2. [Invitation]:
"In honor of . . . The Emperor and Empress of Japan . . . The White House . . . October 2, 1975"

3. U.S. News & World Report (April 19, 1976): Annual Survey: "Who Runs America?"

Folder #2: Scrapbook Contents, July 1974 – August 1976 (folder 4 of 4)

1. William P. Rogers, to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, April 26, 1976.

2. PHOTO – 1976-12 – (Spring 1976): At The White House: Gerald Ford and PM

3. (10) PHOTOS – 1976-13b/13d-15d – (n.d.): Daniel Patrick Moynihan and PM

Folder #3: Scrapbook Contents, August 1976-October 1976

1. Official Program: Republican National Convention (Kansas City, MO, 1976)

2. Honolulu (HI) Star-Bulletin (10-11-76): "U.S. News Media Urged to Exercise Restraint"

3. PHOTO – 1976-18 – (10-31-76): Rochester Welcomes President Ford

4. Times-Union (11-1-76): "Ford's Airport Greeting Said Proof of 'Momentum'"

1977

Folder #4: Scrapbook Contents, November 1976-April 1977

1. Times-Union (1-10-77): "Carter Backs Rejection of 3 Church Applicants"

2. Democrat & Chronicle (1-11-77): "Miller, other AP officials visit Carter in Plains, Ga."

3. The Alfalfa Club of Washington, D.C. 64th Anniversary Dinner (January 29, 1977)
[Menu]: The Sixty-fourth Anniversary of The Alfalfa Club

4. PHOTO – 1977-10 – (n.d.): Paul Miller and Louise J Miller in London

5. Oakland (CA) Tribune (4-26-77): "Economy Climbing, Lance Tells Press"

6. Times-Union (4-26-77):
"Solving Inflation, Energy Woes Tied Together, Lance Says"
"Miller: Satellites Could Move news"

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

7. Democrat & Chronicle (1-11-77): “Rupert Murdoch preaches media for the masses”

Folder #6: Scrapbook Contents, May-November 1977

1. Editor & Publisher (August 6, 1977): “What is Paul Miller really like?”

2. Nashville (TN) Banner (5-2-77): “Paul Miller Selected Key Decision-Maker”

3. Congressional Record – Senate (May 10, 1977):
“Tribute to Paul Miller, Chairman of the Board, Gannett Newspapers”

4. Democrat & Chronicle (5-11-77): “Miller honored in Senate for AP role”

5. Democrat & Chronicle (7-14-77): “White House Visit” [PM, Jimmy Carter, and Helmut Schmidt]

6. Times-Union (8-22-77): “Paul Miller Golfs With Gerald Ford”

7. Newspaper unknown (8-25-77): “you can bank on it”

8. (2) PHOTOS – 1977-3E/3F – (n.d.): PM and Gerald Ford golfing in Idaho

9. (11) PHOTOS – 1977-4A-4K – (October 1977): Hong Kong

10. PHOTO – 1977-6B – (July 14-1977): PM and Jimmy Carter at The White House

Folder #7: Scrapbook Contents, November 1977-June 1978

1. The Alfalfa Club of Washington, D.C. 65th Anniversary Dinner (January 21, 1977)

Folder #8: Paul Miller. Retirement from Gannett. Scrapbook Contents, December 31, 1978

1978

1. Nashville (TN) Banner (1-13-78): “Paul Miller – A Man For All Seasons”

2. Democrat & Chronicle (12-17-78): “Reflections on a wide-ranging man”

3. The (Santa Fe, NM) New Mexican (12-17-78):
“Gannett newspapers’ chairman ending distinguished career”

4. The (Utica, NY) Observer-Dispatch (12-17-78): “Paul Miller Retiring As Gannett Chairman”

5. Gannetteer (December 1978):
“Paul Miller’s World . . . unabashed involvement, unsurpassed performance”

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

1979

6. Editor & Publisher (January 20, 1979): "Some impressions of Paul Miller"

Folder #9: Scrapbook Contents, 1979-1980

1. The Gridiron Club of Washington, D.C. Ninety-fourth Annual Dinner (March 24, 1979)

2. [Menu]:
"Dinner in honor of H.E. The President of the Arab Republic of Egypt Mohamed Anwar El-Sadat"

1980

3. Democrat & Chronicle (1-13-80): "Miller Hospitalized"

Folder #10: England. Pamphlet, map, clippings, 1979

Folder #11: Scrapbook Contents, January-June 1981

1981

1. George (H.W.) Bush, Washington, D.C., to Paul Miller, Rochester, NY, January 30, 1981.

2. Palm Beach Dinner Dance (February 1, 1981):
New York University's Gold Medal presented to Walter Cronkite

3. The Gridiron Club Annual Spring Dinner (March 28, 1981): PM and LJM attended

4. American Eagle Award Dinner (May 12, 1981): PM and George H.W. Bush recipients

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

Prepared By:

Dr. Kurt Anderson

Ph.D.: Oklahoma State University

Research Professional

Special Collections and University Archives

Edmon Low Library

Oklahoma State University

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.

© 2015 Board of Regents for the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges. All rights reserved.